ROLL NO. 1

THE MONITOR

CAMERA NO 34 RR 2 .1

HEIGHT 47 FOCUS 215

FIRST DEC 14 1861

LAST

DATE 5 17 45

MICROSTAT COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA

PRECISION TRADE MARK MICROSTAT REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. MICROFILM

PRECISION TRADE MARK MICROSTAT REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. MICROFILM
12"

ROLL NO. 1

THE MONITOR

CAMERA NO 34 RR 22.1

HEIGHT 47 FOCUS 215

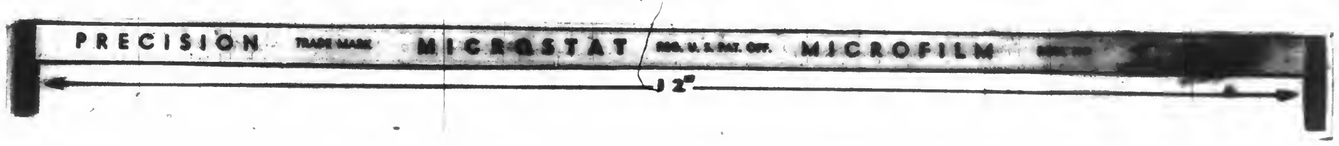
FIRST DEC 14 1861

LAST

DATE 5 17 45

MICROSTAT COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA

PRECISION TRADE MARK MICROSTAT REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. MICROFILM



PRECISION TRADE MARK MICROSTAT REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. MICROFILM
12"

to the comparative claims upon our sympathies possessed by the American people and the British Government, is that which followed the year 1846—the first year of the famine.

Now, while I admit that much private charity was displayed by individuals in England, I believe as firmly as I believe any proposition in politics, that a large proportion of the statesmen of England exulted in the destruction of the Irish people, which resulted from the famine. I have always thought that English politicians hold the Irish people in relation to the following principle: "The Irish are a bad race—they are a useless race—they are, to use the memorable words of Thomas Macaulay, 'alien in blood, alien in language, aliens in religion'—the sooner we get rid of them, the better." I was myself sitting by the side of Lord George Bentinck on the Opposition benches when he exclaimed: "It is your deliberate policy to starve the Irish people," whilst reproaching the government of the day for not taking measures to employ the people of Ireland.

You cannot forget that the same government which squandered a hundred millions of money in a ridiculous war with Russia—which has destroyed the prestige of England in Europe—spoke of a loan of eight millions advanced under the pretext of relieving the sufferings of the Irish people, as if it were an act of unprecedented munificence, and having exhausted its generosity in this effort, left the people to die or to emigrate without further help, except such as was supplied by the resources of Ireland.

You cannot forget that even the landed gentry of Ireland, who have almost uniformly acted as an English garrison in Ireland, were abandoned in their utmost need, and that British statesmen exulted in the confiscation of their estates which resulted from the measures adopted by Parliament during the famine of Ireland.

It is my deliberate opinion that the majority of the British people, and of British statesmen, would at this moment wish that Ireland should be deserted by the Roman Catholic inhabitants, in order that it might be re-peopled by what is called the great Anglo-Saxon race, and that many of the measures adopted at the time of the famine were designed to produce an approximation to that eventful result.

What, on the other hand, was the conduct of the Americans when ten of thousands of poor and ignorant strangers were landed monthly on their shores—bearing into the centres of the great cities of America the seeds of pestilence which had been sown by famine in Ireland, and by overcrowding in emigrant vessels? They could scarcely have been blamed if they had done what England does every day towards the Irish poor who became chargeable on England, though they may have resided in that country during great part of their lives; they could scarcely have been blamed if they had ordered these outcasts to return home to the country of their birth. But the American nation did not so treat the children of our race. They reserved and fostered them—they provided homes for them—and of the two millions of Irishmen who have emigrated to America during our generation, a very large proportion are now living in circumstances comparatively prosperous.

In the foregoing remarks I include Canada and the Canadians. I speak from personal observation. I have seen the Irish who settled in America, from Charleston to Michigan, from Portland to New Orleans, and from Detroit to Quebec, in Canada.

I shall, perhaps, be told that in some parts of America a spirit of intolerance has been evinced towards the Irish Catholics. I admit that in a few places such a spirit has been evinced; but the manifestation of this feeling has been rallied forth a noble display of generous sentiment on the part of a large majority of the native Americans. We ought not to forget that, when, in 1854, the Know-Nothing party endeavored to raise an outcry against foreigners, that cry was met by such men as Mr. Seward in the State of New York, and Governor Wise in the State of Virginia; and at the risk of their own popularity generous Americans were found everywhere who effectually crushed and stifled the Know-Nothing party. I am as earnest in my hatred of anti-Catholic prejudice as I could be if I were myself a Catholic; but I am not prepared to say that cause of offence may not occasionally have been given by our countrymen in America and, upon the whole, I think that the Irish, and especially the children of Irish parents, are appreciated in America fully as much as they deserve.

In an Irish gentleman, then, to be disgraced and degraded because he tells his countrymen that they ought not to forget the kindness shown them by the Americans in the hour of their utmost need?

I was not myself present at the late Rotundo meeting, and, though in England, I have been held responsible for its proceedings, the fact is that it was held contrary to my judgment and advice, but I confess that I am now rejoiced that the people of Dublin took an early opportunity of declaring that they would view with regret a collision between Ireland and the inhabitants of the United States.

I go further, and say emphatically that in opinion the several constituencies of Ireland ought to meet and inform their representatives that they are unwilling to constitute either men or money for the purpose of injuring their benefactors, and that upon this point they ought to employ the very language used by The O'Donoghue in his letter to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

Now, with respect to the committee which was appointed at the Rotundo meeting I take upon myself the responsibility of having advised The O'Donoghue to withdraw his name from that committee. I gave that advice because I was informed that the list of the members of that committee had been almost surreptitiously intruded upon the meeting, and because I thought it possible that The O'Donoghue might, by acting with it, become hereafter responsible for proceedings which he does not approve.

Those who remember the trials of 1848 cannot forget that the law officers of the Crown endeavored to hold Mr. Duffy responsible for my proceedings in Tipperary, though Mr. Duffy was actually in prison in Dublin at the time when those proceedings took place—so that a public man cannot be too guarded, in respect to his associates.

I have felt it the more especially to be my duty to offer this advice to O'Donoghue, and to others, because I am afraid that there exists in this country a secret organisation which may hereafter compromise many inexperienced, yet noble-minded youths. Three years ago I took the liberty to warn my fellow-countrymen against secret societies. I have since repeated the warning, and now once again I adjure them to treat as their worst enemy any man who invites them to join a secret society.

For myself, I care not whether the leader whom I follow belong to the patrician or plebian ranks of society. I would support the son of a beggar as loyally as I would support the son of a prince, if he possesses virtue, ability, and patriotism, but I never have joined and never will join any secret society which may be governed by a man or men with whose character and with whose aims I am unacquainted.

If a man believe himself fit to guide his countrymen, let him stand forth to the scrutiny of daylight. Let us examine his qualifications, and determine how far he is or is not fit to be trusted. Let us know also, what is the end and aim to which he proposes to lead us, and what are the means by which we are to arrive at that end.

Nor ought it to be forgotten that the existence of secret societies tends to prevent the formation of legal associations for the purpose of forwarding legitimate objects; because it is impossible to enter into combined action with a member of a secret society on terms of confidence or of safety. Every prudent man shuns the risk of being compromised by the proceedings of those who, being members of secret societies, may intrude themselves into the open and legal association to which he belongs.

Moreover, the leaders of secret societies generally keep out of danger themselves, whilst they allow those whom they inveigle to be sacrificed for harm acted upon their positive suggestions.

It is almost needless that I should repeat my conviction that the Irish government is informed respecting every movement that is made by the members of secret societies existing at this country.

But whilst I think that The O'Donoghue has acted wisely in withdrawing from the committee appointed at the Rotundo meeting, I am bound to say that he holds out to the country the prospect that he will, on some future occasion, suggest the formation of a committee or council which shall deserve the confidence of the country.

I reserve for a suitable occasion the expression of my opinion with respect to the formation of such a committee.

In the meantime I trust that from every parish in the county of Tipperary The O'Donoghue will receive assurances that he has not forfeited the esteem of his fellow-countrymen by being deprived of the commission of the peace.

I have the honor to be
Your devoted and obliged friend,
WILLIAM S. O'Brien.
Killiney, New Year's Day, 1862.

CAPTURE OF FORT DONELSON.

The most important victory of the war was achieved by the Federal forces under General Grant, in the capture of Fort Donelson, on the Cumberland river. The works were most extensive, fully armed and garrisoned by 20,000 men. Gen. Grant, when the place was invested, had 50,000 men and a large fleet of gun boats. Ten fighting continued four days, with great loss on both sides, when on Sunday morning last the fort was surrendered. The fruits of the victory are immense—an immense quantity of munitions of war, Saturday the Confederates made a sortie in which they obtained some advantages but were compelled to retire with loss. The right wing of our forces, consisting of the first, second and third brigades of Gen. McClernand's division, bore the brunt of the fight. The enemy commenced the attack by firing some grape into the 31st and 20th Illinois regiments, which were encamped on the extreme right. The first brigade, then differently commanding, were immediately drawn up in line in the following order: 20th, extreme right; 8th next; followed by the 29th, which supported the right of Stewart's battery, light artillery with the 31st on the extreme left—all Illinois regiments.

The 31st Dubuque Col. Wallace commanding consisted of the 11th, 20th, 45th and 46th Illinois regiments, with McAllister's and Taylor's batteries light artillery, four siege guns. The attacking force of the enemy consisted of about 12,000 men. Their position on the ground was such that not more than one of our regiments could operate at the same time, while the rebels could bring nearly their whole force to bear against us. The first regiment to receive the rebels was the 18th, which fought with desperate courage until their ammunition was exhausted, when they were forced to retire with considerable loss of officers and men. They were replaced by the 8th, which also fell back in turn. Meanwhile, other regiments were landing each feeble aid as their positions would afford.

Gen. Lew Wallace was then ordered to reinforce McClernand, and sent two brigades of his division from the centre. The 31st Illinois, Col. Logan, fought like veterans and struggled in defending the Schwartz Battery under the most galling fire, until all the horses of the battery, with all the officers in charge of the guns were killed. The lieutenant-colonel, the acting major, 2 captains, and a number of lieutenants of the 31st were also killed, and the colonel was wounded. Being nearly surrounded, Capt. McCook, who had been left in command, drew what remained of the regiment off the field—not, however, until their last round had been fired, and they had commenced to draw the enemy before them.

A letter in the Chicago Tribune, from Fort Donelson, says that when Col. Traft's Brigade which had been ordered to reinforce McClernard, came on near the 29th and 31st Illinois, and 25th Kentucky, these regiments were lying down firing over the crest of the hill. They rose, not knowing whether the force in their rear was a friend or foe. The 25th Kentucky, supposing them to be rebels, poured in a volley, which did terrible execution, and was sufficient to throw the whole brigade into disorder at once.

Almost a panic ensued, some threw down their arms and equipments and fled, some giving as far as Fort Henry. The enemy were not the opportunity, and advanced on Schwartz and Dresser's batteries, capturing five guns, and taking possession of McClernand's headquarters, driving our forces nearly a mile and a-half. Instead however, of adhering to their supposed original intentions to escape, the rebels resolved to follow up the advantages by pursuit.

At this juncture Wallace's division was thrown in front, and took position on the ridge, with Taylor's battery in centre of the road. The rebels formed on the ridge which McClernand had occupied, and flushed with success, moved forward as far as some in range when Taylor opened on them with grape, shell and canister. The rebels quailed, and came to a halt, and as the infantry advanced began to fall back. Wallace improved the moment, and moved on, driving the rebels before him, and secured the ground previously lost.

During the night contraction lines were made for an early assault with the bayonet. At daylight the advance was made, but when the full light of day appeared white flags were hung in many places on the enemy's works. The Fort surrendered unconditionally. We have Generals Buckner, Johnston and Bushrod, and 14,000 prisoners, and 3,000 horses. Pillow and Floyd, with their brigades, stole away on steamers on Saturday night, without letting Buckner known their intentions. Gen. Smith led a charge on the lower end of the enemy's works, and was the first inside of the fortifications. The prisoners were being sent to Cairo as fast as they could be loaded on the steamers. The loss on our side is heavy, and will probably reach 600 killed and 1,800 wounded. We lose a large percentage of officers, among them three lieutenant-colonels killed. Three colonels were wounded. Major Post of the 8th Illinois, with 200 privates, were taken prisoners on the night before the surrender, and have been sent to Nashville. The enemy's loss is heavy, but not so large as ours, they having done the principal part of their fighting behind entrenchments. The works extended for five miles on the outside. The rebels lost 58 field pieces, 17 heavy guns and 20,000 stand of arms, besides a large quantity of commissary stores. They are completely demoralized and have no confidence in their leaders. They charge Pillow and Floyd with deserting them. Our troops from the moment of the interview of the Fort, on Wednesday, last on their arms night and day—half the time with out tents and a portion of the time in heavy rain and snow.

All the gunboats are pretty effectually disabled except Langdon, which was struck about twice, but not fatally. He reached here on Friday afternoon, with gunboats St. Louis, Carondelet, Pittsburg, Louisville, Tyler and Conestoga. After fighting into one an hour, withdrew. Fifty-four men killed and wounded on board.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

WE HAVE THEM.

Everybody Knows It!

HOLCOMBE BROS.

SELL THE BEST GOODS.

And have the Largest Assortment in San Francisco of

BOOTS & SHOES,

NEW, OPERANT

Sole Agents of California for

WEEDS, NEW YORK, CELEBRATED

OPERA GAITERS

and

BALMORALS.

THE ONLY GENUINE ARTICLES IN THIS CITY manufactured by every one of the above parties.

Sokert's Philadelphia Quilted Boots,

WILL RETAIL FOR

Quilted Soles for ..... $1.00
Half Quilted Soles Boots ..... 5.00
Non Quilted Soles Boots ..... 4.00

AND ALL OTHER Goods OF PHILADELPHIA MAKE IN PROPORTION.

Received by every steamer a new style of Military Riding & Walking Boots—Farmers' and Miners' Boots;

WILL RETAIL THEM AT

LESS THAN COST AND CHARGES

—ALSO—

AN IMMENSE ASSORTMENT OF Ladies', Misses, Boys' and Youth's Long Leg Rubber Boots,

FOR THE RAINY SEASON.

If you want first class goods at Low Prices that are offered for sale. CALL ON

HOLCOMBE BROTHERS'

STORES, or STOP!

Uptown Store—Corner of Washington and Kearny streets.

Downtown Store—Corner of Sansom St. and Leidesdorff streets.

HOLCOMBE BROTHERS

M. CUERIN,

Begs to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has just received from I. Bukert and C. Bankert, the Largest Assortment of

BOOTS, SHOES & GAITERS,

Ever offered for sale in his city at the Low of Four Hits Prices, at the Old Stand,

Corner Commercial & Battery sts,

Where he keeps on hand a general assortment of every variety of FRENCH BOOTS, SHOES and GAITERS which he will sell Low for Cash.

M. CUERIN.

PRIVATE INSTRUCTION.

Mr. Lawrence T. Ryan

HAS LEAVE TO INFORM HIS FRIENDS AND the Public that he is at present prepared to give instructions in ENGLISH GRAMMAR, READING, MATHEMATICS, BOOK-KEEPING by Double and Single Entry, and LATIN CLASSICS. Parents desirous of having their children receive instruction at their own houses, as well as Business-men or her young men desirous of improving themselves, can have their wishes carried out by calling upon him at his residence, at Mr. Farren's, No. 561 Market street, three doors from Second street. jan15

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY.

Office—806 Jackson street, first Building west of Montgomery street.

OFFICERS:

President ..... M. D. SWEENY
Vice President ..... RICHARD MARIN

TRUSTEES:

N. K. MASTEN
J. O. SULLIVAN
JOHN SULLIVAN
P. H. CANAVAN
JAMES DONAHUE
D. J. CALLAGHAN
WM. SCANN
E. McSCANN
MICHAEL ORCHARD.

Treasurer ..... JOHN MEE
Attorney ..... RICHARD TOBIN

Depositors resident in this county may make their deposits personally at the office of the Society, or remit them by mail, at their own risk.

Office Hours—From 9 to 4 o'clock. jan1

DONAHUE, RALSTON & CO.,

BANKERS,

SELL EXCHANGE ON

New York, Boston,
Philadelphia, Baltimore,
St. Louis,

And other Principal Cities of the Union.

ALSO,

London and the Bank of Ireland,

jan1 DONAHUE, RALSTON & CO.

REYNOLDS, REIS & CO.,

BANKERS,

No. 410 Montgomery street,

SELL EXCHANGE IN SUMS TO SUIT, drawn on

The Bank of the State of New York.
Drafts drawn on

Messrs. Rothschild Bros ..... Marseilles
Messrs. Drexel & Co. ..... Philadelphia
Purchase the 6 Bullion and Mint Certificates. Discount Mercantile Paper.
Make advances on Gold by Assignment to bearer, attend to Collections and Transmit a GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

jan1-6m

V. MARZIOU & CO.,

BANKERS,

Importers and Commission Merchants.

Regular line of sailing Packets between Havre and San Francisco. Office, 27 Commercial street.
Money received on deposit. Exchange on France sold jan1

INSURANCE.

NORTHERN ASSURANCE CO.,

Of London and Edinburgh.

ESTABLISHED 1836

FOR FIRE AND LIFE AT HOME AND ABROAD

Capital ..... $6,300,000.

THE POLICIES of this Company are not only fully settled by the capital but also by the unlimited personal responsibility of nearly one thousand shareholders.

The premiums for Fire Insurance are now greatly reduced. For particulars apply to

WM. LANE BOOKER,
1206 dtf Agent for California.

THOS. N. CAZNEAU,

INSURANCE BROKER,

And Adjuster of Marine Losses and Averages

Marine and all Commercial Insurance to and Within Drawn Drafts upon Insurers Adjusted

Cases taken upon all Insurance and Maritime Subjects

Office, Exchange Building,

Battery street, ..... Opposite Custom house, and 17 ..... San Francisco.

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

ESTABLISHED MORE THAN

Half a Century.

THE well known and substantial Company continues to insure Dwellings, Stores, Furniture, Merchandise, and every description of property against Fire, on favorable terms.

McLEAN & FOWLER, Agents,
No. 401 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
Refer to Messrs. Adams & Co., and Bentley, Sachs & Co. jan1

FISHER & CO.

ARE SELLING THE FINEST

SILK HATS

FOR SIX DOLLARS!

The Compressed Hat,

FIVE DOLLARS!

Montgomery street, cor. Commercial,

SAN FRANCISCO.

MARBLE

Mantels and Grates.

MANTELS OF THE MOST ITALIAN MARBLE of every style and every city in England, with the most beautiful Grates ever imported, of which we will have constantly during the fall and winter a large assortment from Coal Heaters and Low Down Grates, which I offer for sale, through Portlock with New York and Boston prices, at Lower prices.

JOSEPH KESSELER,
dec1 3m 607 Market street, opposite Montgomery

AUCTIONEERS.

H. A. COBB.....AUCTIONEER.

H. A. COBB & R. H. SINTON,

Real Estate and Stock Auctioneers.

Store and Salesroom ..... 102 Montgomery street
Sale Day—Saturday.

Strict attention given to all the legal requirements in Sales of Administrators, Executors, etc.

Terms of Sale of Real Estate—To be subject to legal investigation. Acts of Sale at purchasers' expense. To per cent. of purchase money will, in all cases, be required at time of sale. Payments as may be otherwise agreed upon.

Houses for Sale or Rent in all parts of the City. Also, Ranches for sale in the interior of the State.

All matters relating to Real Estate promptly attended to. R. H. SINTON, jan1 dtf Conveyancer and Notary Public.

PROFESSIONAL.

J. B. HART,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Office, No. 191 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

JOHN B. WILLIAMS,

(LATE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE.)

ATTORNEY IN LAND CASES

PENDING IN U. S. DISTRICT COURT.

No. 16, U. S. Court Building.

San Francisco. jan1

O. O. SHATTUCK. C. P. WEICHERT. L. A. REICHERT.

SHATTUCK, SPENCER & REICHERT.

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

No. 108 Merchant st., San Francisco jan1

R. F. RYAN,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

No. 624 Merchant st., cor. Sansome. jan1

WM. L. DUNCAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC

AND

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

Telegraph Office.....Montgomery Block.

Loans Negotiated, Land Warrants bought and sold, Deeds, Mortgages, Powers of Attorney, Bills of Sale, Leases, Bonds, Agreements, Contracts, Bills, Notes, Drafts, Receipts, Accounts, Petitions, Affidavits, Depositions, Protests, Wills, Copying, Translating, Conveyancing, and all other Notarial business executed with promptness and dispatch. Charges moderate. Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. jan1

GILLESPIE & GRAY,

Examiners of Deeds

SEARCHERS OF RECORDS,

For all Incumbrances, including Judgments and Taxes.

Have been familiar with the Titles to REAL ESTATE in this City and County since 1848.

No. 414 Washington street,
Adjoining the Office of Recorder.

B. DOWLING,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

AND CONVEYANCER,

Office—Exchange Building, Montgomery street, between Pine and California streets.

Agent for the Collection of Claims against the Government of the United States.

Deeds, Mortgages, Powers of Attorney, Bills of Sale, Leases, Bonds, Agreements, Contracts, Bills, Notes, Drafts, Receipts, Accounts, Petitions, Affidavits, Depositions, Protests, Wills, Copying, Translating, Conveyancing, and all other Notarial business executed with promptness and dispatch. Charges moderate. Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. jan1

GILLESPIE & GRAY,

Examiners of Deeds

SEARCHERS OF RECORDS,

For all Incumbrances, including Judgments and Taxes.

Have been familiar with the Titles to REAL ESTATE in this City and County since 1848.

No. 414 Washington street,
Adjoining the Office of Recorder.

B. DOWLING,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

AND CONVEYANCER,

Office—Exchange Building, Montgomery street, between Pine and California streets.

Agent for the Collection of Claims against the Government of the United States.

Deeds, Mortgages, Powers of Attorney, Bills of Sale, Leases, Bonds, Agreements, Contracts, Bills, Notes, Drafts, Receipts, Accounts, Petitions, Affidavits, Depositions, Protests, Wills, Copying, Translating, Conveyancing, and all other Notarial business executed with promptness and dispatch. Charges moderate. Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. jan1

R. R. PROVINES,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Room No. 30, Metropolitan Block,

jan5 Corner Montgomery and Merchant streets.

EUGENE B. DRAKE,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

Office, Room No. 1, Nagle's Building, northeast corner Front and Commercial, San Francisco. jan1

W. A. CORNWALL,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

No. 8 Nagle's Building, Merchant street, San Francisco. dec1

WAKELEE & CHARLES,

REAL ESTATE AND

GENERAL AGENTS,

No. 604 Merchant street, San Francisco.

RENTS COLLECTED AND LOANS NEGOTIATED.

T. C. CHARLES,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Office, 604 Merchant street, San Francisco.

PAINTS, OILS, &C.

JAMES R. DEANE,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

Paints, Oils,

Window Glass,

Varnishes,

Brushes, &c.

Constantly in store a full assortment of the above articles received from the best manufactories in the East and Europe.

No. 510 Clay street—Brick Store,
Opposite Le Count House. San Francisco.

KELLY & WADE,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

PAINTS, OILS,

TURPENTINE,

VARNISHES,

BRUSHES,

GLASS, ETC.

No. 105 & 107 Battery street,
Between Davis and Front, San Francisco.

House and Sign Painting, Glazing and Paper Hanging executed with promptness and dispatch. nov1

THE MONITOR.

VOL. IV. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1861. NO. 28.

THE MONITOR:

Catholic Literature as [illegible]

Prospectus [illegible]

T. A. BRADY.

[illegible]

For [illegible]
Ba[illegible]
[illegible]

OUR NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.

New York, Nov. 30th, 1861.

It rarely, if ever, happens that the pastor of a church is called upon to officiate at the funeral obsequies of a prelate of the Church, and that prelate the Archbishop of the Province in which the church is situated. Such, however, was the case in Albany on Tuesday last, when the Archbishop of New York officiated at the funeral of Bishop McCloskey. The Dublin correspondent of the London Times pays a reliable authority a short time before his death—before his departure from Ireland, that, however, have not been realized in the manner in which we may say, not that we are standing aside, but that the people are struggling for their own hand for themselves, are fighting.

Here is food for reflection for the Irish Parliamentarians, and for those who are so anxious for their advancement and welfare. Let them unite—let them be true to their country—let them be true to themselves—let them be true to each other, and the day of their deliverance will not be far distant.

Dublin, recently, at the parochial residence of Drogheda, the Rev. Mr. O'Gorman, P. P., Ardee—deeply lamented by his parishioners, and by all who were acquainted with his fervent but unostentatious piety, his zeal for the interests of religion, and the many excellent qualities of head and heart. He was buried in the graveyard on the Hill, adjoining the church of Ardee, on Thursday last, the 21st inst., the funeral cortege being composed of the Very Rev. Dr. Cummins, V. G., from Dundalk; Rev. Dr. Kelly, C. C., from Ballinlough; Rev. Dr. Murphy, C. C., from Westport; Rev. P. Loftus, C. C., from Ballymakenny; Rev. P. Loftus, C. C., from Drumcar; Rev. J. Murphy, C. C., from Ballymakenny; Rev. J. Kelly, C. C., from Ballinlough; Rev. P. Murphy, C. C., from Ballinlough; Rev. P. Loftus, C. C., from Dunleer; Rev. J. Reilly, C. C., from Castlebellingham, the Rev. Mr. O'Gorman's own curate; Rev. Dr. Reilly, from Ballymakenny; Rev. Dr. O'Connor, from Ballymakenny; Rev. Dr. Mathews, from Ballymakenny; Rev. Dr. Mathews, from Ballymakenny; Rev. Dr. Mathews

THE FOUR PICTURES.

At the back part of one of the largest and finest streets at the west end of London ran a mews, where there were carriages and horses of the great folks who lived in the grand street, used to come to their stables. Over one of those stables were two small but comfortable rooms, in which lived the family of John Green, who was coachman to the Earl of Belmont. John Green's family consisted of his wife and one little daughter, whose name was Patty. One fine May morning, her mother called to Patty to help her sort out all the clean linen she had washed in the course of the week for Mrs. Green was a laundress, by which she helped her husband to earn a living for themselves and child; and to place it in the different clothes baskets that stood around, that she might deliver them to the several families she washed for.

"Come, Patty, dear, what are you thinking of, idling there, instead of bustling about and helping me?" said her mother.

But Patty did not hear her; for she was lost in thought, her chin leaning on her hand, her elbow propped on the ironing board, against which she lolled, and her eyes fixed on the back of the stately mansion opposite.

"Patty, do you hear me?" repeated her mother.

This time Patty started and turned around. "Yes, mother." And then she bestirred herself, and began to arrange the linen in heaps, and carry them carefully to her mother to place in the baskets.

"What have you been thinking about, Patty, dear?" asked her mother.

"Why, I was thinking, mother, what a shame it is, that I have to work so, and you have to work so, instead of our making a holiday and taking pleasure." It is my birthday, and I think it is very hard to be obliged to work on my birthday, especially when I see the young lady at the great house opposite doing just as she likes all day, singing and amusing herself, and going out in the carriage, and never having any work to do, even on common days, much less on a birthday?"

"How do you know she has no work to do, Patty? Most likely, she has a great deal, if she were not so rich as to be able to do as she likes, and sing, and go out in her carriage, what should we do? Is not her father is the Earl of Belmont, who gives your father money for being his coshman; and if your father did not earn his living by driving their carriage, you might have no dinner to eat to-day, for all it's your birthday."

Patty went on helping her mother in silence, after heaving a deep sigh; but presently, looking out of the window, and seeing the carriage being driven out of the mews by her father, to take the young lady an airing, the task sprang into her eyes as she exclaimed, "Oh, what would I give if I could, but have a ride in a carriage, for once in my life, on my birthday?" The bright May sun shone in at the window, and made small rainbows of the tears which sparkled on poor little Patty's cheeks, and thus cast a light on the "First Picture." Let us turn to the second.

In a large, pleasant room on the second floor of the Earl of Belmont's house, its windows filled with green house plants and set wide open to receive the air of May, which wafted the sweet fragrance of the flowers into the apartment, sat a lady and a little girl. The former was at a table from which breakfast had been recently removed, and which was now strewed with books and drawing materials; the latter lounged in an arm chair near the window, amusing herself with carelessly smelling the blossoms of the geraniums and heliotropes, and sometimes plucking one off, as she petulantly answered the lady's entreaties that she would commence her lessons.

"Come, my dear Lady Emily," said her governess, "shall we begin with the study of the Townley bis, or shall we have a chapter of the 'Promessi sposi' first?"

"Oh, I really cannot do any lessons this morning, Mrs. Russell: I hope you will excuse me to-day," said Lady Emily, taking a moss rose and some violets out of a flat glass vase that stood on a table near her. "You know it's my birthday, and I can't bear doing lessons on my birthday. Besides, I want to make these flowers into a crown for Dash. Look at him, Mrs. Russell; how he wags his tail, and looks up into my face, really as if he knew I am going to crown him."

"Why should you dislike your lessons more on your birthday than any other day, Lady Emily?" said Mrs. Russell. "Surely, my dear, you cannot wish to idle the whole day away, merely because it is your birthday? I should think that would be rather tiresome than pleasant to you."

"Oh, but the carriage will be here soon to take us out, you know," said Lady Emily, yawning; "for you ordered it early on purpose, as it was my birthday, which was very kind of you; and so you know, it is hardly worth while to begin anything till it comes. Do, my dear face towards her, and trying to stretch Mrs. Russell, come here and look at what I am looking at," added she, after a moment; "do you see that pretty little window down there, with the mignonette in the green box, and the convolvulus running up strings on each side of it? Just look; I can see into the snug little room beyond the window, and I can see such a nice little girl trotting about the room, and she seems to be helping her mother to do something or other. How happy she looks! Oh," said Lady Emily, throwing herself back in her chair, "how delightful it must be to be running about all day, and doing just as one likes, instead of having a parcel of troublesome lessons to do!"

The May sun poured its beams into the room, and fell upon the young lady as she pouted and glanced towards the table on which lay the books and drawings, and thus illumined the "Second Picture."

"Good gracious! look, Mrs. Russell, pray look!" exclaimed Lady Emily, suddenly leaning forward, and gazing eagerly; "the poor little girl is crying, actually crying! What can be the matter with her, I wonder?"

"She does not seem to be so happy as you fancied her, my dear Lady Emily," said Mrs. Russell, quietly.

"Oh, what can we do for her? She seems such a good little girl," said the really kind hearted young lady.

"The carriage is at the door, my lady," said a footman, who came into the room at this moment. But Lady Emily did not hear him, she was so engaged in watching and pitying her young neighbor, while Mrs. Russell went to the servant and spoke a few words to him, who then left the room.

"Should you like to know what she is crying for, Lady Emily, and do what you can to relieve her distress?" asked Mrs. Russell.

"Oh, yes, that I should!" exclaimed she. "Why, I do believe, my dear Mrs. Russell, that you have sent for her. Oh, that is delightful!"

Directly the door was opened, Lady Emily went towards it, and taking by the hand the little girl who had entered, said, "I'm so sorry for you—what made you cry and look so sad, dear?"

"But what made you cry, Patty Green? You were looking so happy at first, when I was watching you from that window; and all of a sudden you began to cry. What could it be for?"

"Why, miss—my lady, I mean—it was very silly of me, but I couldn't help it. I did so wish to have a ride in a carriage once in my life, on my birthday."

"Is to-day your birthday, Patty? how odd! Why, it's mine, too! Do you mean to say you never had a ride in a carriage in your life? How very odd! Well, you shall have one to-day—may it be your birthday present, Patty! May I take her with me?" said Lady Emily, eagerly.

"Certainly, my dear, let us go."

Away rolled the carriage—Patty at the very height of her joy, Lady Emily extremely entertained to witness her delight, and Mrs. Russell rejoiced to see the warmth and interest her young pupil took in the pleasure of another—that purest of all sources of gratification.

On they went—through the Park, up Parliament street, by Charing-cross, along the strand, till all at once they turned down a dirty, narrow street, and stopped at the door of a poor, mean looking house.

"What are we stopping here for?" asked Lady Emily.

"Come with me, my dear Lady Emily, and you, too Patty," said Mrs. Russell; and she led the way into the house, and up a flight of dark stairs, and then up another, and then still another, till she stopped at the door of a poor garret. It was partly open, and she entered, followed by the two girls, who were soon weeping bitterly at what they saw. On a miserable bed lay a sick child, whose thin white face told a sad tale of want, and young despair. All around spoke of utter destitution: stripped of all its necessaries—one piece of furniture after another sold to buy food—the room, though small, looked drearily vacant and wide. Not the smallest vestige of provision, or the least sign of those minor comforts which form necessaries in a sick room. On the chair near the bed sat a woman, the very picture of helpless grief. Her eyes were fixed on the face of her dying child, and she scarcely removed them to glance at Mrs. Russell as she came in.

"I have heard about you, my poor woman," said she, approaching the unhappy mother, "and am come to see what can be done for you."

"Done for me!" said the woman wildly, and in a tone of more with starvation and sorrow; "but him!—him!—he will die. He must: no doctor has told me so, for I can't pay for one; but I know he must. Oh, no young, no young boy, only child—my only companion left to me in this world—and on his birth-day, too!"

"Mother!" said the boy, turning his "Mother!" said the boy, turning his face towards her, and trying to stretch his hand out; but it fell feebly on the bed.

Mrs. Russell said a few words of comfort to the poor woman, assuring her that she had sent for a medical man, who would soon be there; and bidding her to be more calm for the sake of her child. To him she leaned down, and softly whispered consolation. "I want for nothing ma'am," said he in answer to her question: "I shall soon be dead, then I know you will comfort mother and give her food enough. Yes', said he suddenly, after a pause—"yes, there is one thing I should like: I should like to be taken away from this hot and stifling town, and put where daisies may grow over my grave."

The May sun streamed through the broken, half closed shutters, and threw a strange, bright ray, upon this sad "Third Picture."

But to turn to my last one.

It was a fine, glowing afternoon, and a little party was assembled in a most garden-looking, to a small cottage in the outskirts of London. A feeble boy, whose cheeks were beginning to assume a faint glow of returning health, was lying on a bench, on which his mother had just placed him, while a little girl was busily employed in wrapping a thick cloak about his feet. A lady and another little girl were looking on with faces of joy and kindness.

"He is doing purely now, my lady," said the poor woman; "Dr. Benson says it was nothing but want of proper air and food. And oh! I thank the good God that put it into your dear good young heart to ask your papa for a birth-day present of money, that you might bring my poor boy out to this sweet place, and make us the happy creatures we are now."

"Indeed it was that fortunate drive in the carriage that did it all," said Lady Emily, laughing. "What do you think, Mrs. Russell, that you have sent for her. Oh, that is delightful!"

Patty answered with blushing cheeks; and merry were the peals of laughter, and happy were the looks of the party, as they partook of a little feast of fruit and cakes and curds and whey, which Lady Emily had insisted, as she said, to her friend, a holiday treat, and it was still in May sun, which poured its flood of golden light upon this "Fourth Picture."

THE MORTARA CASE.

AN EVENING CHAT WITH THE "OBSERVER." BY SALMON.

[Concluded from our last number.]

Rabbi: But see, Mr. Salmon, I acknowledge that "the Archbishop of Munich, in supporting the measure (of removing the most oppressive disabilities weighing upon the Jews), stated that he did so on Christian grounds." (Num. 236.) I endorsed also the peaceable sentiments of Archbishop Hughes, expressed in his excellent letter to another bishop. (Num. 241.) I chronicled also the regard of the Jews towards the Archbishop of Agram. (Num. 247.) Can you ask more from me?

Salmon: But see in what manner you speak of that last mentioned item. Your words are these: "It does not appear that all Roman Catholic prelates follow the example set by their chief in the suppression of the Jews. There are honorable exceptions. One of these is Cardinal Haulrich, Archbishop of Croatia. In this period of agitation in the Austrian empire, the Archbishop had invariably exerted his great influence in favor of the Jews. These are accordingly greatly devoted to him. Lately, at the celebration of his jubilee, they held a special service in the synagogue, in which prayers were offered up for his welfare." So you said; and I expect you will not deny that your words are derogatory to the honor of the largest majority of the Roman Catholic ecclesiastics who bear the same sentiments towards the Jews, like those whom you mention as "honorable exceptions." Even so dishonorably you misrepresent our Chief, the Pope, as one "suppressing the Jews," what he has never done nor attempted to do.

Rabbi: It is not I that wrote the words which hurt your feelings; I borrowed them from others.

Salmon: True! But do you not know that there are men in the world who brood on misrepresentations, lies and calumnies; and others ever ready to divulge that malicious invention? Why are you not more cautious in believing and divulging the assertions of others, which not seldom are void of, or contrary to, truth? Or have you so little respect towards your honest friends as to feed them with acorns and swill? Ah, Rabbi, you shall not do such!

Rabbi: I have nothing against you Catholics.

Salmon: Why do you then, without need or provocation, publish allusions which are far from being honorable? See what you, speaking of the Felashes (African Jews) remark: "It reads as if a colony of pagans or Roman Catholics had sat to the picture." (Num. 242.) You hold that report unreliable (Num. 236); so do I, and I tell you my reasons: her reports of Protestant missionaries are commonly larded by braggarts and liars. You dislike that such Protestant filth is cast upon you Jews; why do you, by the words above, throw the same filth upon us Roman Catholics? Is this fair?

Rabbi: But I praise the Christians whenever I find opportunity to do it. Not long ago I said: "The first Christians of superior culture refused to fight in the army, as does one of the most respectable and scrupulous sects among Christians, the Quakers. As the latter sect and the first Christians acted on the principles which they thought based on their Scriptures, there must be some text to countenance their peace sentiments." (Num. 242.)

Salmon: It is, indeed, praiseworthy that the Quakers are peaceable people; but, I do not know on which text of their Scriptures they base the meaning to refuse military service. The Bible exhibits several texts, seemingly averse to warfare. Among them are the heavenly words: Shalom ba-aretz ve-tzaron la-anashim. It is true that good Christians hold it lawful to fight in a just war, and that they neither shake nor quake on battle-fields. But concerning the first Christians, you, Rabbi, are quite excusable for not knowing their belief and practice. See, I know a number of them who have been soldiers, colonels and generals, and who perhaps fought bravely in battles. I will mention you a few of them: In the first Christian century: Aldenasar, Vitalis, Cornelius. In the second century: Quirinus, Madir, Chelidonius, Getulius, Amantius, Corcelius. In the third century: Girdius, Polycrates, Maximillian, Julius, Dasiscius, Valentin, Julian, Maurice, Marcellus. In the fourth century: Juventius, Theodorus, Melitho, Victor, Basilides, Romanus, Cyprinus, Nahor, Mennas, Bonosus, Adrian, Maximian, etc., etc. Now please to tell me the names of the first Christians who have refused to fight in war.

Rabbi: I don't care if they fought or not.

Salmon: Ah, you you speak on a matter you cannot prove.

Rabbi: The sum of all is: you Roman Catholics were always against the Jews.

Salmon: I do not deny that there were Catholics, forgetting their Christian duty, against whom the unhappy Hebrews may justly complain. But I pray, let in mind the fault abide with them who have done the wrong, and do not hate the Christian religion which demands to love the neighbor without distinction of his religious belief, and do not impeach the large mass of the Roman Catholics who themselves disown the uncharitable acts few of them have done against your co-religionists. Or do you not think it would hurt your feelings if one would speak thus to you: Jews, in their religious fanaticism, have killed Christian boys, viz: One, Richard by name, at Pontoise, in France; another, William by name, 12 years old, at Thropwood, near Norwich, in England, in the year 1137; another, called Hugh, 11 years old, at Lincoln, in England, in the year 1255; another, called Werner, 12 years old, at Ober-Wesel, on the Rhine, in the year 1287; another, Andrew by name, 2 years old, at Rinn, near Junsbruck, in Tyrol, in the year 1462; another, Simon, by name, also 2 years old, at Trent, in Tyrol, in the year 1472 —and when then others from such historical instances would take the conclusion that the Jews are bloody fanatics? My meaning, therefore, is this: If an an outrage is done, prove it at first, and then let the guilt rest upon the perpetrators. Would you, Rabbi, be so kind as to adopt similar views, then the Popes and even Pius IX., together with our bishops and the far largest majority of the Roman Catholic clergy and laity, will abide, unpolluted, by your criticism.

Rabbi: I came in to dry my cloak and not to hear a lesson.

Salmon: I hope you will not have been offended by my words. They are well meant; and you and I are not too old to learn something.

Rabbi: My cloak is dry now; I will start.

Salmon: And when you pass by another day, I hope you will call in again at my cabin.

Rabbi: Good bye! Shalom alechem!

Salmon: Shalom lechem!

P. S. Would Rabbi Ephraner, at his starting from Salmon's cabin, have held his ear to the outside of the door, he could have heard a voice sounding heavenwards: "Selach, lachem, Ahinu, chi sinam yodim ath-asher hemmah osim."

A just man hateth the evil, but not the evil doer.

THE EXECUTION OF ROBERT EMMET.

The following account of the execution of Robert Emmet was written sixteen years ago, by an eye-witness of that melancholy scene. It appeared originally in a small local publication in Dublin, which had only a very limited circulation. It has seemingly escaped the observation of Emmet's biographers, being different from other accounts, and as it is somewhat vivid, and well told, therefore we wish to rescue it from its long forgotten place.

The dead may walk their graves—
Their heads may wander in the sun—
Their hands be strung to city gates and castle walls—
But still their spirit walks abroad!

It is now nearly forty-four years since that event, and I might, perhaps, attempt something like a short account of it: but I do not know on which text of their principal actor, but that, in what I may call his dying speech, he said—"let no man write my epitaph." I shall not attempt it, although it has been attempted by a printer, of course, for the purpose of puffing him—I have no such motive. What I am about to relate has passed under my own observation, and I shall relate it truly—without political rancor or exaggeration. But to the subject:—

It was a gloomy day at the time, and although the fearful scenes passing daily before my eyes might have hardened a softer heart than mine, still a boy of nineteen, as I then was, could not look on the every day executions in the street I then lived in (Thomas street), without stirring within me those feelings of his nature; and I up the best feelings of his nature; and I had not lost all the kindliness of my mother's milk. I am approaching the scene with that trembling horror of mind with which a man calls up to recollection the remembrance of a horrifying dream; still I must approach it. "At about half-past 9 o'clock, A.M., a cart with sundry boards of timber, under the guidance of a sergeant's guard, came slowly up Bridgefoot street, with two or three carpenters; they halted at the head of the street, opposite Catherine's Church, within a few yards of the entrance of Marshalsea lane, where Mr. Emmet had his depot of arms, and within about fifty yards of the White Bull Inn, that was in connexion within the depot, the rear of which ran back into Marshalsea lane, and in which Tom, an unfortunate tailor, had been got drunk, or was made drunk for the purpose of making up uniforms for the officers of the rebel party: he awoke and found himself in a cell, and had to ply his needle for the purpose for which he was trepanned; he escaped at the outbreak, as he never suffered. In a very short time the apparatus for death was erected, and the guard remained around it, to see that no accident occurred, until the arrival of the sheriff, who was to expiate on that scaffold his short but unfortunate career; he did arrive between 12 and 1 o'clock, P.M., escorted by a regiment of infantry and a troop of dragoons. At the time of his arrival, every avenue leading into Thomas street, from James' gate to Francis-street, was thronged with anxious spectators. He was accompanied in the carriage that brought him to the place of execution by the sheriff and the ordinary of Newgate; he descended from the carriage, mounted the platform of that fatal spot, from which he was never to depart alive. Mr. Emmet was a slight young man 1 think about five feet six inches), even for that size. The work of death was quickly prepared: there was a short ladder raised to lean on a board, placed horizontally between the two end posts that supported the machine: he quickly mounted the ladder and gained the board, from which he was to drop into eternity. He stood firmly and erect, with a calm but pale countenance. At the moment he had gained his last footing in life, there was a tumult of the people, who crowded the streets to suffocation in every avenue leading into Thomas street: he seemed to have composed his mind to meet his fate with becoming courage: the dragoons charged down the street, in the direction of the tumult: all eyes were quickly turned in that direction. Robert Emmet sent a quick and searching look (as he turned himself round), to the spot where the most intense interest was directed; from his elevated situation above the guards, he soon perceived a was not a rescue to save him from an ignominious death. The tumult was hushed, and the dragoons returned after clearing the street; but who can describe the death-pang that shot across his head when he slowly turned himself round to his former position? It was not hope that deserted him, it was hope of life suddenly raised, and as suddenly destroyed: it was worse than death. He immediately pulled off his cravat, and handed it to the executioner, who had now stepped to the board, and stood beside him. With the fatal noose in his hand, Emmet gently leaned back his head to allow the rope to pass to his neck: it was adjusted: the cap that was to shut out the light of this world from his vision was drawn over his face. I have still I was a gentleman: I and every yeoman in Dublin had orders to be dressed in our military uniforms, and to have our arms in readiness to serve them at a moment's notice; mine were within a few houses of me. I took advantage of my uniform to get amongst the guards that surrounded the scaffold, perhaps a little inside of them. I stood on the side next to St. Catharine's Church, the sheriff mounted the drop: my position was the opposite side, at the head of Bridgefoot street. Mr. Emmet was not pinioned so tightly as culprits generally are; the ligatures were placed rather loosely on his arms and wrists, the cords were placed on him before he left the jail, and were not afterwards tightened, but were still so tight that he could not relieve himself from the dead-struggle. The executioner having prepared everything above, began to descend the ladder, in doing which he shook the board on which stood the doomed man. Emmet thought the board was slipping from under his feet, and made a sudden move forward, and his hands touched the hangman's head; he found his mistake, and immediately resumed his erect posture; placed his hands in becoming position on the lower part of his breast, and awaited his fate. He has not long to wait, the board was quickly pushed from under him, and he swing off in mid-air, a spectacle to men and angels. The last part of the operation occurred quicker than I can write it. From the formation of the scaffold, he could not fall more than about two or two and a-half feet; and being a light man, he suffered the most intense agony; yet not a struggle, his hands preserved the position in which he placed them before being dropped off. For a few minutes, then his bodily suffering became extreme, and his legs rapidly beat the air, his fingers and every nerve of them became torturingly convulsed: this painful state lasted for about ten minutes, all his soul flew to the presence of his Maker. I wish I could now close this distressing narrative, but there is yet more to come; the last part of the scene has to come, by bewildered my senses: I was stupefied, my brain burned, I had to remove my helmet from my throbbing temples, and when somewhat relieved by the cool breeze, that played refreshingly on my uncovered head, I looked again for Emmet, but he was gone; he was removed to the side of the scaffold, where the sheriff stood, that his body might undergo the remainder of his sentence, to be "hanged, drawn and quartered." Provided with an axe and a knife, such as you may see in butcher shops, for cutting bacon, I moved round towards that side to see the end of the tragedy; the body was laid on the deck, and the executioner minced round the block to the bone on that side, and with a knife to form the same operation on the back part essayed to turn the body: he told the sheriff he wanted assistance, and a man dressed in the garb of a countryman, was forced up on the platform, a tub of the bayonet, to assist him (I would sooner have died). The operation was performed, and Tommy Galvin's confession (though not possessed of all his humanity, coolly placed the knife across his teeth, previous to using the axe. I looked on Hibernia, may I never look on his like again!" the night lasted my eyes; part Emmet's life blood was dripping from the hangman's jaws. A slight blow of the axe performed the remainder, and the body was a headless trunk. The rest is easily told: trunk and head were quickly placed in a cart, and covered with straw, the scaffold and all its apparatus taken down and carried away, as guards following the procession. Thomas street was soon as clear as if nothing had occurred; the shops were open, and the sun shone as brightly as if thistalented, brave, but unfortunate Robert Emmet had not on that day paid the forfeit of his life.

The insurrection broke out a Saturday night, the 23d of July, 1803; and Emmet was executed on the 20th of September following. It is somewhat strange, that the exact place of is interment is still a matter of doubt—even the writer of the above account is silent on that subject. We have heard only that some letters and documents has turned up in Paris, relative to Robt Emmet, which throw additional light on the circumstances of his time; and that they have been offered to an Irish gentleman, well known in the National rank. Those valuable papers should be secure for our country by being inserted in a new edition of the Countess de Haussville's "Memoir of Robert Emmet"—in case another edition of the admirable tribute of that accomplished lady shall again issue from the press.

C. C. H——y.

Leisure and solitude are the best effect of riches, because mother of fought. Both are avoided by most rich men, who seek company and business, which are sure signs of being weary of themselves.

OUR SAN DIEGO CORRESPONDENCE.

San Diego, Dec. 8, 1861.

The Uncle Sam love in sight on the morning of the 23d ult., piloted by our fellow-townsman, Judge Morse, who happened to be a passenger, on his way down from Sacramento, after leaving our offerings to the State and Union, at his Treasurership behests, "till she was taken in charge by the more experienced hand of Capt. J. L. Bogert, and commenced receiving on board the regular troops destined for the East. The Pacific coast is now denuded of the last vestige of that gallant band of veterans for the more turbulent elements on the Atlantic—a field more consonant to their tastes and calling. "Distance lends enchantment to the view," and that relationship pleases us best, as we have no desire to see war give occasion for the exercise of their vocation here. Capt. Roberts, Co. E, First Regt. Cal. Vols., took up the vacant quarters of the regulars, on their departure on the 24th ult. The citizens gave the officers a ball, as a welcome, on their coming amongst us, and in honor of the brave fellows who have undertaken to defend their own State from the insidious approaches of rebellion.

The weather is most propitious for the farmer and grazier. The present month, contracts were taken at $14 50 for hay, and $24 20 for barley, per ton, to be delivered at the post. If the notices for the former be put out in due time, say April next for the coming year, there would be considerable advantage gained by all parties; for instance, the farmer would know the quantity he had to cut and save, as surplus is a loss, and will not pay to ship, so no hazzard is incurred by knowing in time what to do; consequently there will be more competitors in the field, and the Government be the gainer, and the farmer relieved of uncertainty. I can't help saying that it is a great oversight not to make this the "Camp Chalmo" of California. We have a delightful and uniform climate, and there are the mission buildings, which, I suppose, could be got for the asking, sufficient to house all our forces.

I believe it is now conceded that the Southern route is the only practicable one all seasons. Mind Mr. Jeff. on this point. The frost and snow and mountains will look out for him above. When our mail route, No. 8076, was taking the mails, the Postmaster never had, for the winter and summer, to report a single failure. On the contrary, it was always five to seven days ahead of time. Look to that, and judge if any device can remove mountains and cause hail, rain, frost and snow to cease. Messrs. Dyer and Giddings, the contractors of this route, would, were it not for rebels, have to carry all the mails between the Pacific and the Atlantic, before this. No opposition can change the elements.

An Old Citizen.

The Gallo-Irish

In the obituary of Galignani's Messenger, appears this unobtrusive notice: "Died on 30th Sept., at his residence, 15 Rue de la Ville Evesque, Paris, Daniel McCarthy, Esq., in his seventy-seventh year." That name sounds racy of our Irish soil. Those who knew him as the writer did, will cherish his memory as a true and genial specimen of an accomplished Irish gentleman, whose long sojourn in other lands had removed all the early prejudices of his own, but faithfully preserved in his person all that is amiable in the Irish character. Daniel McCarthy was a native of the county of Cork, where he owned extensive powder mills, which as is usual with such structures, were one day utterly destroyed by an explosion. After the loss of his mills he became Paymaster in a British regiment, and accompanied it through the vicissitudes of the Peninsular war. After Waterloo his regiment was at the occupation of Paris, where he resigned, and became naturalized. Soon moving in the most enlightened social circles of that capital, he sought and found pupils intelligent and high born, including the Duke of Orleans and other sons of Louis Philippe, who learned from him to speak grammatical English in an Irish tone, and from regard for their preceptor, to respect the land of his birth. The writer of this, who some fifteen years ago, had often enjoyed the social charm of his society, and hospitality of his family circle, saw him again last year prostrated with paralysis, but preserving all those high and charitable instincts in which he has been well seconded by his worthy son, Daniel McCarthy, well-known in Paris as the Gallic-Irish Doctor, who gets golden fees from the rich, which he applies largely to his poorer patients.—Correspondence of the Evening Post.

The sight of a drunkard is a better sermon against that vice, than the best that was ever preached upon that subject.

France, Prussia and McMahon.

John Mitchel, in his last letter from Patis, says: Never royal visit was so keenly discussed as that of the King of Prussia to Compiegne. The reporters can make nothing out. It is well known that the King hunted with the Emperor —and that he smoked at Compiegne, as all Germans do; but what was the subject of conversation, or whether there was one word upon any public subject whatever, this is what cannot be made out. The London Times had a series of extremely offensive articles about it. Recently, the Times said that it cannot, of course, be accurately known "what was the nature of the solicitation addressed by the Emperor to the King;" and then proceeds to form a theory and gives the substance of imaginary conversations equally insulting to both the sovereigns. One circumstance, however, is agreeable and encouraging to all right thinking men—I mean the plainer and plainer indications, every day less and less disguised, that England is preparing to make war against France. The British press keeps anxiously calling out to Prussia at this season—What! ally yourself with France! Know you not that France covets all your Rhenish provinces?—that the Emperor wants to make a third-rate power of you? We are your friends; ally yourself with us, against France, and then you keep your position in Europe. At the same time the English laugh bitterly and sardonically (though somewhat uneasily) at the resolution of Prussia to have a fleet. The Times declares that it regards such an undertaking "almost not to say with indignation"—for in fact, Prussia ought to feel that if she is to be an ally of England, the English fleet ought to be enough; and this naval aspiration is ominous.

In the meantime, the King of Prussia, in his return from Compiegne to Berlin, was solemnly crowned; and the Emperor of the French has been represented at that ceremonial by no less a dignitary than Marshal McMahon, Duc de Magenta. All Paris has been in admiration at the sumptuous turnout provided by the Marshal for this special occasion, at the number of his carriages, the rank of his attendants, and the magnificence of his liveries. I extract a paragraph from Le Nord:

"Marshal McMahon determined to be completely French in all the details of extraordinary embassy. He was resolved that all should be French, and extremely French, without imitating anything from foreigners; all his liveries are in French taste; all his laquais, coachmen and valets will be powdered (this is important); the postilions will wear those great boots of Louis XIII. (like chures); and the hats of all the rest. The Marshal has already become a favorite with the King of Prussia, which is not surprising; for at the same time that he is the greatest master of war in this empire, the Duke of Magenta is also the most perfect gentleman."

The coronation took place at Berlin, and no doubt there was a grand display; but it will add to the elegant and dispassionate of our Anglo-Saxon brethren, that the Emperor was represented on so august an occasion by, of all persons in the world, Marshal McMahon, the very syllables of whose name they hate like poison.

The California steamship Northern Light sailed, Nov. 11th, from New York, without the passport regulation being enforced in regard to her passengers, Mr. Superintendent Kennedy having telegraphed to Washington for instructions, but received no answer until after she had left. Suspecuently, upon returning to his office, Mr. Kennedy found a dispatch from Washington, saying that passports would be required from passengers by California steamers, as well as any other. But it was too late. It is supposed that rebel sympathisers may leave for Aspinwall, hoping to escape thence into the Confederate States, hence the requirement that all passengers be furnished with passports.

A concordat between the Pope and President Geffrard has been published at Port au Prince. The concordat creates an Archbishop of Hayti and four Bishops, all to be nominated by the Pope, who, by a special article, is allowed to select for these dignitaries ecclesiastics of the white race; this, it is remarked, indicates that President Geffrard is liberal and progressive in his ideas.

The late Provincial of the Jesuits in England, the Rev. J. Johnson, has been appointed the rector of Stonyhurst College, in the place of the Rev. Francis Clough, who has held that office for upwards of thirteen years. The Rev. F. Clough succeeds the Rev. Mr. Johnson at the Church of St. Francis Xavier, Liverpool.

Covetousness, like a caddie ill made, smothers the splendor of a happy fortune in its own grease.

BUSINESS CARDS.

FORESTER & MARKS,
DEALERS IN
Groceries, Provisions, &c.
No. 11 Commercial st., (Old No.)
Above Battery, SAN FRANCISCO.
Agents for Steamboat Navigation Co. jy8

JOHN CALLAGHAN,
Commission Merchant
DEALER IN
LIQUORS, GROCERIES & PROVISIONS
No. 8 Front street, between California and Pine, oct7-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

P. M'KAEN. W. DOTY.
M'KAEN & CODY,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 30 California st., near Front,
SAN FRANCISCO. no10

REYNOLDS, HOWELL & FORD,
Commission Merchants,
Nos. 70 and 81 Davis street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Gunny Bags constantly on hand.
1ots to suit.

CHAS. D. CARTER,
REAL ESTATE AGENT.
No. 66 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Late Dwellings and stores for sale and to lease.
CONVEYANCES. Deeds, Leases, Mortgages, Powers of Attorney, Contracts, Agreements, Specifications and all other Legal Documents drawn.
Money to Loan.
Real Estate for sale or to lease registered without charge, and kept up to time. The interests of non-residents carefully attended to. no30-1f

ELAM HOWES,
Wholesale Importer, dealer in
WOOD AND WILLOW WARE, HOUSE-KEEPING GOODS,
Twines, Cordage, Shoe Thread, Nets and Seines.
Fishing Tackle, etc.
No. 84 Clay street, one door from N. W. corner Front
jy19tf SAN FRANCISCO.

OLIVER B. CRARY,
Wholesale Dealer and Jobber in all kinds of
ANTHRACITE & BITUMINOUS COAL
Corner Broadway and Front streets,
jy26 tf San Francisco

JOHN MEL,
IMPORTER OF FRENCH WINES BRANDIES.
N. E. corner Montgomery and Jackson streets.
1y16 tf

P. J. DEVINE & BROTHER,
PRACTICAL PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS
Cor. of K and Sixth streets, a16-1f Sacramento, Cal.

E. DUGAN. J. A. WALL.
DUGAN & WALL,
FORWARDING AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
CRESCENT CITY.
jy19
KELLY & WADE,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS, TURPENTINE,
GLASS, VARNISHES, BRUSHES, ETC.
No. 105 & 107 California street,
Two doors below Davis, San Francisco
House and Sign Painting. jy5

A. KOEHLER,
MANUFACTURER OF TRUSSES,
No. 639 Washington street. 1y6

JOHN ROACH,
OPTICIAN,
Old No. 111—New No. 413—Washington street, op posite the Postoffice.
SAN FRANCISCO.

MANUFACTURER and Importer of Theodolites, Transits and Levels, Chains and Tapes, Drawing Instruments, Thermometers, Barometers, Hydrometers, Telescopes, Steam Gauges, Lenses, Magnifyingses, Gallery Mirrors, Magnetic Machines, etc. no16-1f

S. D. GALLAS. C. V. ADMES. G. W. ADMES
ADMES & DALLAM
SUCCESSORS TO HAWKHURST & SON,
Importers and Jobbers of
WOOD AND WILLOW WARE,
BRUSHES, TWINES, BASKETS, &c.,
And Manufacturers of California Brooms,
210 Sacramento street, bet. Front and Davis,
SAN FRANCISCO.

SELLING, MARX & CO.,
Furniture Warerooms,
FORMERLY OCCUPIED BY
J. G. CLARK & CO.,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER
OF FURNITURE.
Beds, Mattresses, etc.,
WE HAVE NOW IN STORE THE LARGEST STOCK OF FURNITURE EVER OFFERED ON THE PACIFIC COAST, FOR SALE AT LESS PRICES THAN IT COSTS OTHERS TO IMPORT.
New No. 310, old No. 198 Washington st.,
(Up Stairs.) San Francisco. no30

CLOTHING.
NOW IS THE TIME.
LOCKWOOD & HENDRIE,
178 CHAT STREET, San Francisco,
Corner of J and Fourth streets, Sacramento,
1y16 tf

CENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING,
AND
Furnishing Goods,
WHICH WE ARE SELLING AT
VERY LOW PRICES!
Every Garment Warranted—All are invited to call.
LOCKWOOD & HENDRIE,
178 and 181 Broadway, New York.
Corner of J and Fourth streets, Sacramento.
no30-2m

B. CURRAN,
Has Opened a
Fine Clothing and Furnishing Goods
ESTABLISHMENT
At No. 214 Montgomery street,
First door south of the entrance to
PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,
Where he respectfully solicits a share of the patronage of his friends, former patrons and the public in general.
Well-Selected Stock of Goods, Consisting of
French and English Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings,
Of the newest patterns for the California trade; to which he would call the attention of his former customers and the public generally.
A large assortment of garments made to order, or ready made clothing, and everything in the LATEST FASHION, and warranted to fit. Those wishing to purchase ready made clothing will find it to their advantage to call, as I must respectfully solicit a call before purchasing elsewhere.
B. CURRAN,
214 Montgomery street.
no13-3

JAMES LAPINE,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
(Late of New York.)
No. 115 MONTGOMERY STREET,
(Between Sacramento and Clay streets,)
Informs his many customers and the public generally, that he has just received a large and well selected assortment of the latest styles of goods, at the above number, which he is now prepared to make up in the most fashionable manner, and at the shortest notice. Also, Military and Navy Uniforms made to order.
P.S.—Persons wishing garments made to measure can have them made at the shortest notice.
Sole Receiver of 113 Montgomery street, between Bush and Pine, opposite the Alcalde House.
AMES' LIGHT Merchant Tailor.

OAK HALL,
620 Clay and 621 Sacramento, San Francisco,
(140 Broadway), New York)
LOCKWOOD, EWELL & CO.
Manufacturers, Importers and Dealers in BOYS' AND GENTS'
CLOTHING
FURNISHING GOODS, etc.,
Wholesale and Retail.
CUSTOM MADE CLOTHING, OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE,
Received by every Steamer.
CLOTHING MADE TO ORDER jy18

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

DECEMBER

Sunday, 16—Octave of the Conception of the B. V. Virgin Mary.
Monday, 16—S. Eusebius, Bishop and Martyr.
Tuesday, 18—S. Gregorius, Widow.
Wednesday, 19—Expectation of the Delivery of the B. Virgin Mary.
Thursday, 20—S. Theophilus, Bishop and Confessor.
Friday, 21—S. Thomas, the Apostle.
Saturday, 22—S. Thomas, the Apostle.

THE MONITOR,

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DEC. 16, 1860.

THE SEXES IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The question as to the propriety of separating the sexes in the Common Schools, is again before the Board of Education of this city, and presents an opportunity of urging objections to the present system. It is a matter concerning which there is much difference of opinion, and it is to be hoped that the committee appointed to investigate it will give it a careful and thorough examination. The principal reasons urged in favor of the present plan are two, namely, that the society of the girls exercises a beneficial influence upon the boys, and that, at least not being attended with any evil, it is less inconvenient and less expensive than maintaining different departments for the different sexes. Now, it is a sad fact that the first of these reasons contradicts all experience. It is generally the case, and particularly with children, that the better element is brought under the influence of the worse, and unless great vigilance is exercised and great precautions taken, such indeed as would be practically out of the power of the teacher, it is invariably obliged to yield. Male children from ten to fourteen, which is the average age of those attending our public schools, cannot be supposed to be alive to that refining influence of the gentler sex, nor should it be imagined that at the same immature age the latter are capable of exercising it. It may be true that by some natural instinct the rude impulses of boyish nature are checked by the mild presence of the female, but it is unnatural to suppose where this is prolonged it can last. The youthful spirit cannot be constantly bound by such a chain, and the consequence is he shakes off the fetters entirely, and becomes insensible to that influence which, if exercised sparingly and judiciously, would have the effect so prematurely aimed at. Then, not only does this constant society of the young girl render the youth heedless of her presence, but his conduct has often much effect upon her, and tends to destroy that modest reserve which, on all occasions, is the greatest ornament of woman. Thus it may be clearly seen that it is an unreasonable notion to think that the influence of the young girl has any beneficial effect upon her boy schoolmate: but on the contrary, it is apparent that their mixture at school in that regard is pernicious to both.

As to the matter of convenience and expense, the difference between the system in operation and that under consideration is perhaps more apparent than real. It will not require another schoolhouse or additional furniture. The accommodations that they now use will still serve. The only addition required, perhaps, will be a few more teachers. And, even if the expense and inconvenience were greater, the benefits resulting are cheaply purchased. Then there is another reform, which, if it does not, should belong to the system here commended, and that is, having male teachers for the boys and female teachers for the girls. It is not necessary to mention anything under the head of obedience, for the mistress, with much labor, may be able to obtain obedience from the boys under her charge, and the female pupils of the master may not take advantage of his delicacy to correct them, nor lose any respect for him should he forget himself and treat them as he does his sterner scholars, but a more important reason may be stated why the present system should be abolished. The teacher's province is not confined to the mere branches that he proposes to teach, but it is his duty whenever opportunity offers itself, to inculcate into the mind of his pupils principles of morality and general conduct to be followed through life. Now, not only does instruction of such a nature come more appropriate to the pupils from teachers of their respective sexes, but those little instructions are the work more of experience than of learning, and can only be expected from teachers of the same sex with the pupils. Some of the best authorities on the subject of education might be advanced in support of these views, but they recommend themselves so strongly, that the Board of Education, since it has taken the matter into consideration, will most likely adopt them.

INTERVENTION IN MEXICO.

The recklessness with which a portion of the press deals with subjects of great national consequence, and the effrontery exhibited in declaring what is the wisest policy for the governments to pursue under grave circumstances must be a subject of grief to every citizen who has at heart only the good of his country. Particularly at this moment when a tremendous war is being waged on our own soil drenching it with blood and exhausting the resources of the nation, it is but reasonable to expect that men who undertake to discuss what concerns the general welfare, should at least be well informed and give something more than a mere echo of the slanders circulated by the English press.

We are led into these remarks by the comments that appeared a few days since in the Mirror of this city, on the article that appeared in our last issue, on Mexican affairs. We believe that the government of the United States would not look with displeasure upon the establishment of a monarchy in Mexico. There is no doubt as to the intention of the leading European Powers to put an end to the horrible atrocities that are being continually perpetrated by the miserable faction that now holds the country in chains, and which have excited the indignation of Christendom. Surely it is better that a constitutional monarchy should be substituted than the continuance of a system of government all one which the Mexicans are unfitted, and under which the immense resources of the country have been permitted to remain undeveloped and the people to become a prey to the worst species of anarchy. Intervention such as is about to take place augurs either the occupation of Mexican territory by the powers interesting or the establishment of a monarchy. It would certainly be unwise to engage in a war with England, France and Spain combined; but this crisis, which would be the only resource left to prevent the carrying out of their designs. Between the two, the policy of the United States is to favor the establishment of a monarchy and preserve the integrity of the Republic. In this way no violation of the Monroe doctrine takes place, and Mexico is benefited by the overthrow of the band of outlaws that have held power for some time past at the capital. In this view several enlightened American statesmen coincide; and it is advocated by the New York Tribune, though the Mirror is unaware of it.

As to Francis II., we adhere to the opinion that he would prove a good King for Mexico. The Mirror, like many of its fellows, unwittingly repeats the falsehoods of the English journals, who have pursued him with a vindictiveness rarely equalled. While seated on the throne of Naples he was distinguished for lenity and wisdom. More than one-half the country from which he was driven by the Piedmontese is now in arms against the invaders and clamor for the return of their rightful monarch, while the other half is held in subjection by an army that numbers one hundred thousand. This is the best answer to the charge brought against Francis II.

Our attention has been directed to an article in the Nevada Transcript of the 11th inst., entitled "St. Peter's Pence," which almost surpasses anything we have seen in the way of misrepresentation concerning affairs in the Papal States. The late hour which the paper in question came to hand, prevents us, in this issue, exposing the false statements which constitute the tirade, and exhibiting the malignant anti-Catholic spirit of the writer.

RELIEVE THE SUFFERERS BY THE FLOOD.

A duty devolves upon the people of San Francisco to relieve the sufferers by the recent floods that have devastated a large portion of the interior of the State. The history of the country scarcely furnishes a parallel instance of so wide-spread a calamity, nor one that calls more forcibly for sympathy and relief. A district of country heretofore prosperous; covered with cities, villages, prosperous mining camps and well cultivated farms is suddenly turned into a waste, the people driven terrified from their homes, their property destroyed and swept away; and thousands left without food, raiment or a roof to shelter them from the pitiless elements.

Under these circumstances the residents of San Francisco who have been more fortunate and who during the past year have enjoyed an unusual share of prosperity, should come forward and liberally succor their suffering fellow citizens. It is hardly necessary to say that for much of its wealth and importance San Francisco is indebted to the interior; and now should esteem it at much a privilege as a duty to be foremost in the good work. In such an emergency as the present no one will ever be the poorer in consequence of any contribution that is given; and Christmas being upon us all will be the happier by dividing with the distressed people in the flooded district? Several meetings have been held in this city for the purpose of raising funds, and already we are glad to state a considerably amount of money has been dispatched to Sacramento. It occurs to us that the committee taking charge of this matter should be energetic men and thoroughly impressed with the importance of their work. Should such be the case, a description only be appointed there is but little room to doubt that San Francisco will again show that the distressed have never appealed to her citizens in vain.

DEDICATION OF ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.

Last Sunday, the new parish church of St. Joseph, on Tenth street, was dedicated by the Most Rev. Archbishop. Notwithstanding the severity of the weather, a large assemblage was present. The edifice, constructed of brick, has a very neat appearance, and will accommodate about four hundred persons. From the eminence upon which it stands can be seen the hills now dotted with handsome cottages and elegant residences, which but a few years ago appeared a barren waste—the entire scene strongly impressing the mind with the rapid and substantial growth of the city. Then, turning towards the Temple just finished, looking gracefulness and neatness of the whole, it was gratifying to think that Religion, the true mother of civilization, watched kindly over our advancement.

The new church is situated midway between the Mission Dolores and the city. It will afford an opportunity of attending Divine service to a much larger number than perhaps is generally believed. Within five years this section has filled up with inhabitants to a remarkable extent, and new buildings are continually going up. The necessity of a church to supply the spiritual wants of the residents had hardly been felt, when the Most Rev. Archbishop, with the zeal that has ever marked his care for his flock, immediately prepared to supply it. Rev. Hugh P. Gallagher was entrusted with the duty of carrying out the design, and it could not have been placed in better hands. Having applied to Horace Hawes, Esq., that gentleman, in the most generous manner, donated a valuable lot of land as a site for the church; and funds collected by Father Gallagher, from persons of all denominations, has enabled him to add St. Joseph's to the number of parochial churches in San Francisco.

The ceremonies, as was previously announced, commenced at eleven o'clock. The Most Rev. Archbishop Alemany, Very Rev. Father Villager, S. J.; Rev. Father Maraille, and Rev. J. and Rev. Father Gallagher, accompanied by the Acolytes, occupied the sanctuary. The body of the church was crowded to excess, not only by persons in the vicinity, but also by many from the city. The blessing of the church was followed by the celebration of Mass. The Archbishop preceded by an acolyte bearing a cross, and accompanied by the priests above mentioned, moved from the sanctuary up the middle aisle, and followed by the congregation, marched in procession round the outside and inside of the church. Previous to placing the church under the patronage of any saint, the Archbishop desired to know of the congregation, if as there was no church in San Francisco as yet under the patronage of St. Joseph, they were willing to place that one under the protection of that revered Saint. Their consent being given, the church was placed under the care of that holy patron. After the dedication of the church solemn Mass commenced; Rev. Father Affranchini, S. J., acting as celebrant. The Mass was followed by the Benediction of the blessed Sacrament by the Archbishop.

FATHER VILLAGER'S DISCOURSE.

An eloquent sermon was preached by the Very Rev. Father Villager, S. J., of which a brief outline of which we can attempt to give. The Rev. gentleman chose for his text three verses in the Book of Genesis—

And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the Lord is in this place; and I knew it not.

And he was afraid and said, How dreadful is this place! this is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of Heaven.

And Jacob rose up early in the morning, and took the stone that he had put for his pillow, and poured oil upon the top of it.

The Very Rev. gentleman, commenced by symbolizing the place wherein Jacob slept to the Church of God. He said that, though God is omnipresent, still he is more intensely present in the house of the Lord, being truly there in flesh and blood. The Church of Christ is the house of God, and many Christians do not know it—that is, do not reflect upon it. But the great house of the Lord is the heart of the Christian; there Christ has condescended to come, and it is a temple as superior to the material church as is those things that were created for heaven. Here the Rev. gentleman exhorted his hearers to purify their hearts and souls, that they might become a pleasing abode for the Savior. He then reminded them of the unspeakable privilege of having the Lord in their midst. How little could any temple—no matter how costly—approach the glorious temple of the Lord of Hosts, and yet it was in a temple as superior to the material church as is the Heavens to the earth, that Christ dwelt here; that when from the throne they beheld the church which Christ might easily do on account of its elevation, they would go down in spirit, and say before their God, their works and actions, and beg of him to bless them. That they should consistently remember that God was with them, and that they were constantly in His presence, and that ever having this in mind they would shun sin and do good.

Carl Maria Von Weber's Mass in G, was sung by a splendid choir. The solo quartette consisted of Miss Kate O'Keeffe, Miss Sunstag, Miss Mayhew and Mrs. Dr. Lane, and orchestral aid was rendered by Mrs. Jones, Mr. Arsch Stadtfeld and Mr. Bowing. Mr. Christian Stadtfeld presided at the organ.

The Rev. H. P. Gallagher is the Pastor of St. Joseph's.

DEPARTURE OF GENERAL SHIELDS.

General Shields, who has lately arrived from Mexico, left on the steamer Golden Gate last Wednesday, for the seat of war. He reenters the army of the United States as a Brevet Major-General, and will, we understand, on his arrival in New York, take command of the Brigade raised by Thomas Francis Meagher, consisting of five regiments, each being 1,200 strong. Although Gen. Shields has been a resident of this State but a short time, he has become identified with our interests, and endeared himself to a host of sincere friends. As a soldier and a statesman, the record of the Mexican war and the debates in the United States Senate are the best witnesses to his actions.

Gen. McMahon (grenadier guard), Captain Knox, and Montgomery (guard dogs), Hyde, having learned late in the afternoon of Tuesday that Gen. Shields had decided to leave on the steamer of the following morning convened for the purpose of tendering him an escort. A deputation waited upon him, to whom he stated that it was his intention to proceed to the seat of war to respond to the call of the President rather than to enjoy the honor of being escorted out of the city without an demonstration, but that if it were the general wish of his countrymen to honor him with an escort, he most cheerfully accepted, and would be prepared to start from the hotel at 9 o'clock A. M.

Wednesday morning the two companies proceeded, in full uniform, bearing the flags of the United States and Ireland, to the Metropolitan Hotel, when it was discovered that he had left for the steamer. The battalion immediately marched to the wharf, when the General made his appearance. The companies formed in line and presented arms, General Shields uncovered, and spoke as follows:

Soldiers and countrymen—I feel proud of this kind testimony of your friendship and respect for me. I am sorry that I could not have waited for you to escort me to the boat, but as a military man, and you will all agree with me as military men, that obedience and promptitude are the first duties of a soldier. I was ordered to be on board at 9 o'clock and I feared the command, which can admit of no excuse for not finding me at the hotel. I am therefore much pleased to find that you have followed me here. Would to Heaven you could follow me on my journey, then would I

Dress and Deportment of Women.

IMPORTANT PASTORAL OF THE BISHOP OF BUFFALO, N. Y.

To the honored and pious Christian Women of this Diocese, Health and Benediction: With those sentiments of reverence and devotion which Christianity alone has designed for women, as Sisters of Mary, and, still more, as Sisters of Him, who, even after His Resurrection, deigned to call himself our Brother. We address our Christian women on a subject which we long refused to touch, though pressed, as it seemed to us, by a Divine impulse. The subject, through the morbid sensitiveness of a corrupt age, is so delicate that we, at times, like Jonas, were tempted to fly from the voice that urged to duty.

At length, as the blessed solemnity of All Saints approached, their prayers and, we hope, something of their spirit, encouraged us to say to our dearly beloved Sisters in Christ, look to it, if you wish God and your blessed angel guardian to look on you with holy complacency; but especially when approaching the holy sacraments, look to your dress; "let then your modesty be known to all men, for the Lord is nigh." Let the modesty of your dress befit the approach to that Divine Spouse of souls, who is sanctity and purity itself, and who will embrace you, in holiest love, in proportion as you obey the Gospel command, "Pray, lifting up pure hands." In like manner, women in decent apparel, adorning themselves with modesty and sobriety, and not with plaited hair or "gold, or pearls, or costly array; but as it becometh women professing piety with good work" Tim. 2:9. Christian women, who read with reverence the Scripture word, will not wonder that we seek to correct a thoughtlessness (for such, shd not an intended fault, we consider it), that is far less seen in our large cities, than in small country places; even there, too, more common among the young than among those whose mature age has given them time to reflect on its impropriety. "Glory not in thy apparel at any time," says the Scripture. Eccl. 11:4. Still less should the modest follower of Jesus glory in forms of dress which even worldings often condemn and criticize. We venture not to pronounce upon such criticising; but our paternal affection for the future mothers of Christ's elect, in this diocese, urges us to say that wise, learned and talented men and women, though not professing to look beyond the comforts and well-being of this life, denounce certain fashionable modes of dress as greatly dangerous to health; thus Miss Catherine Beecher, in her work on domestic economy, says: "One of the greatest difficulties peculiar to American women is delicacy of constitution, which renders them early victims of disease and decay; and the fact that their youthfulness and beauty are of shorter duration than those of any other nation always attracts attention."

Of the ladies of Sweden Bayard Taylor says: "Their clothing is of a healthy, substantial character, and the women consult comfort rather than ornament. I have not seen a low-necked dress or a thin shoe north of Stockholm. Yet a sensible man would sooner take such a women to wife than any delicate Cinderella of the ball room."

Dr. Ellis says: "Who has not been pained by seeing little girls walking our streets, throwing up their arms to keep on their dresses? This method of dressing children and young ladies is one of the most surest means of causing deformity of the chest and shoulders. If there is a portion of the body which, above all others, needs to be properly protected from the cold and atmospheric changes, it is the upper portion, and this is especially true during the days of childhood and youth; therefore avoid low-necked dresses." Avoidable causes of disease, &c., by J. Ellis, M. D.)

A justly celebrated physician says: "The object of all dress should be, first, to cover the body in such a manner that decency shall not be violated, and secondly, to protect it against all the vicissitudes of the seasons. Proper clothing is essential to the preservation of health in civilized life. For those who are not forced to labor, an imperfectly protected state of the person is most injurious, particularly to young persons. In connection with this subject, I cannot abstain from noticing the pernicious effects of the modern system of female dress. Since the free expansion of the chest and its protection by suitable clothing are so essential to health, the employment of tight stays and the exposure of other parts that ought to be protected, must be injurious, and cannot be too highly censured."

But whatever may be the sentiment of the learned and the wise, on the danger of low necked dresses to the health; and whatever may be our wishes for the temporal happiness of the Christian women in our dioceses; and whatever our zeal for the sacred mission which women have to cultivate from earliest youth and form, as only a mother can, the Christian life and spirit in their sons and daughters; yet we dare not press upon them in the relations of society those rules of prudence, when they or their children prefer to wear fashionable low necked dresses in fashionable circles. But we most earnestly exhort all ladies, the very young as well as those of more mature age, not to appear in church, nor assist at Catholic sacred functions, nor present themselves for the reception of the sacraments, without having their necks, shoulders and breast modestly covered. And we request all pastors of souls, and all religious ladies engaged in teaching, to use every possible influence and exertion to see that this advice be accepted in the spirit of Charity and of zeal for that which best pleases God, with which it is offered.

It every age the wise have considered the vanity of dress as the most foolish of all vanities. But that fashionable pride of dress, which takes vanity in displaying, as far as decency can permit, much of what primeval sin forced woman to hide, is a vanity far more dangerous, far more condemnable. St. Eloi blamed Queen Bathilde of France for her vanity in dress, "I do not dress as the most foolish of a queen," said that royal lady, "He it so," replied the saint, "but you dress too fashionably for a Christian." The pious queen understood, and thenceforward dressed more as the Blessed Virgin and as true Christian women were accustomed to dress. We are convinced that our honored Christian ladies will receive this paternal advice in the spirit in which the Christian ladies of the apostolic age received apostolic warnings of nearly the same import. Thus Saint Paul tells us that in the Church it would be a shame for a woman not to cover her head with a veil, or rather a kind of handkerchief, and he says: "Therefore ought the woman to have a veil over her head, because of the angels." (Cor. xi 10.) In this spirit we exhort our Christian maidens and all Christian women to follow the advice of St. Peter, the Prince of the Apostles. In like manner, he says, "Let wives be subject to their husbands, that if any believe not the word, they may be gained without the word by the conversation of their wives. Considering your chaste conversation with fear, whose adorning let it not be the outward plaiting of the hair, or the wearing of gold, or the putting on of apparel. But the hidden man of the heart, in the incorrupt ability of a quiet and meek spirit, which is rich in the sight of God." (Peter 3:5.)

Pastors are not required to read this in Church, but in their discourses they can cite as much of it as may be useful for their different localities.

Given at St. Joseph's Cathedral, on the Feast of the Archangel St. Raphael, A. D. MDCCCLXI. JOHN, Bishop of Buffalo.

WILLIAM SHARMAN CRAWFORD.

Amongst a people there are names which lift themselves like landmarks, and bear a sign and a meaning to the nation upon whose roll they are memoried. Some have the brightness of a great fame around them—some are surrounded with the halo of a great success—and some are typical of struggle, and have no adornment from public fortune or popular victory. Such names, amid all contingencies, gather around them the history of the land in their time, and become a part of it, either by right of genius, by right of merit, or by right of service. Ireland points with pride and love to a bead-roll of glorious genius—to an order of merit never excelled, and to a line of men unmarshalled in labor for her, whose service ceased only with their breath. One of those names to day belongs to the past. William Sharman Crawford from henceforward must be spoken of as amongst the men of times gone by; but long will it be ere he shall be forgotten by the people to whose advancement he devoted much of the energies of his long and useful life. The tenantry of Ireland have lost their most consistent advocate when the grave closed above the venerable champion of their claims, and the nation has to mourn the loss of one honest man. If he erred ever in his efforts for the rights of the Irish tenant, it was an error which was possible to the wisest and the best, and could bring no shame to his brow, or no bitter reproach to his soul. His public life has been filled with but one purpose of disinterested labor, and that, the redemption of the tenant from the injustice of the law. If he has not succeeded in his efforts, the failure must be traced to other causes than his energy, or his anxious interest for its success. He enforced his reasoning in favor of the tenant by his own example in the tenant's treatment. He preached nothing which he did not practice, and this, over the length and breadth of our land, no name was marked by more respect, or no advice received with greater deference, than the name and advice of William Sharman Crawford. He had labored for the people, and the people repaid him with their gratitude.

He lived and died in Ireland, and that, in those days, when there is a premium of fashion for absenteeism, is no poor commendation to his patriot feeling. When the friends of the Irish people were few, he was found to rally them, and to lift his voice in behalf of the most unfortunate being amidst the inhabitants of civilized nations. For many a long year his pleading in such a cause was met by insolent taunts and jeering rejoinders, which he lived down, at least, if he did not crush them into silence by the justice of his effort. The mock philanthropy of our time, either in or out of Parliament, although it may view the continuation of the peasant's sorrow without moving to save him, does not non term a scheme of common equity toward the tiller of the soil an Irish craze. To of Grattan, to realize the dreams of Swift; in the clutch of her armed hand at liberty, the music of the Volunteers floated in the air above the cradle. His father, Colonel "Sharman, wore the uniform of the army which opened for Ireland the gates of the temple of liberty, and when the freedom of the Nation was won, he sat in her council. In the Irish Parliament Colonel Sharman was distinguished for his liberality, as out of it he had been distinguished for his patriotism. His son was a worthy descendant of such a man. By inheritance and by marriage, thirty years ago, William Sharman Crawford found himself one of the richest commoners in the country. Owner of a large property, and familiarized with Ireland, he saw the magnitude of the evils which surrounded him—the peasant farmer to a worse condition than that of serfage. Wealthy and independent, he devoted himself to his self-imposition. Strange it is that so many say, that all his labor, honest, indefatigable, and unceasing as it was, produced two Parliamentary Commissions, and the present Blue Books, and nothing more. The Irish tenant suffers and dies, just as William Shaman Crawford found him, suffering and perishing, thirty years ago, and so to all seeming, some one, with a heavier countenance, a resolution as unswerving, and a zeal as disinterested, may find him thirty years hence.

With such claims to our recognition, we pay our testimony to the worth of a man who so wisely lived and well, who so lored through a long life for a great mass of our people, and who has left a memorial in his name, more enduring, for its unimpeached public virtue, than monumental brass or sepulchral marble could ever perpetuate. Lightly rest the turf above the heart of William Sharman Crawford.—Dublin Nation.

Dotation of St. Patrick.

Décorations, as undermentioned, have been conferred on the soldiers whose names are appended, and brought from Rome by Lieut. D'Arcy:

Cross of St. Gregory—Lieut. Michael Luther, Perugia.

Cross of St. Sylvester—Sergeant Thos. Lyons, Perugia; Privates James Horan, do; James Ryan, do; Philip Kirwin, do; Thomas Kirwin, do; Michael Smith, do; Michael Sommers, do; Sergeant Daniel Donovan, Spoleto; James Coyne, do; Richard Wall, do; Corporals Patrick Lucy, do; Michael Hyde, do; Privates Richard Cahill, do; Patrick O'Shea, do; John Reardon, do; James Connor, do; Michael Stapleton, do; Andrew Daly, do; Sergeant-Major Thomas Parker, Castelfidardo; Sergeant John Kirwan, do; Privates Mathew McKenna, do; Jas. Lynch, do; Sergeant John White, Ancona; Corporal Dolan, do; Privates Nolan, do; do. Murphy, Sixth Company, do; Patrick Nevin, do; Andrew O'Beirne, do; Peter Murphy, do; Michael Murphy, do; John Byrne, do; Ryan, do.

In the Know Nothing times of 1854, I used to be said that the Catholics were strictly guided in their politics by the Church. We were in the habit of replying that the Church had no interest in party contests. Present attitude of Catholics who in the North are loyal, in the South, rebel, is a sufficient demonstration of the folly of classing Catholics politically as a single body. No doubt, each one thinks he is right. The Church does not decide the question except by implication—and the mystic unity of faith and charity is not broken by political or even National differences. We might desire more charity—but that would be only wishing for Catholics to become better, not asking for an improvement in the Church.—Catholic Telegraph.

—Gentility is nothing but ancient riches.

The Third Irish (N. Y.) Regiment.

The following orders have been issued from the Adjutant General's office, New York:

In accordance with general orders No. 78 from this department, and with general orders No. 71 from the War Department, the organization heretofore known as the Third Irish Regiment, and Capt. Branigan's unattached company, now at the Albany depot, are hereby consolidated into a regiment, to be known as the Sixty-third Regiment (old) New York State Volunteers.

Companies A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H and I of the Third Irish Regiment will form the first nine companies of the regiment thus organized. Captain Branigan's company will become Company K of the regiment.

The following persons will be appointed field, staff and company officers of the regiment thus organized, when they shall have passed the examination required by general orders No. 78, and will be commissioned whenever the field and staff and company muster rolls, certified to by the mustering officers, shall have been filed in the office of the Adjutant General of this State.

Colonel, Richard C. Enright; Lieut. Colonel, Henry Fowler; Major, Thomas F. Lynch.

Staff Officers—Adjutant, Thos. Cartwright; Quartermaster, Philip O'Hanlon, Jr.

Company A—Captain, Joseph O'Neill; First Lieutenant, Joseph McDonough; Second Lieutenant, Thomas Twohy.

Company B—Captain, John Warren. Company C—Captain, John Charles Lynch; Second Lieutenant, Horace Russell.

Company D—Captain, George Tobin; First Lieutenant, John Flynn; Second Lieutenant, James J. McCormack.

Company E—Captain, James J. Prendergast; First Lieutenant, P. J. Gormley; Second Lieutenant, Richard P. Moore.

Company I—Captain, James McGrifferty; First Lieutenant, William Fennon; Second Lieutenant, P. W. Lydon.

Company G—Captain, Patrick Gordon; First Lieutenant, James Carty; Second Lieutenant, George Lynch.

Company H—Captain, Michael Walsh; First Lieutenant, John Gleason; Second Lieutenant, Cathwalader Smith.

Company K—Captain, ——— Branigan.

UNDERTAKERS.

MASSEY & KANE.

PRACTICAL EMBALMERS, UNDERTAKERS

Agents for

Fluke's Metallic Burial Cases.

Warerooms No. 634 Sacramento street, first floor, between Kearny and Dupont streets.

EVERYTHING NECESSARY FOR FUNERALS furnished constantly on hand, and at greatly reduced prices. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

Post Office Box No. 1,213. Telegraph Office, No. 12, Dec.

COLDEN, WILEY & CRAIG,

Undertakers.

PERSONS having friends deceased would find it to their great advantage to visit the undersigned warerooms before purchasing elsewhere, as we are desirous to give satisfaction to all who favor us with a call.

Coffins furnished of every description, trimmed and lined, for adults.....$10 do do .....$20 to $25

Mahogany.....$25

Solid Rosewood.....$30

All orders promptly attended to. A Hearse and Carriage will be furnished on the shortest notice for the same.

☞ Please remember the store is now at 113 Sacramento street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

COLDEN, WILEY & CRAIG,

No. 113 Sacramento street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER.

EVERY QUALITY OF FUNERAL EQUIPMENT furnished at the shortest notice. Prices reasonable.

INTERMENTS conducted in all the Cemeteries of S. F. Also, all of the Parsons Patent Metallic Burial Caskets.

241 Sacramento Street.

TEN DOLLAR LOTS.

THE TITLE.

WITH THE SATISFACTION OF THOSE WHO HAVE purchased on time, and, in order to gratify many who have been waiting before the Lots were offered on more favorable terms, I have concluded to offer them for sale for cash, at the following rates, and at the expense of the purchaser, as I have to pay, for transfer of deeds, which will be ready for delivery in a few days:

Lots, 25 by 100 feet.....$10 00

Lots, 50 by 100 feet.....$20 00

Lots, 100 by 100 feet.....$40 00

Lots, 200 by 100 feet.....$80 00

Lots, 300 by 100 feet.....$120 00

Lots, 400 by 100 feet.....$160 00

Lots, 500 by 100 feet.....$200 00

Lots, 600 by 100 feet.....$240 00

Lots,

(Continued from first page.)

is unable to pay honest debts, it is fair and honorable to face creditors and the world with an avowal of the fact. This is precisely the position of Sacramento, and it is honorable on her part to admit her total inability now to pay her public debts, principal or interest, and to avow her determination to do so as soon as she is in a condition to discharge those obligations. No other course is left her, and her citizens will be forced to take the responsibility.

The greatest distress falls upon the poorer class, who lived in low quarters of the town, and in frail tenements. Few of the implements have escaped material losses; the fine one story, fourth of July, are probably the heaviest sufferers, their loss being not less than $50,000.

At no time was either I street or the J street levee disturbed by the waters. For each seven inches of water above the town-site was about six feet deep, but was rescued with great difficulty.

Our informant states the citizens are, as yet, under discouraging circumstances, but bold, and firmly believe that they will soon recover from the effects of that last disaster.

The family of Dr. Hancock, late Senator, who occupied a house on the lower part of O street, are said have been missing since yesterday morning. It is believed that, severe as is this disaster, the damage done to property will not exceed $50,000.

MARYSVILLE.

Marysville suffers greatly by the freshet. The Appeal says: Marysville is now slowly emerging from a flood more disastrous and extensive in character than any which has been known since the place has been settled by white people. On Saturday the rivers were slowly rising, but not rapidly enough to justify the opinion that there would be much of a flood; but by Sunday morning at daylight it was found that the Yuba had backed up into the slough, that all the lower part of the town, below E street was in danger, and the flats were fast filling up with water. The rain continued to fall in torrents during all of Sunday, and by night one sheet of water was stretched from the slough above third street to the Yuba, making islands of most of the buildings below Fourth street. All night long of Sunday the rain fell in sheets, and the wind blew furiously, adding to the terrors of those who watched through the night.

About daylight on Monday morning, the outer side wall of J. L. Eaton's store, on the Plaza, fell with a tremendous crash, the foundation having been completely undermined by the water, which had now risen to such an extent as to cover the whole of that part of the city, except where the street was higher than the adjacent lots. Mr. Eaton's family reside in the upper part of the store, and they were hurried out at once in their night clothes, and taken to the Merchants' Hotel, kept by another, on First street, and in about ten minutes after, to the horror of every one, the floors of that building gave way, and a great portion of the interior of the hotel was precipitated in a ruin, the whole of the cellar supports being suddenly cut out by an immense body of water which rushed in. Then the interior of all the stores on the upper side of First street, around the corner to Lenoxx & Flewell's, on the Plaza, fell one after another. The five-alarm bell now rang, and numerous citizens went to the rescue with teams and skiffs, and began taking people and goods to places of safety.

From the sheep ranch of Glazier Brooks, Co., a large number of sheep were lost, valued at ten or twelve thousand dollars, and a large lot of cattle belonging Glaziers & Thompson, were supposed to be lost from a ranch in Sutter county. The heaviest losses in town, were of course, the losses to the dealers on the Plaza and First street, near the Merchants' Hotel, R. R. Forrester, L. H. Babb, Lennox & Elwell, J. L. Eaton, and others are heavy losers, their goods being precipitated in broken piles into the cellars filled with water. The losses of the boarders and the losers of the Merchants' Hotel are also considerable, valuable furniture, pianos, clothing, cash and small valuables being involved in an indescribable mass of smashed and wet, though by great exertions, many articles saved. The loss falls very heavily on small property holders in the north end of the town, where many small houses were torn down by the strong current from their foundations and carried off beyond recovery, their unfortunate owners, literally houseless and homeless, barely escaping, in some instances, with their lives. The Third street, below D, Hudson, Willey & Crain had a great quantity of lumber, which was floated off, though some of it was saved by being boomed between the houses at the end of Second street. Williams Co's flouring mills were filled with water up to three or four inches on the main floor, where all the flour was stored, and the loss of gardens, fences, out houses and small sheds is scarcely calculable now.

Over the valley south of Marysville, which is lower land than that north of the city, the flood extends for several miles, till it reaches the first swell of the foothills, where it takes in numerous sloughs, most of which are impassible to teams and horsemen, some being raging torrents. This part of the valley was submerged very suddenly, and to a greater depth than has been know since 1851. All the bottom-land farms are flooded, and many were stripped of all the stock upon them. Forty horses were swept from Hedges' ranch, besides a large number of cattle and hogs. Mr. Hedges' house stands upon a high knoll, which is now an island, the water filling the cellar. Numbers of hogs were drowned on Low's ranch. Where Feather River sweeps past Elira, stock of every kind could be seen yesterday constantly passing down the stream, some alive and struggling, and bellowing or squealing for life. The flood was alot very destructive to game. Hares and rabbits have been observed by thousands.

Very few details of the extent of damage caused by the flood in Placer, Amador, Nutter, Butte and other counties, have been received. Enough is known to warrant the belief that great loss of property and of life has occurred. We have intelligence from Long Bar, Park's Bar, Stanley's and Sand Bar, and from all those places, the news is of a most distressing character. At Long Bar a large number of Chinamen were drowned, some say as many as fifty, and at Sand Flat an entire settlement were drowned, the poor fellows climbing into the sycamore trees, and there belly swept down by one by the rising torrent, whose current was here very strong. At Stanley's Bar it is reported that nearly one hundred Chinamen were drowned in a narrow gulch, where the water rose suddenly, leaving only one poor Mongolian to tell the tale.

The valleys of Napa and Sonoma have been partially inundated, and we learn that a portion of the town of Sonoma was submerged. George C. Yount, for over twenty years a resident of Napa, some time since said that during his residence in the valley he had seen it almost all submerged. A general flood in these rich agricultural valleys must prove very destructive to property.

The Santa Clara Cadets, consisting of about fifty students of Santa Clara College, not being able to turn out on Thanksgiving day in consequence of the rain, had a grand parade last Tuesday. They marched through Santa Clara and San Jose preceded by their band, also composed of students, and the splendid appearance which they presented, in full uniform, colors flying and bayonets gleaming, elicited great admiration. Captain Keating and Lieut. Murphy are entitled to great credit for the efficient drill which the company have attained under their instructions.—Tribune.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

WE HAVE THEM,

Everybody Knows It!

HOLCOMBE BROS.

SELL THE BEST GOODS.

And have the Largest Assortment in San Francisco of

BOOTS & SHOES,

NEW OPERAS!

Suits Agents of California for

WEEDS, NEW YORK, CELEBRATED

OPERA GAITERS

—AND—

BALMORALS.

THE ONLY GENUINE ARTICLES IN THIS STATE.

Robert's Philadelphia Quilted Boots.

WILL RETAIL THE

Quilted Boots for ..... $13 00
Half Double sole Boots ..... 8 50
Double sole Boots ..... 9 00

AND ALL OTHER GOODS OF PHILADELPHIA MAKE IN PROPORTION.

Received by every steamer a new stock of

Military Riding & Walking Boots — Farmers' and Miners' Boots:

ALSO, JUST ARRIVED, THOUGHT

LESS THAN COST AND CHARGES

—ALSO—

AN IMMENSE ASSORTMENT OF

Ladies', Misses', Boys' and Youth's

Long Leg Rubber Boots,

FOR THE RAINY SEASON.

If you want first class goods at Lower Prices than ever offered before, CALL ON

HOLCOMBE BROTHERS'

STORE — 9 STORE.

Up-town Store—Corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

Down-town Store—Corner of Jackson and Leidesdorff streets.

HOLCOMBE BROTHERS.

20 DOZEN

GENTS' QUILTED BOTTOM BOOTS.

JUST ARRIVED PER "UNCLE SAM."

—AND—

A CHOICE LOT OF GENTS'

PATENT LEATHER CLOGS.

Double Sole Hunting Boots, Shoes and Gaiters.

For the Rainy Season.

LADIES' "BALMORALS,"

EX LATEST STEAMER;

DOUBLE SOLE GAITERS.

BUTTON AND CONGRESS.

OPERA GAITERS.

LACE, BUTTON AND CONGRESS,

THE GREATEST VARIETY TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.

MISSES' AND CHILDREN'S

WINTER GOODS,

OF EVERY STYLE AND MAKE.

Boys' and Youths' Pegged Boots, Gaiters and Shoes;

GENTS' EMBROIDERED VELVET AND CLOTH SLIPPERS.

J. S. DOLE & CO.

NORTH-WEST

Corner Montgomery and Pine Streets.

M. GUERIN,

Begs to inform his friends of the public generally, that he has just received from L. Bigbert and C. Bonnet, the Largest Assortment of

BOOTS, SHOES & GAITERS,

Ever offered for sale in this city, at the Lowest Possible Prices, at 54 and 56 Third.

Corner Commercial & Battery sts.

SIGN OF THE REMONTE BOOT.

He also keeps on hand a general assortment of every variety of FRENCH BOOTS, SHOES and GAITERS which he will sell Low for Cash.

M. GUERIN.

de6tf

MISCELLANEOUS.

HAYES' PARK PAVILION.

PROMENADE CONCERT

EVERY WEEK,

To be followed by

A GRAND BALL,

With a very LARGE DOUBLE BAR, under the direction of Mr. CHRIS. ANDRUS.

Admission ..... Free.

For the better Accommodation of the Public,

THE CARS

Will run direct from the corner of Third street to HAYES' PARK, from 9 o'clock A. M. until midnight, in short intervals.

REFRESHMENTS at all kinds, and of the best quality, for sale at all times. Lunch on Sunday at 12 o'clock. The best of wines, liquors, &c., to be had.

The Pavilion will be at all times OPEN TO LADIES in the daytime, when they can have dancing to the music of Prof. Andrus.

In connection with the Park every hour, from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M., the Omnibus of Crowley's Co. certain with the Market street Railroad.

M. HAYES, Proprietor.

de19

REMOVAL.

The Undersigned having removed his office to the building recently erected corner of Pine and Montgomery streets, over the store of Mr. Ivers, and he will be still continue to exercise his Profession in all its various branches, and he takes this opportunity of thanking his friends and patrons for the liberal support which they have so generously extended to him during the past, and from his desire to merit a continuance of the same, he will spare no pains to perform in the most skillful manner all operations which have to do with the Teeth. He has had the most valuable experience in the Eastern States and Europe, which he will have ready for the inspection of ladies and gentlemen who may honor him with a call. For the benefit of the afflicted he has also arranged a plan to relieve the most painful operations.

Hours of consultation, from 9 to 12 o'clock A. M., and from 1 to 5 o'clock P. M.

Terms moderate, and strictly cash. Charges for operations will be made in accordance with the following prices:

Plastic filling, each tooth ..... $5 00
Filling with gold, each ..... $1 50 and $3 00
Filling with mineral cement ..... $1, $2 and $3 00
Cleaning, whitening and burnishing ..... $2, $3 and $5 00
Straightening, &c., from ..... $5 to $5 00
Nerves killed and teeth also extracted ..... $1 00

Whole or partial sets, nicely and firmly supported on the finest gold, at from each tooth ..... $5 to $10
On the best silver plate, each tooth ..... $2 to $3

Montgomery street, southwest corner of the office every day except Sunday.

Special attention paid to Children's Teeth.

Circulars, giving full directions for parents for the preservation of children's Teeth, sent free.

Remember the place, Third, near Howard.

W. H. IRWIN, M. D.

de17

KNOX'S

IMPROVED

STEAM CHEST

PATENT AMALGAWATOR,

FOR WORKING GOLD & SILVER ORES.

MANUFACTURED EXCLUSIVELY BY

PALMER & CO.,

San Francisco, Cal.

NOTE.—The implement consists of a steam chest of any desired length or capacity, and is the simplest machine of the kind known—for a period of years, on the whole term of its operation, it has suffered little or no wear, except in the valves.

For further particulars, address

W. A. PALMER,

Golden State Foundry,

NO. 6 BATTERY STREET.

Messrs. PALMER & CO., Proprietors.—We have obtained one of your implements, and have worked it for some time. We find it to answer our expectations in working our ores. It is simple in its construction, and does not require much watching, and the power is a perfect regulator for the same.

Respectfully yours,

FORSTER & GRIFFITH.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

27 Teeth! Teeth!!—Extracting without pain.—Dr. W. H. IRWIN, Dentist, Third street near Howard, opposite Ralph Macondy. All branches of Dentistry performed in the neatest possible manner.

Extracting, each ..... $1 00
Do Children's ..... 50
Filling with gold, each ..... $1, $2 and $3 00
Filling with mineral cement ..... $1, $2 and $3 00
Cleaning, whitening and burnishing, $2, $3 and $5 00
Straightening, &c., from ..... $5 to $5 00
Nerves killed and teeth also extracted ..... $1 00

Whole or partial sets, nicely and firmly supported on the finest gold, at from each tooth ..... $5 to $10
On the best silver plate, each tooth ..... $2 to $3

Montgomery street, southwest corner of the office every day except Sunday.

Special attention paid to Children's Teeth.

Circulars, giving full directions for parents for the preservation of children's Teeth, sent free.

Remember the place, Third, near Howard.

W. H. IRWIN, M. D.

de17

27 Four First Premiums of the late New Fair, and the ONLY FIRST PREMIUM at the late Fair of the Mechanics' Institute, were all awarded to our corset exhibition, for the HOWE UNIVERSAL SKIRT, plain, in contrast with other skirts. Also, the FIRST PREMIUM for the best ARTICULATED at both Fairs.

Please to look at our fancy jet for evening entertainments. Dress all on the newest fixed.

Over seventeen years experience of both of us, enables us to excel all our competitors.

HAMILTON & LOVERING,

Leicester's building, 111 Montgomery street.

de17

BANKING.

HIBERNIAN SAVINGS

AND

LOAN SOCIETY.

Office—Sutter street, first Building west of Montgomery street.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT ..... P. B. SWEENY.
VICE PRESIDENT ..... RICHARD MARSH.

TRUSTEES:

N. K. MASTEN.
JAMES LICK.
JOHN FRANCIS.
JAMES DONAHUE.
P. B. SWEENY.
RICHARD MARSH.
WM. BLANCHARD.
OLIVER EATON.
GEORGE TOURNEY.

TREASURER ..... JOHN MEE.
ATTORNEY ..... RICHARD TOBIN.

Deposits received from ten cents and upwards. Dividends declared semi-annually. Interest allowed at every one half per cent. per month.

Office Hours—From 9 A. M. to 12 M., and from 1 to 3 P. M.

(Branch Office.)

SAMUEL BRANNAN. GEO. C. GRAY.

BRANNAN & GRAY,

Commission Merchants,

AND DEALERS IN

Lumber, Pickets, Shingles, Lime, Hair, Cement, Plaster, Fire Brick, Fire Clay, &c.

Corner of Second and Townsend streets, San Francisco.

de20

DONOHOE, RALSTON & CO.,

BANKERS,

SELL EXCHANGE ON

New York, Boston,
Philadelphia, Baltimore,
St. Louis,

And other Principal Cities of the Union.

ALSO,

London and the Bank of Ireland.

DONOHOE, RALSTON & CO.

REYNOLDS, REIS & CO.,

BANKERS,

No. 408 Montgomery street,

SELL EXCHANGE IN SUMS TO SUIT, drawn on

The Bank of the State of New York.

Drafts drawn on

MESSRS. HAYWOOD, HART & CO. ..... Marysville
MESSRS. BARRON & HAMILTON ..... Downieville

Purchase Gold Bullion and Mint Certificates. Discount Paper.

Make Advances on Gold for Assay or Coinage, attend to Collections and Exchange.

GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

de19m3m

V. MARZIOU & CO.,

BANKERS,

Importers and Commission Merchants.

Regular line of sailing Packets between Havre and San Francisco. Office, 15 commercial street.

Money received on deposit. Bills on France.

se13-1y

INSURANCE.

NORTHERN ASSURANCE CO.,

Of London and Edinburgh.

ESTABLISHED 1836

FOR FIRE AND LIFE, AT HOME AND ABROAD

Capital ..... $6,300,000.

THE POLICIES of this Company are not only guaranteed by the capital paid up, but also by the unlimited personal responsibility of nearly one thousand share holders.

The premiums for Fire Insurance are now greatly reduced. For particulars apply to

WM. LANT BOOKER, Jr.,

Agent for California.

de17-1y

IMPERIAL

FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE CO.

OF LONDON,

Established in 1820.

CAPITAL ..... $5,000,000.

THE undersigned having received permission to act as Agents for the above Company, are now prepared to receive applications for insurance.

PALMER, REA & CO.,

de17 No. 126 Sansome street.

Stock holders are not responsible for any debts of the Company.

A Stock Policy issued for a period of years, on the whole term of life. jy16

THOS. N. CAZNEAU,

INSURANCE BROKER,

And Adjuster of Marine Losses and Averages.

Marine and all Commercial Documents and Writings Drawn. Claims upon Insurers Adjusted.

Consultations upon all Insurance and Mortgage Subjects.

Office, Exchange Building,

Battery street, ..... Opposite Custom-house,

de17 SAN FRANCISCO.

HARTFORD

FIRE

INSURANCE COMPANY,

ESTABLISHED MORE THAN

Half a Century.

THIS well known and established Company offers its services for insurance against loss by fire on favorable terms.

McLEAN & FOWLER, Agents,

North-east corner of Clay and Battery streets, de20-1m San Francisco.

FISHER & CO.

ARE SELLING THE FINEST

SILK HATS

FOR SIX DOLLARS!

The Compressed Hat,

FIVE DOLLARS!

Montgomery street, cor. Commercial,

SAN FRANCISCO.

nov 1tf

AUCTIONEERS.

COBB ..... AUCTIONEER.

H. A. COBB & R. H. SINTON,

Real Estate and Stock Auctioneers.

Office and Salesroom ..... 102 Montgomery Street, Safe Deposit—Saturday.

Strict attention will be given to all the legal requirements in sales of Real Estate at Auction. Remember, at Tuesday sale of Real Estate—It is necessary for legal advertisement. Acts of sale at gentlemens' expense. Ten per cent. of purchase money at 1, in all cases. (A respectful time of sale. Payments or any to other. Conveyance at Notary Public.

Thursday Sale of Stocks—Sale 11, all parts of the State. Only Auction Sale here to include parts of the State. Sales of Stocks private, to be publicly announced, at Office, 102 Montgomery street.

Conveyance at Notary Public.

de20

PROFESSIONAL.

JOHN O'FARRELL,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

504 Montgomery Street,

(Branch Office.)

GILLESPIE & GRAY,

Examiners of Deeds

—AND—

SEARCHERS OF RECORDS,

For all Incumbrances, including Judgments and Taxes.

Also—Loans negotiated on the Pledge of REAL ESTATE in this and adjoining counties.

No. 412 Washington street,

Adjoining the Office of Records.

de20

B. H. BYRNE. T. W. FREELON.

BYRNE & FREELON,

ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW!

121 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. DOWLING,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

—AND—

CONVEYANCER.

Bills of Exchange and notes protested. Deeds, Mortgages, Contracts, and other documents, carefully and promptly drawn up.

83 Merchant Street. jy1

NATHAN PORTER. E. D. SAWYER.

PORTER & SAWYER,

ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW

Room No. 2,

Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

Commissioners for all the New England States. [mch8-1y]

THOMAS ENGLAND,

ARCHITECT,

320 Clay street, opposite Leidesdorff street.

EUGENE B. DRAKE,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

Office, Room No. 1, Naglee's Building, northeast corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets.

de20

PAINTS, OILS, &C.

Paints, Oils and Window Glass

DEPOT.

316 & 320 Washington st. (Old Numbers, 95 & 97).

D. J. OLIVER

HAS now Landing and in store, the LARGEST STOCK IN THE STATE, which he offers for sale at the lowest rates.

de20

CARIETS! CARPETS

Velvet and Brussels

CARPETS!

NEW STYLES

THREE-PLY AND INGRAIN CARPETS,

THE LARGEST

ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY,

AT THE LOWEST PRICES.

KENNEDY & HELL,

Cor. Montgomery & California sts., San Francisco.

To Lease.

A NEW HOUSE, corner of Bush, Buchanan and Howard Dwelling House on 3d west corner of Union and Fifth streets.

—AND—

Building Lots for a Long Term—On Easy Terms.

M. A. HEALY,

Over G. B. Hammond's Office, de26 No. 9 Montgomery Block, 2d floor.

For Sale.

FIRE-BRICKS and clump Homestead Lots, on bay front, with Railroad at the rear and Wharf in front.

Over G. B. Hammond & Co.,

de26 No. 9, Front street.

THE MONITOR.

VOL. V. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1862. NO. 30.

THE MONITOR;

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF

Catholic Literature and General Intelligence

Printed and published every Saturday, at the office, No. 420 Montgomery street, San Francisco,

BY

T. A. BRADY,

Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS:

Per annum, in advance (by mail) ..... $4 00
Half yearly, do ..... 2 00
City subscribers (payable to the carriers) per week ..... 10c

(BY ENGLAND MAIL.)

LATE IRISH NEWS.

The Belfast Northern Whig says: "A Clyde pleasure steamer, named the Eagle, sat present lying at Queen's quay, under repairs, and it is said that she has been purchased to run the blockade of one of the Confederate ports. The Eagle is a long vessel, sits low in the water, and would be well adapted for its service for which it is rumored she is intended."

It is rumored that Dr. Gray (editor of the Freeman's Journal,) will be a candidate for the representation of Dublin in Parliament at the next opportunity.

The royal mail steamer Leinster had a narrow escape from being wrecked at Holyhead during the late gale.

The trial of Frederick C. Shaw, of Enniscorthy, —indicted for forgery of a check for £102 12s. 6d., in the name of Mr. John Pim, of Dublin—was concluded on the 31st October, at the commission court. The jury disagreed, and the prisoner was remanded to a higher tribunal.

At the half-yearly meeting of the Athenry and Tuam Railway Company, held on October 30, Denis Kirwan, Esq., Chairman, announced that arrangements were nearly completed for the immediate commencement of the works between Athenry and Ronis, whereby direct communication will be established between Munster and Connaught.

In the Encumbered Estates Court Dublin, on the 4th ult., the farm of Grangehill, the property of John Glenn, Esq., containing 70 acres, held under lease for their lives, at present rent £23 18s. 6d., was purchased by R. Donley, solicitor, in trust, for £380.

Arch-room Deasy has resigned the chairship of the Trales Union, having accepted a preferment elsewhere.

An attempt is again proposed to be set on foot to establish a line between Valencia and Newfoundland. The mail known firm of Glyn, Elliot, whose cables are on every sea, expatiate on the great confidence in their being at no day in successfully, and propose, if they train the contract, to subscribe £25,000 in cash.

Of the ninety-three gentlemen who names were appended to the requisition saying a public meeting in Nenagh in aid of the Lancashire distress, but one contributed inside the fund for the relief of the distress the West of Ireland. That one—and his subscription to be kept in mind—was Captain Ryder, R.N., who gave £5 towards the relief a destitution flippantly denied by Chief Secretary Peel.

The following is a list of Irish Gn Rents lately sold on the English Commissioners of Woods and Forests:—Antrim: Fishers in Carrickfergus Harbor, £26 6s. 6d.; Foreshore at Carrigginhill, £100 5s.; Fishery at Little Island, near Cork Estuary, 16 12s., £807 2s. 10 mpgal; Foreshore of Swilly river, £40. Durham: a piece of land part of the Phœnix Park), £200. Kerry: reclaimed lands (part of the Foreshore of the estuary of the river Lee), £48 14s. Limerick: reclaimed lands of the river Shannon, £29. Meath: Mudlands (part of the Foreshore of the river Magee), £27.—£334 10.—Londonderry: Culmore Fort and lands, £12,000. Low Foreshore of the river Boyne, from thence of Broughea to the upper sea, £125 13s1. Sligo: Foreshore of Ballysadare Bay, £—£412 7s. 6d.

The winter fishing at Howth has commenced, with great success. The average is 13s. per score. The English and Scotch buyers are sending large quantities to the Esh markets.

The late Rev. Thomas Molly, C. Cashel, by his will bequeathed £500 to the committee for the Propagation of the Faith.

Samuel Perry, Esq., of Clonmelsa, been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county of Tipperary.

A fire of rather a serious character broke out on the 24th of October in the back prises of the National Bank, at Kells, which lasted in the destruction of a each house and out sta ing, the property of Mr. O'Beirne Ranger.

The Galway Vindicator of Nov. 1 says:—"Mr. Hammond, the American Consul, Dublin, has written in his colleague here, West, and states that the steamers will soon be running between Galway and Portland, Maine, in February."

The Cork Examiner of the 1st Nov. says:—"The export trade from this port to Hull has received an immense increase within past couple of months. So great is the quantity of cattle, oats and butter now being shipped, that the regular steamers have been found insufficient, and extra steamers have been put on."

The same paper says that should Gladstone occur in the representation of Bedford on the retirement of the Hon. Col. Wemth Barnard, the present member, it is understood that a professional gentleman of large practice as a solicitor in that town, to offer himself to the constituency."

The Cork distillers have reduced the price of whiskey to 15s. 6d. per gallon.

The Enniskillen and Bondoran Railway, which is to provide for the Northwestern counties commodious and speedy communication with the pleasant summer resort of Bundoran, and which is also, by further extension in Sligo, to unite the provinces of Ulster and Connaught, is making satisfactory progress. There are 1600 men employed on the work. These are engaged at various points constructing bridges and embankments, and making excavations. The principal bridge will be over the Erne, at Belleek. It is to be on lattice girders, 100 ft. span.

A dispatch from Ballyhaigen, county Louth, of October 30th, says:—"It is our melancholy duty to record the loss of a young lade under the following and circumstances: Miss Frances Logan, daughter of the Rev. T. D. Logan, of Charleston Rectory, county Louth, was on a visit with her uncle, Mr. Ellis, of Tankersville, near this town; and on Tuesday about 4 p.m., she was walking beyond Fancourt terrace. Of her subsequent fate nothing is yet known with certainty, but it is supposed she slipped on the rock and was carried out with the ebbing tide. A search was instituted on Tuesday until 6 o'clock, when inquiries were at once set on foot, and a search then commenced, and was continued during the night. No trace was, however, discovered until the following morning, when her boots, gloves and bag were found on the rock, which indicated the spot where, it is concluded, she met her sad fate; and, as they were beyond the reach of the tide, it is evident she had taken them off before going down, further in bathing her feet, as she had done on previous occasions. The coastguard and other boats have been engaged dragging, but up to the present without success."

A conference took place Nov. 5, at the Corn Exchange, Dundalk, of several gentlemen interested in the proposed new route to Holyhead. After the conference, which was private, the entire party proceeded, accompanied by several engineers, to Greenore, on the Carlingford coast, to see whether the place may not be a more desirable terminus than Gyles' quay.

The office of clerk of the peace for the county of Clare having become vacant by the death of Wm. Keane, Esq., the appointment being at the disposal of Lord Inchiquin, as Lieutenant for the county, has been conferred on his brother, the Hon. Robert O'Brien.

The appointment of a Protestant Chaplain is sought for Corcha Workhouse, in which there are nearly two of that persuasion to one of able body and the Roman Catholic creed.

Commissioners have taken place between the Admiralty and the Harbor Commissioners of Dublin, relative to the erection of storm signals at that port.

In the Institution of the majority of the Town Council of Belfast to nominate Thomas Verner, Esq., J.P., as Mayor for the next year.

A fire of a dangerous character broke out in the marine department of the Dublin Custom House at an early hour on the morning of the 5th November. Owing, however, to the quickness with which it was discovered, and the promptitude and energy with which steps were taken to arrest its progress, it was extinguished before any serious damage had been caused.

We learn that a number of operatives, well trained in various branches of the flax manufacture, and in the power loom weaving of linen, as well as some mechanics accustomed to the fitting up of flax spinning machinery and millwork, have been engaged for life in the continent—Prussia and Belgium, it is understood—in both of which countries the staple manufacture of Ulster is rapidly extending. These people, the largest proportion consisting of females, have entered into agreements to work for stipulated periods at wages fully equal to those paid in their several departments at Leeds.

The Galway American of November 8, says: "Although the press is generally silent in reference to our packet station, and although the town has lost much of its hope and pluck since the retirement of Father Daly from public life, still we believe that the realization of the project on a permanent footing is not far distant. In addition to other sources of information, we may state that a Galwayman, whom son is employed on board the Adriatic, had a letter yesterday morning, stating that the boats would be at Galway in February, which confirms our previous statement, and that an agent from Canada had recently inspected all the vessels, which shows that a contract of some kind has been entered into with the Canadian Government. The letter also stated that the hands of the Adriatic are retained under pay."

The Navan races took place on the 5th Nov. The numbers present were large, the sport fine, and the sport excellent. The merchant's plate of £40, with a sweepstakes of 6 sovs. added, was placed to the credit of Mr. Wade's br. m. Marsha. The Navan handicap plate of £100, was won by Ian Meany's Sly Fox. The running by between the winner and Mr. Mugrave's Miss Maria—the Fox winning by a length. In this race Portisland, ridden by P. Igoe, ended his misfortunes by breaking his leg against a fence. The selling plate of £20 was placed after two heats, for Mr. Henry's Patience (late Irishtion).

A dispatch dated Londonderry, November 5, says: "Early this morning an Orange flag with purple border, and a figure of William III. in the centre, was hoisted on the flag-staff of the Walker Testimonial, and continues there still. The Cathedral bells have been ringing throughout the day. No other display has taken place, and I am glad to say the city is perfectly tranquil and free from excitement."

A correspondent writing from Enniskillen on 5th November, says: "The only display of the Orange party in this county is as below—Four Orange flags were hoisted on the tower of the church yesterday, and the bells were chiming throughout the day, occasionally playing party tunes. Another party was seen marching in procession towards Maguire's bridge, wearing Orange sashes, and playing party tunes. There was a fair at Maguire's bridge on that day, and outside the town an Orange flag was raised upon a tree, about which three or four hundred men and boys were assembled, but on the approach of the police they pelted down the flag and dispersed."

The half-yearly meeting of the Wicklow Copper Mine Company was held November 1, and the report showed a great contrast to the usual brilliant result. The change seems to have arisen partly from the American war—which has thrown the sale of pyrites—and partly from the competition of foreign ore containing a larger quantity of copper. The directors state that the latter difficulty had been no disadvantage to them as long as there was an ample demand, but that now they find it more difficult to sell, even though the price is reduced from 26s. per ton to 10s. There were no funds to pay a dividend, and none was declared, but the loss during the past half year had been reduced from £11,200 to £5600.—The directors seem to look forward to similar distress during the continuance of the American war. There was a good deal of discussion on the matter—some of the shareholders being of the opinion that it would be better to sell the stock at a reduced price and pay a dividend, which idea did not, however, eventually adopted.

Whilst the barque Primrose, the property of Messrs. Hartley, was recently entering the Limerick docks, warped or worked by a cable attached to the mooring post, and wound at the other end round the capstan, the rope having got entangled with some floating timber, snapped, and the capstan violently revolving, one of the hands named Michael Stapleton, was struck by the bar or handspike and killed, and laid prostrate and insensible. Dr. Parker was immediately sent for, and under that gentleman's skilful treatment the poor man was restored to consciousness. Another man named David Milligan, who was engaged with the former, was struck on the arm which was severely contused. A young lad named Thornton was at the same time knocked into the water by the action of the rope, which, of course, rapidly through his hands.

A powerful steamer for the Dublin Belfast Office Corporation, is now building on the Clyde, to carry on the customary passenger traffic of Irish light-heeler.

The following gentlemen have been elected members of the Trales Town Council for the year:—Hugh H. O. R. M'Dermott, son of Charles Joseph M'Dermott, P. L. Coolavin, county Sligo; John Behan, son of the late Denis Behan, merchant, of Blackrock, in the county of Dublin; Thomas Bolton, only son of John Bolton, Esq., of Cullen House, Bray, county of Meath; Philip Thomas Lyster, third son of William Lyster, of the Cascade House, County of Kilkenny, Esq., J. P., and Edward Thomas Gurney, only son of Edward Hanbury Esq., of Clare, King's county, M. D., M. R. I. A.

A requisition is in course of signature, calling upon the Lord Mayor to convene an early day for a public meeting in the town, to take action on the O'Connell monument movement.

A valuable mine has been discovered on the property of Mr. Bell, in the Lough neighborhood of Ballynaughan. Captain Thom, a gentleman possessing great scientific skill, has visited the locality, and states it is likely to prove a valuable property.

On the morning of Nov. 5, the flour mills of Messrs. Alexander & Co., Milford, four miles from Carlow, were burnt to the ground. They were insured for large amounts in the Patriotic, National, Mercantile and Kent Insurance Offices, but the cause of the fire is not known.

The Town Council of Cork have unanimously consented to locate a prominent site in the city, to the erection of a statue to commemorate the name and services of Daniel O'Connell.

Mrs. Sophia Stewart, the last of the ancient royal family of Scotland, has just died in her 91st year. She was descended from Walter, first Baron of Kincardine, who was son of the Earl of Buchan, and Lord of Badenoch, son of Robert II. of Scotland. The family continued to possess the Barony of Kincardine during ten generations, when their land became the property of the powerful family of Gordon. The celebrated Rob Roy Stewart, the true and lovely friend of "Prince Charlie," was her grand uncle. Her father, James Stewart, alias "Drumsaucklene," was assign in the rebel army, and carried out of the battlefield of his dead brother by the bar or handspike and laid prostrate and insensible. Dr. Parker was immediately sent for, and under that gentleman's skilful treatment the poor man was restored to consciousness. Another man named David Milligan, who was engaged with the former, was struck on the arm which was severely contused. A young lad named Thornton was at the same time knocked into the water by the action of the rope, which, of course, rapidly through his hands.

A powerful steamer for the Dublin Belfast Office Corporation, is now building on the Clyde, to carry on the customary passenger traffic of Irish light-heeler.

The following gentlemen have been elected members of the Trales Town Council for the year:—Hugh H. O. R. M'Dermott, son of Charles Joseph M'Dermott, P. L. Coolavin, county Sligo; John Behan, son of the late Denis Behan, merchant, of Blackrock, in the county of Dublin; Thomas Bolton, only son of John Bolton, Esq., of Cullen House, Bray, county of Meath; Philip Thomas Lyster, third son of William Lyster, of the Cascade House, County of Kilkenny, Esq., J. P., and Edward Thomas Gurney, only son of Edward Hanbury Esq., of Clare, King's county, M. D., M. R. I. A.

A requisition is in course of signature, calling upon the Lord Mayor to convene an early day for a public meeting in the town, to take action on the O'Connell monument movement.

A valuable mine has been discovered on the property of Mr. Bell, in the Lough neighborhood of Ballynaughan. Captain Thom, a gentleman possessing great scientific skill, has visited the locality, and states it is likely to prove a valuable property.

On the morning of Nov. 5, the flour mills of Messrs. Alexander & Co., Milford, four miles from Carlow, were burnt to the ground. They were insured for large amounts in the Patriotic, National, Mercantile and Kent Insurance Offices, but the cause of the fire is not known.

The Town Council of Cork have unanimously consented to locate a prominent site in the city, to the erection of a statue to commemorate the name and services of Daniel O'Connell.

Mrs. Sophia Stewart, the last of the ancient royal family of Scotland, has just died in her 91st year. She was descended from Walter, first Baron of Kincardine, who was son of the Earl of Buchan, and Lord of Badenoch, son of Robert II. of Scotland. The family continued to possess the Barony of Kincardine during ten generations, when their land became the property of the powerful family of Gordon. The celebrated Rob Roy Stewart, the true and lovely friend of "Prince Charlie," was her grand uncle. Her father, James Stewart, alias "Drumsaucklene," was assign in the rebel army, and carried out of the battlefield of his dead brother by the bar or handspike and laid prostrate and insensible. Dr. Parker was immediately sent for, and under that gentleman's skilful treatment the poor man was restored to consciousness. Another man named David Milligan, who was engaged with the former, was struck on the arm which was severely contused. A young lad named Thornton was at the same time knocked into the water by the action of the rope, which, of course, rapidly through his hands.

The Liverpool Journal of Commerce of Nov. 10, has received information that the British ship Antona, taking ammunition on board at Cork, has been stopped by order of the British Government, on the ground that the supplies of powder, etc., were intended for the Southern Confederacy. The same journal has reason to believe that dispatches have been received tremonstrating with the British Government for allowing, on previous occasions, privateers and vessels laden with ammunition, to be built and fitted out in British ports.

The President has issued an order to the Army of the Potomac, eulogizing the courage and skill of the troops in crossing and re-crossing the river, and the bravery with which they maintained an unequal contest against an entrenched enemy.

SPEECH OF JAMES T. BRADY.

At a meeting of the Democracy of New York held at the Cooper-Institute Hall, on Friday evening, November 28th, to which Governor Seymour was invited. Messrs. John Van Buren and James T. Brady addressed the audience. Mr. Brady was once named as a candidate for the Governorship of New York, and he is regarded as a man who could draw votes from the Republican side. He said:

I will indulge in a few words with the Democracy and the Conservative Republicans who aided us in the last contest, and to whom, as an American citizen, I acknowledge my heartfelt gratitude. [Cheers.] And what I utter at this moments is not the abullition of the moment, but is the result of such mature reflection as I am capable of giving to any important question which engaged my mind. I remember when this war broke out, I had that feeling of exhilaration which swells the heart of the American people, for the sight demonstrated what I stated twenty years ago, that if the occasion ever did arrive, which I prayed God it never would, to call forth our martial strength, the event would prove that the American people had more of military power and fervor than any race of men on the face of the earth. [Cheers.] I looked at those processions of armed bone, and heard the hearty tramp of men, with feelings akin to delight

THE MONITOR.

VOL. IV. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1862. NO. 38.

THE MONITOR;
A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF
Catholic Literature and General Intelligence.
Printed and published every Saturday, at the office, No. 630 Montgomery street, near Sacramento, San Francisco.
T. A. BRADY,
Editor and Proprietor
TERMS:
Per annum, in advance by mail..... $5 00
Half yearly, do. ..... 3 00
City subscribers (payable to the carriers) per week..... 12½

JOHN MITCHEL'S LETTER FROM PARIS.

It is a point of etiquette, I believe, in our balmy modern world, when any war is likely to break out between civilized nations, for journalists to express a hope and a trust that the horrors of war may be averted. Even when the whole point is manifestly doing its uttermost to blow the coal, it is usual, and highly proper, to put one paragraph into one's article, deprecating all fratricidal proceedings. This looks well, even Christian—and costs nothing. Thus, since April last, the whole English press has been striving to stir up the people, both of the Southern States of America and of the Northern; and the sole aim and policy of that long-winded Times' correspondent, since he went over, has been to taunt both sides with doing so little in the way of fighting, and to make sarcastic comparisons between the American armies and achievements on one side, and the tremendous war machinery of Europe on the other—which latter that long-winded person is supposed to understand, from long experience in writing paragraphs about them. But all the while, in all the leading articles of the London papers, there was the unfailing exhortation to concord and peace; which looks so Christian—and costs so little. Well, we have just now in Paris another capital example of the same sort of phenomenon. The French, in fact, are right well pleased to see America and England going to war; and our journals show, when they have the usual amount of peaceful counsels, but judiciously aggravate and exasperate the parties of both sides. Judging very sagely that if either America or England would recoil from the deadly wear, it would not be America, they have applied themselves especially to firing England up to the scratch. Every French journal—without an exception that I have seen—has declared that England's flag has been an insult, not to be wiped out in this world, save by apology or battle. With one voice they declared the captain of the San Jacinto to have not only violated international law, but to have done so with almost pointed and provoking insolence. In short, they all gave it to be understood that if France had received such an affront, ambassadors would be recalled at once and reparation demanded, with shotted broadsides bearing pointblank upon New York. They are zealous in impressing upon England that she has both the right and the duty upon her side: they count up to her her numerous ships of war, undervalue the naval resources of America, and tell her she has only to go in and win. Nay, the Patrie (which sometimes passes for a sort of semi-official paper) even went the length of holding out some hope that France would make common cause with England in this matter; which miscellaneous piratory of the Patrie was eagerly caught at by the frightened Times. That, however, has been long since denied, condemned retracted, and absolute neutrality is the unalterable resolution of France. Accordingly, the Moniteur is very grave and reserved, its chief business having hitherto been to "deny, from time to time, some unauthorized statement or other. For example, it was alleged lately that General Scott, who had just arrived in Paris, and who went back to America within a week, was the bearer of proposals of mediation from the Emperor; and again London saw a gleam of hope: but the unfeeling Moniteur coldly informs us that the old General, when in Paris, was not in communication at all with any member of the government, and that of course he bears no such pacific proposals. The Debats, perhaps, is the most preserving in carrying on the British Lion; the Debats seems to take pleasure in bringing up that brute by the ears, like a bull terrier, and shaking him as he is growling for. Doubtless, France has her reasons for egging on England to this struggle—just as England had hers, and very apparent ones, for ensuring the final separation of the Northern States from the Southern.

A Paris correspondent of a London paper has perceived this malignant pleasure of the French in the approaching contest between what he calls two branches of the "Anglo-Saxon race." Such correspondent's Anglo-Saxon feelings are hurt by it; and you could never guess who is this ardent Anglo-Saxon writer [no other than Father Frank Mahony of the Globe, an Anglo Saxon from Cork, proud of his English blood, and no contemplator of everything Irish that he thought it quite enough to call a man a "Patlander," to point him out to the abhorrence of the readers. Well, Father Mahony, who does not want for shrewdness, has discovered this mischievous design in France, and warns his Anglo-Saxon kinsmen against it.

The Rotundo meeting in Dublin has also elicited a good deal of commentthere. All the newspapers reprinted extracts from the speeches, and also O'Brien's letter. Some some seemed puzzled [for were we not assured that Ireland is happy and loyal?] but others seemed to comprehend the thing well enough. The Constitutionnel, in introducing it, said that it was easily understood why Irishmen should sympathize with America against England. The Patrie has an article, from which I can do no better than give you some passages. It says:

"The conflict which is arising between England and the United States furnishes Ireland with a new occasion for proclaiming her feelings of hatred towards the mother country (metropole.) It may be remembered that at the time of the war in India, all the prayers of the Irish were in favor of the rebels. It seemed as if it were their cause which was debated on the banks of the Ganges, and that the triumph of the Hindoos must hasten their deliverance."

Precisely so, if the concern called the British Empire be struck to the heart in any latitude or longitude that circumstance (as we more Irish think, Monsieur Joncieres,) will hasten our deliverance. But by what right or on what principle does this writer call England our mother country? Is Russia the mother country of Venice? Is Austria the mother country of Venetia? To proceed with the article:

"The same demonstrations and the same hopes are appear with still more vivacity on each of the American war [just so]. Many associations organize themselves in Ireland to excite the national spirit and revive the animosities [they were never dead nor dying] against the English government. They are now agitated by the events which are likely to arise, and they wish to be ready to aid them. How many Irishmen have been forced by misery and the system of oppression which engenders it to abandon their country and emigrate to America? [Joncieres has got hold of the affair by the right end now.] There are more than 200,000 of them in the Northern States [more than four millions]. And what a revenge may be wreaked upon England if the struggle once commence! At a meeting held some days ago in Dublin, the chairman having announced that in all probability the war would soon break out between England and the Federals, a voice cried out: 'God send it!' That voice is the voice of all Ireland."

Not quite; I must protect the writer a little. Whalley's audience of the next evening would not have cried God send it! Nor would the Police Commissioners utter this cry—nor the Kingstown Street Commissioners, nor either of the Archbishops of Dublin, nor the Attorney General, nor the Crown Prosecutor for any of the six circuits—to say that Monsieur Joncieres perceives there is not such unanimity as there ought to be. To proceed:

"What a favorable result for herself does Ireland expect from this contest? Perhaps she does not perfectly explain this to herself. How could that independence to which she aspires arise but of a war with America? This, perhaps, is not very clear to her in the midst of her excitement; but she feels that whatever distresses England cannot but serve her. She delights in the idea of giving battle to her enemy [English will meet in America; but Ireland free, Ireland flourishing, Ireland armed; and that prospect makes the heart of the Irish who run under the British dominion bound with joy.]

This is all very right. Nevertheless, again I must observe a certain inconsequence. The writer says we do not reason, but only feel, and imagines that we have no grounds but our hatred to conclude that the distress of England would do us any good. But he ever read this in the year 1782 England was forced to recognize the independence of the United States—and that in the very same year, by some accident, perhaps, England was also forced to recognize the independence of Ireland? Proceed M Joncieres:

"The London papers treat lightly, as is their custom, those hostile manifestations. They pretend, in a disdainful tone, that the Irish are dying at rebellion—englend, in fact, has nothing to fear from the Irish meetings. Ireland, impoverished, miserable and exhausted, hardly in condition to rebel; and one must be very blind to believe that a war with America, should it ever turn out unfavorably for British arms, would bring about her emancipation. One must be an Irishman to think so."

How it may be very difficult at present, for anybody but an Irishman to think so; but as we are Irishmen, that difficulty is removed. Of one Irishman, not only believe that England will succeed in war would bring freedom to Ireland—but that even if England be successful on the American Continent, the war would make its appearance on our own shores also. The writer is mistaken if he imagines that the prospect which excites and rejoices Irishmen is the prospect of fighting their enemy afar off. But on this point I shall not be more explicit at present The article concludes:

"However, in these manifestations there is no play, as the British press ironically declares—there is real instruction in them. How happens it that every time the English power is harassed or struck at, Ireland flies to her hands eagerly? Are not these manifestations a continuation of the system to which England has condemned Ireland, and should they not be a warning to the government of the mother country that it is time to change it? We believe the Irish deceive themselves as to the results which might be produced by a struggle of England with the Northern States, but if that struggle takes place, perhaps England will reflect seriously of the deplorable consequences of a system which has thrown into the ranks of her enemy 200,000 of her ancient subjects."

Now, in all this article, though not showing all will to Ireland, there is something peculiarly stinging and galling. The writer does not intend it, and this makes it the more humiliating that he should call us the subjects of England—call England our mother country and talk of England condemning Ireland [Whom a writer, who does not mean to insult us can use such language, it is a striking proof how low Ireland has fallen in the estimation of the world.

In the meantime, I observe that the Irish Government means to get rid of a few more hundreds of those idle of the people this winter, if possible, for that is the meaning of steadily denying that there is any peculiar distress which the Poor Law cannot relieve. It is precisely the old story, and the settled policy from the mother country, still in full force, to say everything at first, then wait as long as possible devising relief measures, until a large number have perished and of larger numbers have given up their little farms to the moneylenders or to America. It is still the same cool refusal to adopt one measure in any Irish advice or suggestion, or let Ireland, in fairs or the use of her own revenue. The new Famine will, meantime, be organized in Downing street, the harvests and beds of Ireland will be swept off to England as before, a new Coercion Act, a more stringent Arms act, at last, suspension of Habeas Corpus Act, and a few scores of arrests made to elicit terror in the very agony of Hunger [of the Plagues], and then the Queens will tell thereuth.

How I honor the Archbishop of Tuam! He is more an Irishman than a Saxon, that Prelate; and he makes no scruple I write down, and to print, and to address to lord Palmerston, the plain statement of what he knows to be a fact—namely, "the neglect to drain agriculture" has been wrought about by systematically perpetuated, for the benefit of class interests and the periodical slaughter of the people." Of course, the Archbishop for making such an assertion is overwhelmed without the bitch-guardian of the Irish press; and then [by, Cullen is praised at present by the same press, and I agree with the Prelate of Tuam in loving their above better than their praise. But this, perhaps, is a matter of taste.

The majority of the Dublin Corporation, I certainly the Kingstown Street Commissioners, may now put rope on their hats in the Queen of England's husband. I would not any thing harsh of the dead "Prince, because he is dead; he had a right to give or withhold his sympathies with the Poles and with the Irish—and indeed as a German he could not be expected to feel for the one more than for the Irishman for the other; but I tell say that any Irishman who makes the least sign of mourning upon this event, or puts the smallest respect to the memory of Von Humboldt's corpse, respondent, is a slave, and deserves no reality no more sympathy than a Pole. As for the deceased Prince Consort, he did his duty in life—the duty he was employed to do—not concisely, blandly as possible, and the result is how are regina—to say nothing of undertaking a contract with the whole might of England at the same time. They wish so much in London to believe this gratifying calculation, that they have almost persuaded themselves of its truth. But they are mistaken. America was never more formidable to England than when her debt—that fifty thousand Irishmen, more or less, armed and disciplined, are panting for the occasion of a war, not only to raise up freland, but to destroy the whole British concern which Cobbett called the Thing, and dictate in London the conditions of a new national life for the "three kingdoms." Therefore, England, notwithstanding her present blunder, notwithstanding the assembling of her Mediterranean fleet at Gibraltar, notwithstanding the dispatch of her corpulent "Guards" to Halifax, will, I fear me much, make no war. Messrs. Mason and Slidell will munch their bread-and-water; the tremendous Union Jack, under convoy, will brave, as it best can, the battle and the breeze; and, alas! alas! the good Irishmen and the sons of Irishmen, now in exile in the United States, but always longing and hoping for the hour when they may return with a vengeance, will have to look out for the next canvas ball. It will not be long; if I have accurately estimated and clearly expounded the present condition of the United States, they must absolutely organize this war: if pulling Britain's nose will not do, they must hurt Britain's feelings by some more contemptuous treatment still; they must kick her in the tenderest regions; one way or another they must find a pretext for wiping out both debts and Ireland. Mind, Mr. Editor, that in this attempt to appreciate and explain the actual situation, I do not pretend to justify the motives of America any more than those of England. My own sympathies and interests being altogether Southern, are out of the case together, so far as American interests are concerned. It is only as an Irishman that I take the trouble to weigh and measure the chances of this most fortunate war; and I have the pleasure and comfort of arriving at the conclusion that in the first year of such a war, British royalty must disappear, and for ever.

I know the British press flatters itself that the Federal Government will soon have no money to go to war; it is gleamed with the financial statement of Mr. Secretary Chase, and can easily count up, within a few days or so, how long Mr. Lincoln's Government will be enabled to carry on even the war now raging—to say nothing of undertaking a contest

THE POOR MAN'S RICHES.

Stephen Bowler was a basket maker; an honest, well meaning man, who worked hard, and yet remained, through the long years of toil, in that condition which the world calls poor. Stephen stood at the door of his little shop, with his arms folded upon his breast, sometimes gazing off across the brook, and anon bending his eyes upon the ground, and muttering to himself. What did he see across the brook? He saw a beautiful green meadow, and a grove of elms and maples; and he also saw, lifting up from the green foliage, the walls of a princely mansion. And as he stood there in the doorway of his humble shop he saw a sumptuous carriage roll by, upon the cushions of which reclined the man of wealth who owned the princely mansion in the grove.

"Come, come, Stephen, your dinner is ready."

The basket maker made no reply, nor did he even raise his eyes from the ground.

"What is it, love? Didn't you hear me call?"

The speaker was a mild-eyed, pleasant looking woman, poorly dressed, but as neat and tidy in appearance as the bird that chirped upon the neighboring bush.

"Yes, Martha, I heard you call; but I was busy."

"Ah, Stephen, I hope you aren't engaged with envious thoughts again of Mr. Eustace."

And as the wife thus spoke she moved to her husband's side, and placed her hand upon his arm.

"Don't call 'em envious thoughts," cried Stephen, impatiently. "They are true thoughts. They are thoughts such as any poor man might indulge in when he sees such unjust things."

"What unjust things?" asked Martha.

"Such unjust things as giving one man riches and another man poverty. See how I've worked and toiled for the long and dreary years we've been married—"

"Hushy Stephen. Don't call them hard years. O, no—they've been happy years."

"No, Martha; I say they've been hard years. I've worked and toiled, early and late, and what better off am I to-day than I was when I first began?"

"O, much better off, love; you've been blessed with children, and you've been able to raise them up to be good

[illegible] of death, his feelings were harrowed up as they never were harrowed before. And as he walked thoughtfully along down the slope and over the meadow, he said to himself:

"Poor man! How dreadful it was! And to leave so much wealth behind him—wealth that he cannot carry away! Poor man!"

On the evening of the second day after the scene at the house of the wealthy man, a woman called at the humble cot, and asked Stephen if he would go and watch with Mark Oliver.

"With Mark Oliver!" cried the basket maker, starting up from the chair. "Of course I will. Is he very sick?"

"Yes—it is feared he cannot live."

"Poor Mark," said Stephen, sympathizingly; and he prepared at once to set out upon his errand of mercy.

Mark Oliver was what the world calls poor. He was a cooper by trade, and had worked hard to support himself and family. In short, as far as worldly matters were concerned, he and Stephen Bowler were just about upon an equality, and furthermore they had been friends from their youth.

When Stephen reached the humble cottage of the cooper, he was led into the sick room, where he found his old friend upon the bed, very sick and very faint.

"Ah, Stephen, I am glad to see you." And as the invalid spoke, he reached out his thin, wasted hand, and smiled. "Sit down; you have come to watch with me."

"Yes," replied Stephen.

"Then let my wife go to bed. She is tired and weary."

How long and deep his voice was, and how strange was the light in his eye!

Before the wife left, she told Stephen to call her if there was any change, and when he had promised to do so, she kissed her husband and then retired.

"You'll get well in a little while, I guess," ventured Stephen, as he sat alone by the side of the bed.

"No," replied Mark, with a shake of the head, "I shall never leave the bed alive. I know the truth. The doctor has told me. He told me this afternoon."

Stephen was horrified.

"But," said the sick man, "I am willing to go if it is God's will. I have done all I could to help myself, and all help is not for me, I am resigned."

Stephen was surprised.

"It is hard to think of leaving my wife and children," pursued Mark, in that same low, deep voice, but with a quiet look upon his face, "but I have no fears for them, for they will manage in some way to live and prosper. It is hard to part with friends at any time Stephen, and harder still to lose them by death, and so, in view of the fate which I know awaits me, I feel sorry for those I leave behind, for that is my gain is their deep loss. I angoing home, Stephen—home to God—home to my Saviour—home to where I he a father and mother, and brothers ad sisters. O, what a glorious thought! And it will not be long —not many nights and mornings—before my wife and children shall follow me. I go first—then they'll come—and once more we'll be united. Aye, Stephen, ad united never more to part, in that bear world than this, where the tears of prrow are wiped away, and where the ary are at rest! Shade the lamp, Stephen. The light hurts my eyes."

Stephen Bowler shaded the lamp, and when he resumed his seat, the invalid seemed to have fallen asleep.

What wndrous melody was that, so new and strange, that floated through the atmosphere of the sick-room, and struck so softly upon the watcher's ear! What melody was it, sinking into his soul and attuning its thoughts to a theme brighter than metal life!

But Mak did not sleep. He tried to forget himself in slumber, but could not. At midnight he sank into a sort of stupor, and Stephen noticed that his breathing was growing weaker and longer, and his hands had grown cold, and his brow was clammy.

"O! won't die!" he gasped. "Save me! save!" And then he called for the doctor, and he swore because his physician had not cured him! Then he called for his wife, but she was powerless to help him.

O, it was dreadful to see that man die. He groaned and cried for help. His wife and daughter were like women bereft of reason, and could only moan and sob.

By and by the ravings of the struggling man ceased, and Stephen turned and spoke these words to the mother and daughter:—"He is dying!"

But they would not come to the bedside; they dared not see the death—they only sobbed more bitterly.

In a little while the watcher spoke again:—"He is dead!"

A loud, wailing cry of keenest anguish went up from the chamber of death, and the widow and fatherless sank beneath the shock, bereft of all sense and reason.

[illegible]

death, his feelings were harrowed up as they never were harrowed before. And as he walked thoughtfully along down the slope and over the meadow, he said to himself:

"Poor man! How dreadful it was! And to leave so much wealth behind him—wealth that he cannot carry away! Poor man!"

On the evening of the second day after the scene at the house of the wealthy man, a woman called at the humble cot, and asked Stephen if he would go and watch with Mark Oliver.

"With Mark Oliver!" cried the basket maker, starting up from the chair. "Of course I will. Is he very sick?"

"Yes—it is feared he cannot live."

"Poor Mark," said Stephen, sympathizingly; and he prepared at once to set out upon his errand of mercy.

Mark Oliver was what the world calls poor. He was a cooper by trade, and had worked hard to support himself and family. In short, as far as worldly matters were concerned, he and Stephen Bowler were just about upon an equality, and furthermore they had been friends from their youth.

When Stephen reached the humble cottage of the cooper, he was led into the sick room, where he found his old friend upon the bed, very sick and very faint.

"Ah, Stephen, I am glad to see you." And as the invalid spoke, he reached out his thin, wasted hand, and smiled. "Sit down; you have come to watch with me."

"Yes," replied Stephen.

"Then let my wife go to bed. She is tired and weary."

How long and deep his voice was, and how strange was the light in his eye!

Before the wife left, she told Stephen to call her if there was any change, and when he had promised to do so, she kissed her husband and then retired.

"You'll get well in a little while, I guess," ventured Stephen, as he sat alone by the side of the bed.

"No," replied Mark, with a shake of the head, "I shall never leave the bed alive. I know the truth. The doctor has told me. He told me this afternoon."

Stephen was horrified.

"But," said the sick man, "I am willing to go if it is God's will. I have done all I could to help myself, and all help is not for me, I am resigned."

Stephen was surprised.

"It is hard to think of leaving my wife and children," pursued Mark, in that same low, deep voice, but with a quiet look upon his face, "but I have no fears for them, for they will manage in some way to live and prosper. It is hard to part with friends at any time Stephen, and harder still to lose them by death, and so, in view of the fate which I know awaits me, I feel sorry for those I leave behind, for that is my gain is their deep loss. I angoing home, Stephen—home to God—home to my Saviour—home to where I he a father and mother, and brothers ad sisters. O, what a glorious thought! And it will not be long —not many nights and mornings—before my wife and children shall follow me. I go first—then they'll come—and once more we'll be united. Aye, Stephen, ad united never more to part, in that bear world than this, where the tears of prrow are wiped away, and where the ary are at rest! Shade the lamp, Stephen. The light hurts my eyes."

Stephen Bowler shaded the lamp, and when he resumed his seat, the invalid seemed to have fallen asleep.

What wndrous melody was that, so new and strange, that floated through the atmosphere of the sick-room, and struck so softly upon the watcher's ear! What melody was it, sinking into his soul and attuning its thoughts to a theme brighter than metal life!

But Mak did not sleep. He tried to forget himself in slumber, but could not. At midnight he sank into a sort of stupor, and Stephen noticed that his breathing was growing weaker and longer, and his hands had grown cold, and his brow was clammy.

"O! won't die!" he gasped. "Save me! save!" And then he called for the doctor, and he swore because his physician had not cured him! Then he called for his wife, but she was powerless to help him.

O, it was dreadful to see that man die. He groaned and cried for help. His wife and daughter were like women bereft of reason, and could only moan and sob.

By and by the ravings of the struggling man ceased, and Stephen turned and spoke these words to the mother and daughter:—"He is dying!"

But they would not come to the bedside; they dared not see the death—they only sobbed more bitterly.

In a little while the watcher spoke again:—"He is dead!"

A loud, wailing cry of keenest anguish went up from the chamber of death, and the widow and fatherless sank beneath the shock, bereft of all sense and reason.

IRISH PEERLING IN CANADA.

A deeply significant display of Irish sentiment, applicable to the war crisis, has just been made in the city of, Montreal. The facts may be stated briefly. Our readers are aware that a recently issued order from the Militia head-quarters of the Province has called for the immediate enrollment of 70 men from each of the 500 battalions of Upper and Lower Canada. In accordance with this order, the Colonels commanding in the various districts have set about the task of drafting with a zeal becoming their position. Co-operating with these officials, various associations have been formed to augment the forces by the less perfunctory labors of volunteering.

An attempt made the other day by Mr. D'Arcy McGee and one or two recently converted loyalists to form one of these associations in Montreal, was the occasion for the ebullition sentiments which we deem noteworthy and significant. The hall in which the Irishmen assembled, we are told, was well filled, and the President of the St. Patrick's society, was called to the chair by a portion of the audience, the remainder indulging in loud and unseemly hissing. The President's appeal to Irishmen to "rally," was met by the question, "To defend the fog of England?" mingled with such expressions as "we wish to be a Colonel yourself, do you?" And his next appeal to his country men to defend the land of their adoption was met by another interruption reminding him him that it is not the land of their fathers. Again, when the President pointed out the privileges Irishmen enjoy in Canada, a refractory portion of the audience suggests to him—he may thank the United States for that. At length the unfortunate Chairman is compelled to abandon and in order to mollify the audience and inspire, if possible, a more loyal feeling into the company, Mr. McGee is brought forward. His appearance is signalized by three rousing cheers for the United States—seconded by three more equally enthusiastic cheers for Thomas Francis Meagher! A threat from Mr. McGee, that he would speak to the reporters if such interruptions continued, seems to have produced a momentary lull in the audience. The speaker, however, proceeds but a short way, when his progress is again arrested by three cheers for a brother of Mr. McGee's who, seconded by them in their might deem fit, and that they be transmitted to R. J. Ryan."

Captain Smith, of California, said that the President's name was Donoghue; he did not know his Christian name; but it was not The O'Donoghue. Mr. Ryan was the business man, and he was better known in connection with the McManus Obsequies than any other officer. The Captain's remarks throughout were highly complimentary.

The President also complimented Mr. Ryan in a warm and eulogistic speech, after which Mr. McGrath's motion was put to the meeting and carried.

The Treasurer said that the Committee appointed to audit his accounts had not met, and he wished to have everything in connection with the McManus Obsequies settled up, as far as he was concerned, as soon as possible, as he contemplated leaving the city shortly, and it was therefore, moved that an addition be made to the Auditing Committee, and they also act as a Financial Committee to receive the balance in the hands of the Treasurer, and transfer it to the Chairman Mr. John O'Mahony, who was empowered to send it to Mr. E. J. Ryan. The Committee was composed of Capt. Michael Phelan, Chairman; Matthew Murphy, Patrick O'Rourke, Edward L. Carey and John McGrath.

A WELL-PAID PRINCE.

"H. R. H." Albert, Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Prince Consort of England, Field Marshal, etc., etc., who died—like a Prince—at Windsor, was, in one way, a fortunate fellow. When in 1840, he "led to the altar" the Parliament of England voted him at once $150,000 a year, thenceforth forever! During the term of his natural life, in addition to this handsome annuity he held successively the following offices, military and civil, and pocketed their respective emoluments (where there were any), netting thereby, say $100,000 per annum more. He was a member of the Privy Council; Chief Steward of the Duchy of Cornwall in trust for the Prince of Wales, and Lord Warden of the Stanneries; Governor and Constable of Windsor Castle; Grand Ranger of Windsor, Hyde and Hyde Parks; Field Marshal and Colonel-in Chief of the Rifle Brigade; Colonel of the Grenadier Guards; Captain General and Colonel of the City of London Artillery Company; a Knight of the Garter, of the Thistle, and of St. Patrick; also, G. C. B., G. C. M. G., Acting Grand Master of the Order of the Bath, and Knight of the Order of the Golden Fleece. His scholastic dignities in England were: Chancellor of [illegible] University, Cambridge, LL.D., D.C.L., and Ph. D. He was also Master of the Trinity House, and was President of the Royal Commission of the Patriotic Fund for the [illegible] of widows and orphans of soldiers, seamen and marines, who fell in the war with Russia.

Thus in one-and-twenty years the well paid Prince did the English nation the honor of taking their cash, to the tune of about $5,000,000 of our money or a million pounds sterling.

At length it seems Death made an unexpected call at Windsor Castle. The Lord Warden could not be denied, as the Grand Ranger will range that Park no more. His coffin was about the ordinary size; though the material of it was no doubt, superb. The material inside was dust and ashes, dissolved by gastric fever. And so sic transit was said, sung, in the Chapel Royal, over a good-natured German gentleman who had eaten over freely of the taxes of England and so disordered his liver beyond the reach of medicinal art.

When the English press are gloating over the imagined defects of our Constitutional system, may it not be well for the English people to consider some of the vulnerable points of their own. What was this Coburg prince to them really—since they are so blessedly rid of their realism? Why all this wail and lamentation over a person a dozen Englishmen could hardly be said to know familiarly, could not pretend to love and should not make believe to lament. Are they inconsolable for having got rid of a quarter of a million dollars of taxation per annum? Or, do they really mean to call this death "a national loss! We could understand their sorrow for a statesman like Pitt or Peel, a historian like Macaulay, or a general like Wellington, but what earthly interest can be said to suffer (except the cour tailor's) by the death of "H. R. H. Prince Albert!" Let our magnanimous critics and cousins of the Saturday Review, and the like, look at home for constitutional solecisms and absurdities on which to employ their verbal ingenuity, and the corrective caustic of their ridicule. Old Presidents and Generals may fall short of the standard of a Plutarch, but they are nothing in all our system so provocative of the talents of a Pasquin as the peculiar relations of the deceased Prince to the English people.—N. Y. Tablet.

Never build after you are five-and-forty; have five years' income in hand before you lay a brick; and always calculate the expense at double the estimate.

(Translated from last issue.)

THE JOURNEY TO THE IRON-WORKS.

[Translated from the German of Schiller.]

BY VARNUM.

"The Lord thy God shun in nowise,
If thou meet him somewhere;"
So saying to the church he hies,
But nobody is there;
For its ever harvest time,
Where scythes and sickles gaily chime;
No boy runs even fleetly,
To serve the Masseffic meetly.

So Fridolin the things arrays,
As were he sacristan—
"It never is delay," he says,
"What for God's love does man."
He hands the Unguium and Stole,
Prepares, with gird and pious soul,
The cups with wine and water,
And every other matter.

As he had strictly done the least,
The Missal elegant
He takes and goes before the priest,
As humble minister;
And to the altar does he bow—
Kneels at the right or left hand now;
The bell he swings, to clank thus,
And notify the Sanctus.

And as the priest with reverent
Fidelity lifts up
The consecrated Sacrament,
The Host and gilded Cup;
The ministrant proclaim the act
And rings the little bell with tact.
Each strikes his bosom duly,
In worship pious truly.

Performing so all at a nod
And mannerly, he sees
That in the sacred House of God
The service orders;
Till at the "Ite Missa est"
The priest the pious people blest;
And sure of grace and blissen,
Respectfully dismisses.

He puts the things into the screen,
Each on the proper place,
And sweeps the church and vestry clean,
And starts then on his way.
In conscience pure, not knowing fear,
He hastens to the foundry drear,
And prays, his shut to foster,
Twelve times the Pater Noster.

And as he at the smoking kiln
There sees the workmen stand,
He speaks to them: "Have you with skill
Perform'd the Count's command?"
With waving eyes and lips seconds,
They point towards the oven's mouth,
And say: "He is well hidden—
Done is what we were bidden."
And homewards runs he, hearing this,
To bring the strange reply;
And as the Count afar him sees,
He scarcely trust his eye.
"Where hast thou been, man?—answer me!"
"Count, at the kiln." "It cannot be!
"What thou somehow delaying?"
"Not longer than by praying."

For as I left your presence, sir,
I went first—pardon me—
To [illegible] your wife and [illegible]
[illegible]
She said sir, Count, to hear the Mass;
A happy work to me it was.
Four Rosaries I said there,
For you and her together."
This makes the Count perpl'd and grieve
And shudder, pale and bleak:
"What answer did thy workmen give
There at the foundry?—speak!"
"Sir, strange to me was their reply;
They pointed to the oven nigh
And said: 'He is well hidden—
Done is what we were bidden.'"
"And Robert?" cries the Count between
In rudiness of his mood:
"Has he not seen him met or seen?
I sent him to the wood."
"Not there nor in another place Saw I of Robert ever trace—"
"Then God Himself nor trust is,
Has dealt with him justice!"
The Count threat hollowly drew Round Fridolin his view,
Brought him before his wife who knew
Naught of the villain's harm:
"This angel-child I love, somehow,
Be recommended to your grace;
Through me he would have perish'd,
Had not the Lord him cherished."

Downfall of England.

That thrice accursed institution, "the bloody old British Empire," like a crazy tenement alive in half a dozen places, is now threatened by dangers in so many different forms that it is not unreasonable to think that Heaven is at least weary of its iniquities, and that, even in our day, we may hope to see the universal enemy of the human race overturned and crushed by the weight and consequences of its own crimes. The colonists of Newfoundland are beginning to exhibit a restive spirit of opposition to the "system" upon which, of late, they have been "governed" vie Ancline. A dispatch from St. John's informs us that an "extensive riot" took place at Carbonear on the 7th January, and that "some twelve or fourteen persons were shot, but none killed outright." Troops were sent from St. John's at midnight "to preserve order," but it is evident that they were not able to do so, from the fact that "the disturbances again broke out in a more formidable shape, and that reinforcements of troops and artillery were sent from Halifax to put them down. What the result has been we have not learned since.

In India, too, the Army and Navy Gazette says "there is a prospect of trouble with the Sikhs," and the batteries of the Royal Artillery at Bombay, which were on the point of embarkation for England, were stopped by pressing telegrams from Bengal. May the good news prove true! As that Frenchman says, whoever, anywhere, strikes at the heart of England is our "natural ally," and a benefactor of humanity at large.—N. Y. Irish American.

THE O'DONOGHUE AND THE AMERICAN MEETING.

The following correspondence has taken place between The O'Donoghue and the "Castle" authorities on the above sarject:

LORD CHANCELLOR'S
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Four Courts, Dublin, Dec. 9, 1861.

SIR—I am directed by the Lord Chancellor to write to you, and state that his lordship had read the report, as given in the Freeman's Journal newspaper, of the 6th inst., of the proceedings at what is called a mass meeting of the Irish Nationalists, holden at the Rotundo on the evening of Thursday, the 5th inst., and over which you are stated to have presided as chairman. The whole tenor of the speeches reported to have been made at this meeting, and the resolutions adopted, plainly indicate the determination of those who took part in it that if, in consequence of recent occurrences, a war should arise between her Majesty and the Federal States of Northern America, they would, as far as might be in their power, not only withhold all assistance from their lawful sovereign, but would manifest their sympathy and friendship for those who at that calamitous event would be arrayed in open hostility against her. The meeting appears to have concluded with the appointment of a committee of which you are named as chairman, whose object is declared to be to take into consideration the advisability of carrying out an organization in the present state of affairs at home and abroad; and looking to the principles avowed by those who addressed the meeting, it is to be presumed that the organization thus projected is designed to advance those feelings and to disseminate the treasonable views so publicly announced. The whole of these proceedings appear to the Lord Chancellor to be altogether at variance with the true allegiance to which every subject of the empire is bound, and his lordship has directed this communication to be made to you, as a magistrate of the county of Kerry, and holding her Majesty's commission, in order that you may make such observations thereon as you shall think proper.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant, MARK PERRIN.

The O'Donoghue, M. P.
Derrynane Castle,
Keamare, Dec. 14, 1861.

SIR—I have received your letter of the view the Lord Chancellor has been pleased to take of the proceedings at the recent meeting of Irish Nationalists, over which I had the honor of presiding. And, in compliance with your request, I beg to state for his lordship's information, that it is my conviction that an overwhelming majority of the Irish people feel they have much more reason to be grateful to the American nation than to the British government; and that, therefore, in the event of a war between America and England, they would be very unwilling to supply men and money for the purpose, as I stated at the meeting, of destroying American commerce, bombarding American cities, and humiliating the American flag. I candidly avow that those are my sentiments. Further I have to state, that I have already acquainted several with my intention of withdrawing from the committee nominated at the Rotundo meeting, because upon reflection I see clearly that, in the absence of a great number of names, the committee cannot command the confidence of the country. At the same time I think it absolutely necessary that a committee, manifestly entitled to public confidence, should be appointed to consider how the interests of Ireland may be affected by a war between America and England. Perhaps I may become a member of such a committee, the formation of which must necessarily lead to a most useful national organization. An apprehension of treasoning too much upon your valuable time forbids me to enter at greater length into details; for inasmuch as I deny the necessity or prudence of a secret system of action, I see no reason why the Lord Chancellor should not be made acquainted with our plans, and his opinion taken upon the feasibility of our proposed organization. I believe the meeting at the Rotundo truly indicated the general feeling of the people of Ireland upon the question of war between America and England, and I am prepared to maintain, at all risks, that it is the duty and the undoubted right of, my countrymen, unreservedly, to discuss all questions affecting the interest of Ireland. I cannot be persuaded that his lordship contemplates visiting me with what he, no doubt, regards as punishment, for venturing to discharge this duty and to assert this right. I am puzzled to understand why you have been directed to address me "as a magistrate," and not as an Irishman. Are the two characters incompatible? Must a magistrate forego freedom of thought and expression? Must he allow others to think and speak for him? Must he take an English view of every question, and at once stifle the natural predilections of the Irish heart? Future events shall decide the answer to be given to these queries.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant, THE O'DONOGHUE.

To the Secretary of the Lord Chancellor.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Four Courts, Dublin, Dec. 17, 1861.

SIR—I am directed by the Lord Chancellor to inform you that, having read your letter of the 14th inst., his lordship has directed writs of supersedeas to issue, removing you from the Commission of the Peace of the counties of Cork and Kerry.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant, MARK PERRIN.

IRISH OPINION OF PRINCE ALBERT.

Prince Albert is dead. The announcement has elicited as little emotion on the part of the Irish people as the death of the King of Timbuctoo would—if there were such a person. The blinds are drawn to at Windsor, and there is, no doubt, much official and decorous sorrow at Balmoral and Dublin Castle. The mourning of the man will live in Ireland, at least, for awhile, not for the services he rendered, but for the high opinion which he held of us. We shall extend to his good actions the charity of our silence; but his appreciation of our character must not be hid under a bushel: "The Poles," said the noble Prince, in writing to Baron Humboldt, "are as little worthy of sympathy as the Irish." Ireland will remember him for that tribute to her cause, and she reciprocates the sympathy to-day, with an accumulated interest.

The death of Prince Albert, say we, is as little worthy of note in Ireland as that of any officer in the English army; and not a bit of more consequence than the decease of any ordinary person chronicled in a newspaper obituary. As an entity of political importance, we have more or less his type in Chief Governor Carlisle—both were admirable judges of the science of brutedom—both were admirable authority on economic agricultural prosperity—both had admirable ideas on everything useful, and had a happy way of eliciting an approval. From a dissertation on an Aberdeen turnip to the delivery of an Aberdeen address—they were quits. But the Prince is dead, and his subtle doppel-ganger here is in deep mourning. The [illegible] soldier is —the cut of his coat and the shape of his hat, and the figure of his person were subjects of the Prince's most anxious consideration. He stands forth as the avowed inventor of the Pio Hat, and other equally useful "adoptions," but the originator outlived all his inventions. When a dozen of years shall have passed over, we scarcely know what he will be remembered for. He shall scarcely be remembered for ought, save as the husband of her Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria. This is, perhaps, sufficient for his merits.—Dublin Irishman.

Father Beeson and the Indians.

We presume that the Christian world is familiar with the name of Father Beeson (so called), who has been residing among the Indians of the Far West for a considerable period. He is an Englishman by birth, about sixty years of age, but for the last half portion of his life, has been a resident of America. Mr. Beeson is deeply interested in the welfare of the "red man," and the following is his statement in the superior influence of Catholic missionaries among the Indian tribes. It is intended as an address to sectarian pastors, and is published in his paper called The Comulet:

"It is admitted by all who have traveled extensively among the Indians, that the Catholic missionaries are by far the most successful among. Under their control, the inhabitants of New Mexico are chiefly Indians. While in New England, where they were once as numerous, they are now extinct. In California they were living in thrifty communities, owning vineyards and cultivated fields, and vast herds of cattle and horses, and were blessed with peace and plenty; but now they are peeled and scattered, like sheep without a shepherd.

"In Northern Oregon, some of the largest tribes believe that the frauds and outrages which have been perpetrated upon them, was as a quence of missionary establishments, and therefore will have none but Catholics, in whom they have confidence; and, as if to spite the poor Indians for their preferences, during the war against them, they were driven from the Catholic mission, the Priests' robes were used to adorn the horses of the invaders, the premises were burnt at a loss of $30,000, and several poor sick creatures, who could not make their escape, were put to death, and their bodies used as targets to shoot at; and the life of the good Father Pandozy was sought after, because, like a good shepherd, he kept by his flock in its distress; while in Southern Oregon, the Bible was quoted to justify the extermination of the Indians.

CLOTHING.

NOW IS THE TIME.

LOCKWOOD & HENDRIE,
176 CLAY STREET, San Francisco,
Corner of J and Fourth streets, Sacramento,
Have just received a large stock of
CENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING,
Furnishing Goods,
WHICH WE ARE SELLING AT
VERY LOW PRICES!
Every Garment Warranted—All are invited to Call.
LOCKWOOD & HENDRIE,
140 and 141 Commercial, New York;
176 Clay street, San Francisco;
Corner of J and Fourth Streets, Sacramento.
no30 3m

B. CURRAN,
Has Opened a
First Clothing and Furnishing Goods
ESTABLISHMENT
At No. 214 Montgomery street,
First door, south side of the entrance to
PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,
Where he respectfully invites the attention of his friends, former patrons and the public to his
Well-Selected Stock of Goods, Consisting in part of
French and English Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings,
Selected expressly for the present trade, to which he would call the attention of his former customers and the public.
Those in want of garments made to order, in fashionable terms, and according to the LATEST FASHION, are most respectfully invited to call and examine my stock.
Thankful for past favors, I most respectfully solicit a continuance of the same.
B. CURRAN,
214 Montgomery street.
mr30

JAMES LAPINE,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
(Late of New York City,)
No. 115 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Informs his many Customers and the public generally of San Francisco, that they can get the best clothing made in this city, and fashionable, of the latest and most approved style, of the best goods, at the lowest prices. From his experience in the principal cities of Europe and America, all may rely for elegance of style and fit. Also, Military and Navy Uniforms made to order.
P.S.—Persons having goods of their own can have them made up at a moderate charge.
se7

Remember 115 Montgomery street, between Sutter and Market, opposite the Occidental House.
JAMES LAPINE, Merchant Tailor.
se28

OAK HALL,
626 Clay and 621 Sacramento, San Francisco,
(1455 Broadway, New York.)
LOUIS & WEIL,
Manufacturers, Importers and Dealers in BOYS' AND GENTS'
CLOTHING
FURNISHING GOODS, etc.,
Wholesale and Retail.
CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING, OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE,
Received by every Steamer.
CLOTHING MADE TO ORDER. jel9

SNEATH & ARNOLD
HAVE ESTABLISHED A WHOLESALE DEPOT IN
San Francisco, in connection with their House in Sacramento and Red Bluff, and are now prepared to fill orders for Groceries, Provisions, Liquors, Tobacco, Cigars, Tobacco, Pipes, Stone Ware, Lamps, Oils, Glass Ware, Lamp Goods, Wicks, Chimneys, Wood and Willow Ware, Brooms, Brushes, Twines, Baskets, Cordage, Paints, Oils, Window Glass, Powder, Shot, Lead, Fishing Tackle, Etc., Etc., Etc.
Having had many years experience in the business, and being determined to keep a full and complete assortment of the best goods in the market, and to sell at the lowest possible rates, we feel confident that we can offer inducements to purchasers that cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade.
Orders solicited, and promptly attended to.
SNEATH & ARNOLD,
Sacramento. | San Francisco.
JOHN ARNOLD, Sacramento.
SNEATH, BRANNAN & CO.—T. M. BRANNAN, Red Bluff.
Proprietors, Block 602.
no20

For Sale,
Large and Small Homestead Lots, on a credit from one to five years, with interest at ten per cent per annum.
M. A. BRADY,
Over G. B. Crittenden & Co.'s, Old No. 311 Front street.
fe26

J. W. TUCKER,
No. 125 Montgomery st.
IS NOW PREPARED TO OFFER
WATCHES, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
AT Independent Centre Seconds,
Double Time Fifth Seconds,
Quarter Seconds
AND OF EVERY KNOWN VARIETY; TOGETHER WITH A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT
OF JEWELRY, DIAMONDS,
Silverware, etc., etc.
Further attention is paid to orders from the Interior, and purchasers can obtain articles by order on as low terms as though they were themselves present.
se14

Thomas Robinson,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF PICTURES, FRAMES,
and MOULDINGS.
Choice Engravings received regularly by Express from LONDON, PARIS AND NEW YORK.
All kinds of Frames made to order with promptness and dispatch.
THOS. ROBINSON,
422 Washington st., 2nd Story,
SAN FRANCISCO.
fe14

BUSINESS CARDS.

Wm. McGarvey & Co.,
PACKERS OF
BACON, HAMS & LARD,
Between 8th and 9th streets, and Market and Mission sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
PORK TRIMMINGS CONSTANTLY ON HAND.
ja25 Ly W. McGARVEY, Agent.

E. S. PORTER. EDWIN MARSH.
FORESTER & MARKS,
DEALERS IN
Groceries, Provisions, &c.
No. 81 Commercial st., (Old No.)
Above Front, SAN FRANCISCO.
Ship and Steamboat Stores. ja5

P. BANNAN. H. GOST.
McARAN & CODY,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
WINES AND LIQUORS
No. 50 California st., near Front,
SAN FRANCISCO. no10

CHAS. D. CARTER,
REAL ESTATE AGENT,
No. 90 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Lots, Dwellings and stores for sale and to lease.
CONVEYANCE, Deeds, Leases, Mortgages, Powers of Attorney, Contracts, Agreements, Specifications and all other Legal Documents drawn.
Loans Negotiated.
Rents and Real Estate for sale or to lease registered without charge, and open at all times for the inspection of the public.
no30-3m

ELAM & HOWES,
Wholesale Importers, dealers in
WOOD AND WILLOW WARE, HOUSE-KEEPING GOODS,
Twines, Cordage, Shoe Thread, Nets and Seines.
Fishing Tackle, etc.
No. 64 Clay street, one door from N. W. corner Front
ja16tf SAN FRANCISCO.

OLIVER B. CRARY,
Wholesale Dealer and Jobber in all kinds of
ANTHRACITE & BITUMINOUS COAL
Corner Broadway and Front streets,
ja18 12 San Francisco

P. J. DEVINE & BROTHER,
PREMIUM MARBLE WORKS
Cor. of K and Sixth streets,
se14f Sacramento, Cal.

HENNIGAN & MULCAHY,
Commission Merchants,
DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
108 Clay street, between Front and Davis.
THOS. HENNIGAN, de21 THOS. MULCAHY.

E. DOLAN. J. D. WALL.
DUGAN & WALL,
FORWARDING AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
CRESCENT CITY.
JOHN ROACH,
OPTICIAN,
Old No. 111—Now No. 313—Washington street, opposite the Post-office,
SAN FRANCISCO.
MANUFACTURER and Importer of Theodolites, Transit and Level Instruments, Opera Glasses, Quadrants, and the various articles usual in our line, for our customers will be furnished, from either point, at the lowest Eastern prices, by ordering at the lowest Eastern prices.
de24 1m

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
DEALER IN
Wood, Coal, Hay, and Grain,
Third Street, between Mission and Howard, San Francisco.
Has constantly on hand, Hard and Soft Coal, Oak, Pine and Redwood Wood, Also—Corn Meal, Wheat, Barley, Oats, Bran, Shorts, Hay, &c.
Families and others supplied on Reasonable Terms, and delivered Free of Cartage.
mr22

224 Sansome Street. 224
ASPHALTUM
FIRE-PROOF ROOFING.
Sidewalks and Cellars covered in a substantial manner.
Leaky Roofs—TIN, IRON, and BOSTON MASTIC Roofs covered with Asphaltum, and guaranteed.
THE UNDERSIGNED WILL HEREAFTER CARRY on the Asphaltum Business in his own name, and will be happy to attend to the orders for Roofing, and all other work connected with the business, that his friends and the public may favor him at 224 Sansome street. I will be personally responsible to those for whom His Gibbon & Wilde have covered roofs.
M. E. PITT-GIBBON,
224 Sansome st.,
Bet. Pine and California.
de14

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
DEALER IN
Wood, Coal, Hay, and Grain,
Third Street, between Mission and Howard, San Francisco.

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FEBRUARY.

Sunday, 23—(Vigil) S. Peter Damian, Bishop and Doctor.
Monday, 24—S. Matthias, Apostle, in leap years on the 25th.
Tuesday 25—S. Peter, Pope and Confessor.
Wednesday, 26—S. Alexander, Bishop of Alexandria, Confessor.
Thursday, 27—S. Leander, Bishop of Seville, Confessor.
Friday, 28—S. Romanus, Abbot.
Saturday, 29—S. Oswald, Bishop of Worcester, Confessor.

THE MONITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEB. 22, 1862.

REGULATIONS FOR LENT IN 1862.
For the Diocese of San Francisco.

1. All the week days of Lent, from Ash-Wednesday, March-the 5th, till Easter Sunday, are fast days of precept, on one meal, with the allowance of a moderate collation.

2. The precept of fasting implies also that of abstinence from the use of flesh meat. But, by dispensation, the use of flesh meat is allowed in this diocese during Lent, except on the following days, to wit: the Wednesdays, and Fridays,the Ember-days, and the Thursday and Saturday of Holy Week; on which days there is no leave to use flesh meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in cases of necessity, to be judged by them. All Saturdays are also days of Abstinence, but not of obligation.

3. The promiscuous use of fish and flesh meat at the same meal, is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

4. Some prayers, at option, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which fleat meat is used.

5. Lent being a penitential time, the Pastors are requested to lay before the Faithful the grevious obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which may be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly impress upon their respective flocks the necessity of attending, before all other things, to the salvation of their souls, and they will exort them to the faithful discharge of their Christian duties, the only thing that can secure to us the everlasting happiness of heaven. For this purpose they will hold religious exercises in their churches several times a week, according to what their prudence may deem expedient.

✠ JOSEPH S. ALEMANY,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 7, 1862.

ENGLAND UNMASKED.

There is a sound old saying that persistency, and never has this wise saw, in its application to individuals or communities, received a more perfect illustration than in the attitude adopted by England towards the United States, during past years, and (mark the contrast) since the advent of our domestic troubles, and their temporarily retarding influence upon the onward march of a great nation. In this journal, long before civil strife disturbed the Union, we on more than one occasion deprecated the mutual admiration tone which prevailed between this country and Great Britain. It was exhibited in the stereotyped plausibilities of diplomacy, in the cant of after dinner eleagisms would-be-statesmen, in the flippant platitudes of an ephemeral press, and in the popular cant that prevailed among the vanity of the people, as the result of false premises and generous, but ill-judged ideas. We were then alone, as a newspaper, on this coast, and throughout the entire extent of the Union, one of an almost unappreciable minority of journals that laughed to scorn the hollow cant of a so-called common race—a fictitious national consanguinity—a social sympathy, or a political and commercial identity of interests between the citizens of the United States, and the government and subjects (proper) of Great Britain. We regarded the British government, and the British public sentiment when either or both exhibited the most flattering respect to our country, and when they believed us with their confounded Anglo-Saxon cousinship, as astute and cowardly hypocrites who dared not utter their real sentiments or carry out their natural policy in our regard, at a season when our accumulating strength, our rapid progress and our youthful audacity was astonishing the world, but we also blamed those who adopted the purrotery of "Anglo-Saxonism," "Mother Country," &c., until it become not alone a prejudice, but a creed, that this same English governament and public in our hour of need would be the first and the bitterest of all the world to exhibit insult, treachery and verbearing antagonism in our regard, and if possible compass our national humiliation. The past six months has unmistakably demonstrated. even to the blindest sympathiser with "our Anglo-Saxon cousins," that our views, which might have been regarded as the offspring of prejdjudice, were in truth only a faithful definition of pre-existing, and at all times existing English feeling and policy towards this country, and there is not a journal in this Union to-day, that upholds the honor, dignity and integrity of the United States, that does not appreciate at last the true relations existing between these countries, and enunciates the same conclusion that we arrived at and proclaimed long since.

The causes of the covert and inerradicable hostility of England to the United States, are patent to any thinking mind, and though their effects may have been for a time held in abeyance by circumstance, no conventional hypocrisies, no mere commercial necessities, no superficial international amisibilities, can dry up these latent springs of action, or diminish their intensity or application whenever a safe and favorable opportunity occurs for adverse action. England has received humiliation and chastisement from the people of this country; first as colonists, and secondly as citizens of a great republic. She has watched with envy, hatred, and ill concealed scorn (to her) dangerous and rapid development of republican institutions, under our form of government, and she ardently watches for an opportunity or the accidents that arise in the course of nations, which in our case might give an enemy the chance of dealing a death blow to an antagonistic system of government to the very glory of its career. And, finally, she sees in America that undeveloped giant, who like the angel in the Apocalypse, stands with one foot on the earth and one on the sea, and threatens to wrest from her at no distant date the commerce, the carrying trade, and the dominion of the ocean. In the face of these elements of good faith on the part of England, in the face of the treachery she has exhibited and the insults she has heaped upon us, during an account to settle between the two countries wherein a heavy balance rests against England, and which the interests as well as the honor of the United States requires to be adjusted, as soon as it suits her convenience to clear off scores with England in the same manner that she did in 1776 and 1812.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

To-day is the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, a man who shall ever live in the affection and veneration of the world. Patriot, soldier and statesman, he excelled in each; and it is ofily due to his exalted character to say that no man in the tide of time ever acquitted himself less blamelessly. It is very sad to look at the distracted condition of the nation to-day, drenched with blood, brother arrayed against brother, and the fair fabric of a once united nation destroyed by those whose duty it was to sustain and keep it intact. The life and services of Washington were unselfishly devoted to obtain and consolidate the liberty of the American people, which should have continued on for ages; but the events of the past year have placed it in great jeopardy.

However, we should not forget how much we owe Washington, nor should we be backward in testifying the respect in which his memory is held. In San Francisco a suitable recognition of the day will be made; and it affords us great satisfaction to state that the Irish Battalion, under command of Major Cashman, will take a prominent part in the celebration. The following order issued from the Headquarters of the Department of the Pacific, will be read with interest:

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 6.

Amidst the universal rejoicing of the patriots and union-loving people on the Pacific coast, incident to the brilliant victories achieved by the Army and navy of the United States, let us pause a moment to do honor to the memory of the Chief of that illustrious band of patriots who established the liberties for the preservation of which we are now battling.

The 22d of the present month being the 130th anniversary of the birth of Washington, it will be duly celebrated by the Army of the Pacific. All bells will cease during the day, and at meridian a salute of one hundred and thirty guns will be fired from Alcatraz Island.

By order of Brigadier General Wright.

R. C. DREW,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Notwithstanding the repeated warnings given by the press, the absence of any proof to sustain the statements made by interested parties that the Caribou and Nez Perces mines are extensive, and the experience of Fraser River and other gold delusions, many persons are leaving for the North. It is to be lamented that so much credulity should exist among the people, and that so many should be led into a wild chase that must end in ruin and disappointment. We predict that the present gold fever will prove to be the greatest deception of all that have visited California.

LOCAL RELIGIOUS NEWS.

Rev. Father Scollen was a passenger on the steamer Uncle Sam, that left Friday for Panama. He arrived here on the 1st of January from New York,With the expectation of recruiting his health. The weather since then has not been over favorable, which induces him to seek a milder climate. He returns to the East purposing to be absent a few months in the West India Islands, before proceeding to New York.

Rt. Rev. Dr. Loss, last Sunday conferred Minor Orders on Jose Maria del Refugio Ruiz Hernando Aseguino was raised to sub-deaconship, and Juan Berba and Antonio Augsiano were ordained priests.

A special meeting of theSt. Joseph's Benevolent Society will be held on Sunday, March 2d, in the basement of St. Mary's Cathedral.

The Stockton, Republican says St. Mary's Church is crowded every Sunday evening, Protestant as well as Catholics attending. On Sunday evening last Father Joseph Gallagher, whose plain unaffected piety, kind heartedness and honesty of character, has endeared him to citizens both inside and outside of his Church, delivered a really sensible and practical discourse upon the text, "Why stand ye here idle?" He showed conclusively the duty of men to labor since the curse pronounced in the days of A am, and his duty also to labor in the small speck of time to prepare himself for the vast eternity, compared to which Time is indeed insignificant. The sermon, if such it could be called, was one to which no Christian could object. The sweet, solemn and beautiful music of the old masters, which is sung at the church, is almost enough to bring tears to his eyes in prayer. The choir though small is most effective, and show no inconsiderable amount of musical talent. The brick walls of the church are bare, but the congregation seem well satisfied with their accommodations.

Dr. B. Kennie, dentist, has opened an office in the Union Building, corner of Kearny and Merchant streets, this city, where he proposes to practice his profession. Dr. Kennie is highly spoken of by those who have availed themselves of his services, and is an honorable and skilful dentist. For many years he successfully practiced in Philadelphia, and came to San Francisco under such favorable auspices as claims a large share of patronage. Those who know him a long time in California, speak warmly of his worth, and as in Sierra county, where he resided recently, he was esteemed all that we have the pleasure here of writing in his favor.

The Shields' Guard and the McMahon Grenadiers were out on street parade, Monday evening,and until past eleven o'clock made the still air vocal with the martial melody of martial music. They were both in tolerable force, and presented as brave a front as ever bayonetted its way over a battlion. The night was clear but beautifully calculated to enable us to observe the accuracy of their drill.

The Fenian Guard held their first election for officers of the corps on Saturday evening; Capt. Kane, of the McMahon Guard, presided. he following gentlemen were elected: J. Thomas, Captain; P. Creighton, First Lieutenant; William Keogh, Second Lieutenant; J. Casey, Brevet Second Lieutenant.

Subscribers at Coloma will do us a great favor by paying to our agent, Mr. D. N. McPhee, the amounts they are in arrears. Compliance with this request will be of much benefit to us at the present time.

It is a significant commentary upon the recent abortive attempts to manufacture sham Irish sympathy for England in Canada and elsewhere, that, even in the British army, a purely Irish and English regiment cannot be brought together in the same garrison without sabostile collision taking place between them. An illustration of this fact appeared in Dublin on Christmas day and the day following. The 87th Regiment—lately returned from foreign service—were stationed in the Royal Barracks; but, on the arrival of the Coldstream Guards, they were removed to less aristocratic quarters, to make room for the more favored sw-ellers. The incident did not tend to lessen the national antipathy existing between them; and it broke out on the evening of Christmas day, when a number of the men of both regiments met accidentally in a tavern on Pembroke Quay, and the "Fang a bealltas" taonted to it by the Scots' propensities, and "soldering" in the streets of London, while they (the 87th) did the fighting ob nad. The valiant Gaurds, it appears, after their tormenters withdrew, vented their evasperation by breaking the windows on Ellis's and Pembroke Quays; but on the following night the 87th did not confine themselves to a wordy warfare, but thrashed every guardsman they met; until the united services of the pipsels and police had to be called into requisition to quell the disturbance. The next day the Coldstreams were busy with their barrack walls, and the "Faug a bealtaca" having the field to themselves the fight was not renewed. So ma h for the love the Irish soldier bears to England and what belongs to her, under any and all circumstances.

THE IRISH BATTALION.

At the unanimously expressed wish of the officers of the Irish Battalion and through the general request of the good men now in the ranks of this organization, we have accepted its command. We need hardly here say that we are proud—happy in the honor thus conferred upon us. Those who know us are well aware that it is, and ever has been a point of self gratification, and of personal satisfaction to us, to claim our affinity with the Celt, and to bring up with sentiments of just pride our lineage from the green spot that has given to our country so many to labor for its renown and to battle for its right. With feelings then of warm interest in everything Irish, and especially in everything tending to advance the honor and fame of the Irish name and character, we shall enter upon the discharge of our laborious duties, giving to them our best abilities and our whole heart.

We believe the establishment of an Irish Battalion to be an important subject, and one well worthy the full encouragement of all classes, as well the great body of Irish-American citizens here, as the entire mass of our American population—to the former, that here as well as elsewhere throughout our Union, the men of Irish birth may show their zeal and devotion to their adopted country, and redeem their pledge to uphold it; as to the latter, we know that a Battalion of the sons of Old Erin can be depended upon, no matter how desperate the encounter, or how doubtful the fortunes of the cause to which they give their hearts. Those truths we feel, and desire that the new Battalion may have in the little military ability that there is in us, we accept our duties, pledging ourself to produce for service a body of men who will be an honor to the land that gave them birth, and to all who came from it.—Daily Times.

Major Casneau is the Military editor of the Spirit of the Times.

Street Preaching.

Great respect is due to persons, properly qualified, who engage in the work of preaching the gospel at suitable times and in suitable places. On the other hand, when men, who pass the greater part of their lives in working at some other vocation, suddenly abandon it and take to expounding in public the scriptures, with scarcely a superficial knowledge of the sacred book, the effect is usually to bring religion into contempt, and expose the converter to deserved ridicule. Generally the orator is deficient in every grace of speech: his words are crude and often betrayed, and he presents the appearance of one part zealot another part fanatic. We refer particularly to the street preacher, character almost unknown in San Francisco. Monday afternoon, however, we observed a person hold forth near Mingo's wharf to a small crowd his loud and discordant tones brought within hearing. There were about half a dozen satellites at hip, with solemn countenances, kept close to the speaker. The latter, with book in one hand, and a Bible in the other two books, one apparently a testament; it was hard to tell the nature of the other. He could not obtain on personal grounds attention to his remarks, and was compelled to resort to great expression—broad and oily; a coarse form, destitute of all refinement, and a swinging motion of the arms that were more than impressive ones to what his harsh and seemingly boisterous voice uttered. The matter was not but handled feverishly. No one could be edified by listening to him; but ridicule might easily attach to the orator. He could not convince churches in the city, street preaching is not the place. In every city of the Union there has been tolerated, riot and bloodshed have been the consequences. Very few respectable persons attend these meetings. Only those congregated by ill-directed zeal or mercenary motives engage in the capacity. The custom should be discountenanced or strictly looked after by the police.—Herald and Mirror.

GENERAL ROSECRANS.

It is a satisfaction to know that there is one General, having a separate command, against whom no grave error of omission or commission can be alleged—we refer to General Rosecrans.

This distinguished officer is a native of Ohio, and a Roman Catholic. Several years since we remember to have met him at Fort Adams, opposite Newport, where he was then stationed as a Captain in the regular army. After his marriage he resigned his commission, not wishing, as he said, to have his children brought up in a garrison, and for some years pursued his profession as a civil engineer and architect, at Cincinnati. General Rosecrans is an exemplary Catholic, and if some of the services he has rendered the State were only performed by N. P. Banks, or some other pet of New England editors, we should never hear the last of them.—N. Y. Tablet.

LATER FROM THE EAST.

The news from the East is highly important. A full account is given elsewhere of the capture of Fort Donelson. There is a report that Savannah has been captured by the Federal forces. The rebels have been driven from Missouri, and the National flag now waves over the soil of Arkansas. The Government has ordered mail facilities to be denied the Los Angeles Star and Oregon Democrat, amounting to their suppression. It is reported that Columbus has been blown up and abandoned by the Confederates. The steership Supply, which which arrived at New York on Tuesday, boarded, off Cuba, the British schooner Stephen Hart, loaded with rifle cannon, powder and Enfield rifles. The cargo was insured for $125,000. The prize was taken to New York for adjudication. The Lizzie Wharton has also been captured, two days out from Apalachicola, with a cargo of cotton, valued at $65,000, off Fort Jackson.

It is said that there is an expedition supposed to look towards Charleston. It consists of 10,000 infantry and three regiments of cavalry to go by sea route and a heavy column is despatched by another.

Brig.-General Edward Price, son of General Price, Col. Dorsey, Col. Cross, and Capt Ingo, all of Price's staff, were captured near Warsaw on Sunday night, the 16th, and brought to this place. They had 500 recruits for Price in charge, but had just crossed the river. As the Federal force was small, they were not pursued.

JUDGE DALY ON PRIVATEERSMEN.

Hon. Charles P. Daly, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, New York, has addressed a letter to Hon. J. P. Hoxie, U. S. Senator from New York, at his request advocating that privateersmen be treated in the same manner as soldiers taken prisoners. He holds that the prisoners held or convicted should be placed on the same footing as men captured on land.

In conclusion, Judge Daly says:

If, on the other hand we convict these men as criminals and pauper them in the prisons of which we have declared them guilty is not followed by its necessary consequence, the proper punishment. There is no terror inspired and no check interposed by such a procedure; for the plainest man in the South knows that the motive that restrains us from going further is the fact, that the execution of these men as pirates seals the doom of a corresponding number of our own people—that the account is actually balanced—that, with ample means of retaliation, they have the power to prevent; or if mutual blood is to be shed in this way, we and not they will have commenced it. By such a course nothing is referred, except to keep our own officers and soldiers in Southern prisons, subject to mental torture produced by the uncertainty of their fate, which, with the majority of men, is more difficult to bear than the certainty of death itself—and obliges them to confine in the illprovided and badly conducted prisons in which they are confined, sufferings, the sickening details of which are constantly before us in their published letters to their friends.

"I little thought," writes the gallant Col. Cogswell, of the regular service, "when I faced the storm of bullets at Edward's Ferry, and escaped a soldier's death upon the field, that it was only to be left by my country to die on the gallows." And the nature of their sufferings will be understood when it is told that the noble hearted and self-sacrificing Col. Corcoran was handcuffed and placed in a solitary cell, with chain attached to the floor, until the mental excitement produced by this ignominious treatment, combining with a susceptible constitution and the infectious nature of the locality, brought on an attack of typhoid fever. Shall this state of things continue? If we (as take) instead of our common sense, these men are treated as criminals, because, while we give to the Southern soldiers the rights of war (for numerous exchanges of soldiers have taken place), we convict the Southern mariner of a crime punishable with death. Is there any reason, even upon the grounds of policy, for making this distinction? Why have they the privileges of labor; but they will not seek them. Now, why should we wish to call the blood of slaves on the neck of the man who had no "second stories?" There are beasts at this moment out of which the ere is deprived of the means of making lawful prizes, and must eventually convert his vessel into a hip-of-war, or disappear from the high seas by unlawful acts which will make him amenable to the tribunal of every civilized nation. Will any one assert that may be done to our commerce by the few privateers which it will be in the power of the rebellious States to maintain upon the ocean, is nothing compared to the injury that has been done to the whole nation, its industry, its commerce and its future, that would grow out of making a martyr of the first military renegade. We have the fruitful experience of history to acknowledge that in such acts are seen the seeds of the dissolution of nations and especially of Republics. By according to the rebellious States the rights of belligerents, at least to the extent of exchanging prisoners, whether privateersmen, man-of-war's men, or soldiers—we do not concede to them the rights of sovereignty. There is a distinction between piracy and treason. Only those are designated by ill-directed zeal or mercenary motives engage in the capacity. The custom should be discountenanced or strictly looked after by the police.—Herald and Mirror.

[Written for the Monitor.]

THE SOLDIER'S DEATH.

The day had closed. The deadly strife had ceased at evening's gray;
Beside a brook hard by the camp, a dying soldier lay;
The cold dew wet his forehead and the stars threw down their bright rays;
As his comrades bent above him to catch his last "I lond night."
The anguish on his features and the quickness of his breath
Bespoke how much he suffered and how near he was to death;
When suddenly his eyes grew bright, the pallor fled his cheek;
He looked up at a well-known form and moved his lips to speak.
"Bear to my aged mother, John, the book that she gave:
And tell her that her only son sleeps in a soldier's grave:
And don't, I charge, forget to say—it will assuage her woe—
That he never feared his duty nor quailed before the foe.
"Remove, too, from my finger, John, the little golden band;
Return it to the blue-eyed girl I pledged my heart and hand;
Assure her for our noble flag that I was proud to die,
And tell her that our love shall be renewed beyond the sky."
The little group drew closer as the sinking voice grew low;
The tids of life was almost out, and words refused to flow;
Then closed the eye and moved the lips a moment, as in prayer;
Then ceased the pulse—a struggle—one soul the less was there.

W. L. C.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

The dates from Europe are to February 6th. The steamer Nashville was last seen on the 2d inst., outside the Needles, steaming down. Another Federal vessel, supposed to be the Brooklyn, was cruising off the Isle of Wight, and there were reports of the presence of a three-masted paddle steamer, supposed to be a privateer, off Cape Clear. The gunboat Tuscarora left Cowes on the 6th, going westward having been prevented taking her departure before that time by the English. The frigate Shannon kept close to her for the purpose.

At the annual meeting of theChamber of Commerce, the blocking up of Charleston harbor was strongly denounced, and the efficiency of the blockade questioned, but continued non intervention was generally approved. A letter was read from Mr. Cobden, showing the pacific disposition of the American Government in the present crisis, and the necessity of England agreeing to the American doctrine relative to private property at sea. Mr. Bright, in a speech at Birmingham, denied that the American blockade was ineffectual, and ridiculed the idea that America was in a position to be trampled upon. He pointed out the dangers of interference, and strongly urged neutrality.

It is stated that Mr. Lincoln's behavior does not conceal his indignation at Earl Russell's late letter to the Admiralty, relative to the use of British ports. There is also considerable difference on political affairs, as to the policy and prosperity of his acts.

It is asserted that the Allies have determined that their armies shall march on the Capital of Mexico next month. Report gains strength that the Archduke Maximilian, of Austria, will be tendered the throne of Mexico. The Spanish Ministry deny that any arrangements have been made for Mexico, and declare that we country nothing, except, what everybody knows, that actual war is the last thing to be thought of.

The existing embarrassment is easily overcome. All further prosecutions can be stopped; and in respect to the privateersmen who have been convicted, the President acting upon the suggestion of the Court that tried them, can, by the exercise of the pardoning power, relieve them from their position as criminals, and place them in that of prisoners of war.

In conclusion, we are not to forget that we are carrying on a war for the restoration of the Union, and every act of aggression not essential to military success, will separate more widely the two sections from each other, and increase the difficulties of cementing us again in one nationality. We are to remember that the people of the South, whose infirmity it has unfortunately been to have very extravagant ideas of their own superiority, and whose contempt, of the people of the North has been in proportion to their want of information respecting them—have been hurtled into their present position by professional politicians and large landed proprietors, to whom they have hitherto been accustomed to confide the management of their public affairs; that, though prone to commit outrageous acts when under the influence of excitement, they are upon the whole a kindly and affectionate people, and here, when not blinded by passion, a very keen perception to their own interests; that there are, throughout the South, thousands of loyal hearts paralyzed by the excitement around them, who still cling to the flag of their fathers and await the delivering stroke of our genius. Relying on our superior naval and military strength, and the settled determination of our people that this nation shall not be dismembered, we may, as the Swiss Cantons recently did in a similar crisis, put down this rebellion. That great duty imposes upon us all the exigencies of war, and they are greater and heavier than those which the Swiss government had to encounter with. We have to carry on the war against a people who have a large and well appointed army, under skilful generals, acting on the defensive, in a country abounding in strategetic points of defence. War, when conducted in accordance with the strictest usages of humanity, is, asall who have shared in the recent battle know, a sufficiently bloody business; and if we are to add to its horrors by hanging all who fall into our hands as traitors and pirates, we leave the South no alternative but resistance to the last extremity; and should we ultimately triumph, we would have entailed upon us, as the consequences of such a policy, the bitter inheritance of maintaining a government by force, over a people conquered, but not subdued.

CHURCH OF ST. BONIFACE.

Sailor Bay, Bet. Kearny and Montgomery, REV. FATHER WOLF, PASTOR.

First Mass Sunday.....7½ A. M.
High Mass.....10½ A. M.
Vespers.....7 P. M.

[COMMUNICATED.]

THE RELIEF COMMITTEE.

In the Bulletin of February 12th, one of the parties of the Relief Committee at Platt's Hall in a card charged upon the Monitor in a truly Don Quixote style, for having published a card headed "Sacramento Sufferers," which reflected somewhat upon particular members of that body. This gentleman raised the gauntlet as one of the parties aggrieved. I will not question his right to do so, but presume him to be the mouth-piece of the Committee.

In the first place, I will state that the card which has evidently destroyed the equanimity of certain parties, was a creation of my own, founded on facts which can be substantiated, and the Monitor was entirely ignorant of my proceedings until my production was handed in for publication.

I cannot plainly define the gentleman's object in his reply; it is clearly a corroboration of the facts set forth by me. He says that, even under their great misfortune, Catholics have been guilty of awarding articles of clothing according to their ideas and tastes, and that some pantfloons have been rejected as unsuitable to their complexion. I no doubt made these remarks to show how unfitted and unworthy the Catholic portion of the community were for the generous hospitality of the citizens of San Francisco. It strikes me that the Committee was nominated for the purpose of affording general and impartial assistance to all who might apply to them as objects of the flood, and not get astride their crotches' (evidently a principle) and proclaim war against any particular denominations, because they do not accord with their own convictions or views. They were placed there, not to exercise such a feeling, but to aid all unfortunates in the same moral and social degree. He tells us, also, that the impostures practiced on the Committee were perpetrated by these people alone; that when others were willing to start out on the first return of fair weather, to gain the upper stories of their houses, rather than remain a burden upon the city, that the people in question evinced no such disposition. We are told that they sit idly, and unthankfully receive the hospitality of the people, unmindful that "life has earnest work, of the blessed privileges of labor; but they will not seek them. Now, why should we wish to call the blood of slaves on the neck of the man who had no "second stories?" There are beasts at this moment out of which the ere is deprived of the means of making lawful prizes, and must eventually convert his vessel into a hip-of-war, or disappear from the high seas by unlawful acts which will make him amenable to the tribunal of every civilized nation. Will any one assert that may be done to our commerce by the few privateers which it will be in the power of the rebellious States to maintain upon the ocean, is nothing compared to the injury that has been done to the whole nation, its industry, its commerce and its future, that would grow out of making a martyr of the first military renegade. We have the fruitful experience of history to acknowledge that in such acts are seen the seeds of the dissolution of nations and especially of Republics. By according to the rebellious States the rights of belligerents, at least to the extent of exchanging prisoners, whether privateersmen, man-of-war's men, or soldiers—we do not concede to them the rights of sovereignty. There is a distinction between piracy and treason. Only those are designated by ill-directed zeal or mercenary motives engage in the capacity. The custom should be discountenanced or strictly looked after by the police.—Herald and Mirror.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

REMOVAL.

RASCHE & SONS

Have Moved Their MUSIC STORE

—TO—

131 Montgomery Street,

Between Bush and Sutter. feb8

Paints, Oils and Window Glass

DEPOT.

D. J. OLIVER

IS NOW ON HAND AND FOR SALE:

315 Cases White lead, pure, in tin and wood;
150 cases colors, assorted;
3,120 Boxes Window Glass, assorted sizes, 1st quality;
1,000 Bbls Linseed Oil, boiled and raw;
150 cases Linseed Oil, boiled and raw;
350 cases Turpentine;
40 bbls Varnish;
125 cases Varnish;
500 dozen assorted Brushes;

AT REDUCED RATES.

—ALSO—

250 dozen Kerosene;
175 cases Coal Oil;
25 bbls Lard Oil;
50 bbls Sperm Oil;
150 bbls Parlor Oil;
15 bbls Castor Oil;

AT THE VERY LOWEST RATES.

CAMPHENE
DAILY INSTILLED.

Together with a large assortment of Pails, Double Tubes, stained and Ornamental Glass, Glue, Gold Leaf, Varnishes, Brushes, the largest and best assorted stock in this State.

210 and 212 Washington street,
217 and 219 Oregon street. feb22

CRAY & TRUE,

UNDERTAKERS,

WOULD INFORM THEIR FRIENDS AND THE public generally that they have opened their establishment at No. 31 Lower side of the Market Street Railroad Depot corner of Kearny street, where they will keep constantly on hand a large assortment of ROSEWOOD, MAHOGANY, WALNUT AND PLAIN CASKETS.

Everything requisite for funerals furnished on the shortest notice.

Particular attention will be paid to putting up Bodies for long distance shipment. Metallic and other suitable metallic cases always on hand. Also, the services of a Hearse and Carriages.

Orders for Cemetery Cushing will receive the most careful and prompt attention.

No. 412 & 414 Sansome St.,

Southeast corner of Commercial.

TEETH, TEETH.

Extracting without Pain, $1.00.

Dr. W. H. Irwin, Dentist,

NO. 205 THIRD STREET,

Second door south of Howard.

All branches of Dentistry performed in the most possible manner.

Nitrous oxide on hand.

Chloroform, Chloroform Electricity and Rubber used in my office to alley pain.

Ladies and children attended at their residences, and on reasonable prices.

feb8 W. H. IRWIN, M. D.

Attention, Volunteers.

THE UNDERSIGNED HAS RECEIVED AUthority to raise a Company for the First Regiment of Washington Territory Infantry United States Volunteers, now in Washington. This regiment is destined for service in the Northern part of the Territory, and inducements on the organization of the company, by recruiting will be furnished to Sergeants and Corporals. A fine opportunity is presented for immediate service. Pay from $13 to $21 per month, and $100 bounty.

Recruiting Office on Battle street, in the Brown Building, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, and also at Stapleton's Liquor Saloon, Steamboat street opposite the Wharf Clay Street.

feb8 W. W. SHELTON, Captain.

REID & BROOKS,

No. 109 Sansome street, between Washington and Merchant,

SAN FRANCISCO,

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

CROCKERY, GLASS WARE,

LAMPS, PLATED WARE,

TABLE CUTLERY, MIRRORS,

AND A GREAT VARIETY OF

FANCY GOODS.

W. E. REID, E. BROOKS.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

St. Joseph Benevolent Society.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 20th, 1862.

A SPECIAL MEETING OF THE ST. JOSEPH Benevolent Society, will be held in the basement of St. Mary's Cathedral, on Sunday, March 2d, 1862, at half past 2 o'clock, for the purpose of electing Officers for the ensuing year.

By order of the President.

JAMES E. BAILEY,
Secretary.

feb22

DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP.

THE PARTNERSHIP HERETOFORE EXISTING between the undersigned, under the firm name of Wilson & Co., is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All persons who are indebted to the said firm are requested to make immediate payment to the undersigned, and all parties who are indebted to the said firm will present their claims against it to the undersigned for payment.

Mr. Francis Cassin is authorized to sign the name of the late firm in liquidation.

SAM. PLANNAGAN.
JAMES BAILEY.

San Francisco, Feb. 19, 1862. feb22

NOTICE.

THOSE WHO ARE SOLICITED FROM PERSONS willing to contribute for the relief of two widowed females over the Ferry at Sonoma, Mrs. Joaquin Carrillo, at the point known as Black Point, and Mrs. Ramon Carrillo, at the point known as Petaluma, are requested to call at the office of the undersigned, where they will receive information of the most natural and deserving cases to which their charity can be extended.

feb22 WM. M. SHERMAN & Co.

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS AND VALISES.

THEY ARE RECEIVING BY EVERY STEAMER large supplies and assortments of their Manufacture, all of which they warrant to be of the most superior quality.

They keep always in store a large assortment of Indians' Trunks and every description of Valises.

Orders for Custom Clothing will receive the most careful and prompt attention.

No. 412 & 414 Sansome St.,

feb22 2m Southeast corner of Commercial.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SAINT PATRICK'S DAY.

GRAND

MILITARY AND CIVIC

CELEBRATION.

THE COMMITTEE

..OF THE..

ST. PATRICK'S BROTHERHOOD

Give notice that in conjunction with othe civic and military bodies, they have made arrangements for the celebration of the anniversary of Ireland's Patron Saint, at

HAYES' PARK.

The whole of the Grounds, Pavilion, and Banqueting Rooms have been engaged.

A procession and review of the associated bodies will take place.

AN ORATION will be delivered during the day.

There will be

TARGET PRACTICE

By the military, and a large number of

PRIZES

Will be awarded to the Best Marksmen.

AN ADDRESS to the People of Ireland will be adopted.

A PUBLIC DINNER

Will be given in the Banquet Room.

THE EVENING will be devoted to a

BALL

..AND..

SUPPER.

The Supper will be conducted apart from the Ball Room.

THIS PROMISES TO BE THE GREATEST RE-UNION OF IRISHMEN EVER HELD IN CALIFORNIA.

Committee of Arrangements.

Hon J O Downey, Maj General Cobb, General Canonas, Col T Hayes, Hon John Nugent, Hon Thos Starr King, Hon Samuel Theller, Hon Major P H Gallagher, Lieut Col P Farrell, Lieut Col P Bayles, Capt R F Ryan, Capt J R Hanna, Capt Colleghan, Capt D O'Regan, Capt O'Brien, Capt Wm M Dowling, Capt S J Ashley, Capt T Sweeney, Lieut D D Sullivan, Lieut Burke, Lieut D O'Callaghan, Lieut McNulty, Lieut R Reynolds, Lieut Michael Hayes, Lieut J Maguire, Sergt J O'Brien, Sergt J J Byrne, Sergt M H Hassett, Sergt T W McCormick Sergt O'Neil, Sergt P J Powell, Sergt McQuirk, Sergt P Delaney, Sergt J F Reynolds, Sergt P J Pearson, John Connolle, Mortimer O'Sullivan, C. M. Brosnan, P Delehanty, P O'Reilly, Thomas Kelly, John Doyle, J Holmes, Dr. Finnigan, R P Llewellen, J Brady, John D Brown, Joseph Monk, J Duffy, Geo W Williams, — Ince, J Mazemann, W H Nevens, J Lynch, M Connolly, Mark Leonard, John Carroll, Michael Hankins, Michael Regan, Thomas Mooney, Peter Skelly, Philip A Roach, Denis Lyons, John Ryan, Robert Barrett, Michael Cody, — Shea, P O'Grady, Michael Skelly, John Stapleton, John Cooney, Harvey A Sherwood, Patrick Hart, David Scannell, Arthur Quinn, John Kelly, jr, Edward Kane, Daniel McCarthy, John Hogan, John Reanen, Patrick Owens, Francis Goldie, Michael Gaerin, E Thomas Allen, John Burns, James Hughes, Robert Cushing, J Egan, Robert Cushing, J Egan, M W Kelly, W J Corcoran, — O'Neill, John Hammill, J Dowling, W A Cornwall, D J Murphy, J J Hayden, Wm S O'Brien John Farren, Cornelius Mooney, John Carroll, Mortimer Corcoran, John J Sullivan, John Clark, P Brieck, Maurice Macnamee, M J Murphy, Hugh McGuirk, David Meirain, P J McKenna, Samuel Sweeney, W H Hughes, P J McCormick, John Kennedy, M F Fits-Gibbon, S Lanigan, John O'Brien, Miles Reiger, J Glynn, J Cochlan, Michael Kane, Richard Ryland, Michael Guerin, E Thomas Allen, jan18

STEAMERS.

INDEPENDENT.

THE ELEGANT STEAMER

NEVADA,

J. W. L. PHILLIPS.....MASTER.

Will make her Regular Trips from PACIFIC STREET WHARF,

Leaving SAN FRANCISCO every TUESDAY, THURSDAY and FRIDAY, at 4 P. M.

Returning from SACRAMENTO on TUESDAY THURSDAY, and FRIDAY, at 6 P. M.

CABIN FARE.....$6 etc; DECK.....$3
FREIGHT.....$1 00 per Ton

SOUTHERN DISPATCH LINE OF PACKETS
—FOR—
SAN DIEGO
AND INTERMEDIATE PORTS.

Consisting of the clipper Brig

PRIDE OF THE SEA.....Capt. L. S. Garcia
The clipper Brig
BOSTON.....Capt. W. H. Morton
The new clipper Schooner
LEWIS PERRY.....Wm. Hughes

Sailing every ten days.

For sight or Passage apply on board, at Commercial street wharf, or to R. PIERCE, Southern Packet office corner Market and East streets. feb8

REMOVAL.

WE BEG TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS AND THE Public that we have

REMOVED

—TO—

THE LARGE STORE

No. 419 Montgomery St.,

Near California (Leconte's Building).

Thankful for past patronage, we respectfully solicit a continuance of the same.

A. ROMER & Co.,
BOOKSELLERS, IMPORTERS AND PUBLISHERS.
feb8

HIBERNIA

SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 27th, 1862.

AT THE REGULAR MEETING OF THIS SOCIETY, held this day, the Board of Directors declared a Dividend of

ONE PER CENT. PER MONTH, for the six months ending the 31st inst., and which is now payable to Depositors. feb1

INFORMATION WANTED.

MICHAEL WARD, BROTHER OF PATRICK Ward, formerly of New Orleans, but now supposed to be in California, Contra Costa County, is requested to write to his sister, Mrs. Mary Ward, Philadelphia. The undersigned will pay all the charges, and is anxious to hear from him.

PATRICK MCARTHY.
San Francisco, 1st May street. feb1

RECEIVED

....AT....

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.'S, feb1 632 CLAY STREET.

FRESH SEEDS.

GROWTH OF 1861.

NEW YORK SEED WAREHOUSE,

C. L. KELLOGG,

No. 427 Sansome street, one door south of Clay,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Has on hand a most extensive assortment of Vegetable, Flower, Field, Fruit and Tree

SEEDS,

Tobacco seeds—Many Varieties
Cotton seeds—Four Varieties
Twenty Varieties of Grasses.

HYACINTHS, AMARYLIS, NARCISSUS, TULIPS, LILIES, AND OTHER BULBOUS ROOTS.

MAMMOTH RHUBARB ROOTS, CHERRY CURRANT ROOTS

THE LATE CAPT. HUGH McQUAIDE.

In recording the demise of the above officer, which took place in Richmond, Va., on the 26th of December, it is our painful duty to announce a fact which, though not altogether unexpected, must cause a pang of sincere sorrow to every one who enjoyed the friendship or acquaintance of the lamented deceased. It will be in the recollection of our readers that, some weeks ago, we published a letter from one of the Sisters of Charity in attendance upon the military hospital at Richmond, in which it was stated that the amputation of his leg, which Captain McQuaide had undergone, had proved ineffectual, and that a second amputation had become necessary, though the physicians had but little hope of thereby preserving the patient's life. The fortitude and resignation with which Captain McQuaide underwent so terrific an ordeal, showed not only the indomitable spirit and courage of the soldier, but that his soul was fortified by the hope of the true Christian and strengthened by that entire submission to the Divine will which alone can deprive the direst calamity of its sting.

The annexed letter from Lieut. Dickinson, U. S. 3d Infantry, to the brother of the deceased, conveys in fitting language the tidings of the decease of Capt. McQuaide, and the respect and esteem in which he was held by his brother officers:

MILITARY PRISON, }
RICHMOND, VA., Dec. 27, 1861. }

John McQuaide, Esq., Yorkville, N. Y.:

SIR—It is my painful duty to inform you of the death, yesterday evening, about 5 o'clock, of your brother, Captain Hugh McQuaide, 38th New York Volunteers. His funeral was attended this afternoon by Drs. Revere, of Massachusetts, and Fletcher, of Indiana; Captains Hunt, 1st Kentucky; and Markoe, 1st Pennsylvania; Lieuts. Dickinson, 3d Infantry, U. S. A.; Wallace and McPherson, 42d (Tammany) New York; together with Mr. Higgins (a citizen of Richmond), to whom and to Mrs. Higgins, we all feel much indebted for attentions and kindness to your gallant and unfortunate brother.

The services of the Roman Catholic Church were performed by Father R. H. Andrews, who has attended during Capt. McQuaide's illness, and who desires me say that he will at once perform High Mass; and that nothing shall be omitted that may be calculated to mitigate in any degree this severe blow to you all. Every requirement of his faith shall be strictly attended to. 'Tis body has been placed in the vault of the Catholic Cemetery here. It is in a zinc case (air tight) and covered by a black walnut coffin so as to be readily identified by his friends.

I have known your brother for several years, while he was 1st Sergeant of Co. F, U. S. Mounted Rifles. My regiment and the Rifles were for many years serving in New Mexico; and I must be allowed to say that a more efficient, active, prompt, energetic and zealous soldier I never knew. After knowing him well upon the wild Western frontiers we were brought together again; both wounded on July 21, at Manassas—in the same ward at the General Hospital here. And I can testify to the brave spirit and patient endurance he manifested during all his suffering, prolonged now to over five months.

From hearing him frequently speak of his relatives at home, and knowing how anxious you must be, I have seized the earliest flag of truce to communicate with you.

Lest you may entertain erroneous impressions concerning him I will relieve any doubt as to his treatment, etc. I assure you that he has met every attention and kindness, both medical and otherwise, that could possibly be extended to him. You may possibly feel unsatisfied that he had not been exchanged or paroled; but there has never been a moment since he was wounded when he could have been sent home. Any movement of him, for even a short distance, would have, undoubtedly, proved fatal. His wound had improved considerably; but a severe chronic diarrhea, which had existed all attempts at cure for over three months, had completely prostrated him, and he sank under it at last.

Please remember me to Mr. Quirk, who came on last summer to see your brother.

With much respect, and with heartfelt sympathy for yourself and the other members of your saddened family,

I remain, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

W. DICKINSON, 1st Lieut.,
U. S. 3d Infantry.

Captain Hugh McQuaide was a native of the County Tyrone, Ireland. He was born on the 1st of January, 1832, and came to this country with his parents when only 11 months old. At the age of nineteen he entered the United States Army, in Philadelphia, and served ten years in the Mounted Rifles, under Col. (now General) Andrew Porter, being actively engaged most of the time in Texas and New Mexico. He quickly rose to be 1st Sergeant of "F" Company. The testimonials he received during this time, from his officers, were of the most flattering character. In General Orders No. 11, issued from the headquarters of the army at New York, November 23, 1860, he is honorably mentioned for having, with a small scouting party, consisting of a corporal and fourteen privates of his regiment, pursued into the desert region known as the "Jornado," a numerous band of Indians, from whom he recaptured between fifteen and sixteen hundred sheep which they had carried off. After stating the particulars of the expedition, which was a most trying and dangerous one, the General Orders conclude:

"Sergeant McQuaide, on this occasion, fully sustained a high character gained by him on previous occasions."

Col. Porter thus speaks of him in his discharge at the end of his second term of service:

"Sergeant McQuaide has served in my company for ten years, and as a better soldier or man I have yet to meet. He is brave, honest, sober, and intelligent, and is, in every way, entitled to respect and consideration."

After his discharge from service, he was appointed to the rank of 2d Lieutenant, and obtained leave of absence to visit his friends in New York. While at home the present unhappy rebellion broke out, and the first call for Volunteers was made upon the loyal States. Captain McQuaide immediately set about raising Co. F., of the Second Scott Life Guard, 38th N. Y. V., and at his own expense (something like $400) perfected the organization. His subsequent history is known to our readers. At the disastrous engagement of Bull Run, in which his regiment fought bravely, he was severely wounded in the left leg, and was taken as a prisoner to Richmond. Fifteen days after, he suffered amputation of his leg; but the result was unsatisfactory, and after long suffering, borne with such patient resignation to his letter of Sister Valentine, the gallant soldier succumbed to his wounds, and, fortified by the consolations of religion, passed to that bourne whence no pain and sorrow are unknown. May his soul rest in peace.—Irish American.

The Fruits of Secttism.

There is no fact more prominent on the page of modern history than this—That the robbery of the Church has never permanently enriched her spoilers. There is an old work known as "God's Revenge upon Murther," the argument of which is that "murder will out." A kindred work might be written upon Sacrilege, and the curse it invariably entails upon communities as well as upon individuals. For a chapter in this work the following extract from the Mexican Extraordinary, would have an appropriate heading:—

We have had in the last three years a most striking illustration of the profligacy of the administration of revenues and properties of this nation, in the manner in which the vast treasured riches of the Mexican Church have been scattered to the winds. This colossal wealth—estimated from £169,375,000 to four times that amount—that was confiscated two years ago, may be said to be already gone, and no one in the present can, and no one in the future will, say where. The pillage has been so rapid and complete that even the best advised in the government cannot say how much the nation has been despoiled of. We know it has nearly all gone, and the government, again left to its own resources, is so poor in expedients and feeble in strength that it is forced to adopt the most primitive mode of collecting revenue by wresting resources from the wealthy who live within its immediate reach. The government, furthermore, has been compelled to suspend payment to all classes of creditors, in order to devote its entire resources and energies in smothering a fraction of the disorders of the country, and should its most ambitious aims be attained, the prospects of the nation must still remain, to a great degree, blighted by the elements of self-destruction which are contained in the government itself.

The revolutionary journals are very indignant, as well they may be, at the array of names to the address of the French ladies to the heroic Queen of the Two Sicilies. Foremost in the long and in every sense superb list are the following: Madame Fould, wife of the Minister; the Duchess of Reggio, the Duchess of Albufera, the Duchess of Ornano, the Duchess of Dalmatia (Soult), the Countess Pozzo di Borgo, the Countess Kisseleff, the Countess de Merode, the Duchess of Montmorency, the Princess of Broglia, the Baronesses (3) Rothschild, Madame Niel, Madame Cosimer Perier, Madame Lamartine. There are at least 3,000 signatures, the majority of which are noble.

LATE IRISH NEWS.

In addition to the fleet "becoming its great importance" which has been ordered to the Irish coast by the English Government, it is proposed, in the event of war, to place six powerful gunboats, under the orders of Captain Heathcote, of the Ajax, for the protection of the principal seaport towns on the northwest coast of Ireland. These vessels will be armed with 68 pounders on traversing platforms, and manned by the coastguard men and naval reserves in the immediate locality in which each may be placed.

The Commission of Inquiry into the Irish Law Courts has passed the Great Seal, and William Neilson Hancock, L.L.D., and Henry Robert Vaughan Johnson, Esq., are named as Secretaries. Dr. Hancock was Professor of Jurisprudence in the College of Belfast, and was Secretary to the University Commission and to the Commission which inquired into the Endowed Schools in Ireland. Mr. Johnson is a English barrister.

The Catholic Telegraph newspaper has changed hands, and is now the property of Mr. Michael Dwyer, late associate editor of the Morning News.

Anderson Cooper, Esq., late Inspector of the Provincial Bank of Ireland, has been appointed manager of the branch of that bank in Cork.

The Galway Vindicator, speaking of the prevailing distress, says:—"That there is now a wide spread famine, none will be found audacious enough to deny. From every part of the country the cry reaches us that a sad calamity has fallen upon our people. There is no gainsaying the fact. It is fearful to contemplate the sad ordeal that is before our poor people. If they had only to contend against the failure of the potato crop, their case would be melancholy enough, but the want of fuel adds considerably to their hardships."

The Cork Reporter of the 21st ult. says: A meeting of delegates of the trades of Cork was held last night at 8 o'clock, to draw up an address which will be presented to Sir John Arnott, M.P., on his retiring from the office of Chief magistrate of the city. The trades, carrying their banners, and headed by a brass band, will march in procession to the court house, as a token of respect for this benevolent gentleman, for his many good qualities and deeds of charity towards the poor as Mayor of Cork during the past three years.

David Leopold Lewis, Esq., with his accustomed liberality, has given 100 pairs of blankets and 100 tons of coal for distribution among the poor at Youghal.

Major Samuel Wensley Blackall, of Columbor Manor, Edgeworthstown, says the Derry Standard, has been appointed to the Shrievalty of the County Tyrone for the ensuing year, and has nominated Charles McCrossan, Esq., of Legland House, Newtownstewart, as his Under Sheriff. At the general election in 1847, Major Blackall was returned at the head of the poll for the county of Longford, on Liberal principles, his colleague being the late lamented Richard Maxwell Fox, Esq., when the conservative candidates, Anthony Lefroy, Esq., son of the Lord Chief Justice, and now member for the University, and the Hon. H. K. Harman, were defeated by a large majority. Major Blackall represented Longford from 1847 to 1851, when he vacated his seat on his appointment to the Governorship of Dominica, which he resigned in 1857. The new Undersheriff, who is an attorney and brother of Mr. John McCrossan, Solicitor, Omagh, is a Roman Catholic, and the second member of his communion who has held the office of Undersheriff of Tyrone since the Revolution, the other Roman Catholic gentleman who filled the office since the period referred to being the late Mr. Walter John Fitzgerald Quin, who, in 1822, acted as Undersheriff during the Shrievalty of Sir James Strong, Bart.

The deaths of Rev. Anthony Magan, P. P., Killanin, county Galloway, Rev. Maurice Dowley, Carrick-on-Sior, and Rev. Charles James O'Connor, of Sandyford, are announced.

Mr. De Moyleau is to succeed Mr. Corballis as Chairman of the County of Kilkenny, and is to be succeeded in the County of Cork by Mr D. R. Kane. Mr. West is to be removed to the County of Leitrim, in succession to Mr. Kane, leaving the King's County vacant, as one of the "semi-official organs" intimates, "for competition."

A dispatch dated Valentia, December 26, says: On Tuesday night the ship Nimrod, of London, 911 tons, Payathen, master, from Montreal to Liverpool, forty nine days out, laden with wheat and flour, was picked up near the Dersey Head, by the Limerick steamer Mengerton, and towed into Valentia Harbor, with the loss of mainmast, mizzen topmast, sails, bulwarks, boats, and otherwise damaged. She was obliged to throw overboard about 800 barrels of flour; she experienced very tempestuous weather, and was in want of water.

It appears that the Protestant Bishop of Down and Connor and Dromore (Dr. Knox) has resolved upon establishing in Belfast a grand Cathedral Church, and upon removing at the same time the Cathedral from Lisburn, where it has existed during two centuries, under a chapter granted by Charles II in the year 1662. The Protestants of Lisburn are not disposed to submit to this ecclesiastical disfranchisement; and accordingly a public meeting was held, at which it was resolved to oppose the transfer, and, if necessary, carry the matter before the House of Lords.

In the Antrim Artillery Militia, Hon. Clotworthy J. E. F. Skeffington has been appointed Captain, vice Thompson, dis'pked; and in the Antrim Rifles, Lieut. Alexander Murray to be Captain, vice May, deceased; Edward Cole Magennis, to be Lieutenant, vice Murray, promoted.

The Lords Justices have ordered that there be erected and established at or near Downpatrick an asylum sufficient to contain three hundred lunatic poor, such asylum to be called the Down District Lunatic Asylum.

Gas pipes are now being laid down in several of the principal streets of Dalkey, by the Hibernian Gas Company, for the purpose of supplying to private consumers any necessary quantity of gas. We have not as yet heard that any provision has been made for lighting the streets.

Madame Orsi received a regular ovation in Dublin, on the night of her farewell appearance there, December 21st. A splendidly engrossed address was presented to her by "the gods," and her carriage was accompanied to Morrison's Hotel by an immense concourse. Arrived there, Madame Orsi left the carriage and proceeded to the drawingroom, whence she came on the balcony and sang a stanza of the "Last Rose of Summer." The scene of enthusiasm which followed this baffles description. It continued for a lengthened period, and very many times was Madame Orsi forced to appear and acknowledge the cheers of the vast concourse which occupied the thoroughfare below. And thus ended the farewell performance.

The puisne judgeship in India has been offered to Mr. McMahon, M.P., and declined. The appointment is worth £5,000 a year, with £1,500 for an outfit, but the locality, Agra, is extremely unhealthy for Europeans.

There is at present living at Monagarron, near Castletown Leix, a lady who he repairs every Sunday to hear Mass), in the parish of Arklow, a man a respectable farmer, named John Kavanagh, who has attained the patriarchal age of 108 years, being born in 1753. He possesses all his faculties as perfectly as when he was only twenty-five years old, and what is still more surprising, he goes into the fields every harvest time, and mows and reaps for his amusement, and indulges in rustic sport and amusement. His sight is perfectly good, and he has scarcely lost a tooth. At the three last general elections for the county, he came on each occasion to Gorey, a distance of seven miles, to record his vote for the popular candidate. He is living happy and contented in the bosom of his family, surrounded by his children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and their children.

A Wexford cotemporary states that Lieutenant Morgan O'Brien, who commanded the left flank of the 3d Wisconsin Volunteers in the fight at Harper's Ferry (in which that Regiment distinguished itself so signally), is a native of Garrymoile, near Enniscorthy. Both Lieutenant O'Brien and Captain Bertram, who was in command of the regiment, received the highest compliments from the Colonel commanding the division, for the coolness and gallantry they displayed.

It is stated that Alderman William Lane Joynt, Mayor elect of Limerick, has been appointed Clerk of the Crown for the County, vice George Fleetwood, Esq., deceased.

Father Petcherine, the distinguished preacher (a Russian nobleman by birth, who had been for several years a Redemptorist), has become a Cistercian monk, at Mount Melleray.

The Attorney General has appointed Pierce Kelly, Esq., local crown solicitor for the city and county of Waterford.

Litanies.

The Mirror of Baltimore, and the Catholic Telegraph of Cincinnati publish the following decree concerning litanies:

"The decree of Clement VIII. of 6th September, 1601, in regard to the divulgation, publication and recital of litanies, was by this decree remodelled, and it established in this form:

"Let no litanies, except the most ancient and general litanies, which are contained in the Breviaries, Missals, Pontificals and Rituals, and also the Litany of the Blessed Virgin, usually sung in the house of Loretto, be published, without the revision and approbation of the Ordinary, and let none be publicly recited in churches, public oratories, or in processions, without the leave and approval of the Sacred Congregation of Rites."

MISCELLANEOUS.

JOHN McDONALD & CO.,
DEALERS IN
Paints, Oils, Glass, Varnishes, Brushes, &c.
PAPER HANGINGS.
Kerosene and Coal Oil,
Burning Fluid,
Alcohol, Camphene,
Lamps, Wicks,
Chimneys, &c.
All Orders for Painting and Paper Hanging promptly attended to.
Estimates Furnished from Plans and Specifications.
No. 24 SECOND STREET,
One door from the corner of Stephenson,
SAN FRANCISCO.
J. MCDONALD. C. P. T. STEPHENSON.

SELLING. MARX & CO.,
Furniture Warerooms,
FORMERLY OCCUPIED BY
J. G. CLARK & CO.,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER
OF FURNITURE,
Beds, Mattresses, etc.,
WE HAVE NOW IN STORE THE LARGEST STOCK OF FURNITURE EVER OFFERED ON THE PACIFIC COAST, FOR SALE AT LESS PRICES THAN IT COSTS OTHERS TO IMPORT.
Nos. 810, 812 and No. 14½ Washington st.,
(Up Stairs,) San Francisco. no30

CARPETS! CARPETS!
Velvet and Brussels
CARPETS!
NEW STYLES
THREE PLY AND INGRAIN CARPETS,
THE LARGEST
ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY,
AT THE LOWEST PRICES.
KENNEDY & BELL,
S.W. cor. Montgomery & California sts., f28 SAN FRANCISCO.

JAMES E. WOLFE,
Architect,
Office at Commercial Steam Printing Establishment,
No. 417 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
GUARANTEES to furnish Plans and Designs for Dwellings, Stores, Churches, Factories, Warehouses, and all buildings in which Iron enters, which for BEAUTY, HEATHERS & ACCURACY
Cannot be excelled in San Francisco, and being a practical builder, his experience in the past upon having their buildings erected in a thoroughly and upon having their plans and specifications carried out in accordance with the wishes of the owners of the same, the result of which has been universal satisfaction.
HARVEY S. BROWN.
San Francisco, Nov. 14, 1861.

HARVEY S. BROWN, Esq.—My settlement by your request, we have carefully examined the Plan for the San Antonio Lumber Company's Mill, Maps Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. We find that they are executed upon the basis of and known as Rancho de los Pulgas, Potrero Viejo, or Rancho de la Visitacion, and that the Maps prepared by the Mexican Surveyor agree in the principal lines, and also in the courses and distances of the most prominent objects, as delineated upon the Map of Rancho de los Pulgas, surveyed by Messrs. Ord and Harrison, and that the Maps prepared by you are executed in a workmanlike manner, and that the lines are correctly laid down, and also that the Plan of the Mill is correctly drawn, and also that you purchased directly from the Mexican Surveyor.
We further certify that there are no suits now pending in the Courts of the United States affecting the title to the property, and that a patent issued from the United States was issued to them on the 23d day of December, A.D. 1857, which is recorded in the Records of the County of San Francisco, and that you purchased directly from the Mexican Surveyor.
We further certify that there are no suits now pending in the Courts of the United States affecting the title to the property, and that a patent issued from the United States was issued to them on the 23d day of December, A.D. 1857, which is recorded in the Records of the County of San Francisco, and that you purchased directly from the Mexican Surveyor.
Witness our hands this 14th day of November, A.D. 1861.
HARVEY S. BROWN.

ROOFING.
A fter this date we shall lay First Quality
A.T. Charcoal Tin Plate for $10 per box.
H. O. & I. M. PIXLEY,
No. 20 Kearny street,
Between Jackson and Washington.

LEAKY ROOFS
THOROUGHLY REPAIRED.
Smoky Chimneys Thoroughly Cured. Roofs painted with best quality fire and rain proof paint.
H. & I. M. PIXLEY,
Kearny street, near Washington.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. IGNATIUS COLLEGE.
THIS INSTITUTION is under the direction of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, and is situated in Market street, between Fourth and Fifth streets, San Francisco. The School Year commences on the second Monday in August, and ends on the last Thursday in July. It is divided into two Sessions of five months each.
Terms, per month, for the High Department.....$5 00
Grammar " ..... 3 00
Preparatory " ..... 2 00
For further information apply on the premises, in the Session, to au25 17 THE PRESIDENT

ST. CATHERINE'S
ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES,
BENICIA, CAL.
THIS Institution is conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, and is situated in the healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The plan of education embraces the various branches of instruction usually taught in the most approved seminaries for young ladies. The most conscientious and unremitting attention is given to the advancement of the pupils in the principles and practice of christian virtue, as well as to their intellectual improvement. Particular care is directed toward the promotion of refinement of manners, and the constant maintenance of a polite and amiable deportment. The discipline of the House is mild, but firm. A conduct regulated by these principles has invariably secured for the pupils of this Academy the esteem of their parents and friends.
Terms, per month, in advance.....$20 00
Music, Use of Instrument, per month, each.....1 00
Drawing and Painting.....2 00
Washing.....2 00
Bed and Bedding.....2 00
Entrance.....10 00
Physician's Fees.....Usual Charges.
Use of Library.....1 00
Those who remain during the vacation will be charged extra.
Payments are required to be made half a session in advance, and no deduction is made for half a session's absence, except in case of sickness.
Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.
au25

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,
SAN JOSE, CAL.
THE SEVENTH ANNUAL SESSION of this Institution will commence on TUESDAY, AUGUST 13th. It is conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, and offers every solid and useful education. In order to keep young ladies in virtue, seclusion from society is considered by the Sisters as indispensable, and to cultivate in them those qualities which render virtue both amiable and attractive.
TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$15 00
Board and Tuition, per session.....100 00
Washing, per session.....30 00
Physician's Fees, (unless it be preferred to pay the bill in case of sickness,) per session.....10 00
Piano and Use of Instrument.....Extra Terms.
Drawing, Use of Globes, and Painting.....Extra.
Those who remain during the vacation will be charged extra.
Payments are required to be made half a session in advance, and no deduction is made for a half session's absence, except in case of sickness.
Parents are requested to be present at the opening of the session.
au23 Attorneys-at-Law and Solicitors of Records.

TEN DOLLAR LOTS.
THOSE who have expected lots upon the March Land are hereby informed that they are now ready for inspection at the office of the Naglee's Building.
Those who have taken lots on monthly plans are requested to call immediately and get their deeds.
Persons can obtain lots for $10 each, during this week.
HARVEY S. BROWN

GROCERIES AND LIQUORS.

EX ANNE MARY
FROM LIVERPOOL.
Invoice of
JOHN JAMESON & SON'S OLDEST
IRISH WHISKY.
Invoice of XXX
DUBLIN PORTER.
IN PINTS AND QUARTS.
A large assortment of the finest BRANDIES, WINES, And other LIQUORS, Always on hand in Store and in Bond. For sale by
M. O'CONNOR,
625 Front st.,
Between Jackson and Pacific.
PORT WINE,
BRANDIES,
WHISKIES,
&C., &C.,
OLD AND PURE,
In Lots to Suit Purchasers.
PHILIP A. ROACH
North west corner of Sansome and Jackson streets.
no29

JOHN CARROLL,
IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN FRENCH BRANDIES,
WINES AND LIQUORS,
308 and 307 Front street,
Between Commercial and Sacramento, San Francisco.
THE MARKET EXCHANGE,
506 Washington street,
(GOVERNMENT HOUSE),
SAN FRANCISCO.
Having fitted up the house in a manner not often seen, and stocked it throughout with the Choicest
ALES, WINES, LIQUORS AND CIGARS,
I respectfully solicit a share of the public patronage.
An Excellent Lunch Provided Daily.
House Open Day and Night.
GEO. ELLIOTT,
Proprietor.
HOME MANUFACTURE.
SQUARZA'S PUNCH.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
MONTGOMERY STREET, OPP. WELLS, FARGO & CO.'S Building, and 41 Jackson street.

| | |
|---|---|
| Rum Punch. | Cognac Punch. |
| Coffee " | Cocoa " |
| Tea " | Whisky " |
| Lemon " | Pine Apple " |
| Appetizer " | Riechsmanny " |
| Morning Comfort, | Strawberry " |

Also—
COGNAC, of all kinds.
JAMAICA RUM, WHISKY, GIN, ABSINTHE,
—ANISETTE, etc.
WINES,
ITALIAN, SPANISH,
BTEGGER,
RHINE,
CALIFORNIA,
FRENCH CHAMPAGNE.
ALE, PORTER AND CIDER
All Goods delivered Free of Charge
EX MORNING STAR
FROM LONDON.
300 HHDS. TENNENT'S INDIA PALE ALE, pints, 200 hhds. Tennent's Pilsen, pints.
EX ORACLE.
200 kegs and 100 Tens as's No. 1 Ale;
100 hhds and 100 Tens and 2 s ANN quart;
400 hhds Tennent's Dublin INDIA PALE ALE, pints and quarts;
500 hhds Tennent's Pilsen, pints and quarts.
GOODEN, WHEAT & CRAIG,
No. 411 Pine street, between Montgomery and Kearny
MASSEY & KANE,
PRACTICAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKERS,
.....Agents for.....
Fisk's Metallic Burial Cases.
Warerooms No. 833 Sacramento street, first house below Kearny street.
EVERYTHING NECESSARY FOR FUNERALS kept constantly on hand and furnished at greatly reduced prices. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.
ATHOS MASSEY,
MICHAEL KANE.
au18
NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER.
EVERY QUALITY OF FUNERAL EQUIPMENTS for sale best at the shortest notice. Prices moderate as quality.
INTERMENTS procured in all the Cemeteries.
N. B. Rose Ash'd. for hauling a Patent Metallic Burial Casket.
841 Sacramento street,
Cor. of Webb.

SEWING MACHINES.

RAYMOND'S $20
SEWING MACHINES.
UNPARALLELED SUCCESS HAS ATTENDED the introduction of this Machine. It is pronounced by the simplicity, durability, ease with which it is operated, and the low price at which it is sold, the most desirable Sewing Machine ever offered to the public. It will do as good work as any higher priced machine; and all kinds of family sewing. STEWART & BIRAN, se30 No. 609 Second street.

THE HANDSOMEST, CHEAPEST, FASTEST, AND BEST FAMILY
SEWING MACHINE IS Wheeler & Wilson's.
CALL AND EXAMINE THEM.
Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Sts. jy17 H. C. HAYDEN, AGENT.

SINGER & CO'S
SEWING MACHINES.
WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A FRESH supply of NEEDLES and by the next steamer we will receive a full supply of our justly celebrated LETTER A MACHINES,
Silk, Needles, Cotton, etc.
The great demand for these Machines has left us without them for a short time, and for which new we inform our customers and those whom we have both unable to supply with them that we have made such arrangements as will forever preclude the possibility of our being left without Silk, Needles or Machines.
From the great number of these Machines sold, and the universal satisfaction they give, (as will be seen), we do not hesitate to pronounce them superior to SOLID, SECURE and ALL KIND LOCK STITCHERS OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS, for any Machine now before the public.
We especially recommend them for Leather and similar work—for those, as they give no trouble or annoyance by getting out of order, ever.
no29

MANUFACTURING MACHINES
Always on hand. Machines for Boot Fitting, Gaiter and Mattress Stitching, Harness and Leather work, Carriage Trimming, Chair Making and all branches of manufacturing where Sewing Machines are used.
We invite Dress, Cloak and Shirt Makers to examine our "A" MACHINES.
D. Y. BRODERICK, AGENT, se24 139 Montgomery street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ECLIPSE LIVERY & SALE STABLE,
Perlita Street,
South side, between Kearny and Montgomery streets
First-class Horses and Carriages for Hire.
Saddle-Horses and Horses and Buggies to Let.
Stock for Sale constantly on hand.
Particular attention paid to boarding Horses.
1tf JAS. M. McDONALD, Proprietor.
SAMUEL A. CASLETT JAMES CASLETT.
OAKLEY & JACKSON,
STATE SALT COMPANY,
312 Front street, and 325 Commercial street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Manufacturers and Dealers in First Premium
CHAMPAGNE AND OREGON CIDER,
PURE VINEGAR, jy28
Pickles and Salt in every variety of Package.
FOR SALE.
2,000 barrels Cal. Pickled Herrings.
100 dozen 2 and 3 lb tins Fresh Salmon.
50 do do 1 lb tins do do
100 kits and kegs Cal. Sardines, I 100 packages Cal. Mackerel, salt and smoked, packed for Shipping. At PETER SMITH'S,
61 Davis street, near Washington.
San Francisco
Santa Clara Flour.
THE undersigned agents for the above favorite brand of Extra Family Flour, are daily receiving the same from the mills, and are prepared to fill orders at the lowest market rates.
THOS. CLAYTON & CO.
No. 325 Clay street
jy30
UNDERTAKERS.
COLDEN, WILEY & CRAIG,
Undertakers.
DESIRE having floods decanted would feel it to be a great advantage to their customers and the deceased, if they are prepared to furnish every requisite for a funeral, with a complete assortment of SOLID ROSEWOOD COFFINS,
Of unequalled finish, in addition to their large stock of Mahogany and Lead Coffins.
All funerals promptly attended to. A liberal discount made for the poor.
GOLDEN, WILEY & CRAIG,
No. 411 Pine street, between Montgomery and Kearny

HARDWARE, ETC.

LEWIS COFFEY & RISDON'S
STEAM BOILER WORKS.
THE ONLY EXCLUSIVE BOILER MAKING Establishment on the Pacific Coast—owned and conducted by PRACTICAL BOILER-MAKERS.
All orders for new work, or the repairing of old work, executed as ordered, and warranted as to quality.
Corner of Bush and Market streets,
Opposite the Oriental Hotel,
SAN FRANCISCO.
LEWIS COFFEY. [1858] N. S. RISDON.

DONAHUE'S
Union Iron and Brass Foundry,
Corner of First and Mission streets,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.,
FIRST ESTABLISHED IN THE STATE.
MANUFACTURE STEAM ENGINES, Saw and Grist Mill Machinery, Boilers, Quartz Stampers, Amalgamators, etc., etc.
AT REDUCED PRICES,
Have now the largest and best assortment of Gear and Machinery Patterns in the State, a list of which will be forwarded to any one desiring it, free of cost.
PETER DONAHUE.
au8 1tf

VULCAN IRON WORKS CO.
P. TORCUET.....MANAGER
Steam Engine Builders.
BOILER MAKERS, IRON FOUNDERS AND GENERAL ENGINEERS.
VULCAN FOUNDRY,
First street, near the Old Works, San Francisco.
Steamboat Machinery built and repaired; also, Saw Flour and Quartz Mills, Camping and Mining Machinery, etc., etc. ja18

F. TILLMAN,
90 BATTERY Street, San Francisco.

Sole Agent for TILTON & McFARLAND'S Fire and Burglar Proof SAFES, with steel vaults and combination Locks. The only reliable Safe in the world.
jy20

INTELLIGENCE OFFICES.
C. HALL'S SELECT EMPLOYMENT
—AND—
REAL ESTATE OFFICE,
609 Kearny street, one door north of California street, up stairs,
SAN FRANCISCO.
FAMILIES SUPPLIED AT THE SHORTEST NOTICE, WITH THE BEST MALE AND FEMALE HELP, FOR CITY OR COUNTRY.
No. 19 Washington Street,
Sansome Street
BETWEEN FIRE AND BUSH STREETS,
San Francisco.
BOARD AND LODGING, with single rooms per week.....$2 50
" " per month.....8 00
" " per Day.....1 00
SINGLE MEALS 25 cents. LODGINGS, 37 cents.
oct5-ly

MARKETING.
WELLER & FISHER,
BUTCHERS,
No. 19 Washington Street,
At this Stand will be found, at all times, of the Best Choice Meats to be had in the City Market.
J. P. WARD,
Wholesale and Retail
Produce, Vegetables, Eggs, Butter, Poultry, Fruit, Groceries, &c.
Nos. 510 Market street, two doors from the Metropolitan Market, between Sansome and Montgomery streets.
Hotels and steamboats furnished, at short notice Private families and Boarding Houses supplied on reasonable terms. Goods sold on Commission. All orders delivered free of charge. no 27

HOTELS.

BROOKLYN HOTEL.
COR. BROADWAY & SANSOME STREETS
San Francisco.
JOHN KELLY, Jr. - - - Proprietor
THIS WELL-KNOWN and established House was opened by the present Proprietor in 1855, and ever since that time has been conducted in a manner to merit the liberal patronage it has received. The location is very desirable, being in the business part of the city, but free from the bustle and noise of the principal streets, which have stopped at the Brooklyn, and have returned to it after frequently stopping there since to their knowledge it will be well treated, and assured they leave the proprietor none every reason to his power to make his boarders feel at home while sojourning there.
There is a large Reading Room attached to the House, and a Library.
The BROOKLYN HOTEL Omnibus, with the name of the House on it, is always waiting on the wharf, on the arrival of the Ocean and Inland steamers, to convey passengers and their baggage to the house free of charge.
There is also a FIRE-PROOF SAFE, kept by the proprietor, where money and other valuables are taken charge of at the risk of the Proprietor.
The Prices of Board is put down as a very low figure MINERS and others visiting the City will do well to call at the Brooklyn.
Board per week.....$4
Board per day.....1
Meals.....25
Lodging per week.....$2 50 to $3 00
Single Rooms.....50 to 75 et
There is no danger or Fire at the Brooklyn, as the House is supplied with Gas throughout. ap14

WARM SPRINGS HOTEL,
Near the Mission San Jose, 26 Miles from Oakland.
THIS BEAUTIFUL PLACE OF RESORT is now open for the season for the reception of private families, tourists, invalids, and general visitors.
The Warm Springs are so widely and generally celebrated throughout California, that it is unnecessary here to recapitulate their various qualities. To invalids they present the greatest inducements, as the climate is mild and equable, and is free by the use of the Rising no extraordinary personnel from all parts of San Francisco.
The buildings are new and extensive, affording accommodation for a great number of guests, and containing every requisite usually appertaining to a first-class watering place.
The waiters are on the best that can be procured in the State, and being under the immediate supervision of the proprietor, visitors may rely that every attention will be paid to their comforts.
The table is supplied with every delicacy which can be procured in the Market.
The bathing grounds and trout Fishing within a short drive of the Springs.
jy20 LEWIS BRADY, Proprietor.

O'NEIL'S BRANCH HOTEL.
Sansome Street
BETWEEN FIRE AND BUSH STREETS,
San Francisco.
BOARD AND LODGING, with single rooms per week.....$5 00
" " per month.....18 00
" " per Day.....1 00
SINGLE MEALS 25 cents. LODGINGS, 37 cents.
oct5-ly

WELLER & FISHER,
BUTCHERS,
No. 19 Washington Street,
At this Stand will be found, at all times, of the Best Choice Meats to be had in the City Market.
J. P. WARD,
Wholesale and Retail
Produce, Vegetables, Eggs, Butter, Poultry, Fruit, Groceries, &c.
Nos. 510 Market street, two doors from the Metropolitan Market, between Sansome and Montgomery streets.
Hotels and steamboats furnished, at short notice Private families and Boarding Houses supplied on reasonable terms. Goods sold on Commission. All orders delivered free of charge. no 27

PHELAN'S
MODEL BILLIARD TABLES, PATENT CUSHION CUSHIONS.
For sale by
M. E. HUGHES, Sole Agent,
100 and 102 Montgomery street.
Billiard materials constantly on hand.

A. S. ROSENBAUM & CO.,
IMPORTERS OF
FINE HAVANA CIGARS,
TOBACCO, ETC.,
26 and 27 Cedar Street New York.
Corner of Clay and Battery Streets
SAN FRANCISCO.
"Agents for Hardgrove's "Punch." "Most Beer," Golden Gate."
my 4

Woodworth, Allcron & Co.,
Paris and San Francisco.
IMPORTERS OF
PIANO-FORTES, MELODEONS,
AND HARMONIUMS,
HARMONIC PIANO-FORTES,
REED AND PIPE ORGANS,
MUSIC STOOLS, PIANO COVERS,
MUSIC RACKS, Etc.,
Exclusive Agents for the sale of the Steddart Piano Forte and Prince Melodeon. Piano-Fortes for hire del 29 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SUPERINTENDENT OF IMMIGRATION.
THE SUBSCRIBER HAVING BEEN appointed State Superintendent of Immigration, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the same, hereby gives notice that the office is in the Exchange Building, Battery street.
Shipmasters, and others interested therein, are required to conform with the provisions of the Act regulating Immigration, and all failure will be properly prosecuted as required.
Information desired relative to the Act of the Legislature upon Immigration will be afforded, on application at his office.
THOS. B. CASHMAN,
State Superintendent of Immigration.
au26

Fenian Brotherhood.
THIS SOCIETY meets every TUESDAY Evening, at No. 511 Sacramento street, opposite Price's Engine House. All respectable Irishmen are cordially invited to become members.

to the comparative claims upon our sympathies possessed by the American people and the British Government as the last which followed the year 1846—the first year of the famine.

Now, whilst I admit that no such comparity was displayed by the Government of England, I believe as firmly as I believe any proposition in political fact that a large proportion of the state- [illegible] exulted in the denegation of [illegible] which resulted from the famine. [illegible] politicians hold [illegible] to the follow- [illegible] bad race—they [illegible] are, to use the memorable [illegible] Agrarians, 'aliens in blood [illegible] religion'—[illegible] them, the better." I was myself sitting by the side of Lord George Bentinck on the Opposition benches when he exclaimed—"It is your deliberate policy to starve the Irish people," whilst reproaching the government of the day for not taking measures to employ the people of Ireland.

You cannot forget that the same government which squandered a hundred millions of money in a ridiculous war with Russia—which had destroyed the prestige of England in Europe—spoke of a loan of eight millions advanced under the pretext of relieving the sufferings of the Irish people, as if it were an act of unparalleled national munificence, and having exhausted its generosity in this effort, left the people to die or to emigrate without further help, except such as was supplied by the resources of Ireland.

You cannot forget that even the landed gentry of Ireland, who have almost uniformly acted as an English garrison in Ireland, were abandoned in their utmost need, and that British statesmen exulted in the confiscation of their estates which resulted from the measures adopted by Parliament during the famine of Ireland.

It is my deliberate opinion that the majority of the British people, and of British statesmen, would at this moment wish that Ireland should be deserted by its Roman Catholic inhabitants, in order that it might be re-peopled by what is called the great Anglo-Saxon race, and that many of the measures adopted at the time of the famine were designed to produce an approximation to this eventful result.

What, on the other hand, was the conduct of the Americans when ten of thousands of poor and ignorant strangers were landed annually on their shores—flowing into the centres of the great cities of America the seeds of pestilence which had been created by famine in Ireland, and by overcrowding in emigrant vessels? They could scarcely have been blamed if they had done what England does every day towards the Irish poor who become chargeable in England, though they may have resided in that country during great part of their lives; they could scarcely have been blamed if they had ordered these outcasts to return home to the country of their birth. But the American nation did not so treat the children of our race. They received and fostered them—they provided homes for them—and of the two millions of Irish—a number who have emigrated to America during our generation, a very large proportion are now living in circumstances comparatively prosperous.

As the foregoing remarks include Canada and the Canadians, I speak from personal observation. I have seen the Irish who settled in America, from Charleston to Michigan, from Portland to New Orleans, and from Detroit to Quebec, in Canada.

Again, perhaps, be told that in some parts of America a spirit of intolerance has been evinced towards the Irish Catholics. I admit that in a few places such a spirit has been evinced; but the manifestation of this feeling has been called forth a noble display of generous sentiment on the part of a large majority of the native Americans. We ought not to forget that, when, in 1856, the Know-Nothing party endeavored to raise an outcry against foreigners, that cry was met by such men as Mr. Seward in the State of New York, and Governor Wise in the State of Virginia; and at the risk of their own popularity generous Americans were found everywhere who effectually crushed and stifled the Know-Nothing party. I am a convert in my hatred of anti-Catholic prejudice as I could be if I were myself a Catholic; but I am not prepared to say that cause of offence may not occasionally have been given by our countrymen in America—and, upon the whole, I think that the Irish—and especially the children of Irish parents, are appreciated in America fully as much as they deserve.

In an Irish gentleman, then, to be disgraced and degraded because he tells his countrymen that they ought not to forget the kindness shown them by the Americans in the hour of their utmost need?

I was not myself present at the late Rotundo meeting, and, though in England, I have been held responsible for its proceedings: the fact is that it was held contrary to my judgment and advice; but I confess that I am now rejoiced that the people of Dublin took an early opportunity of declaring that they would view with regret a collision between Ireland and the inhabitants of the United States.

I go further, and say emphatically that in opinion the several constituencies of Ireland ought to meet and inform their representatives that they are unwilling to contribute either men or money for the purpose of injuring the inhabitants, and that in that spirit they ought to employ the very language used by The O'Donoghue in his letter to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

Now, with respect to the committee which was appointed at the Rotundo meeting. I take upon myself the responsibility of having advised The O'Donoghue to withdraw his name from that committee. I gave that advice because I was informed that the list of the members of that committee had been either unprecedentedly intruded upon the meeting; and because I thought it possible that The O'Donoghue might, by acting with it, become hereafter responsible for proceedings which he does not approve.

Those who remember the trials of 1848 cannot forget that the law officers of the Crown endeavored to hold Mr. Duffy responsible for my proceedings at Tipperary, though Mr. Duffy was actually in prison in Dublin at the time when those proceedings took place—so that a public man cannot be too guarded, in respect to his associates.

I have felt it the more especially to be my duty to offer this advice to O'Donoghue, and to others, because I am afraid that there exists in this country a secret organization which may hereafter compromise many inexperienced, yet noble-minded youths. Three years ago I took the liberty to warn my fellow-countrymen against secret societies. I have since repeated the warning, and now once again I adjure them to treat as their worst enemy any man who invites them to join a secret society.

For myself, I say not whether the leader whom I follow belong to the patrician or plebian ranks of society. I would support the son of a beggar as loyally as I would support the son of a prince, if he possesses virtue, ability, and patriotism, but I never have joined and never will join any secret society which may be governed by a man or men with whose character and with whose aims I am unacquainted.

If a man believe himself fit to guide his countrymen, let him stand forth to the scrutiny of daylight. Let us examine his qualifications, and determine how far he is or is not fit to be trusted. Let us know, also, what is the end and aim to which he proposes to lead us, and what are the means by which we are to arrive at that end.

Nor ought it to be forgotten that the existence of secret societies tends to prevent the formation of legal associations for the purpose of forwarding legitimate objects: because it is impossible to enter into combined action with a member of a secret society on terms of confidence or of safety. Every prudent man shuns the risk of being compromised by the proceedings of those who, being members of secret societies, may intrude themselves into the open and legal association to which he belongs.

Moreover, the leaders of secret societies generally keep out of danger themselves; whilst they allow those whom they inveigle to be sacrificed for having acted upon their perilous suggestions.

It is almost needless that I should repeat my conviction that the Irish government is infamous in respecting every movement that is made by the members of secret societies existing in this country.

But whilst I think that The O'Donoghue has acted wisely in withdrawing from the committee appointed at the Rotundo meeting, I am rejoiced to find that he holds out to the country the prospect that he will, on some future occasion, suggest the formation of a committee or council which shall deserve the confidence of the country.

I reserve for a suitable occasion the expression of my opinions with respect to the formation of such a committee.

In the meantime I trust that from every parish in the county of Tipperary The O'Donoghue will receive assurances that he has not forfeited the esteem of his fellow-countrymen by being deprived of the commission of the peace.

I have the honor to be
Your devoted and obliged friend,
JOHN O'MAHONY.

Killiney, New Year's Day, 1862.

CAPTURE OF PORT ROYAL.

The most important victory of the war was achieved by the Federal forces under General Grant, in the capture of Fort Donelson, on the Tennessee river. The works were most extensive, fully armed and garrisoned by 20,000 men. Com. Foote, when the place was invested, had 50,000 men and a large fleet of gun boats. The fighting continued four days, with great loss on both sides, when on Sunday morning last the fort was surrendered. The fruits of the victory are, 10,000 prisoners, several generals, and an immense quantity of munitions of war. On Saturday the Confederates made a sortie in which they obtained some advantages, but were compelled to retire with loss. The right wing of our forces, composed of the first and second brigades of Gen. McClernand's division, bore the brunt of the fight. The enemy commenced the attack by firing some grape into the 31st and 22d Illinois regiments, which were encamped on the extreme right. The first brigade, Col. Oglesby commanding, were immediately drawn up in line in the following order: 18th, extreme right; 8th next, followed by the 31st, which supported the right of Stewart's battery light artillery, with the 31st on the extreme left—all Illinois regiments.

The 2d Division, Col. Wallace commanding, consisted of the 11th, 20th, 45th and 48th Illinois regiments, with McAllister's and Taylor's Indiana light artillery, four seige guns. The attacking force of the enemy consisted of about 12,000 men. Their position on the ground was such that not more than one of our regiments could operate at the same time, while the rebels could bring nearly their whole force to bear against us. The first regiment which attacked rebels was the 18th, which fought with desperate courage until their ammunition was exhausted, when they were forced to retire with a considerable loss of officers and men. They were replaced by the 8th, which also fell back in turn. Meanwhile, other regiments were leading each feeble aid as their positions would admit.

Gen. Lew Wallace was then ordered to reinforce McClernand, and sent two brigades of his division from the centre. The 31st Illinois, Col. Logan, fought like veterans and struggled in defending the Schwartz Battery under the most galling fire, until allthe horses of the battery, with all the officers in charge of the guns were killed. The lieutenant-colonel, the acting major, 7 captains, and a number of lieutenants of the 31st were also killed, and the colonel was wounded. Being nearly surrounded, Capt. McCook, who had been left in command, drew what remained of the regiment off the field—not, however, until their last round had been fired, and they had commenced to drive the enemy before them.

A letter in the Chicago Tribune, from Fort Donelson, says that when Col. Craft's Brigade, which had been ordered to reinforce McClernard, came in near the 20th and 31st Illinois, and 25th Kentucky, these regiments were lying down firing over the crest of the hill. They rose, not knowing whether the force in their front was a friend or foe. The 25th Kentucky, supposing them to be rebels, poured in a volley, which did terrible execution, and was sufficient to throw the whole brigade into disorder at once.

Almost a panic ensued; some threw down their arms and equipments and fled; some going as far as Fort Henry. The enemy improved the opportunity, and advanced on Stewarts and Dresser's Batteries, capturing five guns, and taking possession of McClernard's headquarters, driving our forces nearly a mile and a half. Instead, however, of adhering to their supposed original intentions to escape, the rebels resolved to follow up the advantages by pursuit.

At this juncture Wallace's division was thrown in front, and took position on the ridge, with Taylor's battery in centre of the road. The rebels formed on the ridge which McClernand had occupied, and flushed with success, moved forward so as to come in range, when Taylor opened on them with grape, shell, and canister. The rebels quailed, and came to a halt, and as the infantry advanced began to fall back. Wallace improved the moment, and moved on, driving the rebels before him, and secured the ground previously lost.

During the night reconnoissances were made for an early assault with the bayonet. At 5 o'clock the advance was made, but when the full light of day appeared white flags were hung in many places on the enemy's works. The Fort surrendered unconditionally. We have Generals Buckner, Johnson and Bushrod, and 15,000 prisoners, and 3,000 horses. Pillow and Floyd, with their brigades, stole away on steamers on Saturday night, without letting Buckner know their intentions. Gen. Smith led a charge on the lower end of the enemy's works, and was the first inside of the fortifications. The prisoners were being sent to Cairo as fast as they could be loaded on steamers. The loss on our side is heavy, and will probably reach 400 killed and 800 wounded. We lose a large percentage of officers, among them three lieutenant-colonels killed. Three colonels were wounded. Major Post of the 8th Illinois, with 200 prisoners, was sent to Nashville. The enemy's loss is heavy, but not so large as ours, they having done the principal part of their fighting behind intrenchments. The works extended some five miles on the outside. The rebels lost 25 field pieces, 17 mortars and 20,000 stand of arms, besides a large quantity of commissary stores. They are completely demoralized. Floyd and Pillow left in the night secretly. They charge Pillow and Floyd with deserting their men. Floyd has gone south with the investment of the Fort, on Wednesday, lay on their arms night and day, half the time without tents and a portion of the time in heavy rain and snow.

All the gunboats are pretty effectually disabled except one. Com. Foote was wounded twice, but not fatally. He reached Fort Donelson, Saturday night, from St. Louis, Louisville, Pittsburgh, Carondelet, Tyler, and Conestiga. After fighting little over an hour, withdrew. Fifty-four men killed and wounded on board.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

WE HAVE THEM,
Everybody Knows it
HOLCOMBE BROS.
SELL THE BEST GOODS.
And have the Largest Assortment in San Francisco of BOOTS & SHOES,
NEW, OPERAS!
Sole Agents of California for
WEED'S, NEW YORK, CELEBRATED
OPERA GAITERS
BALMORALS.
THE ONLY GENUINE ARTICLES IN THIS CITY will arrive by every steamer till the season is over.
ackert's Philadelphia Quilted Boots
WILL RETAIL, THE
Quilted Boots for.....$11 00
Half Double Sole Boots.....8 00
New York outlet Boots.....5 00
AND ALL OTHER GOODS OF PHILADELPHIA MAKE IN PROPORTION.
Received by every steamer a new style of
Military Riding & Walking Boots — Farmers' and Miners' Boots;
WILL RETAIL THEM AT LESS THAN COST AND CHARGES!
— ALSO —
An Immense Assortment of Ladies', Misses, Boys' and Youth's Long Leg Rubber Boots,
FOR THE RAINY SEASON.
If you want first-class goods at Lower Prices than were offered before, "ALL GO"
HOLCOMBE BROTHERS'
STORES (3) STORES.
Up town Store—Corner of Washington and Kearny streets.
Down town Store—Corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.
HOLCOMBE BROTHERS.

M. CUERIN,
Begs to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has just received from L. Bonker and C. Bonker, the Largest Assortment of BOOTS, SHOES & GAITERS,
Ever offered for sale in his city, at the Lowest Possible Prices, at his Old Stand,
Corner Commercial & Battery sts,
SIGN OF THE RED BOOT.
He also keeps on hand a good assortment of every variety of PEGGED BOOTS, SHOES and GAITERS which he will sell Low for Cash.
M. CUERIN.
dc8-tf

PRIVATE INSTRUCTION.
Mr. Laurence T. Ryan
BEGS LEAVE TO INFORM HIS FRIENDS AND the Public that he is at present prepared to give instructions in ENGLISH GRAMMAR, READING, MATHEMATICS, BOOK-KEEPING (by Double and Single Entry), and LATIN CLASSICS. Parents desirous of having their children receive instruction at their own houses, as well as Invalids and other young men engaged through the day, would find it to their advantage to call upon him at his residence, at Mrs. Parker's, No. 36 Market street, three doors from Second street.
jan18

BANKING.
HIBERNIA SAVINGS
AND
LOAN SOCIETY.
Office—No. 105 Jackson street, first Building West of Montgomery street.
OFFICERS:
President.....M. D. SWEENY.
Vice President.....EDWARD MARTIN.
TRUSTEES:
N. KRAFTS.
JOHN SULLIVAN.
JOHN FARRELL.
A. T. HAYES.
JAMES DONAHUE.
D. J. O'CALLAGHAN.
WM. McCANN.
E. McGRAN.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD.
Treasurer.....JOHN MEE.
Attorney.....RICHARD TOBIN.
Deposits received from two and one-half dollars upwards.
Office Hours—From 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.
jy21

DONOHOE, RALSTON & CO.,
BANKERS,
SELL EXCHANGE ON
New York, Boston,
Philadelphia, Baltimore,
St. Louis,
And other Principal Cities of the Union.
ALSO,
London and the Bank of Ireland.
DONOHOE, RALSTON & CO.

REYNOLDS, REIS & CO.,
BANKERS,
No. 408 Montgomery street,
SELL EXCHANGE IN SUMS TO SUIT, drawn on
The Bank of the State of New York.
Drafts drawn on
Messrs. Reynolds & Rice.....Marseilles
Messrs. Ralston & Rei.....Dresden
Purchase Gold Bullion and Mint Certificates. Discount Mercantile Paper.
Make Advances on Gold for Assay or Coinage, attend to collections and transact a GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.
[ap15-tf]

V. MARZIOU & CO.,
BANKERS,
Importers and Commission Merchants.
Regular line of sailing Packets between Havre and San Francisco. Office, 124 Battery street.
Money received on deposit. Exchange on France.
ap18-tf

INSURANCE.
NORTHERN ASSURANCE CO.,
Of London and Edinburgh.
ESTABLISHED 1836.
FOR FIRE AND LIFE, AT HOME AND ABROAD.
Capital.....$6,300,000.
THE POLICIES of this Company are not only guaranteed by the capital, but also by the unlimited personal responsibility of nearly one thousand share holders.
The premiums for Fire Insurance are now greatly reduced. For particulars apply to
WM. LANE BOOKER,
THE AGENTS, street.

THOS. N. CAZNEAU,
INSURANCE BROKER,
And Adjuster of Marine Losses and Averages.
Maritime and all Commercial Documents and Writings Drawn. Claims upon Insurers Adjusted. Consultations upon all Insurances and Maritime Subjects.
Office, Exchange Building,
Battery street.....Opposite Custom-house,
aug 17 SAN FRANCISCO.

HARTFORD
FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY,
ESTABLISHED MORE THAN
Half a Century.
This old, well-known and substantial Company continues to issue Policies of Insurance against Fire Risks, on the most favorable terms.
McLEAN & POWLER, Agents,
Northeast corner of City and Battery streets, de31-1f SAN FRANCISCO.

FISHER & CO.
ARE SELLING THE FINEST
SILK HATS
FOR SIX DOLLARS!
The Compressed Hat,
FIVE DOLLARS!
Montgomery street, cor. Commercial,
SAN FRANCISCO.
au17 3-tf

MARBLE
Mantels and Grates.
MANTELS OF THE BEST ITALIAN MARBLE, latest style and eventually designed, with the most beautiful Grates and Imported Tiles, as well as ornamental designs, Gothic and Elizabethan Silver Sand, Polished Wrought-iron Coal Grates, and patent Improved Furnaces, which I offer for sale on the most favorable terms. New York and Boston Prices, through Portfolios with
JOSEPH KESSELER,
dec31-3m 627 Market street, opposite Montgomery.

AUCTIONEERS.
H. A. COBB.....AUCTIONEER.
H. A. COBB & R. H. SINTON,
Real Estate and Stock Auctioneers,
Rear and Salesrooms.....102 Montgomery street
Sale Day—Saturday.
Strict attention given to all the legal requirements in Sales of Administrators, Executors, etc.
Terms of Sale of Real Estate—Title subject to legal investigation. Acts of Sale at purchasers' expense. Ten per cent. of purchase money in C. S. to all sales, by required at time of sale. Payments at any be always or stated at sale.
Sales of Real Estate Private Sale in all parts of the City. Also, Ranches in various parts of the State.
All matters relating to Real Estate promptly attended to. jy5 1f Conveyancer and Notary Public.

PROFESSIONAL.
J. B. HART,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
Office, No. 101 Merchant Street,
SAN FRANCISCO. jal1

JOHN B. WILLIAMS,
(LATE IN THE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,)
ATTORNEY IN LAND CASES
PENDING IN U. S. DISTRICT COURT.
No. 16, U. S. Court Building.
SAN FRANCISCO. jal1

R. F. RYAN,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
No. 625 Merchant st., San Francisco. jal1

WM. L. DUNCAN,
NOTARY PUBLIC
AND
REAL ESTATE AGENT,
Telegraph Office.....Montgomery Block.
Loans Negotiated, Land Warrants bought and sold, notices by Claims made out and prosecuted, Claims against the U. S. and State Governments collected, &c. jal1

C. V. SHARON. OLIN D. OLEY.
GILLESPIE & GRAY,
Examiners of Deeds
SEARCHERS OF RECORDS,
For all Incumbrances, including Judgments and Mortgages.
Have been familiar with this Title to REAL ESTATE in this City and County from its first settlement.
No. 312 Washington street,
Adjoining Hall of Records.
jan18

B. DOWLING,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
AND CONVEYANCER.
Office at Exchange and notice protested. Deeds, Mortgages, Conveyances, Powers of Attorney, Articles of Agreement, &c., executed with dispatch and promptly drawn up.
Merchant Street. jy1

J. B. E. CAVALLIER. R. C. FINN. JOSEPH GRANT.
CAVALLIER, FINN & GRANT,
NOTARIES PUBLIC
And Commissioners of Deeds
FOR—
ALL THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.
Commissioners of Deeds for Nevada Territory.
A Notary always in the office. feb1

R. R. PROVINES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
Room No. 30, Metropolitan Block, jy25 Corner Montgomery and Washington streets

EUGENE B. DRAKE,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Office, Room No. 2, Naglee Building, Merchant street, corner Montgomery, San Francisco.
jy26

W. A. CORNWALL,
Attorney at Law,
No. 8 Naglee's Building, Merchant street,
de21 SAN FRANCISCO

WAKELEE & CHARLES,
REAL ESTATE
—AND—
GENERAL AGENTS,
No. 612 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
RENTS COLLECTED AND LOANS NEGOTIATED.
T. C. CHARLES,
NOTARY PUBLIC.
F. C. WAKELEE. [feb8] T. C. CHARLES

PAINTS, OILS, &C.
JAMES R. DEANE,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN
Paints, Oils,
Window Glass,
Varnishes,
Brushes, &c.
Constantly in store and receiving all the above articles, selected from the best manufactories in the East and Europe.
No. 520 Clay street—Brick Store,
Opposite Leidesdorff
mr 19

KELLY & WADE,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE,
VARNISHES,
BRUSHES,
GLASS, ETC.
No. 105 & 107 California street,
Between Davis and Front, SAN FRANCISCO.
Mouse and Sign Painting, &c.

THE MONITOR.

VOL. IV. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1861. NO. 28.

THE MONITOR,
A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF
Catholic Literature and General Intelligence,
Printed and published every Saturday at the office, No. 89 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
T. A. HEALY,
Editor and Proprietor.
TERMS:
Per annum, in advance by mail.....$5 00
Half year do.....3 00
City subscribers (payable to the carrier) per week.....12½

OUR NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14, 1861.

It is very doubtful if the remains of poor McManus will be accompanied by appropriate honors in Ireland as they were in our own city and free cities in America—San Francisco and New York. The Dublin correspondent of the Irish American, a reliable authority in such matters—fears as much. The difficulties, however, have not been caused by asylum of fervor on the part of the Irish people; for the procession, unless totally suppressed, will be immense, but it is said that a committee in Dublin are a self-opinionated set of men, utterly unknown to those whose assistance and co-operation would be requisite to make the ceremonies a worthy completion to the imposing obsequies commenced at your golden gates. When, in their committee-room, it was proposed that the programme should be laid before Messrs. Smith O'Brien, John Mitchel, John B. Dillon, P. J. Smyth and James Kavanagh, it was met by an indignant refusal, and the proposer threatened with summary expulsion. Nor had they, at latest dates, been fortunate enough to secure the cooperation of the Catholic prelates and clergy. The Archbishop of Dublin "does not think proper to allow any special religious ceremonies," but it is understood that the Archbishop's refusal is caused by not knowing the numbers of the committee and having had no assurance that the occasion may not be made an of for a violent abortive political demonstration. His Grace, in fact, would see no attempts revolution in Ireland. Some of the Irish bishops are [illegible] to the Fenian movement, and [illegible] carry by the Irish Viceroy, in their discretion, [illegible] Fenian movement. Two bishops committed displayed such felicity in some of their reported arrangements. No carriages or vehicles of any kind were to be allowed in the line of procession, notwithstanding that the prescribed route is fully five miles! All must march, and march to music, too,for the column was to be headed by a military band! Let us hope that wiser counsels will have prevailed before the obsequies take place, in the Irish coast, and that then all will be well.

THE FAMINE AGAIN.

It is truly melancholy to have to record that the poor Irish are again famine-stricken. From one end of the island, especially the county Mayo, I see very bad accounts. At a public meeting lately held at Kilmore parish church, Westport, Archdeacon Lyons in the chair, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That about five-sixths of the potato crops, the principal food of the people of this parish and district, are destroyed by the blight and recent floods.

Resolved, That if all the corn grown in this mountain parish was converted into meal it would not give support to the population, numbering about 5,000 souls, for five months.

Resolved, That unless the government grant, without delay, public works to the people by which they may be enabled to purchase food, they will perish from starvation.

Resolved, That we respectfully lay these resolutions before his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant and Chief Secretary for Ireland, requesting, in the name of humanity, that they will advise the government to take immediate steps to avert such a fearful calamity.

And these resolutions, unhappily, as corroborated by a correspondent writing from Children, who says:

"Destitution threatens in this quarter, and the intermission of the past season has stopped the hearts and hearths of a poor suffering peasantry. Fuel is just now one of the direst wants in Connemara, and, with the continuance of the sleet of six months of dreary wind, is enough to make the stoutest quake. This is a fearful year in fact, as bad as '46."

GREEN FLOWERS GROWING.

In the Middle Ages, when I forward to you last week by Pony Express, there was a division to certain Irish "patriots" in Dublin "who hang their heads for shame" at the spectacle of the Irish of the North fighting against the Irish at the South. As the only thing that previously exacted comments from certain other brethren of mine, you will probably elucidation: The Dublin correspondent of the Irish American first wrote these words:

"Men of national opinions in Ireland very much regret the active part that their fellow countrymen in America seem to be taking in the war, and on both sides of it. Where Speed of Meagher on one side and the young Mitchels on the other—of the 69th and other Irish regiments fighting for the North, while other Irish regiments are ranged for the South—they hang their heads, if not for shame at least with vexation. * * * * I would not be fulfilling my duty as a chronicler of Dublin gossip if I omitted to mention that a report that green flags are being displayed by the Irish regiments of North and South has given much annoyance to many Irish patriots. Why should the green flag of Ireland be displayed in hostility to the Stars and Stripes, or to the flag of the Southern Confederacy, whatever that is? Even supposing that Irishmen ought to be forgiven to do battle of either side, yet it is as Americans, as adopted citizens of America, they do so—not as Irishmen. Why oppose the green flag of Ireland to the risk of being cut down or captured by North or South. That should be kept until it can lead Irishmen against the enemies of Ireland."

Here upon the New York correspondent of the Dublin Morning News responded thus:

"Who are the patriots in your beautiful city whom the accomplished Dublin correspondent of the Irish American says are 'annoyed' at the report that green flags are borne in the battle-field by the armed Irish of the North and those of the South? Who, indeed, carry be who hang their heads, if not for shame at least with vexation, because of the valor displayed by Thomas Francis Meagher on the one side, and James Mitchel on the other, under Irish flags, at Bull Run? From an American point of view, I freely admit, it is sensational that one Irish flag of the North should have to cross bayonets with the Irish flag of the South; but what have your 'patriots' to do with that? We Irish, North or South, do not cause the war, we asked long ago to be let fight England on the San Juan and other encroachments of her, and if we had been allowed there would have been an end to secession civil war to-day. Yet, all that is not sufficient for your 'patriots' in Dublin, who, from their people, amongst whom we have had free intercourse, are fighting

"Instead of objecting to the carrying of green flags, I view it favorably. To us, that flag is a powerful incentive to loyalty and gallant deeds, and these deeds, by it, are commemorated for the glory of Ireland. While their Motherland is down the Irish in America owe it to themselves, and to her, to show that they are worthy descendants of their warlike sires—to themselves, because they have been by proscriptive factions in America reproached for their ignorance and unfitness for republican freedom; and to her, because it shows them in the pool of danger, facing death under her old flag, learning the use of arms, so that they can be of use to her in the hour of trial, and hoping that their deeds may be an incentive to their brothers at home. Were Ireland opulent and free, she ought to be, now that her sons in America would fight under their own flag, and while she is poor and her sons outcasts, they will rap with the green. If our Irish soldiers were mixed up in regimental companies with Teutons and Saxons, no vilorous exploit of theirs would be recorded, but, distinguished by their flag, their valor will be known.

"Your patriots' annoyance at the Irish flag being borne by Irishmen in the battle-field against Irishmen is not to be wondered at, when we find Irishmen, and noble in their own subscribing to the war, before the world's gaze? Nor let you imagine that the Irish flag of the South is captured, would be desecrated by a Northern Irish regiment; no more would that of the Northern, if captured, be by the Southern Irish; on the contrary, whoso be the captors, if Irish, that flag will be honored. Could you say so much in Ireland to-day, even amongst your 'patriots'?"

John Mitchel, as you will have seen, coincides with this latter writer, and so too must that, with or without the Green Flag, Irish valor will do and date. Every day proves this. Even in the west of Ireland, especially the county Mayo, I see very bad accounts. At a public meeting lately held at Kilmore parish church, Westport, Archdeacon Lyons in the chair, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That about five-sixths of the potato crops, the principal food of the people of this parish and district, are destroyed by the blight and recent floods.

Resolved, That if all the corn grown in this mountain parish was converted into meal it would not give support to the population, numbering about 5,000 souls, for five months.

Resolved, That unless the government grant, without delay, public works to the people by which they may be enabled to purchase food, they will perish from starvation.

Resolved, That we respectfully lay these resolutions before his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant and Chief Secretary for Ireland, requesting, in the name of humanity, that they will advise the government to take immediate steps to avert such a fearful calamity.

And these resolutions, unhappily, as corroborated by a correspondent writing from Children, who says:

"Destitution threatens in this quarter, and the intermission of the past season has stopped the hearts and hearths of a poor suffering peasantry. Fuel is just now one of the direst wants in Connemara, and, with the continuance of the sleet of six months of dreary wind, is enough to make the stoutest quake. This is a fearful year in fact, as bad as '46."

GREEN FLOWERS GROWING.

In the Middle Ages, when I forward to you last week by Pony Express, there was a division to certain Irish "patriots" in Dublin "who hang their heads for shame" at the spectacle of the Irish of the North fighting against the Irish at the South. As the only thing that previously exacted comments from certain other brethren of mine, you will probably elucidation: The Dublin correspondent of the Irish American first wrote these words:

"Men of national opinions in Ireland very much regret the active part that their fellow countrymen in America seem to be taking in the war, and on both sides of it. Where Speed of Meagher on one side and the young Mitchels on the other—of the 69th and other Irish regiments fighting for the North, while other Irish regiments are ranged for the South—they hang their heads, if not for shame at least with vexation. * * * * I would not be fulfilling my duty as a chronicler of Dublin gossip if I omitted to mention that a report that green flags are being displayed by the Irish regiments of North and South has given much annoyance to many Irish patriots. Why should the green flag of Ireland be displayed in hostility to the Stars and Stripes, or to the flag of the Southern Confederacy, whatever that is? Even supposing that Irishmen ought to be forgiven to do battle of either side, yet it is as Americans, as adopted citizens of America, they do so—not as Irishmen. Why oppose the green flag of Ireland to the risk of being cut down or captured by North or South. That should be kept until it can lead Irishmen against the enemies of Ireland."

Here upon the New York correspondent of the Dublin Morning News responded thus:

"Who are the patriots in your beautiful city whom the accomplished Dublin correspondent of the Irish American says are 'annoyed' at the report that green flags are borne in the battle-field by the armed Irish of the North and those of the South? Who, indeed, carry be who hang their heads, if not for shame at least with vexation, because of the valor displayed by Thomas Francis Meagher on the one side, and James Mitchel on the other, under Irish flags, at Bull Run? From an American point of view, I freely admit, it is sensational that one Irish flag of the North should have to cross bayonets with the Irish flag of the South; but what have your 'patriots' to do with that? We Irish, North or South, do not cause the war, we asked long ago to be let fight England on the San Juan and other encroachments of her, and if we had been allowed there would have been an end to secession civil war to-day. Yet, all that is not sufficient for your 'patriots' in Dublin, who, from their people, amongst whom we have had free intercourse, are fighting

"Instead of objecting to the carrying of green flags, I view it favorably. To us, that flag is a powerful incentive to loyalty and gallant deeds, and these deeds, by it, are commemorated for the glory of Ireland. While their Motherland is down the Irish in America owe it to themselves, and to her, to show that they are worthy descendants of their warlike sires—to themselves, because they have been by proscriptive factions in America reproached for their ignorance and unfitness for republican freedom; and to her, because it shows them in the pool of danger, facing death under her old flag, learning the use of arms, so that they can be of use to her in the hour of trial, and hoping that their deeds may be an incentive to their brothers at home. Were Ireland opulent and free, she ought to be, now that her sons in America would fight under their own flag, and while she is poor and her sons outcasts, they will rap with the green. If our Irish soldiers were mixed up in regimental companies with Teutons and Saxons, no vilorous exploit of theirs would be recorded, but, distinguished by their flag, their valor will be known.

"Your patriots' annoyance at the Irish flag being borne by Irishmen in the battle-field against Irishmen is not to be wondered at, when we find Irishmen, and noble in their own subscribing to the war, before the world's gaze? Nor let you imagine that the Irish flag of the South is captured, would be desecrated by a Northern Irish regiment; no more would that of the Northern, if captured, be by the Southern Irish; on the contrary, whoso be the captors, if Irish, that flag will be honored. Could you say so much in Ireland to-day, even amongst your 'patriots'?"

John Mitchel, as you will have seen, coincides with this latter writer, and so too must that, with or without the Green Flag, Irish valor will do and date. Every day proves this. Even in the west of Ireland, especially the county Mayo, I see very bad accounts. At a public meeting lately held at Kilmore parish church, Westport, Archdeacon Lyons in the chair, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That about five-sixths of the potato crops, the principal food of the people of this parish and district, are destroyed by the blight and recent floods.

Resolved, That if all the corn grown in this mountain parish was converted into meal it would not give support to the population, numbering about 5,000 souls, for five months.

Resolved, That unless the government grant, without delay, public works to the people by which they may be enabled to purchase food, they will perish from starvation.

Resolved, That we respectfully lay these resolutions before his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant and Chief Secretary for Ireland, requesting, in the name of humanity, that they will advise the government to take immediate steps to avert such a fearful calamity.

And these resolutions, unhappily, as corroborated by a correspondent writing from Children, who says:

"Destitution threatens in this quarter, and the intermission of the past season has stopped the hearts and hearths of a poor suffering peasantry. Fuel is just now one of the direst wants in Connemara, and, with the continuance of the sleet of six months of dreary wind, is enough to make the stoutest quake. This is a fearful year in fact, as bad as '46."

GREEN FLOWERS GROWING.

In the Middle Ages, when I forward to you last week by Pony Express, there was a division to certain Irish "patriots" in Dublin "who hang their heads for shame" at the spectacle of the Irish of the North fighting against the Irish at the South. As the only thing that previously exacted comments from certain other brethren of mine, you will probably elucidation: The Dublin correspondent of the Irish American first wrote these words:

"Men of national opinions in Ireland very much regret the active part that their fellow countrymen in America seem to be taking in the war, and on both sides of it. Where Speed of Meagher on one side and the young Mitchels on the other—of the 69th and other Irish regiments fighting for the North, while other Irish regiments are ranged for the South—they hang their heads, if not for shame at least with vexation. * * * * I would not be fulfilling my duty as a chronicler of Dublin gossip if I omitted to mention that a report that green flags are being displayed by the Irish regiments of North and South has given much annoyance to many Irish patriots. Why should the green flag of Ireland be displayed in hostility to the Stars and Stripes, or to the flag of the Southern Confederacy, whatever that is? Even supposing that Irishmen ought to be forgiven to do battle of either side, yet it is as Americans, as adopted citizens of America, they do so—not as Irishmen. Why oppose the green flag of Ireland to the risk of being cut down or captured by North or South. That should be kept until it can lead Irishmen against the enemies of Ireland."

Here upon the New York correspondent of the Dublin Morning News responded thus:

"Who are the patriots in your beautiful city whom the accomplished Dublin correspondent of the Irish American says are 'annoyed' at the report that green flags are borne in the battle-field by the armed Irish of the North and those of the South? Who, indeed, carry be who hang their heads, if not for shame at least with vexation, because of the valor displayed by Thomas Francis Meagher on the one side, and James Mitchel on the other, under Irish flags, at Bull Run? From an American point of view, I freely admit, it is sensational that one Irish flag of the North should have to cross bayonets with the Irish flag of the South; but what have your 'patriots' to do with that? We Irish, North or South, do not cause the war, we asked long ago to be let fight England on the San Juan and other encroachments of her, and if we had been allowed there would have been an end to secession civil war to-day. Yet, all that is not sufficient for your 'patriots' in Dublin, who, from their people, amongst whom we have had free intercourse, are fighting

"Instead of objecting to the carrying of green flags, I view it favorably. To us, that flag is a powerful incentive to loyalty and gallant deeds, and these deeds, by it, are commemorated for the glory of Ireland. While their Motherland is down the Irish in America owe it to themselves, and to her, to show that they are worthy descendants of their warlike sires—to themselves, because they have been by proscriptive factions in America reproached for their ignorance and unfitness for republican freedom; and to her, because it shows them in the pool of danger, facing death under her old flag, learning the use of arms, so that they can be of use to her in the hour of trial, and hoping that their deeds may be an incentive to their brothers at home. Were Ireland opulent and free, she ought to be, now that her sons in America would fight under their own flag, and while she is poor and her sons outcasts, they will rap with the green. If our Irish soldiers were mixed up in regimental companies with Teutons and Saxons, no vilorous exploit of theirs would be recorded, but, distinguished by their flag, their valor will be known.

"Your patriots' annoyance at the Irish flag being borne by Irishmen in the battle-field against Irishmen is not to be wondered at, when we find Irishmen, and noble in their own subscribing to the war, before the world's gaze? Nor let you imagine that the Irish flag of the South is captured, would be desecrated by a Northern Irish regiment; no more would that of the Northern, if captured, be by the Southern Irish; on the contrary, whoso be the captors, if Irish, that flag will be honored. Could you say so much in Ireland to-day, even amongst your 'patriots'?"

John Mitchel, as you will have seen, coincides with this latter is unable to pay honest debts—it is far and honorable to face creditors and the world with an avowal of the fact. This is precisely the position of Sacramento, and it is honorable in her part to admit her total inability now to pay her public debt, principal or interest, and to renew her determination to do so as soon as she is in a condition to discharge those obligations. No other course is left her, and her citizens will be forced to take the responsibility."

[Continued from first page.]

The greatest distress falls upon the poorer class, who lived in low quarters of the town, and in frail tenements. Few of the merchants have extensive material losses, their fronts on Front street, South & Co., are probably the heaviest sufferers—their loss being not less than $20,000. At Bigelow was rather I street or the J street levee disturbed by the waters. The vast accumulation of water above the town caused now a mile or more of the Sacramento Valley Railroad below Brighton, and communication at this writing is cut off with Lisbon.

The hereinbefore rumored loss of life is confirmed. A teamster was seen struggling in the water at the head of J street, and from the levee he said could reach him. A man, intoxicated, fell into the water near the corner of Fourth and I streets, which at that point was nearly six feet deep, but was rescued with great difficulty.

Our informant states the citizens are actively engaged in disconnecting elevators, houses, and frame, believe that they will soon recover from the effects of this last disaster.

The family of Dr. Hammond, late Senator, who occupied a house on the lower part of the levee, are said have been missing since yesterday morning. It is believed that, should as is this disaster, the damage done to property will not exceed $50,000.

MARYSVILLE.

Marysville suffers greatly by the freshet. The Appeal says: Marysville is now slowly emerging from a flood, more disastrous and extensive in character than ever before which has been known since the place has been settled by white people. The natives say, and there seems every reason for thinking, but not readily enough to justify the opinion that there would be much of a flood, but by Sunday morning at daylight it was found that the Yuba had backed up into the slough, that all the lower part of the town below E street was in danger, and the flats were fast filling up with water. The rain continued to fall in torrents during all of Sunday, and by night one sheet of water was stretched from the slough almost to Third street—the only making islands of most of the buildings below E street, on both sides of the slough, below Fourth street. All night long of Sunday the rain fell in sheets, and the wind blew furiously, adding to the terrors of those who watched through the night.

About daylight on Monday morning, the outer side wall of J. Eaton's store, on the Plaza, fell with a tremendous crash, the foundation having been completely undermined by the water, which had now risen to such an extent as to cover the whole of that part of the city, except where the street was higher than the adjacent lots. Mr. Eaton's family reside in the upper part of the store, and they were hurried out at once in their night clothes, and taken to the Merchants' Hotel, around the corner, on First street, and in about ten minutes after, to the horror of every one, the floors of that building gave way, and a great portion of the interior of the hotel was precipitated in a ruin, the whole of the cellar supports being suddenly cut out by an immense body of water which rushed in. Then the interior of all the stores on the upper side of First street, around the corner to Jennison & Elwell's, on the Plaza, fell one after another. The two-story brick row-ning, and numerous citizens went to the rescue with teams and skills, and began taking people and goods to places of safety.

From the sheep ranch of Grazier Bros. & Co., a large number of sheep were lost, valued at ten or twelve thousand dollars, and a large lot of cattle belonging Glazier & Thompson, are supposed to be lost from a ranch in Sutter county. The heaviest losses in town, were of course, the losses to the dealers on the Plaza and First street, near the Merchants' Hotel, H. E. Brewster, L. H. Babb, Leonce & Elwell, J. L. Eaton, and others are heavy losers, their goods being precipitated in heavy piles into the muddy lare filled with water. The losses of the boarders and the lessees of the Merchants' Hotel are also considerable, valuable furniture, pianos, clothing, cash and small valuables being involved in an inextricable wreck, smashed and wet, though by great exertions, many articles were saved. The loss falls very heavily on small property holders in the northern end of the town, where many small houses were torn down by the strong current from their foundations and carried off beyond recovery, their unfortunate owners, literally homeless and houseless, barely escaping, in some instances, with their lives. On Ninth street, below H, Hudson, Willey & Co. had a great quantity of lumber, which was floated off, though some of it was saved by being boomed between the houses at the end of Second street. Williams Co's flouring mills were filled with water up to three or four inches on the main floor, where all the flour was stored, and the loss of gardens, fences, cut houses and small sheds is scarcely calculable now.

Over the valley south of Marysville, which is lower land than that north of the city, the flood extends for several miles, till it reaches the first swell of the foothills, where it takes off in numerous sloughs, most of which are impassible to teams and horsemen, some being raging torrents. This part of the valley was submerged very suddenly, and to a greater depth than has been know since 1850. All the bottom-land farms are flooded, and many were stripped of all the stock upon them. Forty horses were swept from Hedges' ranch, besides a large number of cattle and hogs. Mr. Hedges' house stands upon a high knoll, which is now an island, the water filling the cellar. Numbers of hogs were drowned on Low's ranch. Where Feather River sweeps past Elica, stock of every kind could be seen yesterday constantly passing down the stream, some alive and struggling, and bellowing or squealing for life. The flood was also very destructive in game. Hares and rabbits have been destroyed by thousands.

Very few details of the extent of damage caused by the flood in Placer, Amador, Sutter, Butte and other counties, have been received, though it known to warrant the belief that great loss of property and life has occurred. We have intelligence from Long Bar, Birch's Bar, Stanley's, and Smith's, and from all these places the work is of a most distressing character. At Long Bar a large number of Chinamen were drowned, and some are known as fifty and at Sand Flat an entire settlement were drowned, the poor fellows climbing into the

BOOTS AND SHOES.

WE HAVE THEM,

Everybody Knows It!

HOLCOMBE BROS.

SELL THE BEST GOODS.

And have the Largest Assortment in San Francisco of

BOOTS & SHOES,

NEW OPERAS!

Sole Agents of California for

WEED'S, NEW YORK, CELEBRATED

OPERA GAITERS

—AND—

BALMORALS,

THE ONLY GENUINE ARTICLES IN THIS CITY.

Beaker's Philadelphia Quilted Boots,

WILL RETAIL THE

Quilted Soles for.....$11 00
Half Double Soles.....9 00
New York Quilted Boots.....8 00

AND ALL OTHER GOODS OF PHILADELPHIA MAKE IN PROPORTION.

Received by every steamer a new style of Military Riding & Walking Boots — Farmers' and Miners';

—ALSO—

WILL RETAIL THEM AT

LESS THAN COST AND CHARGES

AN IMMENSE ASSORTMENT OF

Ladies', Misses', Boys' and Youth's

Long Leg Rubber Boots,

FOR THE RAINY SEASON.

HOLCOMBE BROTHERS'

STORES—2 STORES.

Uptown Store—Corner of Washington and Kearny streets.

Down-town Store—Corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

HOLCOMBE BROTHERS.

20 DOZEN

GENTS' QUILTED BOTTOM BOOTS.

JUST ARRIVED PER "UNCLE SAM."

—ALSO—

A CHOICE LOT OF GENTS'

PATENT LEATHER CLOGS.

Double Sole Hunting Boots, Shoes and Gaiters.

For the Rainy Season.

LADIES' "BALMORALS,"

IN EASY STYLES;

DOUBLE SOLE GAITERS,

BUTTON AND CONGRESS;

OPERA GAITERS,

LACE, BUTTON AND CONGRESS

THE GREATEST VARIETY TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.

MISSES' AND CHILDREN'S

WINTER GOODS,

OF EVERY STYLE AND MAKE;

Boys' and Youths' Pegged Boots, Gaiters and Shoes;

GENTS' EMBROIDERED VELVET AND CLOTH SLIPPERS.

J. S. DOLE & CO.

NORTH-WEST

Corner Montgomery and Pine Streets.

M. GUERIN,

Begs to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has just received from L. Bukert and C. Jeffert, the Largest Assortment of

BOOTS, SHOES & GAITERS,

Ever offered for sale in the city, at the Lowest Possible Prices, at his old stand,

Corner Commercial & Battery sts,

SIGN OF THE BARNUM'S BOOT.

He also keeps on hand a general assortment of every variety of PEGGED BOOTS, SHOES and GAITERS, which he will sell low for Cash.

M. GUERIN.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HAYES' PARK PAVILION.

PROMENADE CONCERT

EVERY WEEK,

To be followed by

A GRAND BALL,

With a very LARGE QUADRILLE, under the direction of Mr. CHRIS. ANDRES.

Admission.....$1 Each.

For the better Accommodation of the Public,

THE CARS

Will run direct from the corner of Third street, HAYES' PARK from a quarter to 8 o'clock each night, which will return at HALF-PAST ONE o'clock in the morning.

Refreshments of all kinds, and of the best quality, provided at all times—Sundays as well as other days.

The Bar will be well supplied with the choicest Wines always in attendance.

Private Parties, Balls, Festivals, Soirees, &c., can be accommodated at the shortest notice, at reasonable charges.

Also, a Fine Band of Music will be in attendance every evening, from 7 to 11 o'clock, and on Sundays from 2 to 5 and 7 to 11 o'clock P. M.

Omnibuses will leave the corner of Third and Market streets, every half hour, from 7 A. M. to 12 P. M., and from 1 to 6 P. M., and every hour from 12 to 1 P. M.

Fare, 25 cents.

Single Tickets, 50 cents.

Children, half price.

Season Tickets, $5 00.

Admitting a Lady and Gentleman to all the Balls and Concerts during the season.

Season Tickets for Children, $2 50.

Admitting a Child to all the Concerts during the season.

Season Tickets can be had at the Office of the Pavilion, on the corner of Third and Market streets, and at the Music Store of Sherman & Hyde, Montgomery street, between Pine and Bush streets.

Season Tickets, from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M. daily, at the Office of the Pavilion.

Season Tickets will not be transferable, nor admit more than one person.

Any person using or presenting a Season Ticket not purchased of J. PAYSANT, M. D. or W. H. IRWIN, M. D., will be prosecuted.

We, the undersigned, having had ample opportunity of witnessing the performances of the Pavilion, cheerfully recommend it to the attention of the public, as a place where ladies and gentlemen can spend an evening with pleasure and profit.

Mayor Jas. Van Buren, Chief Justice Geo. H. Bell, Judge of the Twelfth District Court, Judge Baldwin, Judge Hoffman, Judge Shafter, Judge Norton, Judge Dwinelle, Judge Hall, Judge Sawyer, Judge Ogden Hoffman, Judge Crockett, Judge Field, Judge Levy, Judge Heydenfeldt, Judge Murray, Judge Mellus, Judge Shattuck, Judge Wallace, Judge Lake, Judge Baldwin, Judge Campbell, Judge Hardy, Judge Morrison, Judge Hastings, Judge Lake, Judge Hall McAllister, Judge Sanderson, Judge Wilson

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

It was a clear frosty Christmas Eve. Nead I mention the date when I say that Father Christmas came upon us with a deep gloom over his usually cheerful old features; that he wore a mourning wreath instead of his holly and mistletoe; and that the nation was borne down by grief so deep and so universal, that it was rather a time of great sorrow than of our great festival? The wound is yet too deep to necessitate reminding my readers of the troubled times through which we have passed.

Still it was Christmas, and a merry one too, with many, though the eye that sparkled with joy at the greeting of dear long absent friends, sparkled also with tear-drops for the loss of the good departed one. It was a strange admixture of festivity and sorrow.

So much for the date of my story: now for the scene. I shall have little trouble in making this familiar to my readers. They are all doubtless acquainted with the little Gothic edifice called Woodbine Villa, in the pleasant suburb of ———, adjoining the thriving town of ———. Of course they also know that it is a snug, comfortable, elegant little crib; and knowing all this, there is not the least pretence in the world for the elaborate description of the place which I had originally intended giving.

But, being an old acquaintance of Mr. Sharpthorne's, I probably know more about the inmates of Woodbine Villa than most people. I am a privileged party there, and have played my part so well that I am the family confidant. I go there sometimes to be amused, and they all rush to amuse me. If I am in trouble, little Lucy lays aside her work and soothes with words of kindness; that always fall sweetly from her pretty lips. If I am ill-tempered, which is often the case, she tells me comic little stories of her madcap tricks since last we parted; and, however uncouth I may be, she is sure to gain her end, and I laugh heartily at her drollery. Then she sings me her pretty songs, and after my ill-humor is thoroughly evaporated she confides in me her own troubles and crosses in her love affairs. Even old Sharpthorne himself retains when I appear upon his threshold, gives me as hearty a welcome as he is capable of giving, and tells me lively anecdotes of his queer clients—for Sharpthorne is a lawyer.

Lucy is in love with Ernest, and he with her. Sharpthorne does not seem to see it in the same light, and shakes his head ominously. They are an excellent pair are Lucy and Ernest, and I long to see them settle down comfortably; but Sharpthorne knows the world, and has better prospects in view for both of them. Ernest is his nephew, and a young member of the profession.

All the requisite preparations had been made for Christmas, and Lucy had superintended them. I was invited to spend all my spare time with them, and had arrived on this eventful Christmas Eve.

"It is strange you have not heard from your aunt Straightface, Lucy," said Sharpthorne; and as he spoke there was a knock at the door, and the servant announced a hamper.

We made an attack upon the package, and very soon a fine goose was dragged forth before the admiring gaze of the family circle.

Sharpthorne was deeply engaged in the perusal of a law magazine. I observed a comical expression as he turned his acute features towards us—he expressed an opinion that an unpleasant odor pervaded the atmosphere of the apartment, and he called upon us for an explanation.

Sharpthorne was right. As soon as the hamper was opened, a most offensive odor made us recoil from the object we had been so ready to drag from its place of concealment.

Sharpthorne was brave, and he advanced towards the hamper, but he, too, was forced to retreat with his handkerchief applied to that handsome Grecian nose of his, which was the most prominent feature of his knowing face.

As to the best course for us to pursue, there was none of us quite certain. We were unanimous in the opinion that the goose was too high for our eating; but how to dispose of it?

"I have it!" said Sharpthorne suddenly. "There's my friend Gravesbrook—he says I owe him a goose, and he shall have one!" So the goose was sent to Gravesbrook.

Gravesbrook was one of Sharpthorne's most dreaded rivals in the profession. A cunning man and shrewd, always alive to his own interest, with little respect for that of others.

Scarcely had the goose been dispatched when a little three-cornered note, addressed to Lucy, was brought to light from the debris of the package. It was strange we had not searched for it before. It ran thus:

Dear Lucy: I have sent you as a Christmas present "goose with golden eggs." You will find secreted in it a check on my bankers for $1800, which little sum you and Ernest may find useful when you commence housekeeping.

Your affectionate aunt,

EUPHEMIA STRAIGHTLACE.

"We were thunderstruck. If we had been puzzled to find a way to dispose of the treasure, we were doubly perplexed to ascertain a means of getting it back.

"That I should have sent it to Gravesbrook of all other men!" said Sharpthorne, in the agony of despair; "he would be the last to give up the money."

"Then what a goose you were to send it!" said I, trying to be merry; but Sharpthorne heeded me not, doubtless thinking the matter too serious to be laughed at.

"I have it!" said Sharpthorne, suddenly starting from a reverie, and throwing out his arms with a melo-dramatic air: "I have it!" and without waiting to explain what he had, he seized his hat, and was gone; while the sound of his sharp voice was still ringing in our ears.

I and Lucy sat down by the cosy fireside, and talked about this little comedy and its probable denouement. Then Lucy told me how much she loved her incomparable Ernest; and how terribly she feared her hard-hearted sire would never relent; and how she more than half thought he would force her to accept the addresses of that old fogy Fiascem, "the horrid old thing," who had no pretension whatever to the honor, except his long and well-filled purse. In this way an hour glided by pleasantly.

There was a hurried step in the passage, the door flew suddenly open, and Sharpthorne entered—but excited and in tatters, but still with a triumphant smile upon his usually calm face: and with—yes, we all saw it at a glance—the identical goose under his arm!

We dissected it. It was a very disagreeable operation, now that I come to reflect upon it; especially so as it was unsuccessful; still we set about the task cheerfully, and accomplished it with the most minute care. But the check was not to be found.

"He is a deep old file, that Gravesbrook," said Sharpthorne, as we sat at the supper table that same evening; "but I will be a match for him yet." And thus consoling himself, Sharpthorne relapsed into silence.

It was a beautiful Christmas day, and we were up early. I and Lucy had a pleasant walk before breakfast.

We returned, and found a letter had arrived for Lucy. When we saw its hand writing, we were most anxious to know its contents; and, supposing the reader to be equally interested, I will not keep him long in suspense:

"Dear Lucy: When I sent you my Christmas offering of a goose a fortnight since, I told you I had placed in it a check for $1500. I intended doing so, but on reflection thought it would not be safe, and have delayed sending it until now, that you might receive it on Christmas Day. Your affectionate aunt,

EUPHEMIA STRAIGHTLACE."

So then we were all sold on the evening before, and our excitement had been about nothing.

Sharpthorne was in a lively temper all day, and gave us a vivid description of his visit to Gravesbrook after he had left us so precipitately, in search of the goose. His first act was to procure a fresh goose —the fattest, the plumpest, the tenderest that could be obtained. This he took to Gravesbrook, apologized for his blunder in sending the other, and proposed an exchange. To this proposal Gravesbrook shook his head suspiciously.

"I tell you," said the first man of law, "the goose is mine. Why do you refuse to give it up?"

"Because," said his confrere, "you are so anxious to get possession of it." There is more in the goose than you would have me think."

Each watched the other keenly. Both made a rush at the goose, and a terrible struggle ensued—which ended, as the reader will have guessed, in Sharpthorne's getting the best of it.

Little more remains to be told. It is rumored that the wealthy Fiascem has made some unlucky speculations of late. This may or may not be true; at any rate, I have observed that Sharpthorne does not appear anxious that Lucy should favor his suit, and I have some authority for saying that Ernest's star of good luck is in the ascendant.

We learn from the L'Amide l'Ordre that Monsieur James Cox, of Waterford, and Monsieur Emile de Becquevort de Chatelet, both students of the Collège de la Paix, have passed with eclat their examination for admission to the Mining College of Liege. Mr. James Cox obtained the eighth place of fifty-nine aspirants. We understand that Mr. Cox, who is a son of Pierce Cox, of this city, obtained first place in mathematics, and would have stood much higher were it not that the Frenchmen with whom he competed had a greater knowledge of their own language.—Waterford Mail.

[By Overland Mail.]

LETTER FROM ARCHBISHOP M'HALE

The following letter from his Grace the Most Rev. Archbishop of Tuam, appears in the Dublin Freeman's Journal:

I have been favored with your letter conveying the request of the committee for the National statue to O'Connell to be permitted to have my name added to those of its members. I would have acknowledged it last week, were it not that I was engaged in attending the boards of the Colleges of Maynooth and Paris.—Now, only returned from those meetings, I take the earliest opportunity of conveying my views on this very important subject. I am invited, it appears, to be associated and to co operate with the committee on the two distinct grounds set forth in the following resolution, adopted on the 13th October by the Dublin Conference:

"Resolved, That the time has arrived when a National Monument to commemorate the services of O'Connell, as the advocate of civil and religious liberty, and as the emancipator of the Catholic people of these realms, may be erected in the metropolis of his native land, with the general approval and co operation of all who value the sacred principles of which he was the greatest and most successful champion."

It would have been more respectful to the character of O'Connell, as well as to the public, whose co-operation is sought, and more conducive, too, to the success of the movement, that the committee should forbear from such a restrictive and partial resolution, and take the opinion of the country at large respecting the significnes of the statue to be erected to his memory. It was thus he was in the habit of acting on those important occasions when foreign religious interests of the native nation were engaged. By means of great aggregate meetings, representing the city and the country, he collected and embodied the free and honest opinions of the people. It was not by a small committee, composed of a few persons in Dublin, and holding exclusive opinions, that O'Connell succeeded in achieving emancipation. By such he was often more thwarted than assisted; and it was only when he rallied round him the sound portion of the metropolis, as well as the provinces, that O'Connell entered on that glorious career which won a great and still imperfect emancipation, and which would have crowned it by making Ireland a nation once more, had he not been opposed by some of the men now so loud in favor of Emancipation, but whose fathers were more fiercely opposed to him in his labors for that measure—verifying the saying that the children of the persecution still denounce the prophets whom their fathers have killed.

Why, then, the design to invidiously exclude that distinguished portion of O'Connell's life in which he labored most for the service of Ireland, and in which he most conspicuously displayed the impartiality of his regard for the interests of all classes, Protestant as well as Catholic, by his endeavors to restore his country to the dignity of a nation, of which it had been stripped by fraud and coercion? I want not from the partial admirers of O'Connell, who relish one portion of his life but dislike the other, to sanction any resolution by which their honest opinions would be compromised. Nor should they, on the same principle of equity, demand or expect from you or me, or the great body of the Catholic clergy and people of Ireland, who were O'Connell's strenuous supporters, our assent to a resolution that would compromise our convictions, implying, as it does, not only the past impolicy of agitating that question, but, by an obvious construction, implying, too, its total abandonment and the future acquiescence of the country on that fatal measure.

Let the committee, then, leave O'Connell such as he lived to the close of his career, and such as the truth of history will portray him. Let them not, in deference to any party, reduce to an arbitrary scale his ample form, or contract it to the littleness of mere political fashions his colossal and national dimensions. If they do, they will not have that universal support on which they calculate, and which O'Connell's memory deserves.—Though the success of the statue up to this time, which is owing to your zealous and energetic exertions, is a guarantee that it will not be left unfinished, the committee will fall in another way, by imprudently making it disproportionate to its magnificent destination.

As for myself, well knowing O'Connell's sincere aspirations to restore its nationality to Ireland, and the epitaph he was most anxious to have inscribed on his tomb, I cannot be a party to any resolution to ignore on any monument of his this most striking feature of his character. Having fully and candidly, and with as much brevity as I could, explained to the public, through this reply to your letter, my sentiments, I can now consistently state that, provided the statue be not altogether an anti-repeal or anti-national symbol, I shall cheerfully forward my own personal subscription towards commemorating the gigantic efforts of the man whose sincere friendship I shared, who had my co-operation when active, and whose remains I attended among thousands, with deep regret, to his grave. As to any further co-operation or appeal to the poor oppressed people for their pence, who have as yet reaped but little benefit from Emancipation, and whose unparalleled sufferings are unheeded or derided even by those who exclusively monopolize the fruits of his toil, this will entirely depend on the determination of the committee, either to cut down and deface the bold figure and noble lineaments of the original, or to leave it unimpaired in all the majesty and vigor of its genuine national proportions. Believe me, my dear Dr. Gray, your faithful servant,

† JOHN,
Archbishop of Tuam.

JOHN MARTIN ON THE AMERICAN WAR.

The following letter, dated "Kilbroney, Rostrevor, Nov. 5," from John Martin, Esq., the well known Irish Patriot, is published in the Dublin Nation.

My name has been mentioned in your paper of last Saturday as that of a sympathiser with the Southern States, in the war which is at present raging in America. I am a sympathiser with the South. And since the fact is now publicly stated, I desire, with your kind permission, to say a few words by way of explaining and defining my sympathy.

Both parties are our kindred, our friends, our benefactors. Ireland has no quarrel with either, but is bound to both by the strongest ties of affection and interest. The Irish race has contributed largely to the peopling of the Southern as well as of the Northern States; and the Irish in America, like all other American citizens, have to take part in their war with the States of which they happened to be residents. The most honored and trusted of our political exiles are upon opposite sides, Mitchel is with the South, Meagher with the North. Williams and Doheny have died since the war broke out, the one a soldier of the South, the other leaving his sons in arms for the North. Those noble Irish hearts, now cold in American graves, surely both of them burned with the most intense love for Ireland.

In short, it is a war between States and populations who are all allied to us by blood, who are all entitled to our eternal gratitude by the munificent charity with which they strove to feed our people when starving under the English rule, who have all constantly afforded a friendly refuge to our people when driven from their native country by the curse of that rule, who have oft shown pity for our sufferings under a foreign yoke, and given sympathy and encouragement to our aspirations after independence. To a mere Irish patriot, the honor and prosperity of North and of South are equally dear. What a spectacle for him—the North and the South contending against each other as the deadliest of enemies! If he feels that his voice can have no influence over the combatants, he may well be silent, while, like The O'Donoghue, he gazes upon the fratricidal conflict "with streaming eye."

But though such considerations as these have hitherto withheld me from any public declaration as to the right and wrong in this unhappy war, they have not prevented me from the free expression of my sentiments among my friends, and in conversation. And latterly I have begun to doubt the propriety of keeping silence while strenuous efforts are being made by several persons to represent all the true Nationalists of Ireland, as partisans of the North, and to prove that the hopes of our national cause depend upon the success of the North in this war.

It was, therefore, with a feeling of relief that I read your article of last Saturday and the letter of your correspondent who signs himself "An Irish-American." At all events, let the truth be known. All true Irish Nationalists are not partisans of the North in this war. I do not believe that a majority of them are partisans of the North. Certainly, I am not. I desire and hope that the North may never succeed in its attempt to subjugate the South. I sympathise with my whole heart with the people of the South defending their homes and their liberty against the invading armies of those who were lately their fellow citizens, to whom they have done no wrong, and of whom they desire nothing but to be allowed to depart in peace from a political partnership which they dislike. Resisting hostile invasion, fighting to save themselves from the yoke of a conqueror, the people of the South are defending it against tremendous odds, with such gallantry, endurance, devoted patriotism, heroic virtue, as have never been surpassed in the whole history of wars of independence. A most noble people has there appeared to take its place among the nations, and, springing to arms in defence of its rights, has at once presented before the world a national army so good and beautiful that the proudest of empires might emulate it. In courage and discipline that make up for inferiority of numbers and of arms, in the devotedness of the women, in the lofty spirit of national honor that animates a unanimous population, the South possesses defences that entitle her to the victory. But the victory is not always to the righteous cause, nor to the best and bravest. It may be that the greatly superior resources of the Northern States will enable them in time to exterminate the defenders of the South, and to subjugate the country. I hope not. But victors or vanquished, my sympathies are wholly with the people of the South.

I find that I have enlarged so much in the mere expression of my individual feelings concerning the war between North and South, that I must not attempt in this letter to argue the question between them, nor to discuss the bearings of the war upon our Irish national policy. Indeed, it may suffice to say, that I agree in everything with your leading article, and also with the letter of "An Irish-American."

THE "SAVAGE IRISH."

We (London Universal News,) can vouch for the genuineness of the following letter. The writer is a Protestant and an Englishman, and moreover, one who has made no unimportant figure in the higher walks of literature:

"I am a Briton, more, I am a Protestant; more than these I have been taught to abhor the Pope and hate the Irish. I was brought up to all these things in a manner, and my mother had an abhorrence of surlet and patronized green.

On summing up accounts I have asked myself the question, why do I hate the Irish? I suppose for the same reason and on the same ground as we hate our benefactors.

One night about thirty years ago I was starving in the streets of London, and found myself confederate of a homeless gang in field-lane. It is God's truth. I have nothing whatever in that act that confers the property in the Green upon the owners (still less upon the residents) of houses in Stephens' Green raised to the 1st, whatever may have been intended by the framers of the act, and it is not easy to see how any one could be prejudiced or injured by admitting the public as to St. James' Park, in London. The Duke of Buccleuch had a lease, and there was not between a savage, this Irishman, tenants, some agency, he procured me employment at the following morning. I had not known the luxury of a towel for days before. My savage, moreover, treated me as a share of his herring. I forget whether it was a red or salted one. Ranger lost critical. My savage, moreover, loud the means of treating me to a pot of 'and-'af, and ever since I have liked thetrish savage. He is brisk now and the with a wild notion of right and wrong in his unhappy war, they have not prevented me from the free expression of my sentiments among my friends, and in conversation. And latterly I have began to doubt the propriety of keeping silence while strenuous efforts are being made by several persons to represent all the true Nationalists of Ireland, as partisans of the North, and to prove that the hopes of our national cause depend upon the success of the North in this war.

It was, therefore, with a feeling of relief that I read your article of last Saturday and the letter of your correspondent who signs himself "An Irish-American." At all events, let the truth be known. All true Irish Nationalists are not partisans of the North in this war. I do not believe that a majority of them are partisans of the North. Certainly, I am not. I desire and hope that the North may never succeed in its attempt to subjugate the South. I sympathise with my whole heart with the people of the South defending their homes and their liberty against the invading armies of those who were lately their fellow citizens, to whom they have done no wrong, and of whom they desire nothing but to be allowed to depart in peace from a political partnership which they dislike. Resisting hostile invasion, fighting to save themselves from the yoke of a conqueror, the people of the South are defending it against tremendous odds, with such, gallantry, endurance, devoted patriotism, heroic virtue, as have never been surpassed in the whole history of wars of independence. A most noble people has there appeared to take its Professor to work upon the vulgar with fine ore, is like attempting to hew blocks with razors.

ONE BY ONE.

One by one the sands are flowing,
One by one the moments fall;
Some are coming, some are going,
Do not strive to grasp them all.
One by one thy duties wait thee,
Let thy whole strength go to each;
Let no future dream elate thee,
Learn thou first what these can teach.

One by one (bright gifts from heaven)
Joys are sent us here below;
Take them readily when given,
Ready, too, to let them go.
One by one thy griefs shall meet thee,
Do not fear an armed band;
One will fade as others greet thee,
Shadows passing through the land.

Do not look at life's long sorrow;
See how small each moment's pain;
God will help thee for to-morrow,
Every day begin again.
Every hour that flows so slowly,
Has its task to do or bear;
Luminous the crown, and holy,
If thou set each gem with care.

Do not linger with regretting,
Or for passing hours despond;
Nor, thy daily toil forgetting,
Look too eagerly beyond.
Hours are golden links, God's token,
Reaching heaven; but one by one
Take them, lest the chain be broken
Ere the pilgrimage be done.

Stephen's Green.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

NEW GOODS.

W. F. BURKE,

IS RECEIVING BY

EVERY STEAMER

THE CHEAPEST

AND BEST ASSORTED STOCK

— OF —

Ladies', Misses' & Children's

GAITER SHOES, &c.

TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.

NEW STYLE OF

BALMORALS,

OPERA GAITERS, Congress & Button,

Gent's Hunting Boots,

ARMY BOOTS,

FINE SEWED & PEGGED BOOTS,

BOYS AND YOUTHS'

BOOTS AND GAITERS.

W. F. BURKE,

Corner of Pine and Montgomery streets,

no26 1m Over Bank Exchange

INFORMATION WANTED.

Information wanted of John and James Hogan, who left Newport, county Tipperary, Ireland, about ten years ago; supposed to be in this city or State. Address Martin Keogh, No. 10, Anthony street, near Mission, San Francisco.

Information wanted of Roger Conlon, who left about four months since, the ranch of James Nash, on Bear River. Please address James Conlon, his brother, San Francisco Post Office.

Richard Kelly, a native of Kingston, county Dublin. Last heard from in 1853. Address Rev. Father Lurgan, Placerville.

Information will be thankfully received at this office, or by Rev. Father Heaney, O.S.D., Benicia, of John Heaney, who left this city on the ship Adelaide, Captain Edward Wakeman, in February or March, 1850. Any person who may possess knowledge of his present residence will confer a great favor by complying with this request.

Information wanted of Timothy Joseph McCauley, a carpenter by trade, who has been an inmate of the Insane Asylum at Stockton, and suddenly left there about six weeks ago, since which time nothing has been heard of him. He is about 5 feet 8 inches high, has dark hair, high forehead, an upper tooth missing, and is about 35 years of age. Any information of his whereabouts will be thankfully received by his wife, Margaret McCauley, Sherwood Place, between Mions and Hunt streets, San Francisco.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

NEW GOODS.

W. F. BURKE,

IS RECEIVING BY

EVERY STEAMER

THE CHEAPEST

AND BEST ASSORTED STOCK

— OF —

Ladies', Misses' & Children's

GAITER SHOES, &c.

TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.

NEW STYLE OF

BALMORALS,

OPERA GAITERS, Congress & Button,

Gent's Hunting Boots,

ARMY BOOTS,

FINE SEWED & PEGGED BOOTS,

BOYS AND YOUTHS'

BOOTS AND GAITERS.

W. F. BURKE,

Corner of Pine and Montgomery streets,

no26 1m Over Bank Exchange

REMOVAL.

HOLCOMBE BROTHERS,

(Down Town Store,)

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS OF

BOOTS AND SHOES!

BOOTS AND SHOES!

BOOTS AND SHOES!

Have removed from Sacramento street to the Corner Sansome and Commercial streets,

(Formerly occupied by J. M. Stockdale & Co.)

And having consolidated all our Wholesale Stock to this Store, are determined to sell goods at Retail LESS than Wholesale Prices.

This was for Goods for individual use will profit by calling. All Goods we sell are warranted as represented or no sale. We have unsurpassed facilities to procure the Latest Styles by every steamer.

Also Stores, the public we cannot be undersold.

N. B.—No Paper Soles or damaged Goods offered at Retail.

10,000 pairs Philadelphia Sewed Boots, @ $4 00 per pair.
25,000 each Ladies Bal. and Bal Lasting Gaiters, @ $2 50.

TWO STORES TO ASSORT FROM.

Corner Washington and Kearny streets, opposite the Plaza,

And corner Sansome and Commercial streets

no26 3m HOLCOMBE BROTHERS.

CROCKERY WARE.

REID & BROOKS,

640 Sansome street, between Washington and Merchant,

SAN FRANCISCO,

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

CROCKERY, GLASS WARE,

LAMPS, PLATED WARE,

TABLE CUTLERY, MIRRORS,

AND A VERY VARIETY OF

FANCY GOODS.

no1 1m

SEWING MACHINES.

FOR

A HOLIDAY PRESENT TO A LADY BUY A GROVER & BAKER SEWING MACHINE. Nothing would be more useful or acceptable to the fair recipient.

A

GROVER & BAKER SEWING MACHINE in its light, graceful and pretty table, or elegant, ornamental and useful case, forms at once the most appropriate and desirable gift for a Lady.

HOLIDAY

PRESENTS TO LADIES should be chosen with a view to usefulness as well as ornament. What, then, can be more useful than that which lightens women's labors—more ornamental than that which adorns thousands of homes throughout the land—a GROVER & BAKER SEWING MACHINE?

PRESENT

Your Wife, Daughter or lady friend with GROVER & BAKER SEWING MACHINE. Their complete and perfect pleasure and eager desire to become skillful in its delicate and beautiful operation will satisfy you of the appropriateness of your gift.

BUY

As the most acceptable, and at the same time useful and appropriate present for a lady, a GROVER & BAKER SEWING MACHINE. At no time would such a gift be received with greater pleasure than during the holidays.

A

Moment's reflection will convince all who are undecided in their choice of Gifts for their lady friends, that a GROVER & BAKER SEWING MACHINE would be the choicest, most complete and elegant that could be selected.

GROVER

AND BAKER'S SEWING MACHINES are always eagerly sought after by the Ladies during the Holidays. At this season of the year, the sewing of a family requires much of their attention, and in no way can they be so assisted as by the Sewing Machine.

AND

None would decline their acceptance as a most appropriate Holiday Gift. Make the trial—our word for it, its reception would be hailed as a welcome guest—bringing ease, leisure and health to those whose weary with their never-ending sewing.

BAKER

AND GROVER, or more properly, "Grover & Baker," are names as familiar to the ladies as those of their household, and one of their SEWING MACHINES would be most acceptable to them as a Christmas or New Year Gift.

SEWING

By machinery has become universally popular and Sewing Machines are indeed a "mighty power in the land." Among those offered for public approval, none sustain the enviable reputation of the "GROVER & BAKER." For the Holidays they are most desirable Gifts.

MACHINE

Sewing is divided into two classes—Plain and Ornamental. No Machine is capable of executing successfully and satisfactorily both branches except the GROVER & BAKER, which has special and exclusive advantages, rendering it particularly desired by the Ladies in preference to all others.

R. G. BROWN, Agent,

no26 1m 322 Montgomery st., cor. Sutter.

CARPETS! CARPETS!

NOW LANDING.

Body Brussels Carpets,

VELVET AND TAPESTRY

BRUSSELS CARPETS

ALL NEW STYLES,

THREE-PLY AND INGRAIN CARPETS,

Also, Wide Druggets,

Oil Cloths, Curtain Goods, Cornices, Etc.

Together with a large assortment of

UPHOLSTERY GOODS,

Making our stock the largest and most complete in this city.

Parties in want of the above goods will find our stock desirable, and our prices lower than elsewhere.

KENNEDY & BELL,

n1 3t W. cor Montgomery & California sts., San Francisco

BUSINESS CARDS.

F. S. WENSINGER,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS,

211 (204 No. 113) Front street,

SAN FRANCISCO. no15

JOHN ROACH,

OPTICIAN,

Old No. 111—New No. 113—Washington street, up postto the Post-office,

SAN FRANCISCO.

MANUFACTURER and Importer of Theodolites, Transits and Levels, Chains and Stadia Drawing Instruments, Thermometers, Barometers, Hydrometers, Telescopes, Steam Gauges, Lenses, Microscopes, Glasses for Sea and Mantilla, etc. m21f

N. B. POSTOFFICE BOXES MADE.

FORESTER & MARKS,

DEALERS IN

Groceries, Provisions, &c

No. 61 Commercial st., (204 No.)

Above Front, SAN FRANCISCO.

Ship and Steamboat Stores. j8

ELAM & HOWES,

Wholesale Importers, dealers in

WOOD AND WILLOW WARE, HOUSE-KEEPING GOODS,

Twines, Cordage, Shoe Thread, Nets and Seine Twine, Paper Waste, etc.

No. 81 Clay street, one door from N. W. corner Front

jn18f SAN FRANCISCO.

P. J. DEVINE,

PREMIUM MARBLE WORKS

Cor. of K and Ninth streets, s16-6f SACRAMENTO, Cal.

P. J. DEVINE. C. B. WELLS.

DUGAN & WALL,

FORWARDING AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

CRESCENT CITY.

REAL ESTATE.

CHEAP HOUSES TO LET.

FIRST CLASS HOUSES TO LET for $900 per year, near the north-east corner of Union and Hyde streets.

M. A. BRADY,

n18 311 Commercial street, near Front.

JAMES DALY, MICHAEL HAWKINS.

DALY & HAWKINS,

REAL ESTATE AGENTS AND HOUSE BROKERS,

No. 603 Pine street, one door west of Montgomery,

Rose Building, San Francisco.

CHAS. D. CARTER,

REAL ESTATE AGENT

No. 604 Merchant street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Lots, Dwellings and stores for sale and to lease. CONVEYANCES. Deeds, Leases, Mortgages, Powers of Attorney, Contracts, Agreements, Specifications and all other Legal Documents drawn.

Loans Negotiated.

Real Estate for sale or to lease registered without charge, and open at all times for the inspection of th public. no26-3m

FOR SALE.

THE DOLLAR LOTS, ALSO 50 VARA LOTS AND ACTIVE BLOCKS of the old Mission Land, at the San Jose Railroad, at the WEST END OF FOLSOM street—being laid out into a parcel from the United States.

Office No. 19, third floor of Naglee's Building, at the south-west corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets.

HARVEY S. BROWN.

San Francisco, November 1, 1858.

FOR SALE—A few very choice FIFTY VARA LOTS, situated on the San Jose Railroad, in the immediate vicinity of the new Catholic College.

n17 HARVEY S. BROWN.

FOR SALE.

BUILDING LOTS, in the immediate vicinity of the

New College of St. Mary's, and of the FEMALE ACADEMY to be established in the same locality. Those desirous of residences near institutions such as the, we are sure opportunities for the education of their children are invited, as well as those seeking a PROFITABLE INVESTMENT in SMALL OUTLAY, would do well to examine these lots before purchasing elsewhere.

For particulars apply to the undersigned, No. 19, Naglee's building, or to W. M. HAMILTON, n18 HARVEY S. BROWN.

TO FARMERS.

THERE IS NOW A GOOD OPPORTUNITY FOR parties wishing to make a permanent home in California. In Bridges Fresno County, there are several improved Farms for sale, containing from 160 to 640 acres.

UNSURPASSED IN RICHNESS OF SOIL,

BEAUTY OF LOCATION,

AND HEALTHINESS OF CLIMATE;

With abundance of timber and never-failing Springs and Rivulets; and not liable to overflow.

Farming in this district has been more lucrative than in most other localities. From the proximity to the coast and commodious harbor of Bodega, which is within a few hours' sail of the Market, as well as from the rich and valuable abundance of its Cereal, Grass and Root Crops.

THE POTATOES

Grown on the land offered for sale are well known and appreciated in the Provision and Steamboat, and from the fact that this particular season he cultivated with the same advantages nor in like quantity except in one or two other localities of equal size of in the State, will make these lands valuable, and the purchase at the present time

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

For further information, apply to HENRY IVE PITCHWELL, No. 8 Montgomery Block, San Francisco, or to JAMES O'FARRELL, Bodega, Sonoma Co.

THE TITLE TO THE ABOVE LAND OFFERED FOR SALE IS PERFECT.

There is a Catholic Church at Bodega, adjacent to the same.

no25

Fenian Brotherhood.

THIS SOCIETY meets every TUESDAY Evening, at No. 211 Fermandina Street, opposite Pico's Eagle, Mercer. All respectable Irishmen are cordially invited to be members.

jan12

CLOTHING.

HARVEY M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

(LATE LOCKWOOD & HENDRIE,)

624 Clay st., San Francisco

Have added to their immense stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING,

AND

FURNISHING GOODS,

$30,000 worth of which desirable goods of

ALL THE LATEST STYLES,

To which they invite the attention of the public generally.

We are fully prepared to meet the demands of all, particularly during

THE HOLIDAYS,

And pledge ourselves to sustain the reputation of the house for attention to our patrons.

GOOD GOODS AND LOW PRICES.

d29

T. CANTY,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

HAS REMOVED FROM THE OLD STAND, MONTgomery street near Clay, to the NORTH SIDE of MARKET STREET, a few doors east of Kearny, where he hopes to merit a continuance of the patronage here before bestowed on him.

jn26

B. CURRAN,

Has Opened a

Fine Clothing and Furnishing Goods

ESTABLISHMENT

At No. 214 Montgomery street,

First door, south side of the entrance to

PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,

Where he respectfully invites the attention of Friends, former patrons and the public to his

Well-Selected Stock of Goods,

Consisting f

French and English Cloths, Cassimeres an Vestings,

Selected expressly for the California trade, to which he would call the attention of his former customers and the public.

Also in want of garments made to order, on reasonable terms, and warranted to fit. LATEST FASHIONS, and none wrong. Satisfaction guaranteed, or no sale. Thankful for past favors, I most respectfully solicit a continuance of the same.

B. CURRAN,

n20 214 Montgomery street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FRESH GOODS.

PORTA RICO SUGAR;

PRESERVED TAMARINDS;

BAKERS' COCOA and BROMA;

SCOTCH OAT MEAL;

GUAVA JAM and JELLY;

CITRON and LEMON PEEL;

MOCHA and JAVA COFFEES;

DRY WHITE CODFISH;

YARMOUTH BLOATERS;

BOSTON SMOKED HERRING;

ENGLISH MALT VINEGAR;

BYASS' LONDON PORTER;

ENGLISH ALE;

SPANISH and FRENCH OLIVES;

PURE ORLEAN MOLASSES;

CANARY SEED.

Also, a large assortment of the finest Wines at wholesale or retail, by

HASKELL & CO.,

Grocers and Tea Merchants, no23 1m 84 Montgomery street, opp. Lick House.

WELLER & FISHER,

BUTCHERS',

No. 12 Washington Market.

At this Stand will be found, at all times, as fine Fat Cheese Meats as can be procured in the Market. no19

Brown's Bronchial Troches.
Brown's Bronchial Troches.
Bronchial Troches.
Bronchial Troches.
Brown's Troches.
Brown's Troches.

"Pronounced by the first and best."
REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER.
"I recommend their use to Public Speakers."
REV. E. H. CHAPIN, NEW YORK.
"Great service in subduing Hoarseness."
REV. DANIEL WISE, NEW YORK.
"I have proved them excellent for Whooping Cough."
REV. H. W. WARREN, BOSTON.
"Great benefit to affections of the Bronchial Organs."
DR. J. F. LANE, BOSTON.
"A simple and elegant combination for Coughs, etc."
DR. G. F. BIGELOW, BOSTON.
"Contain no opium or anything injurious."
DR. A. A. HAYES, CHEMIST, BOSTON.
"Very beneficial in clearing the throat when compelled to speak though suffering from cold."
REV. S. J. P. ANDERSON, ST. LOUIS.
"I heartily unite in the above commendation."
REV. M. SCHUYLER, ST. LOUIS.
"A friend having tried many remedies for Asthma with no benefit, found relief from the Troches."
REV. D. LEEDS, FRANKFORT, ILL.

Sold by druggists everywhere, 25 cents per Box.

oct13

M. O'DONNELL, T. C. WALLON,

O'DONNELL & Co.,

FORWARDING, STORAGE,

AND

Commission Merchants.

FIRE-PROOF BUILDING,

Levee.....Opposite the Steamboat Landing

STOCKTON.

WE WILL BE RESPONSIBLE FOR ALL MERchandise consigned to our care, and promptly forward the same to Texas owned by the firm. dec25

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
DECEMBER.
Sunday, 28—Holy Innocents.
Monday, 29—St Thomas, Bishop of Canterbury, Martyr
Tuesday, 30—St Sabinus, Bishop, and companions, Martyrs.
Wednesday, 31—St Sylvester, Pope and Confessor.
Thursday, Jan. 1—Circumcision of our Lord.
Friday, Jan. 2—St. Palgentius, Bishop and Confessor.
Saturday, 3—St. Genevieve, Virgin.

THE MONITOR.
SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DEC. 27, 1862.

Index.
SECOND PAGE—"A Christmas Story," "Letter from Archbishop McHale," "John Martin on the American War," "The Savage Irish."
THIRD PAGE—"One by One," "Stephen's Green," "Marshal Nell on Gen. McClellan."
SIXTH PAGE—"Letter from Dublin," "Commodore Wilkes and the Bermuda Affair," "The Fight in Hyde Park," "Wm. Smith O'Brien," "Triumphs of the Church," "The Dyaffed men," "The Irish Language," "John Morgan and the Monk."

CALIFORNIA AND IRELAND.

Letter from the Archbishop of Dublin.

Right Rev. Doctor O'Connell, Bishop of Marysville, has received the following letter from the Archbishop of Dublin:—

DUBLIN, Oct. 8, 1862.

MY DEAR LORD:—I have received, through the Most Rev. Dr. Allemany, the sum of £368 11, forwarded by your direction, for the relief of the Irish poor. I need scarcely say that I am most grateful to your lordship for your exertions in this case, and that I humbly pray that our Heavenly Father, the protector of the widow and the orphan, may amply reward the generous charity of your flock, and especially of those benevolent societies which have given such liberal contributions.

Unhappily, the state of our poor is still very miserable, and the harvest is so late, a great deal of it being still in the fields, that if weather so moist, that it is to be feared that things will be worse in the Winter. However, we put great trust in the goodness and mercy of God, and we have great reason to be thankful to him for protecting us from the evils of revolution and war, that are now afflicting some of the fairest regions of the world. May God grant peace to all Christian nations, and put an end to the ravages both of war and famine. Your Lordship's devoted servant,

† PAUL CULLEN.

To Right Rev. Dr. O'Connell.

Miss Rahilly, daughter of Mr. Dennis Rahilly, L. A., of Charleville, received the white veil recently, in the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy in that town, taking the name of Mary Gabriel Joseph in religion. The imposing ceremony of her reception was celebrated in the beautiful and richly decorated chapel of the convent, at which the Very Rev. Dr. Croke, P. P. V. G., (uncle of Very. Rev. Canon Croke, V. G., of San Francisco), officiated, assisted by the Rev. T. Leader, C. C. There was a numerous attendance of the clergy and friends of the received on the occasion. Among them were the Very Rev. Pietro Maggiorotto, V. G., San Francisco, California; the Very Rev. Dr. Vincent Grotti, Provincial, both of the order of Passionists; the Very. Rev. Dr. Croke, President St. Coleman's College, Fermoy; the Rev. Edward Moloney, P. P. Elphin; Rev. E. Birmingham, P. P., St. Colman's Well; Rev. Richard Rafter, P. P., Hollybrike; Rev. Thomas Slattery, P. P. Hospital; Rev. Patrick Ryan, C. C., do.; Rev. Robert O'Riordan, P. P., Kilbolane; Rev. Edmond Cotter, P. P., Shandrum; Rev. John Keppel, P. P., Ballyhea; Daniel Cleaehy, D. L.; Councillor Cleaehy, Dennis Rahilly, Jr., Rahilly, Jr., etc.

The Irish American Benevolent Society anxious to further the cause of education, in San Francisco, have determined to give the proceeds of their Annual Ball, to be held on Washington's birth day, to the schools of the Sisters of Presentation, Powell street. The noble ladies who educate the rising youth of the city, have to depend entirely upon the benevolence of the public, for whose benefit, and the greater glory of God, they devote their lives.

Next Wednesday evening, the Annual Ball for the benefit of the Orphan Asylum, on Market street, will be given in Platt's Hall. We have every reason to know that the affair will be conducted in a manner to contribute largely to the pleasure of all who attend. The proceeds of the Ball are to be appropriated for the benefit of an institution, which, of all others in the city, merits the cordial co-operation of the public. We trust Platt's Hall will be largely attended New Year's Eve.

Christmas day was observed very generally in this city. In every direction signs were to be observed of the festive season. Nearly all the stores were closed, and the weather being most pleasant, the streets were filled with pedestrians. The dealers in Christmas articles did a large business. San Francisco had all the appearance of a generally observed holiday.

The Turkish Government has issued a proclamation designed to have the effect of promoting the culture of cotton in Turkey. The Government promises that any person who, within a period of ten years from hence, shall cultivate cotton on any of the waste lands ceded by the State, shall have the product of his culture exempted for five years from taxation; that the roads necessary to enable the cotton to be transported to the sea shall be made or repaired; that machines required for the cultivation shall be exempted from import duty, and there shall be introduced, at the expense of the State, a number of specimen machines and certain quantities of the best seeds. The government also promises to disburse, by lectures and treatise, a knowledge of the subject, and to institute periodical exhibitions, at which the best growths will be rewarded with prizes. We should like very much to know where his Majesty, the Sultan, and Grand Vizier, and all other viceroy, pashas, mullahs, and agas, will be before this same cotton is grown. Probably, in that unpleasant region which the Londoners call "Queen street."

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS IN CALIFORNIA.

On the 24th of September last the President issued a proclamation ordaining that "during the existing insurrection, and as a necessary measure for suppressing the same, all rebels and insurgents, their aiders and abettors, within the United States, and all persons discouraging volunteer enlistments, resisting military drafts, or guilty of any disloyal practice affording aid and comfort to the rebels against the authority of the United States, shall be subject to martial law, and liable to trial and punishment by courts-martial or military commissions." Under this proclamation large numbers of persons were everywhere arrested and thrown into prison. The first who suffered under it were some parties in New York, who had entered into the business of procuring substitutes for drafted men. They were not aware when they commenced that they were doing anything wrong; but providing substitutes was considered by the Government—but from what point of view it would be difficult to make out—to be a discouragement to enlistments, and they were accordingly thrown into prison.

For a time the Government pursued a course more despotic than dared be attempted in Europe. There was nothing that a citizen might do, which could not by the exercise of a little ingenuity be brought under the head of "discouraging enlistments," from a sneeze in public to the purchase of a pig. The people at first bore it all without a murmur, thro' a desire to regard every act of the Government in the most favorable light; but when they beheld arbitrary arrests growing up into a regular system, a reaction took place. Their strenuous objections to such proceedings found voice in every Democratic platform framed last fall in the loyal States. They were uttered, too, in a tone which no wise ruler would disregard. The result has been the issuing of another order discharging from further military restraint all persons who had been arrested for discouraging volunteer enlistments, opposing the draft, or otherwise giving aid and comfort to the enemy in the loyal States; as well as all persons arrested by authority of the military commander or governor in the rebel States, on suspicion of disloyalty—provided they were willing to give their parole to do no act of hostility against the Government of the United States, nor render aid to its enemies. Under this order a general jail delivery has taken place on the other side of the mountains, and a general rejoicing, of course, followed.

The order was carried into effect here by the discharge of the persons for some time confined at Alcatraz. There is one step more which the Government ought to take—namely, to abolish the censorship of the press, and again give the use of the mails to all newspapers. In California especially should this course at once be adopted. Several journals have been suppressed here simply for unfriendly criticisms of the acts of the Government, and nothing more. There would seem to have been no necessity whatever for such excessive rigor. To publish information which might be of advantage to the enemy, would deserve severe punishment; but nothing of that kind can be done in California, for 62 are too remote from the scene of hostilities. It would be utterly impossible for any journal in this State to publish information that might be useful in Richmond. It was, then, for criticisms of the acts of the Government that they were suppressed; but was that a wise mode of proceeding, or is it in any way calculated to repair the evil? The rule which England has established, even in Ireland, is, that to secure a conviction for treason in the case of language, oral or printed, the onus is on the Government to establish that if such language was persisted in, insurrection would probably take place. John Mitchel, for instance, was not arrested until he had worked the people up to fever heat, and an outbreak in Dublin was considered by many to be imminent. It will not be pretended that if the journals suppressed here had continued their tirade against the Government, a rebellion would spring up in loyal California; for that would be contending a power and influence which they never ever claimed for themselves. The Courts and Grand Juries of the several counties are fully adequate to the disposal of any cases of positive treason that may arise. It is a mistake, on the part of the General Government, to suppose that there is no way for the punishment of treason but that which involves the use of the military arm. We have courts, and judges, and public prosecutors. If real treason should manifest itself, at any point, these officials are amply sufficient to take care of it. Out of their hands the matter ought never to have been taken.

The General commanding on this coast has the matter under his control; and should consider the justice and policy of withdrawing his interdict against the few journals that are denied the use of the mails. The Government has seen the necessity of abandoning a course of action by which the liberty of an American citizen was brought to the level of the Parisian in the dark days of 1793. In a brief period the Administration will also see that its policy, concerning the press, is bad in practice; and in theory, antagonistic to the most cherished principles taught by the great men of the Republic. Gen. Wright has now an opportunity of identifying himself with the restoration of principles concerning the press, now unhappily extinct, that must reflect honor on his administration, and be beneficial to the welfare and liberty of the people of California.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER ON McCLELLAN.

Gen. Meagher issued the following address to his Brigade Nov. 19, from Headquarters Irish Brigade, Hancock's Division, Couch's Corps, then before Fredericksburg:

The Brigadier-General considers it expedient officially to inform the brigade that some few officers of his command having recently sent in their resignations, he felt it to be his duty respectfully to withhold his approval of the same.

Being most desirous of having his feelings and intentions in regard to the brigade, fully understood, at this important moment of its history, the Brigadier-General departs, on a partial extent, from the usages of the service, and while he maintains that he is accountable for his official acts and conduct to his superiors in command alone, is self-impressed on this occasion by the friendliest communication from those under him, and of his free accord senders an expression of his desire in relation to the resignations of the officers in question.

Proudly bearing in mind, as he shall ever do in life, the conduct of these officers in not less than eight desperate engagements, the Brigadier-General feels that he would be doing an injustice to them of a grievious character, were he to approve of a proceeding which, under present circumstances would expose them to imputations affecting the reputation which their bravery and chivalry have achieved. For this reason, in the first place, the Brigadier General declined to approve and forward their resignations.

These resignations, the Brigadier-General has reason to believe, were for the most part prompted by the recall of Major-Gen. McClellan from the command of the Army of the Potomac. Unless these officers understand them, they were intended as a signal expression of devotion to that trusted and beloved young General. But devotion to a General, however popular and richly endowed with talents, and by none more highly qualified to attract and bind soldiers to him, ought not to be allowed to intercept for a moment the loyal and intimate relations which should ever unite the soldier to his flag and the citizen to his State.

Commanding a brigade composed of Irish soldiers, the Brigadier-General considers it not out of place to remind them that the great error of the Irish people in their struggle for independent national existence, has been their passionate and blind adherence to an individual, and devotion of to a principle or a cause. Thus for generations their heroic efforts in the right direction have been foiled, and the opportunity, when they should have been continuous, capable and consistent.

The pleading on the public records the resignations referred to, would have renewed in the history of this country, to the disparagement of our race, this fatal error of a nature which is at once so vehement and so weak, so faithful and yet so wayward, so variable in great undertakings, and yet so persistent in those lesser ones which merely concern a chief, a patron, or the favorite political leader of a day. For this reason, also, the Brigadier-General declined to approve and forward the resignations in question. But there was another reason still. At this moment, when the Union army confronts the fierce of the enemy, and a battle of the greatest consequence to the authority and grandeur of the American nation is close at hand, the Brigadier-General holds it to be the sacred duty of every officer of the brigade to appear at the head of his men, and with them generously and heartily share the fortunes of the day.

Our loved and honored comrades—those who carried musket as well as those who carried swords—who died the death of heroes in the swamps and woods before Richmond, from Fair Oaks to Malvern Hill, would turn away their faces from us in their glory and disown us with a parting wave of the hand which in this life did its sworn work so gravely, were they to behold us acting in contradiction of the example they set us, and to furnish as with which they were prodigal of their beaming youth with all its promises, of their matured youth with all its fruits, of their homes, their lives, their very graves beside their kindred—welcoming and challenging, as they did, the death stroke in centuries of disinterestedness and courage.

To stand, then, by the brigade at this moment is a duty which nothing but absolute physical incapacity should, or can, exonerate an officer. Resignations, presented in at such a moment, are tantamount to desertions. They subject the officers to discredit, if not to dishonor in the sturdy ranks. They weaken the military force, and tend emphatically to lie demoralization. They cannot be sanctioned for an instant by any officer having the efficiency or the character of the army at heart. They shall be discountenanced, condemned, rebuked and reprobated, and that in terms of unqualified severity, by the Brigadier-General commanding the Irish Brigade."

The private soldier of the brigade must do his duty. The commissioned officer must do his duty. The Brigadier-General will see to this, and, seeing to it, will exercise a rigorous impartiality; so that between the private and the commissioned officer there shall be no distinction whatever tolerated in the discharge of their respective duties. Indeed, it will be not only expected, but required, that the latter shall be, if possible, more punctual, diligent, and zealous than the former in the fulfillment of his military obligations.

In conclusion, the Brigadier-General proudly declares his conviction that to the overwhelming majority of the officers of the brigade the latter remarks of his cannot, as they do not, have the slightest application. That for disregards, imbeciles and cowards who once held commissions in it, most happily for its well-being, and good name, have been ignominiously sent about their business, and in their disgrace and shame has been punished, strengthened, are exalted.

For his own part, the Brigadier-General will stand by his brigade to the last. So long as Heaven spares his life, he will be true to it, true to its every history, true to its every aspiration, true to its oath, true to the high spirit of it, true to the strict letter of the military law, true to the brighter history, the hopes and expectations of their noble, soldierly old race—the race of the O'Donnells of Spain, the Macmahons of France, the Nugents of Austria, the O'Neils, and Sarsfields. While a shred of the flag that symbolizes this race defies the ravages of the battle, and fifty men be left to hold it high and defiantly in the face of death, the Brigadier-General should to be the with the flag, shall be found standing firm and faithful to its post; and this determination he is confident, animates and fires this moment every true heart in the Irish Brigade.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,
Brigadier-General Commanding.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

La Presse publishes an analysis of the circular addressed by M. Drouyn de Lhuys to the Italian Cabinet. M. de Lhuys explains that the French Cabinet has confined itself to declining the discussion of the Italian circular, and distinctly states that this circular, being in opposition to the constant tradition of French policy in Italy, cannot serve as a basis for discussion. The circular says that the French Minister examines the different phases of the Italian question, and states that the Imperial Government has constantly expressed the firm resolution of preserving Rome against all aggression, and preserving the independence of the temporality of the Pope. M. Drouyn de Lhuys testifies to the loyalty of the Italian Cabinet in expressing the best wishes for its prosperity, but states that the French Cabinet does not admit that, as a recompense for the energy and moderation of the Cabinet of Turin, France should be obliged to evacuate Rome. At no moment, however, has the French Cabinet given to Piedmont and Italy the hope that it would sacrifice to them Rome and the Pope.

In the Court of Queen's Bench, London, a rule absolute has been granted against George Francis Train, for the removal of the costs of his trial and removal of his street railway in London. A rule nisi was granted against his bail to show cause why the recognizance should not be refreshed.

It is said that the principal members of the Monarchical party in Greece are all agreed to offer the crown to the Archduke Maximilian, brother of the Emperor of Austria. The Greek National Assembly will meet on the 22d of December. The Queen is to be dissolved.

The majority of the Prince of Wales was celebrated in a quiet manner, Nov. 10, throughout England. The Court Circular officially announces that the Prince is appointed a Field-Marshal, and that Gens. Sir F. Blakeney, Viscount Gough, the Duke of Cambridge, and Lord Clyde, are created Field Marshals. A large number of naval and military officers are made Knights of the Grand Cross, Knights Commanders, etc.

CALL FOR MORE CALIFORNIA VOLUNTEERS.

Gen. Wright, U.S.A., commanding the Department of the Pacific, has issued the following address:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PACIFIC,
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Dec. 19, 1862.

The undersigned, commanding the Military Department of the Pacific, takes great pleasure in announcing to the patriotic citizens of California, that he has been authorized by the Honorable Secretary of War to call upon his Excellency the Governor for an additional regiment of infantry and seven companies of cavalry to be mustered into the service of the United States.

The troops called for are designed for distant service in the field, and will be commanded by able and experienced officers.

Californians—You have already exhibited a noble devotion to the Union. Ten thousand men furnished by you of this State, and the magnificent voluntary contributions in money and supplies which you have sent forward to the sick and wounded soldiers in the East, bear witness to your love for the Old Flag.

Knowing, as I do, the people of this State, their love of country, their intelligence, their zealous and holy attachment to the Union, I appeal to them with confidence.

Respond promptly in the call; rally under the protecting folds of the glorious old Star-Spangled Banner, and swear fidelity to the Union.

(S) WRIGHT,
Brig. Gen. U.S.A., Commanding.

The Supreme Court has decided that the Court of Sessions has still criminal jurisdiction —the point of validity of Constitutional amendments was not decided.

LOCAL RELIGIOUS NEWS.

Previously at midnight, Christmas, the Most Rev. Archbishop, accompanied by the Right Rev. Bishop of Sonora, a large number of priests and acolytes, entered the sanctuary in St. Mary's Cathedral. Long before that hour the sacred edifice was filled by a vast assemblage. The interior presented a grand appearance. In numerable lights were burning; evergreen held places around the pillars, railings and gallaries; and the principal altar was ornamented with an abundance of flowers. The Most Rev. Archbishop officiated as celebrant; and Rev. Father Harrington preached a sermon, characterized by remarkable earnestness and ability. At 11 o'clock, Christmas day, High Mass was celebrated by Right Rev. Dr. Lons, Bishop of Sonora. Rev. Father Prendergast delivered a learned discourse which kept riveted the attention of the thousands in the Church. Immediately after the Papal Benediction was bestowed and a Plenary Indulgence granted by the Archbishop, in accordance with the power given by our Holy Father the Pope, to all who complied with the conditions prescribed.

Midnight Mass was also celebrated in the Church of St. Mary, St. Francis and St. Patrick. Large congregations attended.

The new church of St. Ignatius, more properly speaking, the large hall on the second floor of the College, was first used for Divine worship Christmas. It is large, elegantly furnished with pews, and most beautifully arranged as a church. The attendance was very great.

At St. Joseph's, Tenth street, (Rev. H. P. Gallagher, the celebrant), was taken up on Thursday, to be used for the purchase of a fine painting of St. Patrick, which is to occupy a place over the church.

The Sonora (Tuolumne county) Herald, referring to the new Catholic church in that town, says: This large fire-proof building is rapidly approaching completion, and already presents a handsome appearance. It is built of brick and stone, the masonry work being under the supervision of Mr. Con Reardon, of the school. The church is one story in height, but high enough to have made two stories. It is eighty feet long and forty-three wide. The front or entrance, facing upon Jackson street, forms a handsome wall. A large arch door way, sixteen feet high, gives admittance to the building from the front. Six large arch windows are upon each side, and two in the front, making fourteen in all. On top of the church is a belfry some ten feet wide and twelve high. Surmounting this will be placed a spire, thirty feet in height. The distance from the base of the spire will be about eighty feet. In the belfry it is designed to place a large town clock, which will strike the hour so that it can be heard all over the city. The building is certainly one of the largest and finest in the city, and, when finished, will be a credit to it. Its cost, it is estimated, when finished, will be some $10,000, all of which, we are informed, will be promptly paid. Rev. Father Prendergast, is deserving of credit for the excellent manner in which he has done his work; and the same may be said of Messrs. Reardon and Sewall, who have the contracts for the carpenter work.

The Mass sung in St. Mary's Cathedral at midnight Christmas, was really the best heard in San Francisco for many years. Haydn's Mass, it comes up to a very high standard. Both the voices and instrumental performers acquitted themselves in a most excellent manner. It is but simple justice to state that the chief exertions of Rev. Father Prendergast, who has contributed materially to render his Cathedral, and in fact all the churches under his charge, the most musical in the city, were highly appreciated. The Mass was rendered in a most excellent manner, and the instrumental performances

[ET OVERLAND MAIL.]

LETTER FROM DUBLIN.

Correspondence of N. Y. Irish-American.

There is some appearance of a difficulty ahead in regard to the fund for the O'Connell statue, now being got up under the auspices of Dr. Gray. There is an evident tendency on the part of those who are managing the affair, to ignore the National part of O'Connell's character, and narrow the significance of the testimonial down to that of the Emancipator; or as the Freeman and other "salmy" journals express it, the "friend of civil and religious freedom." Not a word is said about the Repeal agitation now; not a word about legislative independence, or any other independence, for Ireland. This is creating a very strong feeling of dissatisfaction among the Nationalists; and the letter of Archbishop MacHale, which has just appeared, has confirmed and given voice to the suspicion that the intent of those who have undertaken to get up the statue was not to do full justice to O'Connell's memory, but rather to dwarf the popular idea of his character down to their own miserable level.

The Orange papers, as may be supposed, are all in favor of the Lancashire and the Prince Albert funds. Although very "loyal" men are sending contributions to the O'Connell Fund, and are recalling all the loyal things that the Shakspeare was said, yet those peppers can see nothing in the movement but ultra-nationalism and sedition. But what most galls them is the collection for the Irish of London and Birkenhead. Here is what one of them says of it:

"What have the brave Irish done? They have hurled defiance—and a brickbat—at Queen. They have flourished their figures and their bludgeons in the face of the bovine Briton. They have sent for the Pope, and they have wished Garibaldi further than any present man would like to follow. They have broken the Queen's peace and her lieges' heads at the bidding of their pastors. They have smashed windows, burned houses, kicked a policeman to death, and stabbed a private of the regiment of Guards. Honor to whom honor is due! Honor to the brave Irish! And so the Morning News starts a subscription, and half a dozen disloyalists vote themselves into a committee, and every fellow that hates freedom, while he is whining that he is not free, subscribes his half pence, and there is another demonstration to insult the Government and to proclaim dissatisfaction to the Queen."

I quote extracts like the foregoing occasionally, because they are very amusing and because they are confessions of a disloyal spirit in this country, the existence of which spirit these same journals deny when it suits their purposes to do so. But to return to the London Irish fund. It has been announced that the sum already collected is more than enough to meet the necessities of the case as far as the Hyde Park men are concerned; but that announcement does not seem to have checked the incomings of the money. The surplus will be applied to the benefit of the Irish of Birkenhead. Amongst the latest contributors to the fund is his Grace the Archbishop of Tuam. Several priests had previously contributed; but this sanction of the movement by the patriotic Archbishop is of peculiar significance, and is very cheering to those who have hitherto labored in the cause.

All the Irish who have been arrested for conspiracy in the Birkenhead affair, have been sent for trial to the Chester assizes. Bail was refused for their appearance.

Very frequently of late the Kerry papers contain sad accounts of landlord tyranny in their locality. A very painful case connected with landlordism is just now mentioned. It appears that in his chapel one Sunday, the Rev. Patrick Foley, P. P., of Prior, spoke of the cruelties which were being practised towards some of his poor people by their landlord, Mr. Charles Sugrue. This person, of whose rent-raising habits the public have already heard something, was within the chapel at the time (he is a Catholic, and a nephew of Dr. Sugrue, a late Bishop of Kerry), and he spoke out at once in reply to the priest, and told him not to be desecrating the Alter on which he stood. A great commotion of course was excited. Mr. Sugrue threatened to bring the Rev. gentleman into the law courts, but subsequently agreed to bring it before the Bishop, Dr. Moriarty. The Kerry Star thus describes the result:

"The Priest was brought before the Bishop on Wednesday last. Mr. James O'Connell, late owner of the property, sold to Mr. Sugrue, is present as amicus curiæ and Greek chorus. Witnesses are sworn and the charge proved. The Priest is found guilty of pleading for the poor and outcast. A criminal prosecution in the Queen's Bench, with all the horrors of a dungeon, and, oh, such a dungeon, and such a fine—£500 at least—are held over the venerable head of this priest who loved his people 'not wisely, but too well.' There was one mode of escape which would soothe the outraged dignity of Mr. Sugrue and save the Priest from the 'dungeons' of the Queen's Bench prison—removal from his parish, or suspension. The first was suggested and offered, but not enforced, for the very simple reason that there was no canonical offence. The milder punishment of 'partial suspension,' was inflicted, the Right Rev. Dr. Moriarty thus rescuing a good priest from the ruinous expense and probable imprisonment consequent on a prosecution in the Queen's Bench. The landlord has returned to Cork, jubilant and justified—the priest to his humble cottage, 'suspended' but not degraded."

This is an instance of the difficulty of publicly speaking of the acts of individual landlords. Whoever speaks a word of censure, of one of them from the press or platform does so at the risk of an action for libel. The slightest error in his statement will probably bring him a person from an attorney next day; and even an adherence to the most rigid truth will not always save him.

The only legally safe course open for comment a journalist has in these cases is when the facts come out in sworn evidence before a court. In this way the journal whose quoted has been enabled to say a few words of a monstrous act of eviction, which has been temporarily postponed, owing to a slight flaw in the legal proceedings. The landlord in this instance is a Mr. Lenihan, the tenants whom he is about to evict number 35 heads-of-families! What a desolation is thus threatened, what sorrow, what suffering, what poor must not fill the hearts of the poor people whose means of livelihood are thus about to be snatched away, and whose only resource will probably be the work-house!

Commodore Wilkes and the Bermuda Affair.

The Galaxy, 26, screw frigate, Captain Rochford Maguire, sailed last month, to join the squadron on the West Indies station. The Emerald, 35, screw frigate, will order her away a few days previous. She is under orders for the same station.

The Times city article says the idea that Commodore Wilkes intends to renew his experiments on international law has greatly subsided. The belief is that his nomination to the West Indian station was not intended as an affront to the neutral powers of Europe, but merely to gratify the New York populace, by enabling them to interpret it as such—that, consequently, the orders to the Commodore enjoin him to keep within proper bounds, and that should he, in the face of them, resort to any outrage, it will be repudiated like that upon the Trent. The subject is not adverted to in any of the Times' leaders.

The Daily News remonstrates with its friends at Washington, and advises President Lincoln to put some officer of proved discretion between Commodore and Charleston. It must be worth his while to save us from anxieties and irritations, which can do Americans no good.

The Times contains a letter from Captain Hore, commanding the steamship Gladiator. According to his statement, the island of Bermuda was effectually blockaded by the Federal squadron. He says:

"The island has been strictly blockaded by a Federal squadron under Admiral Wilkes, since the 27th of September, on which day he entered the harbor of Nassau, accompanied by the gunboat Tuscarora, leaving another gunboat (the Sonoma) to keep guard at the entrance of the harbor, and under pretence of coaling and repairs, remained at anchor till the 24 of this month, on which day he left. The Sonoma then entered and commenced coaling, left on the 5th of October. The three vessels had been in sight up to the time of my leaving (Oct. 7), cruising about four miles from land, and at night anchoring in the fairway of the channel leading to St. George's, so that it was impossible any vessel could either get in or out."

Captain Horn gives an account of the mail boat Merlin having been fired at and brought to, and the Gladiator having been ordered to leave. The only British man of war at Bermuda was the Desperate. Capt. Horn is of opinion that the coaling was but a mere pretence, as the squadron was only four days from Fortress Monroe, and the quantity of coals taken on board by the three vessels was not sufficient to coal one, had it really needed them.

The Globe, referring to the proceeding of Commodore Wilkes at Bermuda, is of the fullest confidence that President Lincoln's Government will not act in a manner to impose any unpleasant duty on the British Minister at their capital; and as to taking any steps to promote the cause of peace in America, we must avoid interference until we have good reason to think it will not be useless.

The only disadvantage of an honest heart is credulity.

THE FIGHT IN HYDE PARK.

Rarely has a stronger claim on our sympathies, says the Dublin Nation, presented itself than that arising from the present case. Those brave countrymen of ours were struck at in Hyde Park, because they were Catholics and Irishmen; and, as Irishmen, they stood good Irish strokes in return, and showed that amidst the brick and mortar of London, as well as on the hill sides of Ireland, Irishmen retain their native freshness of heart and strength of arm. Abroad, as well as at home, they are still Strong to do and to endure.

Men whose blows are hard to cure. Even the bitter enemies of their country are forced to confess their admiration of the splendid audacity, the amazing courage, the wonderful dash of those men who could thus, in the midst of a hostile population, not only venture to fight, but actually rout a host of foes. Here, for instance, are words extorted from as flippant and virulent an assailant as Ireland has in the press of England. The quotation is from the Daily Telegraph:

"Nevertheless, what a wealth of wild good-hope, of untutored nobility, there is in these Irish, after all! With their warm and generous hearts, their light and ready wit, their gay and cheerful courage, their deep and honest piety—it is miserably sad that they should still lag behind the civilisation of the age. Why their hot Celtic natures get something of our Saxon seriousness and stolidity? Their worst faults are but the exaggerations, the charicatures of virtues. In their sympathy with the criminal is often kept prompted by a dim, unreasoning feeling for one who seems to be oppressed; and the same wild spirit of pugnacity which, when perverted, results in shameful and ignoble brawls, needs but direction to become the glory of a land. These peasants, who flourish their shillelahs against their dearest friends, are, after all, of the same blood as those soldiers of the 24th, who, under the eagle eyed Napier, drove the Belochee host before them at the grim fight of Meanee—as those Enniskillengers who rode down the cuirassier and charger alike on the field of Waterloo, and shattered the Russian squadrons into utter rout upon the plain of Balaklava. Such raw material is far too good to waste."

We could not expect that the writer, would in his list of Irish victories, won entirely or entirely through Irish valor, include Fontenoy and Cremona, or Ienburh and Beal-an-ath-buide; still the meaning of his words is apparent. And when such expressions are drawn from hostile sources by the fearless bearing of our poor countrymen in Hyde Park, shall we not suffer them our sympathies, and extend to such of them as need it our assistance?

We find in a French paper, La France, an article on those proceedings, founded on information derived from an eye witness, which is in its accuracy and impartiality a favorable contrast to the writings of the English journals on the subject. In describing the commencement of the quarrel, the writer says:

"The Irish were at this time only scattered in groups of two, three, or four, over the immense multitude; but as soon as they made known their nationality and religion by their cries of disapprobation, they were immediately assailed by the surrounding groups, much more numerous than they with the string of brutal epithets which are familiar to the English when they talk of the Irish. In this respect all the old insolence and violence of the Saxon race have been preserved in the lower class."

William Smith O'Brien.

It grieves us to see by the public press that Mr. O'Brien, one of Ireland's most faithful sons, was so dejected that he felt himself not fit to lecture for the Mechanics' Institute, Limerick. We cannot find language in which to express our grief at the fact. The weight of despondency which could have produced such an effect on a giant mind of high cultivation must have been great indeed. But why give way to ten influence of despair—which, like reason, betrays a man and a nation. As in religion, despair and presumption are to be guarded against, so in political warfare. Despondency and apathy betray like treason. The visible and invisible enemy know this, and use them as weapons to destroy the prospects of success. The surest despondency is apathy. A man must hope and fight against it. The precedent of despair on the part of William Smith O'Brien is dangerous to the energies of nationalities. He is blessed by God with talent, honor, integrity. He has ample means of living beyond the reach of want. He should remember that it is trials which test the man—and he who aspires to be a man—must meet and strangle difficulties. Man ought to be the master, not the slave of circumstances. If all went smooth with us there would be no merit. The whole powers of a man are never fully developed until he meets with trials. He must push on, remove obstacles, breast difficulties, and essay every means to surmount them. All England seeks is to break down the spirits of men of O'Brien's stamp. The honored martyr lives in the affections of every true Irishman; and if he does not live to see his own Ireland liberated from alien rule, let him have the consolation, when he reclines his head on his dying pillow, that he worked for native land to his last moment.—Connaught Patriot.

TRIUMPHS OF THE CHURCH.

We are frequently assured by colporteurs and other swaddling agents of the Bible Societies, that Protestantism, with its various offshoots, is making gigantic strides among Pagans and Papists. Italy is now the chief solicitude of Protestantism, and is, we are told, undergoing a rapid regeneration from godlessness to godliness. Singular that these gentry never enter into particulars, but deal invariably in general details. However, while Protestantism affects to be exultant over the number of its converts, the truth does leak out occasionally, as we are informed, in lachrymose tones, that Papistry is too deeply ingrained in Italy to be ever eradicated; and that the few sparse congregations have to be maintained at a ruinous cost. Out of the two evils we are also told that the Italians won't rather choose infidelity than Protestantism, but so long as the latter possesses the persuasive eloquence of gold-arguments it will always command a market among the needy and indifferent. Some twenty-two years ago, an apostate, named Ronge, undertook to reform the Catholic Church of Germany, after the fashion of Luther. The new style was received with favor and flourished with vigor, but of late years it has almost totally disappeared, while Catholicity has rapidly increased, not only in the districts previously infected with the doctrines of Ronge, but in every other portion of Germany. In the provinces of Bradenburg and Pomerania there has been an increase of 35 new parishes, and 48 priests since 1841. At that time Berlin had not a single religious house—now it has eight, and every parish contains at least one religious institution. In Saxony 40 new parishes have been established, and Catholicity has considerably increased in Wirtemberg, Forger, and Eslaben, Luther's birth-place. In 1843 the Catholics at Breslaw were 28,000—they are now 45,000; Berlin now contains 10,000 more Catholics than it did twenty years ago. In 1840 the followers of Ronge numbered 6,000 in Berlin, to-day but 143 remain.

No matter what country we examine, we shall find the progress of the Church steadily on the advance. As a proof of her triumphs, look at the long roll of illustrious converts who have returned within her fold during the past twenty years in England, Germany, and America. Can Protestantism point to one illustrious name which has embraced its tenets from the Catholic Church? Those who leave the Church for Protestantism have another object in view besides that of saving their souls.—N.Y. Tablet

The Drafted Men.

Reports from all parts of the North agree in representing the drafted men as deserting by wholesale. In a camp of 1,200, near Harrisburg, Pa., all save 400 deserted, and out of the 8,000 drafted in Maryland not over 1,500 will be available. In Ohio not more than one in ten of the drafted men will now be found in the ranks. This wholesale desertion shows that the unfairness and utter want of system of the present draft have brought the whole matter into contempt. It will be the duty of Congress to attend to this subject immediately, and abandon it altogether, or provide a conscript system founded upon the models afforded by other nations. The present law is unnecessarily harsh, and should be amended so that men with large families need not be forced into the ranks, while young men with no one to depend upon them are permitted to stay at home. Conscription, at the very best, is a cruel business, and should not be resorted to unless with every precaution against needless suffering.—N. Y. World.

The Irish Language.

It was our privilege, on last Sunday to hear a beautiful sermon in our own dear Irish tongue, delivered in the Cathedral. The preacher was the Rev. Tile J. Bourke, Professor. We confess we were disappointed, but the disappointment was an agreeable one. There was a fluency of speech—a burst of Irish eloquence—and a pathos—which carried home conviction, commanded attention, and moved the hearts of the congregation. The allusion to the Irish saints, their lives and prophecies was very impressive. This is the way to keep burning a love of the old faith, and create and foster a taste for the language in which St. Patrick preached to our remote ancestors.—Twam Patriot.

The English journals sometimes do justice, although unconsciously, to the poor Irish Catholic by recording his gallantry. On the occasion of a fire at Hull a short while since, several of the borough police were suddenly buried in the ruins of the burning premises by the falling in of a wall. Amongst these was one named McCormick, an Irishman and a Catholic, who lay among the debris for four hours, with several red-hot bricks on his chest the greater part of that time. We will let the Protestant journalists tell the rest of this gallant fellow's story: "As soon as he could be reached he cried out, 'Oh! don't bother me, but look after Redfern' (another constable), and then in a few minutes he again said, 'Poor Redfern! God have mercy on his soul. He is gone.' McCormick was removed to the Guinea-borough Coffee House, and was attended by several surgeons; but the injuries which he received are of a fatal character, and it is said he cannot possibly get better." Surely such utter disregard of self, under circumstances truly terrible, is a piece of heroism of the highest class. —London Universal News.

John Morgan and the Monk.

When the guerrilla chief made his late raid into Kentucky, he called at the Trappi. Monastery at Gethsemani, and ordered the Abbot to surrender his horses for the use of the chivalry. Accordingly one of the brothers led out before the indignant chief two miserable jades which looked as if they had fasted more than forty days. Morgan turned away in disgust, and asked the Abbot if he had no other horses. The Abbot replied in the negative. "But," said Morgan, "I have seen you had some fine horses some time ago." "Oh, so I had," said the good Father, "but I heard that you were coming, so I sold them." Morgan laughed, and left the monastery.—Cincinnati Catholic Telegraph.

The Irish Bank returns for the month of October, show, as usual, a large increase. On the present occasion it is at the high rate of £549,000; but in the previous year it had reached three-quarters of a million. As compared with this time last year, there is a reduction of more than half a million.

CROCKERY,
FRENCH CHINA,
GLASSWARE,
SILVER-PLATED WARE,
CUTLERY, Etc., Etc.
DOUGLAS,
421 Montgomery Street,
— HAS THE —
Res the Largest and best Assortment of Goods that can be found in the city.
ALL OF WHICH HE IS SELLING AT THE LOWEST PRICES.
THOSE WHO BUY FOR CASH!
Will find it greatly to their advantage to give him a call before purchasing elsewhere.
au29

IMPORTANT TO CATHOLIC FAMILIES.
HENRY C. BATEMAN,
617 KEARNY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO,
Sole Agent in California for
D. & J. SADLIER & Co.,
The Largest Catholic Publishing House on the American Continent.
Catholic Families can obtain
THE HOLY BIBLE,
LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST,
LIFE of the BLESSED VIRGIN MARY,
LIVES of the SAINTS.
For the sale of which H. C. BATEMAN is Agent, in numbers, and have them bound in splendid style in MOROCCO, GILT EDGE, or GILDED EDGE, at the following prices: $3, $10, $12 and $15.
In these Books are FIVE HUNDRED MAGNIFICENT STEEL ENGRAVINGS.
D. & J. SADLIER & CO. publish monthly or weekly numbers, which they will send to any part of the country, to subscribers, who will forward samples of the works monthly.
Mr. Bateman will compare and bind the numbers of the works monthly published in this country, that the Eastern States by families, that were not full when they left.
HENRY C. BATEMAN,
Agent for Sadlier & Co., Catholic Book Publishers,
617 Kearny street,.....San Francisco.
Sole Agent for the New York Tablet 4ad

DENTISTS.

DR. PRATT,
DENTIST.
Office in Tucker's Academy of Music, On Montgomery street, between California and Pine Prizes the same as charged by the best Dentists in the city, to them able to pay. To the poor, for those who cannot pay, will make their services gratuitous.
TEETH EXTRACTED WITHOUT PAIN.
Dr. Pratt is a graduate of the New York Medical College, Chemistry, and also a professor of the New College of Dental Surgery at Cincinnati, Ohio. Eleven years in practice. ap6

Dr. B. Kennicll,
DENTIST,
(LATE OF PHILADELPHIA,)
Rooms No. 9 and 11 Union Building
Corner of Kearny and Market street. Entrance on Market street. jal7 3m

MISCELLANEOUS.

SCOVILL'S BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP Cures Scrofula, White Swelling, King's Evil, Ulcers, Chronic Rheumatism, Goitre, or Swelled Neck, Scrofulous Diseases and Glandular Tumors, Mercurial and Syphilitic Affections, Ulcerations and Enlargements of Joints, Glands, Bones or Ovaries, Uterus, Liver, Spleen, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaints, Epileptic Fits, Old Sores, St. Vitus' Dance, Dropsy, and all diseases of the Skin, such as Pimples, Blies, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Sore Eyes; also, many diseases peculiar to females, such as Leucorrhea, or Whites, Suppression, Irregularity, Sterility, or any other disease arising from impurity of the Blood. For the cure of Humors there is nothing in the world can equal this popular and extensively used Medicine. REDINGTON & CO., Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco. dc6

NIGHT SWEATS AND SPITTING BLOOD.—Among the numerous advertised medicines for these complaints, none can be found so effacacious as DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. It subdues the irritation, stops the sweating, and restores the strength in a very short space of time. It is well worth your trial. REDINGTON & CO., Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco. dc6

FOR THE HOLIDAYS.
Market street Hat Store.
McGANN, THE HATTER,
WOULD respectfully call the attention of the public to his splendid assortment of Fine American & French Soft Hats
Which he is selling at 20 PER CENT LESS than any other establishment in the city. He also keeps on hand a full assortment of BOYS' HATS, and hopes, by strict attention to business, to merit a liberal share of public patronage. He would also call attention to his stock of
No. 204 Market street, North side, Near Dupont. jal6 3m San Francisco.

SEEDS, SEEDS
JUST RECEIVED,
A large supply of FRESH FIELD, GARDEN, FLOWER FRUIT AND TREE SEEDS,
ALFALFA, RED and WHITE CLOVER.
A large assortment of GRASS SEEDS.
DUTTON, FLOWERDEW, BELSHAW & CO.
Corner of Clay and Battery streets, San Francisco.
Buyers, call and examine our stock, and prices before purchasing elsewhere. au29

A. S. ROSENBAUM & CO.,
IMPORTERS OF
FINE HAVANA CIGARS,
TOBACCO, ETC.,
35 and 37 Cedar Street, New York.
Corner of Clay and Battery Streets
SAN FRANCISCO.
For "Hardgrove's Penely," "Rose Hoe," "Cut Cut," "Cut Cut," etc. m14

ROOFING.

LEAKY ROOFS!
PARTIES WHO APPREHEND SEING TROUBLED with a leaky roof at the coming rainy season can apply to the undersigned, by attending to them early, have it done in a few hours, and guarantee it for four years. Also, repairing and re-covering old roofs on short notice. Painted with best quality of linseed Oil and Lead.
We shall never fear Roof with best quality Tin at the lowest cash price for good work.
H. G. & E. G. FISKE,
420 Kearny street, bet. Wash'n & Jackson.
[sep13 3 m]

ASPHALTUM
FIRE-PROOF ROOFING.
S. W. Corner of Post and Kearny sts.
SIDE WALKS, Floors and Cellars laid in Asphaltum, and in a substantial manner. Leaky Roofs of every description covered with Asphaltum and guaranteed years tight.
F. MITCHELL,
au22 3m South west corner Post and Kearny sts.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HOLIDAY GIFTS.
BARRETT & SHERWOOD
HAVE ON HAND A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT of articles suitable for presents—such as SOLID SILVERWARE,
Tea and Table Spoons, Forks, Cake Fish, Ice cream, Dessert and Tea Spoons; Cream, Gravy, Punch and Soup Ladles, Sugar Tongs and Shells, Butter Knives, Napkin Rings, Sugar Tongs and Sifters, Berry and Cheese Spoons; Castors, Cake Baskets, Flower Stands, Bonquet Holders, Tea trays, Waiters, Syrup Cups and Cruets, Bottle Corks, Sugar Scissors, Tea Bells, Thimbles, Children's Whistles, Children's Sets of Knife, Fork and Spoon, in cases; Bit Cake Baskets, Crumb Scrapers, Knife Rests, Pattern-cards, Lemon Tablets, Liquor Stands, Olive Spoons and Pickle Forks, in cases, sets of Coffee Spoons, in cases, Tea sets complete.
PITCHERS, CAKE BASKETS,
FRUIT STANDS, Etc.
DIAMONDS
Of the purest water, cut in Rose-bits, Ear Rings, Rings, Bracelets, Crosses, Scarf-pins, studs, Lockets, etc.
1846
UNSET DIAMONDS ON HAND FOR MANUFACTURING ARTICLES TO ORDER.
WATCHES,
Made by all the celebrated manufacturers with Patent Lever, Duplex and Lever movements, in Gold and Silver Cases, of every description.
Ladies' Watches of beautiful style and great variety.
CHAINS,
Comprising a great variety of Vest, Guard, Necklace, and Chain Pins; enamel and plain; in Gold and Silver.
Sets of Jewelry,
With Quartz, Topaz, Mosaic, Pearl, etc., Ornaments and plain gold bridges, and a variety of articles too numerous to mention.
BARRETT & SHERWOOD,
313 Montgomery street.
Between Clay and Commercial.

REMOVAL.
JAMES CUNNINGHAM,
DEALER IN
POULTRY and GAME.
HAS REMOVED FROM 37 MERCHANT STREET, to Ambrose's New addition,
Nos. 111 and 113 Metropolitan Market,
Entrance on Stout street, two doors below Mont gomery, where he will be happy to see his friends and customers, and the public in general, with POULTRY, GAME AND FAT TURKEYS,
At the lowest prices. dc29

Toys and Fancy Articles,
FOR HOLIDAY PRESENTS,
FOR SALE CHEAP.
AN ELEGANT assortment of rich and beautiful goods suitable for gifts, can be found at Mayer's Bazaars,
No. 3 Masonic Temple, and No. 330 Montgomery street.
PARLOR SKATES OF EVERY KIND.
WATCHES, JEWELRY,
SILVER PLATED WARE,
DRESSING CASES,
WORK BOXES, WRITING DESKS,
MUSIC BOXES,
ACCORDEONS,
PEARL INLAID TABLES,
English and German Concertinas,
Stereoscopes, Ladies' Satchels,
And Toys and Fancy Goods in endless variety. oc29

MARBLE WORKS.
CALIFORNIA MARBLE WORKS.
GRANT & DEVINE,
Cutter of, &c., Montgomery and Sansome
OPPOSITE PIOE SALE,
MANTELS, GRAVE-STONES, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, TABLE TOPS, CRATES, TILES,
And every description of Marble Work
Scotch, Egyptian, Tuscan, and all kinds of ornamental work, with exclusive attention.
Grant & Devine are now ready to receive, from their quarries in Tuolumne county, a fine Statuary and Italian marble, which they can furnish at the shortest notice. They respectfully solicit the patronage of persons visiting this city, and all others.
Marble sold by WHOLESALE and RETAIL, at the cheapest rates.
GRANT & DEVINE,
Battery street, between Montgomery and Sansome.

WINES AND LIQUORS.
PORT WINE,
BRANDIES,
WHISKIES,
&C., &C.,
OLD AND PURE,
In Lots to Suit Purchasers.
PHILIP A. ROACH
North west corner of Sansome and Jackson streets.
au30

SQUARZA'S PUNCH.
Brass Manufactory.....Wholesale and Retail
At 44 Leidesdorff street,
Opposite the What Cheer Laundry.
1st Premium at Sacramento and San Francisco Bay Districts Fairs.
F. SQUARZA would inform the public that he is now prepared to supply the fellow-up brands of his ORIGINAL and UNEQUALED PUNCH:
Rum, Cognac, Coffee, Tea, Arrack, Whiskey, Pine Apple, Strawberry, Riposh, Morning Comfort, Anti-Dyspeptic, Appetizer, Lady's Tete and Cocoa.
He would also direct attention to his stock of WINES, SPIRITS, CORDIALS AND ALES,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
Among which will be found the Finest Brands of Cognac Hennessy and Seignette Brandies, Sterling Comfort, Anti-Dyspeptic, Appetizer, Lady's Tete and Cocoa.
He would also direct attention to his stock of WINES, SPIRITS, CORDIALS AND ALES,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
Among which will be found the Finest Brands of Cognac Hennessy and Seignette Brandies, Sterling Comfort, Anti-Dyspeptic, Appetizer, Lady's Tete and Cocoa.
Holland and English Gin;
Irish, Scotch, Bourbon, Rye and Monongahela Whiskies.
Old Port, Sherry, Madeira, Port and Claret Wines.
Scotch Ale and White Wine Champagne and Still.
Cases, Bottled and Draught Cider, also Ale and Beers.
English and Irish Porters.
Absinthe, Kummel, Kirsch and all varieties of Cordials.
The above have been selected with especial care and can be recommended to FAMILY USE.
THE BEST BRANDS OF SEGARS.
BELDEN & CO.,
413 Washington street,.....opposite the Post Office,
CHOICE WINES AND CIGARS FOR FAMILY USE ONLY.
All the celebrated Brands of Brandy, Whiskey, etc., can always be had at Donnelly & Co.'s,
Exactly 4 rods from the establishment guaranteed as to price, kind, and goods delivered free to any part of the city or suburbs.
DEALERS & CO.,
413 Washington st., opp. Postoffice.

P. RILEY & CO.,
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
No. 519 Front street.
"THE FONTENOY,"
671 MARKET STREET,
(Opposite Kearny st.)
T. MULCAHY, Proprietor.
The CHOICEST Brands of WINES and LIQUORS for Family and Medicinal purposes.
jan16 3m

JOHN CARROLL,
IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN FRENCH BRANDIES,
WINES AND LIQUORS,
203 and 207 Front street,
Between Commercial and Sacramento, San Francisco
au29

BURKE & BRIODY,
CORNER FRONT AND JACKSON STS.,
DEALERS IN
WINES AND LIQUORS, ENGLISH ALE, PORTER, ETC.
— ALSO —
Havana Cigars.
The best brands of English and Scotch Ale and Porter always on hand and for sale, in bulk or bottles, wholesale or retail.
PURE RASPBERRY WINE.
French Raspberry Wine—
For sale by the pipe, case or gallon at the lowest rates.
Orders from Families and the Trade solicited, and promptly delivered free of charge.
BURKE & BRIODY,
Corner Front and Jackson sts.
Under Pacific Fruit Market.

OCCIDENTAL SALOON.
Southwest corner of Bush and Montgomery sts.
T. SHIELDS.....Proprietor.
MYSTERIES are respectfully informed that I am permanently located at this saloon, which I have fitted up anew with every facility for its patronage. My object is to fully recommend the reputation of the Occidental Saloon, which I have had for the last three years. Gentlemen may rely on getting the CHOICEST WINES, LIQUORS AND CIGARS, and the best Lunch in the city, from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M. daily. Private entrance on Bush street. Remember the number, 417.
N. B.—It is really the cosiest down-town lunch on the table. jal6 T. SHIELDS.

REMOVAL!
MRS. D. SOUCHONS,
Ladies' Dress Trimmings, Hosiery,
Worsted and Furnishing Store,
Masonic Temple, No. 3, Montgomery st.
REMOVAL.
D. SOUCHONS,
MILITARY GOODS, FLAG, BANNER, and Trimmings Emporium
Masonic Temple, No. 3 Post street.

HARDWARE, ETC.
LEWIS COFFEY & RISDON'S
STEAM BOILER WORKS.
THE ONLY EXCLUSIVE BOILER-MAKING ESTABLISHMENT on the Pacific Coast—owned and conducted by PRACTICAL BOILER-MAKERS.
All orders for new work, or the repairing of old work, executed as ordered, and warranted as to quality.
Corner of Bush and Market streets,
Opposite the Oriental Hotel,
SAN FRANCISCO.
LEWIS COFFEY. [fe14] J. S. RISDON.

DONAHUE'S
Union Iron and Brass Foundry,
Corner of First and Mission streets,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.,
FIRST ESTABLISHED IN THE STATE.
MANUFACTURE STEAM ENGINES, Saw and Grist Mill Machinery, Boilers, Castings, Sidewheels, etc., etc.
AT REDUCED PRICES,
Have now the largest and best assortment of Gear and Machinery Patterns in the State, a list of which will be forwarded to any one desiring it, free of cost.
PETER DONAHUE.

VULCAN IRON WORKS CO.
P. TORQUET.....MANAGER
Steam Engine Builders,
BOILER MAKERS, IRON FOUNDERS AND GENERAL ENGINEERS.
VULCAN FOUNDRY,
First street, near the Gas Works, San Francisco.
Steamboat Machinery built and repaired; also, Saw Mills and Quartz Mills, Castings and Mining Machinery, etc., etc., etc. jal2

F. TILLMAN,
90 BATTERY Street, San Francisco.

Sole Agent for TILTON'S McFARLAND'S Fire and Burglar Proof SAFES, with steel vaults and combination Locks. The only reliable Safe in the world.

JAMES JOSEPH O'SHEA,
TIN, COPPER, AND SHEET-IRON
MANUFACTURER,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
1306 Stockton street,
(two doors from Vallejo.)
PLUMBING AND STOVES REPAIRED. All kinds of Metal roofing done in the best manner. Also, roofs and gutters repaired and warranted to give satisfaction. If you want your house well watered, with a bottom as well as on the top, give me a call, and I will put up a pump that will last you for years, and for a small amount. I will save it, or I will take no pay. If you want a good stove, I will sell you one and warrant it to be good, or no sale. If you have wood or coal to dispose of every description, I will buy, sell or take your old one in part payment for the new one.
J. J. O'SHEA.

PLUMBERS.
REMOVAL.
L. McNALLY. JAMES HAWKINS.
McNALLY & HAWKINS,
Plumbers and Gas Fitters,
.....Have Removed from Kearny street to.....
308 PINE STREET, TWO DOORS FROM MONTGOMERY ST.
(Opposite Belcher's.)
McNALLY & HAWKINS are prepared to perform all descriptions of PLUMBING and GAS FITTING. They have on hand a large and well assorted stock of Gas Fixtures,
Lead Pipe,
Iron Pipe,
Marble Sinks,
Cooking Ranges,
Hair Tube,
Etc., Etc.
With which they offer for sale on the most reasonable terms. They solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore bestowed by them, and hope by strict attention to business to merit a share of the public patronage.
au29 3m

INSURANCE.
PHŒNIX INSURANCE COMP'Y,
HARTFORD.
CITY FIRE INSURANCE COMP'Y,
HARTFORD.
METROPOLITAN FIRE INS. CO.,
NEW YORK.
ISSUE POLICIES
AGAINST LOSS OR DAMAGE BY FIRE,
ON ALL CLASSES OF INSURANCE PROPERTY.
At lowest rates consistent with safety.
All losses paid here promptly on application.
McBAIN & PERKINS, agents,
Office, N. E. corner City and Battery sts.
mch15

THOS. N. CAZNEAU,
INSURANCE BROKER,
And Adjuster of Marine Losses and Averages.
Marine and all Commercial Business to and Written Drawn. Claims upon Insurers Adjusted.
Consultations upon all Insurance and Maritime Subjects
Office, Exchange Building,
Battery street,.....Opposite Custom-house
au17

HOTELS.
BROOKLYN HOTEL,
SAN FRANCISCO.
REMOVAL!
THE FAMOUS PROPRIETOR OF THIS WELL known and old established Hotel begs to inform his former patrons and friends that on and after the 1st of November next he will remove from the old, dilapidated building on Broadway, where he has resided some years, and, at enormous loss, BUILDING AND REFURNISHING A NEW STRUCTURE, which was built expressly for a hotel, on the southeast corner of Sansome and Pine streets.
The SELLING IS FIRE PROOF and supplied with water and bath and gas, and water by the Crystal Spring Company, and every convenience is offered at this favorite resort, which will be established, large and commodious as it is, without saying that the BROOKLYN will be second to none in the city.
BED-BANTS, MATTRESSES, PILLOWS and all other articles of the kind, are invited to come and examine them before purchasing elsewhere. The Brooklyn Hotel can be reached in less time, and if you do not like the accommodations in it all cost you is a ride.
The omnibus will always be on the wharf on the arrival of the Inland and coast steamers, to take passengers and baggage to the hotel. The Brooklyn House is the property of a resident, being in the central part of the city, and the care of the city Railroad pass the door every few minutes, connecting with all parts of the city. There is a large READING ROOM attached to the House and library containing the latest papers and books, exclusively for the use of guests. Parties will be let by the night, week or month, and the rates will be low. Street Horses for sale or to let by the day, week or month, at reduced rates.
THE TABLE will always be supplied with the best advance of the season; and from the market can afford. Meals at all hours. Hoping to be favored by my former patrons, and the public generally, I remain, yours, JOHN SILEY, Jr.
oc31

TREMONT HOUSE.
JACKSON STREET,
Old No. 126 and 128, New Nos. 610 and 612,
Between Sansome and Montgomery
(Half a block West from the Post-office,)
SAN FRANCISCO CALIFORNIA.
THE TREMONT HOUSE has been re-opened under the old and well known name of Tremont, with Rooms and Family Rooms. Every exertion will be made to render the House in every way worthy of the favor bestowed on the oldest "TREMONT HOUSE" which was opened in California. Beware of Runners who represent other places or houses. They represent this House to be full, with a view to your custom.
E. NEWTON'S, Proprietor.
Livery Stable in connection with the House.
jl26 1m

BELA UNION HOTEL,
LOS ANGELES.
JOHN KING & HENRY HEMMEL, Proprietors
THIS Palace House having leased the above named Hotel, would announce their friends and the traveling public that they have refitted it in a style to please the most fastidious. THE BEST BOARD in Southern California.
Fare low, as we do not wish to be compounded for by any person, or suite of persons, at 3 hereafter. THE BAR will be kept as before in charge of Mr. Hemmel.
All the Stages to and from Los Angeles arrive at and depart from the House. The Los Angeles Star and Southern Vineyard Co.'s Express will leave this House daily.
The Proprietors, grateful for past favors, trusts by renewed exertions to merit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to him.
jy4 3m

WARM SPRINGS HOTEL
ALAMEDA COUNTY.
THIS Favorite Place of Resort for Invalids and pleasure seekers having been thoroughly renovated and put in complete order, is now open for the reception of visitors. Extensive improvements are in progress, so that accommodations can be afforded to many more persons than any former season. The Stages from Oakland to San Jose leave the upstairs for Oakland at 8 A. M. and leave Oakland for the Springs on the arrival of the first

The following appeared in our city edition of last week. Rev. Father Gallagher's sermon at the obsequies of Sister Mary Paul Beechinor is here given in full:

It is seldom, beloved brethren, we are called on to assist at such obsequies as the present; for, though this holy man was summoned hence in her twenty seventh year, and her death was comparatively unexpected, we come not together to mourn her premature decease—to lament her unprovided death. Though her loving parents still survive, and their hearts' affections seatred in her—the first pledge of their chaste attachment—though no one knew her but to love her, nor made her acquaintance but to be edified; still, come we not to mingle our tears with those of bereaved relations, nor to sigh over the sudden and vital disseverance of the chords of tender affection. We come to bless and praise the God of Infinite Mercy, "that in calling this youthful nun, thus early, to her crown," He is boasting, in her, his own work and crowning His own gifts! Let it not be supposed that this is the unmeaning affectation of idle panegyrick!" God forbid that I should insinuate even, on such an occasion, and in such a place, what I did not think. The prominent characteristic of this holy "religious Virgin"—that which made the surviving impression on every one who had the rare happiness to be edified by her acquaintance—was her devout life: innocence; not the innocence of incompetency or incapacity, (for she possessed the fullest and most minute knowledge of the whole science of her holy vocation, with a generous and enlarged appreciation of its spirit and end;) no mean no, but (I hesitate not to use the important office of "Mistress of Novices" even to her death), but the rigorous virtue of innocence, a sinlessness, a spotlessness, resulting from a mind, a heart, a body that had ever been a stranger to the sinister influences of the soft of her Celestial spouse, mayhap, to her reproaches on the footsteps of the martyrs, the confessors and virgins, for the victories they gained, who shall gainsay us, if eschewing sorrow on such an occasion, we rejoice and rare unto in our own day.

Sister Mary Paul Beechinor was born in a place called Clonability, Ireland, of very respectable parents, on the 23d of April, 1836. She was the novice, by the grace of God, of the distinguished Ecclesiastics, Very Rev. Dr. Murphy, P. P. of Kinsale, and Right Rev. Dr. Murphy, Lord Bishop of Hydrabad, India. Two of her aunts were or are exemplary "religious," and two of her brothers are just preparing for the Holy Ministry, showing that she was a member of a highly favored family. Having completed a refined and religious education, she entered the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, in Kinsale, her native place, and in the first year of her novitiate she emigrated to California—one of the religious of the first Sisters who landed here—and having finished her second years' novitiate, and made her solemn vows and religious profession on the 2d of July, 1856. It was evident, that in the Order of Mercy, of which she was so prevre-eminently yet so bright an ornament, she had found her true vocation. She advanced, day by day, in perfection. It was to meet in this valley of tears so happy a exercise. She could scarce restrain her grasling joy at each accession. The joy of her heart b eamed in her countenance. She was spoken of by visitors (who knew not the Sisters' secret) as the right of laughter," as not that there was levity in her laugh, but the calm serenity of her soul, the purity of her heart, her guiltless spirit sought such expression. In a word, she was a model "religieuse."

The sentence on the ring she received at her espousals (that is, her profession) would not seem unlikely the work of chance: they are the words of our Lord offering Himself to the Eternal Father, a victim for lost man: "Behold I come!" These words seemed the talisman of her action from the time California was proposed as the theatre of her sacrifice down to the last requirement of duty. I doubt not that when the last and summons reached her, "that she must receive her Father," her soul sent silent consolation when duty called. "Behold I come," were the last words her failing tongue articulated.

How sweet, how holy, must have been the communings between that pure soul and its Creator! How powerfully did the love of her Divine Spouse attract her to a kindred spirit of affection, and how perfectly discengage her from all ties. For several months it was known that her complaint was fatal—hopeless; yet she spoke of her approaching dissolution with the utmost composure; was desirous neither of life or rather with joy. Being asked on the very night of her death (for she was still able to walk about the house) "whether she would she drive out next morning, and whither would she wish to go?" she replied: "I would wish to receive to say good bye to the Sisters of Presentation and Sisters of Charity—the two other religious communities in the city—as she knew she must soon go home.

To the friends, saints and the unfailing fecundity of that great old country in bringing forth apostolic men and women, are we indebted for this animal negligence. She too, went from friends and home at the period of life when the sacrifice appeared the greater, offering herself to her Divine Spouse, the happy victim of His love. With what undeviating devotion she labored in His service! with what completed the Holocaust, laying down her life at His feet, the willing martyr of her duties. It were I be unjust to withhold from her daughter her example, now, that her death has stilenced our lips. She will long be remembered in her Community as a model of obedience, a pattern of piety and pure intention, and as an "ornament to the young to attain religion, ch rish chastity, and practice humility—the mother of virtues.

We thank and bless that dear old country that gave her. In cordial gratitude we thank the parents that made for us so costly a sacrifice. We bless and reverence religion that could would, and train and fashion such a spirit. We thank, above all, the God of Mercy, who has shown us, in these days of iniquity, such a triumph of His fcrce. Having fulfilled her mission and been called to her crown, she lays her down to sleep on the distant shores of the Pacific, whose billows, with ceaseless voice, will chant her requiem, until the last trump shall awake her on the morning of the Resurrection! Sleep, sweet sister! Rest in peace! and may the souls of all the faithful departed, through the mercy of God and merits of Christ, rest in peace. Amen.

Information wanted of Thomas Moran, a native of Gowran, county Kilkenny, Ireland, and late of Fort Cascade, the Lower Cascades, Washington Territory. If this gentleman communicates with Mr. John K. Tenison, Covington, Kentucky, he can get some valuable information respecting his property in Ireland.

OUR AGENTS.

Mr. Henry Jenkins is our agent for Columbia, Springfield and Sac Mill Flat.

Mr. James O'Dwyer is our agent for Monte Christo, Haven's Diggings and Chaparel Hill.

ALTARADO—William Ryan.
ALLISON'S RANCH—P. Golway.
ANGEL'S CAMP—Michael Cosgrove.
ARADOR—Michael McDonald.
ALBANOHESTOWN—John Hogan.
BEAR VALLEY—M. T. Brady.
BUCKEYE, Albany Flat—Jas. McGuirk.
BERRICIA—Charles Quig.
BIG BAR, Trinity county—D. B. Murphy.
BIG OAK FLAT—John Carlon.
CHICO—James Dunning.
CRESCENT CITY—R. Dugan.
CALLAHAN'S RANCH—William Murphy.
CAMPO SECO—Patrick O'Hare.
CARSON'S—Thomas Rooney.
CROCKER (Patterson P. O.)—H. Cassidy.
CHICO—James Diamond.
CAMPTONVILLE—Bezzo & Smith.
CORRALITOS—M. Byrne.
COLUMBIA—Henry Jenkins.
COLOMA—Dugald McPhee.
CUMBERLAND—Wm. Ryan.
DIAMOND SPRINGS—James Daly.
DOUGLAS CITY—Chas. O'Connell.
DOWNIEVILLE—John J. Finney.
EXPRESS RANCH—Anthony Smith.

PAINTS, OILS, &C.

PAINTS, OILS,
—AND—
GLASS DEPOT.

D. J. OLIVER
HAS NOW ON HAND AND FOR SALE:
115 tons White lead, pure, in tin and wood;
150 " Colors, assorted;
1,200 bbls Linseed Oil, Boiled and Raw;
170 " Linseed Oil, boiled and raw;
150 " Linseed Oil, boiled and raw;
300 " Coal Tar;
60 " White Varnish;
150 " Coach Varnish;
300 " Coach assorted Brushes.

AT REDUCED RATES.
—AT—
210 Jackson Street,
170 " Clay "
150 " Sacramento "
AND
310 Washington Street,
317 and 319 Oregon street.

JAMES R. DEANE,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN
Paints, Oils,
Window Glass,
Varnishes,
Brushes, &c.
Constantly in store and receiving all the above articles, selected from the best manufactories in the East and Europe.
No. 318 Clay street—between 3rd & 4th Fronts
Opposite Railroad House, my18 SAN FRANCISCO.

KELLY & WADE,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE,
VARNISHES,
BRUSHES,
GLASS, ETC.
No. 105 & 107 California street,
Between Sansome and Front, SAN FRANCISCO.
☞ House and Sign Painting. ☜ my9

JOHN McDONALD & CO.,
DEALERS IN
Paints, Oils, Glass, Varnishes, Brushes, &c.
PAPER HANGINGS,
Kerosene and Coal Oil,
Burning Fluid,
Alcohol, Camphene,
Lamps, Wicks,
Chimneys, &c.
All Orders for Painting and Paper Hanging promptly attended to.
Estimates Furnished from Plans and Specifications.
No. 24 SECOND STREET,
One door from the corner of Stephenson,
my18 SAN FRANCISCO.

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS
AND
LOAN SOCIETY.
Office—306 Jackson street, first Building west of Montgomery street.

OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT.....M. D. SWEENY.
VICE PRESIDENT.....J. O'SULLIVAN.

TRUSTEES:
JOHN MAHON,
C. D. O'SULLIVAN,
JOHN SULLIVAN,
E. J. TOBIN,
D. J. CALLAGHAN,
J. CALLAGHAN,
F. McLEAN,
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD,
T. J. BRODERICK.

TREASURER.....EDWARD MARTIN
ATTORNEY.....RICHARD TOBIN.

Remittances from the Interior.
Remittances from the Country may be sent through Wells, Fargo & Co's Express Office, or any reliable Banking House, and delivery or payment including fee for their safe delivery, will be made to the person whose name is written on the face of it. A receipt for the money must be taken from the agent by whom the deposit may have been made.

Deposits received from two and one-half dollars upwards.

OFFICE HOURS—From 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. jy7

REYNOLDS, REIS & CO.,
BANKERS,
No. 400 Montgomery street.
SELL EXCHANGE IN SUMS TO SUIT, drawn on
The Bank of the State of New York.
Drafts drawn on
MESSRS. REYNOLDS BRO.....Marysville
MESSRS. BARNUM & KITTS.....Downieville
Purchase Gold Bullion and Mint Certificates. Discount Marysville Paper.
Make Advances on Gold for Assay or Coinage, attend to collections and transact a GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.
jy4

V. MARZIOU & CO.,
BANKERS,
Importers and Commission Merchants.
Regular line of sailing Packets between Havre and San Francisco. Offices, 15 Commercial street.
Money received on deposit. Exchange on France for sale. jy4

PIANOS, ETC.

GREAT TRIUMPH!
STEINWAY & SONS
WERE awarded the First Prize Medal at the late great International Exhibition at London, over the two brinkers of Boston and Philadelphia! Two entire pianos from all parts of the world.
The special correspondent of the New York Times says:
"Messrs Steinway & Sons embarrassed by the jurors in simplicity, and strength and more to the point than that of any American exhibitor.
A complete assortment of the above superior instruments always on hand.
PIANO TUNING done by a first class workman, from Steinway & Sons' factory, New York, constantly on hand.
Warerooms, 415 Clay street.
jy4

JACOB ZECH,
FIRST PREMIUM
PIANOFORTE MANUFACTURER,
529 California Street,
BETWEEN MONTGOMERY AND KEARNEY STREET

THE UNDERSIGNED BEGS TO INFORM the citizens of San Francisco and vicinity, that he has a first-class assortment of their rosewood and mahogany PIANOS for sale, which for tone, touch and workmanship, which are superior in their tone and touch to any instrument here or in the Eastern States.
Orders are respectfully solicited and examination of the above invited.
Every instrument made by me will be warranted for three years.
Pianos tuned and repaired
apr25 JACOB ZECH.

WOODWORTH, ALLOVON & CO.,
Paris and San Francisco,
IMPORTERS OF
PIANO-FORTES, MELODEONS,
CHURCH AND PARLOR
HARMONIUMS,
HARMONIC PIANO-FORTES,
REED AND PIPE ORGANS,
MUSIC STOOLS, PIANO COVERS
MUSIC RACKS, Etc.,
Factories Agents for the sale of the Steinhardt Piano-Forte and Pilcher Melodeon Piano-Fortes for Hire
Masonic Temple Building, cor. Montgomery and Post streets.
[Entrance on Post street.]

H. CRAMER,
ORGANIST ST. FRANCIS CATHEDRAL,
AND
Teacher of Piano, Guitar and the rules of Harmony,
No. 126 Kearny street, near Sutter. s28

THE UNDERSIGNED BEGS TO Inform the friends and the public that on or about the first of January next, I will in connection with his pianoforte manufactory, open a Music Store, where I will be happy to wait on my friends and the public generally. This store will be under the management of my daughter Louisa, assisted by Miss Mary Ann Zech, who will be pleased to wait on the ladies and give them the advantage of learning, practicing and selecting any day. Music for the general supply is always in the Principal. There will be different Pianos on hand for the inducement of the purchaser, and at times in each either a Steinway, a Chickering, or a Pilcher, and sometimes all three during the day. Chickering Pianos for Sale. Persons having to Piano at home, will be pleased to have the same advantage as those who are in possession. In order to arrange in a proper way for the opening, it is desirable that all persons who wish to avail themselves of this opportunity to purchase, will make an early application. Further particulars about the mode of instalment and the indemnity we offer, will be given verbally or calling at my present 109 Montgomery street, near Sutter, any day between 12 and 3 o'clock.
GUSTAVE A. ZECH.
Organist of Calvary Church, also of Musical and Literary Society. d&tf

STEAMERS.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.
The following Steamships will be dispatched in the month of January, 1864:
Jan. 1—CONSTITUTION, J. T. Watkins, Commander.
Jan. 10—ST. LOUIS, E. B. Ferris worth, Commander.
Jan. 20—GOLDEN AGE, W. H. Hudson, Commander.
From Folsom street Wharf, at 2 o'clock A. M., punctual ly, FOR PANAMA.
Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the Panama Railroad Company and from Aspinwall to New York by the Atlantic and Pacific Steamship Company.
A. R. FORBES, Agent P. M. S. S. Co.
Cor. Battery and Lat'lestreets.

PEOPLE'S
STEAMSHIP LINE TO NEW YORK!
Via Panama Railroad.
LOW RATES OF PASSAGE!!
THROUGH IN ADVANCE OF THE MAIL.
Treasure taken on Steamers through to New York, Free!!
THE FAST AND FAVORITE IRONSIDE Steamship
MOSES TAYLOR,
E. HOWES.....Commander.
Will leave for Panama direct, on WEDNESDAY,
From MISSION STREET WHARF,
AT 9 O'CLOCK, A. M., PUNCTUALLY.
Connecting at Aspinwall by Panama Railroad, with the new and splendid Steamship
AMERICA,
2,000 Tons.....JEFF. MAURY, Commander
These steamers are unsurpassed for speed, comfort and elegance of accommodations.
Passengers will be conveyed to Panama, as if from Aspinwall to New York free of all expense. Thus securing the ULTIMO TRANSITORILY. Rule of Lading furnished on application.
☞ For further information or passage, apply to J. B. McGERN, Agent,
my26 and 27 Battery st., wharves.

SOUTHERN DISPATCH LINE OF PACKETS
FOR SAN DIEGO
AND INTERMEDIATE PORTS.
Consisting of the slipper Brig
PRIDE OF THE SEA.....Capt. L. S. Gorie
The elipper Brig
BOSTON.....Capt. W. H. Morton
The new slipper Schooner
LEWIS PERRY.....Wm. Hopke
Sailing every ten days.
For freight or passage, apply on board, at Commercial street wharf, or to N. PIERCE & Southern Packet Office corner Market and East streets.

WINTER ARRANGEMENT.
For San Jose, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Gilroy, San Juan, and Watsonville.
On and after SATURDAY, NOV. 7, the favorite, fast sailing steamer,
SOPHIE McLEAN,
CHAS. THORNE.....Master.
Will leave for the above ports every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, at 3 o'clock, P. M.
Connecting at Alviso with the Stages for Santa Cruz, Gilroy, San Juan and Watsonville.
Returning, will leave Alviso every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, connecting with stage that leaves Santa Cruz at 6 o'clock, A. M.
Through Tickets will be furnished on board.
FARE, to Alviso.....$ 2 00
" Watsonville, &c.....$ 3 00
For freight or passage apply on board, or to nov7-tf C. WHITNEY, Jr., Pro-rietor.

A LADIES' FAIR
WILL BE HELD
IN THE BASEMENT OF
ST. FRANCIS' CHURCH,
VALLEJO STREET,
MONDAY EVENG., JANUARY 18, 1864,
IN THE PURPOSE OF RAISING FUNDS TO liquidate the debt now upon the edifice.
The ladies of the parish are engaged in making preparations for the Festival, which will be well supplied with all useful and fancy articles.
Refreshments and Dinner Tickets of the best description.
MARKET STREET RAILROAD.
TIME TABLE.
On and after November 1st, 1863, notice will run by the Time Table, as follows:
From the Mission, the first car will start at 6 A. M., and every thirty minutes thereafter until 8 P. M., and every hour afterwards until 12 P. M.
From the Mission, the first car will start at 6 A. M., and every thirty minutes thereafter until 8 P. M., and every hour afterwards until 12 P. M.
From the Mission, the first train starts from the Mission at 8:30 A. M., and from the city at 9 A. M., running in connection with the Haight Valley train as before. nov1 C. D. HAVEMEYER, President.

HOLIDAY FEASTS.
EXTRA MINCE & PUMPKIN PIES,
For the Holidays.
THE FINEST ASSORTMENT OF CAKES, FRUIT and Confectionery, manufactured every morning expressly for Ladies, retail and cash at our confectionary, and manufactory.
SWAIN & BROWN'S BAKERY,
No. 5 Kearny street. dec

PHELAN & COLLENDER'
Model Billard Tables
AND
COMBINATION CUSHIONS!
GEO. E. PHELAN and MATTHEW K. COLLENDER have formed a copartnership for the manufacture of PHELAN'S MODEL BILLIARD TABLES and COMBINATION CUSHIONS, which invite the public to call at their establishment and inspect the stock. A full assortment of every article in the Billiard trade constantly on hand.
G. E. PHELAN,
M. F. HUGHES,
724 and 726 Montgomery st.,
Opposite the Metropolitan Theatre.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. CATHERINE'S
ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES,
BENICIA, CAL.
THIS Institution is conducted by the Sisters of St. Dominic, and is situated in the healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The plan of education embraces the various branches of instruction usually taught in the most approved seminaries for young ladies. The most conscientious and unremitting attention is given to the advancement of the pupils in the principles and practice of Christian virtue, as well as in their intellectual improvement. Particular care is directed toward the promotion of refinement of manners, and the constant maintenance of a polite and amiable deportment. The discipline is kind and parental; and the Sisters use every endeavor to secure the health, comfort and happiness of those intrusted to their charge. Scrupulous attention is paid to the personal neatness of the pupils. The buildings are extensive and commodious, and have large and ventilated school rooms, dormitories, and sheltered grounds. Hot and cold baths for the use of the pupils are provided in the house.
Pupils of any religious denomination will be received, but, for the sake of uniformity, all are required to be present at the regular religious exercises of the Institution. An annual examination and distribution of premiums takes place at the end of July, followed by a vacation of one month.
THE UNIFORM.—The uniform consists of a white muslin dress, and one of blue for winter, for summer, and a black merino dress for winter with loose capes of the same material, a straw bonnet trimmed with white ribbon, and one trimmed with green.
The above uniform is obligatory only on Sundays and festivals. Other articles of dress are allowed to be worn whatever their parents think proper to furnish them with. Each pupil is expected to furnish a number of napkins, a silver fork, three pillow cases, two pairs of blankets, four pairs of sheets, three towels, four aprons, one dozen of knives, one silver fork, spoon and goblet.
TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$ 5 00
Board and Tuition, per session.....100
Washing, per session.....50
Physician's Fees, (unless in the premises to pay
Physician's Medicines, per session.....10 00
Piano Forte and use of instrument.....10 00
Use of Library, but there is no extra charge for the Prizes, Imposition, Recreation, Music, Use of Piano Forte and Pencil Needle Work.
Deposits are required to be made half a session in advance and no deductions made for half a session of absence, nor any case of sickness.
Parents are requested to be punctual in the payment of their children's pension. Pupils remaining at the Academy during the vacation will be charged twenty dollars for their board during that time.
SEWING PATRONAGE.
For Dresses and Underclothing Respectfully Solicited.
Orthography, Reading.....$ 5 00
Orthography, Reading, Writing, Arithmetic, History, Geography, Grammar, Composition, Rhetoric, Mythology, Botany, Book-keeping Theology, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry and Astronomy.....$10 00
Grade Chemistry Tapestry etc.....$20 00
Music.....50
Entrance.....10
Physician's Fees.....10
Drawing.....25
Use of Piano (for practice).....$ 5
There is no extra charge for French, Spanish and Vocal Music.
All correspondence respecting indices will be subject to the inspection of the Superior.
Address, MOTHER MARY GOEMAERE, O.S.D.
nov14-tf

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE.
THE Twelfth Annual Session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, August 19th. The Course of Instruction embraces all the branches of a polite and useful Education.
TERMS:
Entrance, or Matriculation fee, $15.00, payable only once.....$ 15 00
Board and Tuition, per month.....20 00
Bed and Bedding.....2 50
Washing, per month.....2 00
Physician's Fee, (unless in the premises to pay).....1 00
Use of Library.....1 00
Use of Philosophical Apparatus.....1 00
Use of Musical Instrument.....5 00
Modern Languages, viz: Spanish, French, Gerand Italian, each.....5 00
Drawing and Painting, each.....5 00
Use of Piano, per month.....2 00
Use of Violin.....2 00
Use of Guitar.....2 00
Bed and Bedding, each.....2 50
Use of Bath, per month.....1 00
Graduation Fee.....10 00
Graduation Fee, Classical Course.....20 00
Graduation Fee, Commercial Course.....10 00
Payments are required monthly in advance.
Each pupil is required to furnish a knife, fork, spoon, plate, napkin, and six towels.
Pupils will be required to supply the Prefect of Studies with Text Books, Stationery, &c., &c.
Address, REV. J. BAPTIST MANUCY, S. J.,
President of Santa Clara College.
Santa Clara, Cal.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,
SAN JOSE, CAL.
THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, AUGUST 10th. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a polite and useful Education.
TERMS:
Entrance.....$ 10 00
Board and Tuition, per session.....200
Washing.....50
Physician's Fees.....10
Use of Piano.....10 00
Use of Harp.....10 00
Use of Guitar.....5 00
Drawing and Painting.....5 00
Modern Languages.....5 00
Bed and Bedding.....5 00
Graduation Fee.....10 00
Graduation Fee, Classical Course.....20 00
Graduation Fee, Commercial Course.....10 00
Payments are required monthly in advance.
Each pupil is required to furnish a knife, fork, spoon, plate, napkin, and six towels.
Pupils will be required to supply the Prefect of Studies with Text Books, Stationery, &c., &c.
Address, REV. J. BAPTIST MANUCY, S. J.,
President of Santa Clara College.
Santa Clara, Cal.

ST. IGNATIUS COLLEGE.
THIS INSTITUTION is under the direction of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, and is situated on Market street, between Fourth and Fifth streets. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a polite and useful education.
TERMS, per month:
Tuition in the Preparatory Department.....$ 2 50
" " Junior " .....3 00
" " Senior " .....4 00
Washing, and mending of articles washed, per month.....1 00
Bed and Bedding, per month.....1 00
Modern Languages, each.....1 00
Use of Piano.....2 00
Use of Violin.....1 00
Use of Guitar.....1 00
Graduation Fee.....10 00
Graduation Fee, Classical Course.....20 00
Graduation Fee, Commercial Course.....10 00
Payments are required monthly in advance.
Each pupil is required to furnish a knife, fork, spoon, plate, napkin, and six towels.
Pupils will be required to supply the Prefect of Studies with Text Books, Stationery, &c., &c.
Address, REV. J. BAPTIST MANUCY, S. J.,
President of Santa Clara College.
Santa Clara, Cal.

THE MONITOR.

VOL. VI. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1864. NO. 44.

THE MONITOR;

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF
Catholic Literature and General Intelligence.

Printed and published every Saturday, at the office, No. 630 Clay St., near Montgomery, San Francisco.

T. A. BE...DY,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS:
Per annum, in advance (by mail).....$5 00
Half yearly, do.....3 00
City subscribers (payable to the carriers) per week.....15c

THE DUBLIN CORPORATION AND PRINCE ALBERT.

A meeting of the Corporation of Dublin was held February 15, when an application was received asking as a site for a monument to Sir Oratan, the statue of College Green. This was opposed by a majority, who were in favor of granting the same spot for a monument to the late Prince Albert. Mr. Sullivan moved a reference of the whole matter, with the following result:

For the Amendment—Aldermen Tarpey, Pilkie, and Fleming, Messrs. Egan, Sutton, Sullivan, Reid, Murphy, and Dowling—8.

Against the Amendment—Aldermen Harvey, Wilson, Atkinson, Mapleton, Bonnell, John Reynolds, Sir John Gray, Messrs. Lawless, Del Mahon, Carroll, Darcy, Darlin, Vernier, Rickford, Byrne, Warren, Clement, Graham, Wheeler, Meade, Maclean, Draper, Stanley, Lalor, O'Brien, Grayson, Sir John Gray, Messrs. Barlow, Hughes, Kellogg, Kehoe, Keogh and Wells—30.

The original motion to grant College Green for the Albert monument, was then put.—Those who voted for the amendment voted against the resolution, and those who voted against the amendment voted for the resolution. The resolution was accordingly carried.

Sir John Gray then moved that a formal communication be made to the Lord Chancellor of the granting of the site.

Mr. Sullivan then alluded to the influx of unknown Conservative members and the conduct of the Catholic Whigs. Good work it was for Henry Grattan to strive as he strives, for man like you, who weigh your debt of gratitude to him so lightly. You are unworthy of such a man (cheers). O'Connell once boldly said he almost regretted that he emancipated you. He was doubtless right—he knew you well. Surely, Sir R. Peel may reclaim, when next he meets some who have voted here to-day:—"Well done, my good and faithful servants, you have done your work well; you have ordered that College Green, above all places in Dublin, a statue shall be raised to the man who said, "The Irish are an abject deserving of sympathy than the Poles," (loud applause). Where is such an act that I would rather have left unsaid, had another course been taken; but the trush shall go forth from this assembly, after the course taken here, that that statue will be hateful in the eyes of Irishmen—(applause from the galleries, and cries of hear, hear, and no, no, from the members); and the time will come when it will be passed with hissing and scorn—there is a regular scene of uproar ensued, the applause from the galleries being most vociferous, while contentious excitement appeared to prevail among the gentlemen on the Conservative side of the house). If the people of Ireland were consulted, the slanderer of the Poles should never be honored in Dublin. What did he ever do for Ireland? He was a good husband—I hope there are no bad ones there (hear). He was a good father. Are domestic virtues such a rarity in Ireland? (hear). It is a strange compliment to offer to their virtues to grant a site for a monument to one who is rare in her family that we should search it as a marvel. It ought to be an odious and hateful compliment to say to the Queen, "May it please your Majesty, your uncle George was a profligate and a libertine, and up to the present reign vice and immorality have prevailed so completely in your family, that we regard a virtuous sovereign of your dynasty as a rare bird upon earth." We had no love for him; we owe nothing to his memory. He insulted our creed; he slandered our country. Those who bear the badges or seek for the rewards of the faction may be obsequious if they will; but they cannot misrepresent the people's feelings. The heart of Ireland will recoil from the hateful alien image you have set up in the place which we begged in vain for an Irish patriot (loud and prolonged shouting).

Sir John Gray said he stood that day in assembly of gentlemen who were not afraid to show their loyalty to their sovereign (groans and hisses). He preferred to be the first to call attention to profess the most unbounded admiration for the Prince who lunched Poland, Ireland and her priests. He boasted of his loyalty and supported a few slap-traps. Prince Albert was a working man (cries of—He has disturbed O'Connell's grave in the same manner as Alderman Reynolds, for ridiculing puppies. He identified Reynolds with (O'Connell (!), and said his friend (Alderman Reynolds) need not be ashamed of having been assailed (groans, and cries of "turncoat," from the galleries). He referred to the limited means of the Albert Committee, and would they do anything surreptitious.

Alderman Plunkett, in referring to the observations of Sir John Gray, alluded to a declaration signed by the Duke of Leinster against the Repeal of the Union, and remarked there was one great point which Sir John Gray had omitted in his panegyric on our glorious constitution—namely, the great privilege its people of this country had to starve and die (applause from the galleries).

Mr. Martin said the discussion which had been taken place showed clearly how hollow and spurious were the assertions made at the opening, that no disrespect was intended to the illustrious Prince they were called on to do honor (loud hisses from the gallery). Mr. Martin called to his lordship to have the gallery cleared.

Lord Mayor—Is the policeman there?

A Voice from the gallery—No, sir, he's gone out (a laugh).

Mr. Martin—I must ask to have the gallery cleared.

The gentlemen who had voted for Mr. Sullivan's amendment here rose from their seats in a body, and commenced to leave the Council Chamber.

A Voice—A shoer for Mr. Sullivan (loud cheers, and cries of "leave.")

Another Voice—A groan for Reynolds (ironious groaning.)

Another Voice—A groan for Gray (continued groans.)

Most of the occupants on the galleries then commenced to move off of their own accord, and in a short time but very few remained.

Alderman Reynolds addressed the Council, and being repeatedly interrupted by hisses from the remaining occupants of the galleries, he turned round and proceeded to lecture them pretty sharply, calling them a "set of unmannerly ruffians."

Sir John Gray's motion was then put and carried.

An Alderman Reynolds appeared a short time after, he was immediately surrounded by a body who commenced hooting him on all sides. This uncomplimentary greeting seemed to put him rather out of temper, and, collaring one individual, he was about administering what happened to be near him to take him into custody. The row was at length, however, quelled, and it was let go, and the Aldermen proceeded on his way, the crowd following, following him for some distance.

Commenting on the preceding, the Dublin Irishman says: "The people have two ways by which to prove their sense of the threatened proceeding. They have first—to pull down the statue if ever erected (which we hope for the artists sake may not become necessary); and second, and in any case—to weed the corporation of Dublin of the foul crop who retired their heads so high on Monday last."

The Nation says:—"We have resigned ourselves to the idea that O'Connell is to be excluded from the historic ground of College Green, but we do not therefore hold that the place is to be given up to a foreigner who had no connection with Ireland. It should be reserved, as Alderman Plunkett well suggested, for a statue of Henry Grattan. He was a great orator, a splendid statesman—a hero to the Protestant Church, in which he was born and in which he died—and a benefactor to the Catholics, for whose relief from a degrading bondage he labored with his whole heart and soul, and with splendid talents. On his character he centered the love and admiration of Irishmen, without distinction of creed or party. Let that site in front of the house in which he struggled for the legislative independence of his country, and asserted the great principles of civil and religious liberty, be retained for him. Let the name of slavery and of perpetuity—in the name of Ireland—let the idea of setting up a statue of Prince Albert in that place be abandoned. Beyond doubt or question its presence there would be an outrage on dearly cherished and highly honorable feelings of the Irish people. It would be to them a nay (nasty) insult, a fresh wound, a protective of rankling passion, and possibly a cause of strife.

The Santiago Catastrophe.

A cruel charge has been made upon the priests connected with the Church, that they sought only their own safety and that of what has been flippantly called "their wooden idols and trumpery utensils," and that, having secured these objects, they skulked off and left their victims to perish in the flames. The iniquity of this calumny—for it is a foul one—is best proved by the facts as given about to be stated. There were only two priests, and only two priests, and four young glories in the Church at the time the conflagration occurred. One of the priests was dragged from the church insensible and nearly suffocated by a lay member of the congregation; and the other remained at his post to the last, endeavoring to the last moment when he saw that all chance of rescuing the poor victims had vanished, he still remained in the doorway of the sacristy and flames drove him from it, doing his duty as a faithful shepherd and a devoted priest of the Catholic Church. Of the four young ecclesiastics, we lament to say that three perished in the flames, two young sisters of one of them having shared the same fate. And as to the articles that were saved, the first place to which the Sacristy, which was the last place to which the flames penetrated, and even this was done, not by either priest or clerk, but by a lay member of the flock, on impulse. Another charge is that these cruel, selfish priests, who saved only for themselves and their trumpery, closed the sacristy door and then prevented the escape of many. The charge is an abominable falsehood. The sacristy door was never closed, and several escaped through it. Throughout that dreadful night the Archbishop and priests of Santiago were incessant in their pious labors of attending to the sufferers and administering the consolations of religion to the dying. Another of the priests who escaped the ruins of the church of Santiago is the eloquent and already alluded to, that one of them came upon the burning altar, and and the horrors of the dreadful scene pronounced the absolution over the dying. In acting thus the priest did his duty in the midst of great peril to his own person; and for this he has been held up to obloquy, especially by the blasphemous pen of the Chilian press, who speak of "the monasteries of superstition" as glibly as if they had studied under the author of the Darwin Letter."

The deaths of Rev. Mr. Pouzoy, P. P. Dundalk, Very Rev. Raymond O'Hanlon, O. D. C., Dublin, and Rev. Phillip Dowley, President of the College of Castleknock, are announced.

LETTER FROM DUBLIN.

(CORRESPONDENCE N. Y. IRISH AMERICAN.)

The Lord Mayor gave his first banquet in a style which, as the phrase goes, "left nothing to be desired." An unusually large number of guests had been invited and were present, and all have pronounced the scene to have surpassed anything of the kind previously witnessed in Dublin. What was especially remarkable in the evening's proceedings was the Lord Mayor's candid and spirited reference to the actual state of Ireland. He did not shy at "make things pleasant" to the ears of the Lord Lieutenant and the other loyalists who were among the company, but he spoke out the truth, in perfect keeping with the manner in which he had spoken it at the Board of the Central Relief Committee. The Lord Lieutenant made an attempt to put a brighter face on the matter, but I am so glad to find him self compelled to say much that was false, equivocal and unfeeling, and he got very strongly hissed for his pains. The newspaper men are noting some other sensible innovations in the arrangement of the banquet. One is that the toast of "The Press" was advanced from its usual undignified place at the very foot of the list, and placed in a position more in accordance with its importance. Another is that the list of fare was printed in plain English, instead of French, or a stupid and disguised under French names, as has been customary. On the whole there is but one opinion of the banquet, and that is that it has been a brilliant success.

The Adelaide Hospital.

Most Irishmen have heard of the Adelaide Hospital of Dublin, within the doors of which a Catholic priest will not be allowed to enter even though a member of his communion may be dying in one of the wards, and begging piteously for the services of a priest. It is not long since a dying Catholic, whose case had come to the ears of some humane people, was by them brought out of the hospital into the street to receive the rites of the Church. On former occasion, the interference of the French Consul was necessary to get a Catholic out of his nation out of the place so that he might have the ministrations of a Catholic clergyman. These cases very properly brought down much odium on the institution. At present the managing committee have decided to avoid such difficulties for the future. How? Why by granting free permission to the Catholic clergy to visit patients of their creed who might be within the hospital and in danger of death. No, but by making a rule that henceforth no Catholic patient shall be admitted into the building! Such is Christian charity, such is the spirit of Protestantism in Dublin—such is their new reading of the parable of the good Samaritan.

The Kenmare Election.

The redoubtable Fitzstephen Orpen is laboring hard in the columns of the Warder to awaken Irish Protestants to a sense of the unbridledness of the government, and of their alarming danger. Protestants in his opinion, judgmentis will come upon England for this. The Church are plotting, her destruction, and it is no wonder that God should punish England for if she is right in doing so much for them as they in their insolence say they have done, she ought to do a great deal more. "May we not ask, then," he says, "with the Protestants of Ireland thinking of judgments as decreed, the Roman Catholics plotting to inflict vengeance by any and every means, above all with God and truth conjointly declaiming their indignation—is not the condition of England very seriously alarming?" And he further says that every nation is on the tiptoe of expectation to see Ireland treated by the conjoint iron-sticks of Exeter and America; and if any one double these assertions, he refers him to the letters of John O'Mahony published in the American and Irish papers. In a subsequent letter this extraordinary raster, who is not without followers and admirers, returns to the disaffected Romanism of Ireland.

The Dublin Exhibition.

The Dublin Exhibition in refusing a slander of the London Society Standard upon the Archbishop of Dublin says:

If Dr. McKnight, the editor knew as much of the history of science and Roman orthodoxy as a junior student of the Catholic University, he would have known that learned Protestants reject the calumnious statement that the Catholic Church declared any discoveries in science to be "heresies." He would have learned from Brewster and Hallam that a man may be a Protestant, and yet do justice to the Catholic Church. He do not see why as much might not be hoped—in time—from even a Derry Presbyterian—that is, if Darwin's Theory of Development be true. The Catholic Church did not declare Galileo's discoveries to be heresies. When Galileo attempted to play the theologian, as well as the mathematician, his wild work came under the cognizance of theologians. He had been repeatedly warned from interpreting in that way he might have freely pondered his mathematical theories without interruption. Cardinal Barberini, afterwards Pope Urban VIII., gave this advice:—"Galileo ought not to travel out of the limits of physics and mathematics; he should confine himself to such researches as Copernicus and Copernicus used. Declaring the views of Scripture, theologians ought to be the best ones particular province." A friend writes to him. "I have been this morning with Monsigneur Dini to see Cardinal Del Monte, who may be lately had a long conversation with Cardinal Bellarmine on the subject of the new opinions, and that the conclusion was, that by consulting himself to the system and its demonstration, without interfering with the Scriptures, the interpretation of which they wish and they kept it; had he told them to rise

The following appeared in our city edition of last week. Rev. Father Gallagher's sermon at the obsequies of Sister Mary Paul Boechlor is here given in full:

It is seldom, beloved brethren, we are called on to assist at such obsequies as the present; for, though this holy nun was summoned hence in her twenty seventh year, and her death was comparatively unexpected, we come not together to mourn her premature decease—to lament her unprovided death. Though her loving parents still survive, and their hearts' affections centred in her;—the first pledge of their chaste attachment—though no one knew her but to love her, nor made her acquaintance but to be edified; still, come we not to mingle our tears with those of bereaved relations, nor to sigh over the sudden and vital disseverance of the chords of tender affection. We come to bless and praise the God of Infinite Mercy, "that in calling this youthful nun, thus early, to her crown," He is honoring, in her, his own work and crowning His own gifts! Let it not be supposed that this is the unmeaning affirmation of idle panegyrick! God forbid that I should insinuate even, on such an occasion, and in such a place, what I did not think! The prominent characteristic of this holy "religieuse"—that which made the inevitable impression on every one who had the rare opportunity to be edified by her acquaintance—was her down-like innocence, not the innocence of incompetency or incapacity, (for she possessed the full;est and most minute knowledge of the whole science of her holy vocation, with a generous and enlarged appreciation of its spirit and end;) so much so, that [I] hesitate not to affirm the important office of "Mistress of Novices" even to her death), but the impression of an innocent, a sinless purity, which, notwithstanding from a mind, a heart, a body that had ever been a stranger to a wilful infringement on the gift of her Celestial spouse, mayhap, to her recompensing a privilege claimed by so very few, "Of never loo'ding, by mortal sin, the garment of her baptismal innocence."

I have the gravest warrant for what I judge, and the judgment of one who, for years, was her Superior and Director, "that what is generally believed of Aloysius of Gonzaga, and Nicholas, Bishop of Mayra, may, most probably, be believed of Sister Mary Paul Boechlor;" a blessed child of blessed parents! if we rejoice on the festivals of the martyrs, the confessors and virgins, for the mercies they gained, who shall gainsay us, if sachowing sorrow on such an occasion, we honor such rare virtue in our own day?

Sister Mary Paul Boechlor was born in a place called Clonakilty, Ireland, of very respectable parents, on the 23d of April, 1835. She was the niece, by the mother's side, of two distinguished Ecclesiastics, Rev. Jeremiah Murphy, P. P. of Kinsale, and Right Rev. Dr. Murphy, Lord Bishop of Hydrabath, also. Two of her aunts were or are exemplary "religieuses," and two of her brothers are just preparing for the Holy Priesthood. Her father she was a member of a highly favored family. Having received a refined and religious education, she entered the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, in Kinsale, in her eighteenth year. In the first year of her novitiate she emigrated to California—one of the original band of eight Sisters who landed here—and having finished her second years' novitiate, she made her solemn vows and religious profession on the 2d of July, 1856. It was evident, then, that in the Order of Mercy, of which she was so unpretending, yet so bright an ornament, she found her true vocation. She advanced, day by day, in perfection. It was hard to meet in this valley of tears so happy a creature. She could scarcely restrain her gushing joy on just occasions. The joy of her heart [k]nown in her countenance. She was spoken of by visitors (who knew not the Sisters' names), as the "laughing sister;" not that there was levity in her look, but a calm serenity of her soul, the peaceful quiet of her guileless spirit sought not the observation. In a word, she was a model "religieuse."

The motto on the ring she received at her espousals (that is her profession) would not seem entirely the work of chance; they are the words of the Lord addressing Himself to the Eternal Father, a victim for lost men: "Behold I come!" These words seemed the talisman of her action from the time God, in mercy, proposed as the theatre of her sacrifice down to the last requirement of duty. "Come not that when the last sad summons reached her, "that she must return to her Father," her usual silent ejaculation when duty called, "Behold I come," were the last words her failing tongue articulated.

How sweet, how holy, must have been the communings between that pure soul and its Creator! How powerful" did the love of her Divine Spouse attract her and absorb her every affection, and how perfectly disengage her from all else. For several months it was known that her complaint was fatal—incurable; yet she spoke of her approaching dissolution with the utmost composure; nay, with indifference, or rather with joy. Being asked on the very night of her death (she was still able to walk about the institution), "would she drive out next morning, and whither would she wish to go?" she replied she would wish to-morrow to say good bye to the Sisters of Presentation and Sisters of Charity—to see the other religious communities in the city—as she knew she must soon go there.

To the island of Saints and the unfailing fecundity of that great old country in bringing forth apostles, men and women, are we indebted for this sainted religieuse. She tore herself from friends and home at the period of life when the sacrifice appeared the greatest, offering herself to her Divine Spouse, the happy victim of His love. While under the gentle devotion she labored in His service till she completed the Holocaust, laying down her life at His feet, the willing martyr of her duties. It would be unjust to withhold from you the light of her example, now that her remains are unsoiled our lips. She will long be remembered in her Community as a model of obedience, a pattern of piety and pure devotion, and an encouragement to the young to embrace religion, cherish chastity, and practice humility—the mother of virtues.

We thank and bless that dear old country that gave her. In cordial gratitude we thank the parents that made for us so costly a sacrifice. We bless and reverence religion that could mould, and train and fashion such a soul. We thank, above all, the God of Mercy, who her shown us, in these days of iniquity, such a triumph of His Grace. Having fulfilled her mission and been called to her reward, she lays her down to sleep on the distant shores of the Pacific, whose billows, with ceaseless voice, will chant her requiem, until the last trump shall awake her on the morning of the Resurrection! Sleep, sweet sister! Rest in peace! and may the souls of all the faithful departed, through the mercy of God and merits of Christ, rest in peace. Amen.

Information wanted of Thomas Moran, a native of Tuam, county Kilkenny, Ireland, and late of Fort Cascade, the Lower Cascades, Washington Territory. If this gentleman communicate with Mr. John K. Tenison, Covington, Kentucky, he can get some valuable information respecting his property in Ireland.

OUR AGENTS.

Mr. Henry Jenkins is our agent for Columbia, Springfield and Saw Mill Flat.

Mr. James O'Dwyer is our agent for Monte Christo, Haven's Diggings and Chaparel Hill.

ALPARAGA—William Egan.
ALLISON'S RANCH—P. Golway.
ANGEL'S CAMP—Michael Cosgrove.
ANGELS—Michael McDonald.
ALLEGHANYTOWN—John Bogan.
BEAR VALLEY—M. T. Brady.
BERKEYS, Albany Flat—Jas. McGuirk.
BENICIA—Charles Quig.
BIG HAN, Trinity county—D. B. Murphy.
BIG OAK FLAT—John Carlon.
CHICO—James Diamond.
CHICORY CITY—D. Hogan.
CALLAHAN'S RANCH—William Murphy.
CAMPO SECO—Patrick O'Hare.
CARSON'S—Thomas Rooney.
CHEROKEE (Patterson P. O.)—H. Cassidy.
CHICO—James Diamond.
CAMPTONVILLE—Hearns & Smith.
CUMMINGS CAMP—M. Byrne.
COLUMBIA—Henry Jenkins.
COLOMA—Dugald McIver.
CUMBERLAND—Wm. Lee.
DIAMOND SPRINGS—James Daly.
DOWNIEVILLE CITY—Chas. O'Donnell.
DOWNIEVILLE—John J. Finney.
EMIGRANT RANCH—Anthony Smith.

PAINTS, OILS, &C.

PAINTS, OILS,
—AND—
GLASS DEPOT.

D. J. OLIVER
HAS NOW ON HAND AND FOR SALE:
115 tons White lead, pure, in the kid wood;
150 cases colors, assorted;
1,100 boxes Window Glass, assorted sizes, A quality
170 bbls Linseed Oil, refined and raw;
150 cases Linseed Oil, boiled and raw;
350 cases Turpentine;
40 bbls Varnish;
12 cases Varnish;
500 cases Mineral Brunner,
AT REDUCED RATES.
—ALSO—
200 cases Rosendale;
170 casks Lime;
20 bbls Sand;
50 bbls Plaster of Paris;
150 bbls Fuller's Earth;
15 bbls Castor Oil;
AT THE VERY LOWEST RATES.
CAMPHENE
DAILY DISTILLED.
Together with a large assortment of Plain, Dark Tints, stained and ornamental Glass, Oils, Gold Leaf, &c., &c., making the largest and best assorted stock in this State.
218 and 318 Washington street,
317 and 319 Oregon street. f4d2

JAMES R. DEANE,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN
Paints, Oils,
Window Glass,
Varnishes,
Brushes, &c.
Constantly in store and receiving all the above articles, selected from the best manufacturers in the East and Europe.
No. 214 Clay street—between 1st and Front
Opposite Railroad House. SAN FRANCISCO. mr 18

KELLY & WADE,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE,
VARNISHES,
BRUSHES,
GLASS, ETC.
No. 105 & 107 California street,
Between Sansome and Front. San Francisco.
House and Sign Painting. d4 ap5

JOHN McDONALD & CO.,
DEALERS IN
Paints, Oils, Glass, Varnishes, Brushes, &c.
PAPER HANGINGS.
Kerosene and Coal Oil,
Burning Fluid,
Alcohol, Camphene,
Lamps, Wicks,
Chimneys, &c.
All Orders for Painting and Paper Hanging promptly attended to.
Estimates Furnished from Plans and Specifications.
No. 21 SECOND STREET,
One door from the corner of Stephenson,
SAN FRANCISCO.
J. MCDONALD. C. & F. SCHREIBER.

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS
AND
LOAN SOCIETY,
Office—S06 Jackson street, first Building west of Montgomery street.
OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT.....M. D. SWEENY.
VICE PRESIDENT.....C. P. GUELLIVAN.
TRUSTEES:
JOHN M'MUR.
C. P. GUELLIVAN.
JOHN SULLIVAN.
R. T. DOOLIGAN.
D. CALLAGHAN.
J. MCKENNA.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD.
T. J. DRUM.
TREASURER.....EDWARD MARTIN
ATTORNEY.....RICHARD TOBIN.
Remittances from the Interior.
Remittances from the Country may be sent through Wells, Fargo & Co's Express Office, or any reliable Banking House in the Country, and a receipt for the same for their own delivery. The signature of the Depositor when first made, and the Pass Book of the Depositor must be produced before the agent by whom the deposit may have been made.
Deposits received from two and one-half dollars upwards.
Office Hours—From 9 A. M. to 12 M. jy8

REYNOLDS, REIS & CO.,
BANKERS,
No. 608 Montgomery street,
SELL EXCHANGE IN SUMS TO SUIT, drawn on
The Bank of the State of New York.
The Bank of California.
Messrs RAYMOND BROS.....Marysville
Messrs. HAYDEN BROS.....Downieville
Purchase Gold Bullion and Mint Certificates. Discount Mercantile Paper.
Make Advances on Gold for Assay or Coinage, attend to collections on favorable terms.
GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.
[mh7 tf]

V. MARZIONI & CO.,
BANKERS,
Importers and Commission Merchants,
Regular line of sailing Packets between Havre and San Francisco. Office, 121 commercial street.
Money received on deposit. Exchange on France, negotiated.

PIANOS, ETC.

CREAT TRIUMPH!
STEINWAY & SONS
WERE awarded 1st Prize Prize Medal at the late World's Industrial Exhibition, held at London, over all competitors, and that too after being ordered for use in the Royal Palace, Buckingham.
Warerooms, 340 Broome street, next to the Astor House, where the public are invited to call and examine the above superior instruments.
WM. A. PIERCE & CO.,
Sole Agents for the United States.
PIANO TUNING done by a first class workman from Steinway & Sons' Factory, New York. [mh15 tf

JACOB ZECH,
FIRST PREMIUM
PIANOFORTE MANUFACTURER,
529 California Street,
BETWEEN MONTGOMERY AND KEARNEY STREET.

THE UNDERSIGNED HEGS TO
Call the attention to his numerous friends and the public that he has a fine assortment of first class Pianofortes for sale, which he can confidently recommend for their superior tone, elasticity of touch and finish. Also, second hand PIANOS of other manufacture, which are superior in their tone and finish to many instruments made here or in the Eastern States.
Those wishing to sell and exchange may rely upon his fair dealing.
Every Instrument warranted, or the will be warranted for three years.
Pianos tuned and repaired.
ap19-3m JACOB ZECH.

WOODWORTH, ALLOVON & CO.,
Ports and San Francisco,
IMPORTERS OF
PIANO-FORTES, MELODEONS,
CHURCH AND PARLOR
HARMONIUMS,
HARMONIC PIANO-FORTES,
REED AND PIPE ORGANS,
MUSIC STOOLS, PIANO COVERS
MUSIC RACKS, Etc.,
Exclusive Agents for the sale of the Steddart Piano, Forte and Union Melodeon. Pianos Forte for Sale
Masonic Temple Building, cor. Montgomery and Post streets.
[Entrance on Montgomery.]

H. CRAMER,
ORGANIST ST. FRANCIS CATHEDRAL,
MUSIC TEACHER,
Teacher of Piano, Guitar and the rules of Harmony.
No. 132 Kearny street, near Sutter. n20

THE UNDERSIGNED BEGS TO Inform the Friends and the public that on account of the great Jubilee, which he has a fine assortment of first class Pianofortes for sale, which he can confidently recommend for their superior tone, elasticity of touch and finish. Also, second hand PIANOS of other manufacture, which are superior in their tone and finish to many instruments made here or in the Eastern States.
Those wishing to sell and exchange may rely upon his fair dealing.
Every Instrument warranted, or the will be warranted for three years.
Pianos tuned and repaired.
ap19-3m JACOB ZECH.

STEAMERS.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.
The following Steamships will be dispatched in the month of January, 1864:
Jan. 1—CONSTITUTION, J. T. Watkins, Commander.
Jan. 10—ST. LOUIS, E. S. Farnsworth, Commander.
Jan. 20—GOLDEN AGE, W. H. Hudson, Commander.
From Folsom-street Wharf, at 2 o'clock A. M., punctual ly, FOR PANAMA.
Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the Panama Railroad Company, and from Aspinwall to New York by the Atlantic and Pacific Steamship Company.
For freight or passage apply at the Company's office, on the wharf, foot of Folsom street.
d27-tf C. K. GARRISON, Agent P. M. S. S. Co.
Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

PEOPLE'S
STEAMSHIP LINE TO NEW YORK!
Via Panama Railroad.
LOW RATES OF PASSAGE!!
THROUGH IN ADVANCE OF THE MAIL.
Treasure taken on Steamers through to New York, Free!!
THE FINE AND FAVORITE DOUBLE Propeller Steamship
MOSES TAYLOR,
E. HOWES.....Commander
Will leave for Panama direct, on WEDNESDAY.....Jan. 21st, 1863,
AT 9 O'CLOCK, A. M., PUNCTUALLY.
Connecting at Aspinwall by Panama Railroad, with the new and splendid Steamship
AMERICA,
2,000 Tons.....JEFF. MATHY, Commander
These two steamers are the largest and fastest, combining more speed and capacity than any other steamers on the route.
Treasure will be taken on Steamers, and forwarded to New York free of all expense. Shippers may rely on getting it through. Time and freight as low as by other lines.
For further information or passage, apply to d20 & CO., Agents,
No. 4 and 427 Battery st., up stairs.

SOUTHERN DISPATCH LINE OF PACKETS
—FOR—
SAN DIEGO
AND INTERMEDIATE PORTS.
Consisting of the clipper Brig
PRIDE OF THE SEA.....Capt. L. S. Gates
And the clipper Schooner
LEWIS PERRY.....Capt. Wm. Hughes
The above vessels will sail from their regular days of sailing, viz:
For ——, Passage apply on board, at Commercial street wharf, or to WM. T. WILSON & CO., 2 Battery street, corner Market and East streets. ap16

WINTER ARRANGEMENT.
For San Jose, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Gilroy, San Juan, and Watsonville.
The Steamer
ORIENTAL
Will leave BATTERY-ST. WHARF, (at the foot of Battery street,) every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, at 3 o'clock P. M.
Returning, leaves Alviso every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at 7 o'clock A. M., touching at Santa Clara each way.
FARE, to Alviso.....50 cents
Freight.....50 cents per 100 lbs.
J. WHITNEY, Jr., President.

A LADIES' FAIR
WILL BE HELD
IN THE BASEMENT OF
ST. FRANCIS' CHURCH,
VALLEJO STREET,
MONDAY EVENING.....JANUARY 12, 1863,
FOR THE PURPOSE OF RAISING FUNDS to Liquidate the debt due upon the edifice.
The ladies of the parish are engaged to make or procure contributions of the Festival, which will be held on that night with a full assortment of refreshments.
Refreshments and Music will be of the best description.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD.
TIME TABLE.
ON and after January 1st, 1863 trains will run from the Mission as follows:
From the Mission, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 A. M., and every half hour afterwards till 6 P. M., then every hour until 12 P. M.
From Market street, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 A. M., and every half hour afterwards till 6 P. M., then every hour until 12 P. M.
Trains will leave the Mission and Market street, for the Mission Woolen Mills and the Mission Valley Race Course, at 10 A. M. and 2 P. M.
Trains will leave from the city at A. M. running in connection with the Mission Woolen Mills cars.
J. B. HAVERTY, Trustee.

HOLIDAY FEASTS.
EXTRA MINCE & PUMPKIN PIES,
For the Holidays.
THE FINEST ASSORTMENT OF CAKES, Frosted and fancy, decorated and ornamented in variety, to be found in the city, at
SWAIN & BROWN'S BAKERY,
No. 5 Kearny street. d26

PHELAN & COLLENDER'
Model Biliard Tables
—AND—
COMBINATION CUSHIONS!
GEO. E. PHELAN and MATTHEW P. COLLENDER having become copartners, for the term of [illegible] under the firm name of PHELAN & COLLENDER, will [illegible] the public [illegible] that the establishment so well known in the [illegible] will be continued in every [illegible] Billiard trade connected therewith.
GEO. E. PHELAN,
M. P. COLLENDER.
No. 738 Washington st.,
Opposite the Metropolitan Theatre.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. CATHERINE'S
ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES,
BENICIA, CAL.
THIS Institution is conducted by the Sisters of St. Dominic, and is situated in the healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The plan of education embraces the various branches of instruction usually taught in the most approved seminaries for young ladies. The most conscientious and unremitting attentionis given to the advancement of the pupils in the principles and practice of Christian virtue, as well as to their intellectual improvement. Particular care is directed toward the promotion of refinement of manners, and the constant maintenance of a polite and amiable deportment. The discipline is kind and parental, and the Sisters use every endeavor to ensure the health, comfort and happiness of those intrusted to their charge. Scrupulous attention is paid to the personal apparel of the pupils. The bedding are extensive and commodious, and in other ways and unpolished school rooms, dormitories, and all others grounds afford ample room for exercise in the open air. Pupils of any religious denomination will be received, but, for the sake of uniformity, all are required to be present at the regular religious services of the Institution. An annual examination and distribution of premiums takes place at the end of [illegible] session.
The Academy is open at all times for the reception of pupils, and visitors are admitted at any time during the day.
TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$15
Board and Tuition, per month.....30
Washing, per month.....50
Physician's Fees.....when required
The full course of studies, per session.....$ 60 00
Music and use of Instrument, per session.....10 00
Drawing and Painting, per session.....10 00
Use of Library, per session.....1 00
Payments are required to be made half a session in advance, and no deduction will be made for half a session's absence, except in case of sickness.
Pupils who return after vacation as well as new comers, will be required to furnish themselves with bedding, towels, silver forks, &c., according to the list of such articles to be obtained at the Academy during vacation and no charged towels or clothes for their board and tuition, fee.
The annual session will commence on the first Monday in August, and close on the last Thursday in July.
Pupils are taught Reading, Writing, Arithmetic, Grammar, Geography, Use of Globes, History, Composition, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Astronomy, Rhetoric, Logic, Moral Philosophy, Plain Sewing, Embroidery on Lace and Muslin, Crochet, Tatting, Tapestry, Fancy Work, Painting in Water Colors, Drawing, Painting in Oil, Music, Vocal and Instrumental, Use of Piano, Guitar, Harp, Violin, Flute, Clarionet, Bugle, Cornet, Trombone, Bass Viol, Drum, Fife, Singing, Elocution, Italian, French, Spanish, Latin, Greek, Mathematics, Physiology, Botany, Natural History, Mineralogy, Geology, Astronomy, Chemistry, Political Economy, Rhetoric, Logic, Moral Philosophy, Evidences of Christianity, Ancient and Modern History, Ancient and Modern Literature, Mythology, Antiquities, Criticism, Composition, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Astronom

THE DESERTER.

It was the eve of the battle of Buena Vista. In the rugged mountains, and on the rough uplands twenty thousand Mexicans slept on their arms, confident of victory on the morrow. Day after day they had struggled on through the arid deserts and rocky pass es, toward their present position, certain that the northern invaders would be at last annihilated before their overwhelming numbers. And, besides, those legions knew well the talent of their chief Santa Anna—a man beyond question an accomplished military commander.

Santa Anna sat in the door of his pavilion, looking out on the land to where the watch-fires of Taylor burned in the distance.

"To-morrow," thought Santa Anna, "we will destroy these Yankee invaders, root and branch. One single blow shall finish the campaign."

Just then his thoughts were interrupted. Guardsmen brought into his presence a man, with hands bound behind him, and blood flowing from a sabre-cut in his forehead.

"This is the deserter, Pinon el Rodrigo," said they. "We discovered him in the mountain at an ancient ranch.—What shall be his fate?"

Santa Anna glanced at the prisoner.—The light of the torches fell upon a face of singular geniuness and benevolence of expression, blended with firmness—one of those beautiful faces that we sometimes see in portraits of the old Spanish gentry.

"Is there any doubt?" queried the general.

"He does not deny it," was the reply. "Speak Rodrigo, have you anything to say?"

The prisoner shook his head — sadly, hopelessly. He knew that there was no mercy for him—he plead not for it.

Santa Anna pointed to a ravine near at hand. The soldiers appreciated his meaning. A private had that day been shot there for the same offence. All that Santa Anna said was—

"I cannot pardon desertion in the presence of an enemy. Let him die at midnight!"

No other word was spoken, save that the prisoner threw up his hands as he was led away, and ejaculated aloud—

"O, Inez! Lost—lost forever!"

That agonizing exclamation struck a chill to the heart of the most hardened that heard it, and Santa Anna himself, the victor of an hundred bloody fields, gazed regretfully after the prisoner, and the latter had vanished in the darkness.

* * * * *

It was midnight! Santa Anna had just dismissed a council of officers and was alone in his tent. Only at the entrance was there the guard. Suddenly there was a noise. The guardsmen were heard challenging some new comer. There was the sound of a struggle, a severe toned voice—the voice of a woman—cried:

"I will pass—I will see him!" and the next minute there burst into the presence of the chief a female, and threw herself in a supplicating attitude at his feet.

"Pardon—pardon!" she cried, "pardon for him—he meant no wrong; it was for me he incurred the penalty.—Save him—O, save him!"

Santa Anna looked upon the woman and saw that she was young and unsurpassingly beautiful; large and dark were her Spanish eyes, and as he gazed into their jetty, sparkling, mournful depths, a feeling came upon him like a memory of something half-forgotten, half-realized.

It was with surprise that the sentinel who had followed the lady into the tent, found himself mutioned back.

"I have yet to learn for whom you plead," remarked Gen. Santa Anna.

"For Rodrigo!—for my husband!" ejaculated the lady; he is no traitor; his colonel offered me insult; Rodrigo struck him; the lash, the lash was ordered to his noble back; but I cut his bonds and we fled to the mountains; for me he did it—unworthy me. Pardon him, or "kill me."

Santa Anna essayed to raise the lovely woman; she slipped from his grasp and clasped his knees.

"No—no!" she exclaimed; "not until you pardon him; let me die for him, if need be—only set him free; he is brave—he is true; you must not kill him!"

Santa Anna felt distressed. But his voice and look were cold as the snow of Popoco; tapetl; he shook his head and said:

"Though you plead till the break of the last dawn, it will not save him. His fault is too great for pardon; it is midnight now—the hour of his doom; while you wait here the bullets that are to take his life may be driven home in the deadly tubes; you may see him, if you hasten."

The lady sprang to her feet with a shriek of despair; she looked into the unchanging and relentless eyes of Santa Anna, and became hopeless.

"Let me go to him!" she cried in agony; "take me to him—my husband—O, take me to my husband!"

Santa Anna spoke to the guardsmen.

"It is well—let her see him; half an hour more or less is of small account; but see to it that the man is dead when the clock strikes one!"

The lady wrung her hands; the General's merciless words had hardly died away, when he was again alone; the guard, eager and earnest, had departed with the lady, and in Santa Anna's bosom there was left the memory of her agony, like a haunting spirit.

* * * * *

In the ravine, half an hour after, down amongst the dense shadows of the bushes, half a dozen torches threw a lurid light on a score of glittering bayonets, a prisoner stripped for execution, and a fainting woman. The prisoner was Rodrigo, standing there with folded arms.

"Quick!" he cried—"quick; I cannot witness her agony!—let the blow fall before sorrow unmans me!"

O, the despairing firmness of that voice! The parting words had al been said—the parting kisses had all been given, and, fainting with despair, the lovely Inez had been torn from her husbands arms. Now she lay there upon the ground, her head supported by a kneeling soldier, while another was bathing her hands and brow with water.

"Why this delay?" ejaculated Rodrigo. "It is torture to me; let me give the word; ready, aim, fire!"

The soldiers did not obey the prisoner; it was only when their Lieutenant repeated the word "ready!" that the musket barrels dropped from their shoulders to their hands, and the sharp click was heard as they cocked their pieces.

"Aim!" and up the dozen muskets went, and the soldiers' eyes glanced along the tubes, to see that the muzzles pointed full at the bosom of Pinon el Rodrigo.

Just then the prisoner spoke—a last ejaculation:

"My wife, Ines de Rimenas, farewell! —heaven keep you!"

It was her maiden name that the doomed man uttered; the word "fire" was just trembling on the lieutenant's lips.

"Hold! I command you, on the pain of death!" thundered a new voice. A cloaked form, which had hitherto been concealed in the shadow of a tree, came forward, "I am your General; pistols, shoulder arms!"

The pieces undischarged, were thrown to a perpendicular position again, and all present stood in fixed surprise.

"Prisoner," said Santa Anna, "you called her Rimenas. Where was your wife born?"

"In the hacinda of Los Formio," returned the astonished prisoner. "Her father's name was Juan."

"Thank the saints!—thank the saints," cried the chief. "It is the daughter of Isebel de Rimenas. Isabel was my benefactor years ago; I have a debt of gratitude to pay; Inez—Inez de Rimenas, wife of Rodrigo, arise!" and he stooped and tenderly took the lady's hand—"Your husband is pardoned!"

That glad announcement was a potent charm. A minute only elapsed, and husband and wife were in each other's arms—Inez weeping tears of joy.

Santa Anna softly withdrew to his pavilion.

The next day, when the fierce battle of Buena Vista was fought, when, for two hours, less then five thousand Americans bore up against the repeated charges of twenty thousand Mexicans, no one was found fighting more brave for the children of the Sun, than the Captain of the Guadaljara company of light infantry—Pinon de Rodrigo.

And when at last, the Mexican army, shattered and routed, retired and left the Americans to mourn the loss of a large part of their effective force, Rodrigo was to be found in the suit of Santa Anna—for even in the hour of defeat the Mexican chief had not failed to remember the debt of gratitude he owed to the mother of Inez—Isabel de Rimenas.

Thus it is, that in every man's career, there are bright spots to be found, that should shine like stars, so long as his name is remembered among men.

---

The United Service Gazette says:—"We have been informed on good authority that the Secretary of State for War, has received instructions from the Privy Council to take a supplementary war credit of about two millions to meet expenses in case of hostilities between this country and Germany. The following corps have received orders to prepare to embark for Copenhagen—viz., the 11th Hussars, at Richmond Barracks, Dublin; the 15th Hussars, at Newbridge; the 1st battalion 10th Regiment, at Kilkenny; the 1st battalion 11th Regiment, and the 2nd battalion 12th Regiment at Dublin."

---

Eight tons of greenbacks were carried over the New Jersey railroad to Washington one day recently. The money is said to be the collections of different internal revenue officers.

STORY OF KILLARNEY.

There was once upon a time, near the western coast of Ireland, a romantic valley inhabited by a few peasants, whose rude cabins were surrounded by the most luxuriant trees, and sheltered by mountains rising almost perpendicularly on every side. Ireland has still many beautiful green vales, but there is not one so deeply, so securely nestled among the hills, as the one of which I speak.—Add the depth of the deepest of those lakes to the height of the loftiest mountain that towers above us, and you may then form some idea of the deep seclusion of this forgotten valley.

Norah was the prettiest girl in the little village. She was the pride of her old father and mother, and the admiration of every youth who beheld her.—The cottage of her parents was the neatest in the neighborhood; Norah knew how to make the humliest chamber look cheerful, and the honeysuckle round the casement was taught by her hand to twine more gracefully than elsewhere.

There was but one spring of water in the valley; it was a little well of the brightest and clearest water ever seen, which bubbled up from the golden sand, and then lay calmly sleeping in a basin of the whitest marble. From this basin there did not appear to be any outlet; the water ran into it incessantly, but no one could detect that any part of it escaped again! It was a fairy well!

In those days there were fairies, so says the legend; and so says Crofton Crocker, that illustrious historian of the little people of Ireland in the olden time; ours is not a story involving in its detail national habits and characteristics; on such ground who would dare to compete with him? Not I.

To return to the well; it was as I said before, a fairy well, and held in great veneration by the inhabitants of the valley.

There was a tradition concerning it which had come out of it, been handed down from parent to child. It was covered with a huge stone, which, though apparently very heavy, could be moved with ease by the hand of the most delicate female; and it was said to be the will of the fairy who presided over it, that all the young girls of the village should go thither every evening after sunset, remove the stone, and take from the marble basin as much water as would be sufficient for the use of each family during the ensuing day; above all it was understood to be the fairy's strict injunction that each young maiden, when she had filled her pitcher, should carefully replace the stone, and return to her parents without one sad thought to drive away sleep from her pillow.

This rule could not last for ever. Norah was formed to be beloved, and soon a stranger youth came to the valley—a soldier—one who had seen the world. He was clad in armor, and, he talked of brighter scenes. Ah, could there be a brighter scene than that lone valley?—He dazzled the poor girl's eye, and he won her heart; and when she went at sunset to fetch water from the fairy well, Coolin was always at her side.

Her old parents could not approve of such an attachment. The young soldier's stories of camps and courts possessed no charms for them; and when they saw that Norah loved to listen to him, they reproved their child for the first time in their lives, and forbade her in future to meet the stranger. She wept, but she promised to obey them; and, that she might avoid a meeting with her lover, she went that evening to the well by a different path to that which she had been accustomed to take.

She removed the stone, and having filled the pitcher, she sat down by the side of the well and wept bitterly. She bended not the hour; twilight was fast fading into the darkness of night, and the bright stars studded the heavens directly over her head, were reflected in the crystal fountain at her feet.

Her lover stood before her.

"Oh! come not here," she cried; "come not here. I have promised not to meet you; had I returned home when my task was done, we never should have met! I have been disobedient. Oh, why did I ever see you? You have taught me how to weep."

"Say not so, dearest Norah," replied the young soldier; "come with me."

"Never—never!" she emphatically exclaimed, as she hastily arose, and advanced from the well. "I, who never broke my word, have broken it to-night; I said I would not meet you, and we have met."

She uttered this in an agony of tears, walking wildly forwards, whilst Coolin, with his head clasped in both of his, walked by her side, endeavoring to pacify her.

"Your fault, if it be one," said he kindly, was involuntary. Your parents will forgive you; and when they know how tenderly I love you, they will no longer reject me as their son. You cannot leave them; well, well, I perhaps may stay here—may labor for them and for you. What is there I would not resign for my Norah? You are near your home; give me one smile; and now dearest, good night."

Norah did smile upon him; and softly opening the wicket, she stole to her own chamber, and soon fell asleep, full of fond thoughts of the possibility of her parents' sanction to her lover's suit.

She slept soundly for several hours.—At last, awaking with a wild scream, she started from her bed.

"The well! the well!" she cried; "I neglected to replace the stone. It cannot yet be morning—no—no—no; the grey dawn is just appearing; I will run —I shall be in time."

As she flew along the well-known path, the tops of the eastern hills were red with the near approach of sunrise.—Is that the first sunbeam that glids yonder mountain? No, it cannot be—she will yet be in time.

Norah had now reached a spot from whence, looking downwards, she could see the well, at the distance of a few hundred yards. She stood like a statue; her eyes were fixed; one hand grasped her forehead, with the other she pointed forwards. So suddenly had amazement arrested her flight, that her attitude retained the appearance of motion; but she was motionless. The unclouded morning sun was shining brightly on the spot; the spring, once so gentle, was now sending forth a foaming torrent, which was rapidly inundating the valley. Already the alarmed villagers were rushing from their cabins; but Norah did not move; her head was still pointed towards the spot, but she appeared unconscious of danger.

Still the foaming torrent poured forth, and the water approached the spot where she stood. Coolin, who had been seeking her everywhere, now ran towards her. His footsteps aroused her, and crying, "My parents—save them!" she fell at his feet.

He bore her in his arms up a hill which was near them; still the torrent raged behind them, the vast flood became wider and deeper.

When they reached the summit of the hill, it appeared to be a wooden island; water surrounded them on every side, and their resting place became gradually smaller and smaller.

Many other green islands were to be seen, some less extensive than that on which they had found a temporary security; and these gradually grew smaller and smaller, and vanished one by one.

"Oh! that we were on the summit of yon mountain," said Coolin; and kissing Norah's pale cheek, he cried: "Is there no hope, my poor girl, my own dear love?"

"My parents! my parents!" exclaimed Norah. "Where are they? Oh they have perished, the victims of their only child's disobedience!"

Clasped in each other's arms, the lovers awaited their doom. The waters still rose higher and higher—the island became indistinct—it was a speck—it was gone.

The cause of the calamity having expiated her error, the wrath of the fairy was appeased. The water rose no more, but the beautiful valley of the fairy well now lies buried under the clear waters of the Lake of Killarney.—Bayley's Legends.

---

The State of Europe.

A correspondent writing to the London Standard from Vienna says:

The papers are getting furious against you. What are 30,000 men and an English fleet? A flea-bite—nothing more.—Bavaria alone would be a match for that. I am almost tempted to wish for a little brush between John Bull and these German big mouths, so as to get a little insight into British valor. The fact is, the Liberal organs want war at any price. They care not a straw about right or wrong. They tremble at the thought that the Danish affair will end in peace. They are more the enemies of their own government than of Denmark. They want the ruin of Austria; that is the truth, rely upon it. Austria and Prussia cannot go to war with Denmark, because they would get between two fire. They cannot trust their own people, I know it to a certainty. Never was there more cause for the governments to keep well together. If they work into the hands of their enemies tant pire pour eux.—They must ascribe it to themselves if they get into trouble. The people are fast driving towards another 1848, and it seems that the governments have learned nothing from poor Louis Philippe. The subscriptions to the enormous amount of 2,700,000,000 in France, is an immense argument against these chances; but then it is not those who have millions who ever did disturb order in Europe.—Every country is teeming with malcontents, and they wait for the governments to commit a single blunder to unfurl their banner. European war is a ready ladder for them, but if the governments preserve peace we have nothing to fear from them.

MANUFACTURES IN IRELAND.

The Belfast Chamber of Commerce have just issued their annual report, and it shows a highly prosperous state of things in that part of the country. We quote a few sentences from the report:

"The past year has been one of general prosperity in the linen trade. All the machinery used in its different branches has been in active operation, and the production of linen yarns and goods has exceeded that of any former time. The crop of flax in 1863 was unprecedented in extent—no less than 214,000 acres having been sown. The yield per acre was also above the average; and consequently the crop is estimated at 60,000 tons, of the gross value to the farmer of upwards of $4,000,000. The readiness with which this large quantity meets sale, at highly remunerative prices, ought to encourage the farmers to extend the cultivation of this staple."

The report then goes on to combat the opinion that the linen trade will suffer a great check on the conclusion of the American war. And then, in a summing up, it says:

"While the manufacturing industry of Belfast has rapidly increased, its extended trade has also exhibited satisfactory progress So great is the amount of tonnage now employed in the commerce of the port that the existing docks are quite insufficient, and the necessity of further accommodation has for a considerable time occupied the attention both of merchants and of the committee incorporated for the improvement of the port and harbor. The council is glad to report that the Harbor Commissioners have entered into contracts for the construction of a large floating dock. Both these works will be immediately commenced, and when completed will, by the facilities they afford for trade, tend to the extension of commerce, and also of the ship-building trade of the port. This is also an important branch of manufacturing industry. Last year eight vessels, all iron, of an aggregate tonnage of 7,070 tons, were launched, one being a screw steamer of 1,600 tons; and there are now five ships on the stocks."

This shows a very flourishing condition of things in the north of Ireland.—But it appeared to be a wooden island; water surrounded them on every side, and their resting place became gradually smaller and smaller.

Many other green islands were to be seen, some less extensive than that on which they had found a temporary security; and these gradually grew smaller and smaller, and vanished one by one.

"Oh! that we were on the summit of yon mountain," said Coolin; and kissing Norah's pale cheek, he cried: "Is there no hope, my poor girl, my own dear love?"

"My parents! my parents!" exclaimed Norah. "Where are they? Oh they have perished, the victims of their only child's disobedience!"

Clasped in each other's arms, the lovers awaited their doom. The waters still rose higher and higher—the island became indistinct—it was a speck—it was gone.

The cause of the calamity having expiated her error, the wrath of the fairy was appeased. The water rose no more, but the beautiful valley of the fairy well now lies buried under the clear waters of the Lake of Killarney.—Bayley's Legends.

---

The State of Europe.

A correspondent writing to the London Standard from Vienna says:

The papers are getting furious against you. What are 30,000 men and an English fleet? A flea-bite—nothing more.—Bavaria alone would be a match for that. I am almost tempted to wish for a little brush between John Bull and these German big mouths, so as to get a little insight into British valor. The fact is, the Liberal organs want war at any price. They care not a straw about right or wrong. They tremble at the thought that the Danish affair will end in peace. They are more the enemies of their own government than of Denmark. They want the ruin of Austria; that is the truth, rely upon it. Austria and Prussia cannot go to war with Denmark, because they would get between two fire. They cannot trust their own people, I know it to a certainty. Never was there more cause for the governments to keep well together. If they work into the hands of their enemies tant pire pour eux.—They must ascribe it to themselves if they get into trouble. The people are fast driving towards another 1848, and it seems that the governments have learned nothing from poor Louis Philippe. The subscriptions to the enormous amount of 2,700,000,000 in France, is an immense argument against these chances; but then it is not those who have millions who ever did disturb order in Europe.—Every country is teeming with malcontents, and they wait for the governments to commit a single blunder to unfurl their banner. European war is a ready ladder for them, but if the governments preserve peace we have nothing to fear from them.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING?

In the United States Senate a few days since, Mr. Wilson of Massachusetts declared that the negro soldiers were equal to the white soldiers in everything and superior to them in endurance. In the Tribune, Mr. Greeley stated that Senator Hendricks of Indiana need have no personal fears of the social and political equality of the blacks, since no statute could ever raise him to their level. Mr. Hendricks might retort that no legislation could make Greeley a white man. It is authoritatively stated in Greeley's biography (by Parton) that he was born black.

A pamphlet has recently been published, called "Miscegenation," which labors to prove that the white and black races must be blended in order to get at the true, ideal American. Professor Draper, as Abolitionist or note, says "that the man of maximum intellectual capacity is of a brown hue." Parker Pillsbury, a leading Abolitionist, has boldly declared in favor of amalgamation. Wendell Phillips approves of this "mingling of races." Angelina G. Weld and Sarah M. Grimke—when by name but not by nature—speak of "the desirableness" of amalgamation. The Anti Slavery Standard is of the same opinion, and adds that "the future must decide how far black and white are disposed to seek each other in marriage."

Do these facts show whither we are drifting?

The tendency of the whole Abolition press, and of all the Abolition orators, is now towards amalgamation. They have control of the Administration, and are using all the powers of the Government to make the negroes equal to the whites socially and politically. Negroes must ride in the same cars, go to the same schools, work in the same shops, vote at the same time and on the same terms as the whites, and be everywhere recognized as our equals—or, as Senator Wilson puts it, our superiors. This is the latest development of the schemes of the Abolitionists, and we confidently predict that it will be the last.

The Abolitionists are now taking that one step too far that is always fatal.—Flush d with victory, they rush unthinkingly forward to their ruin. They have been eared by success, and we know that when the gods would destroy they first make mad. No two races ever did live together in the manner proposed by the Abolitionists. The Indians were a noble and a manly people, but the white race destroyed instead of amalgamating with them. How much less, then, can the white race, under any circumstances, amalgamate with the negro? Every color offends our eyes, whose odor offends our nostrils, and who are disqualified in every way from living with the white man in any other relation than that of servants—whether free or as slaves.

Out of the millions of negroes in this world there are, once in a great while, a black man with the intelligence of an average white man. This, however, is an exception, and only proves the rule of the negro's inferiority. Out of the millions of white men there does come, once in a great while, a natural fanatic like Greeley, and a foul-mouthed demagogue like Wilson. These are the exceptions, however, and prove the rule of the white man's superiority. It is unfair to take Fred Douglas as an average specimen of the negro as it would be to the white race to take Greeley and Wilson as average specimens of the whites. Greeley, Wilson, and the other fanatics may like negro wives.—Women like Angelina G. Weld and Sarah M. Grimke may like negro husbands. But these cases are phenomenal, and the majority are quite the other way. Nay more, than this, the respectable negroes are themselves opposed to amalgamation, as was emphatically stated by the negro editor of the negro paper in New York City, some time ago. In every point of view, therefore, the thing is impossible, and we shall not weary our readers by arguing against it.—N. Y. Leader.

---

UNION MARITIME.

A. PROFIT & CIE,
IMPORTERS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
419 Jackson Street,
(Near Montgomery street.)
HOUSES IN Paris, Havre & Marseilles,
REGULAR LINE OF SAILING VESSELS BETWEEN HAVRE, SAN FRANCISCO, AND NEW YORK.
BILLS OF EXCHANGE ON FRANCE.
The Cashier Department is open from 9 a. m. to 4 o'clock, P. M.

WINES AND LIQUORS.

PHILIP A. ROACH,
DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS,
North-west corner of Sansome and Jackson streets.
SAN FRANCISCO.
☞ To Dealers and Families desiring pure articles it is deemed proper to state, that for the last eight years all Wines and Liquors arriving at San Francisco from any Foreign Port, as also those in bore from any port in the U. S. have been examined under my supervision as U. S. Appraiser, and that previous to my arrival in California in 1849, I had been engaged for many years in France, Portugal, etc., in business requiring a similar knowledge of liquids.
PHILIP A. ROACH.
San Francisco, March, 1861. 27

"FONTENOY SALOON,"
T. MULCAHY, PROPRIETOR.
Keeps on hand a choice selection of WINES AND LIQUORS for family use. Having retired from the old stand, on MARKET street, to 87 BUSH STREET, next to the Occidental Hotel, he returns thanks to his many friends for past favors, and hopes for a continuance of the same in the new place, where he will be better able to accommodate them.

COPARTNERSHIP NOTICE.
MYLES D. SWEENY AND SPTON M. SWEENY have this day formed a COPARTNERSHIP under the firm name of MYLES D SWEENY & CO., as wholesale dealers in Wines and Liquors at 84 Pacific street.
San Francisco, Feb. 4, 1864.
feb-12
S. D. SWEENY. T. M. GIBSON.

MYLES D. SWEENY & CO.,
Importers and Dealers in
WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 709 Sansome street, between Jackson and Pacific streets, San Francisco.
feb-27
D. O'SULLIVAN. W. P. CASHMAN. J. CASHMAN.

SULLIVAN & CASHMAN
Importers and Jobbers in
WINES AND LIQUORS
Corner of Front and Jackson Sts.,
ap San Francisco.

P. RILEY & CO.,
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
No. 519 Front street.

REALLY DELICIOUS!
SQUARZA'S PUNCH.
Strawberry Punch, | Appetizer Punch,
Lemon " | Anti-Dyspeptic "
Orange " | Cognac "
Cocoa " | Arrack "
Strawberwaxer " | Nectar "
At 60 Leidesdorff street,
Opposite the Wharf Chase House.

REMOVAL.
JOHN CORBETT
RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCES TO HIS FRIENDS and the public that he has removed from Calhoun street to Southeast Corner of Pine and Montgomery streets,
Where he has enlarged a choice selection of ALES,
WINES AND LIQUORS,
And hopes by strict attention to business, to merit a continuance of his patronage, which has heretofore been so liberally extended to him. de 11

FOR SALE.
HAYES' PARK PAVILION
AND Grounds For Sale.
THAT MAGNIFICENT PROPERTY KNOWN AS HAYES' PARK PAVILION, together with the Grounds, which comprise two entire blocks, highly improved and well situated, satisfactorily fenced, etc., will be offered for sale
At Public Auction,
On Monday, the 15th instant! College building lots will be offered from the present Farm line to superior situations for residences.
TERMS—One-third cash; balance at 1 and 2 years, for College purposes, being extensive and well laid out for such purposes.
Apply to THOS. HAYES, Street Tax Note Avenue and Hayes street, or at the Pavilion. 2d

GOOD ADVICE.
Go to No. 19, Naglee's Building,
Corner of Merchant and Montgomery Streets,
AND PURCHASE AT LEAST ONE LOT of 25 Unequally Shared," and one Share in "Central Park Association," for $500.
It is a better investment than was ever offered in San Francisco. Each purchaser will receive one lot, University Mound and one share in the Border Lots resulting on a Three Hundred Acre Park.
The sale of three hundred and fifty more lots will establish the Park beyond a peradventure. Are there not, in the great city of San Francisco, three hundred and fifty persons who are willing to aid the enterprise—especially when they cannot fail to make large open their investment? The holiday season is at hand, and no better one can be made of five hundred dollars than to turn it into a homestead in the line of the city's growth.
Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.
de-23 HARVEY S. BROWN.

INFORMATION WANTED.
Information wanted of Patrick Kelly, a native of Parish of Tedavnet county, Monaghan, Ireland. Please address James Reed No. 3 Brook street between Mason and Taylor San Francisco, from whom Patrick Kelly will receive information concerning his brothers Peter and Frank.
Information wanted of Patrick McMurray, of Pine street, New Bedford, Mass., who left his home 6 years ago, and was last heard of in Stockton, Cal., in 1859. If this should meet the eye of said Patrick McMurray, he is earnestly entreated by his suffering wife and children to return to them or write. Any information concerning him will be gratefully welcomed by his wife, Mary McMurray, of New Bedford, Mass. Information may also be forwarded in the Monitor office, San Francisco.
Information wanted of Patrick Kerrigan, of Moore's Flat, Nevada county, California, a native of Belleck, Parish of Templecarne, Co. Fermanagh. Address P. H. Kerrigan, 618 South 13th street, Philadelphia, Pa.

EMPLOYMENT.
O'BRIEN & WARD
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE
810 Montgomery street, between Merchant and Clay San Francisco.
Hotels, Private Families, and Employers of Labor in general, promptly supplied with the best male and female help, without trouble or expense. Orders by Letter or Telegraph promptly attended to.
JOHN O'BRIEN & CO., San Francisco.

BRADY'S
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.
633 Kearny St., bet. Clay and Commercial sts.
THIS WELL-KNOWN OFFICE is now open daily to procure Male and Female help. Orders for help must be accompanied with money to pay passage.

MISCELLANEOUS.
Santa Clara Flour.
THE undersigned Agents for the above favorite brand of FLOUR, have daily receipts of the same, and are prepared to fill orders at the lowest market rates.
GRAY, CLAYTON & CO.
ja 23 Clay street.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD.
TRAINS start from the City and the Willows every six minutes between the hours of 6 A. M. and 12 Midnight, connecting with the Hayes' Valley Train.
my-9 F. McCARTHY, Superintendent.
Market Street Railroad.

THE SINGER
SEWING MACHINES
HAVE NOW BEEN UPWARDS OF THIRTEEN years in use, in all departments of manufacturing, during which time they have been made by others to produce Machines capable of competing with them, but no Machine has yet been produced that will do their work, or, at all events, that would be thought as little of after it had been in use for a few months. The Inventions of the United States and Europe have been sifted by experience that little or nothing is to pay a premium for the Singer Machines this is accepted either at any price. The superior, economic, simple, and durable combination of these Machines is the secret of their superiority and general adaptability.
The Singer Lotter A Transverse Shuttle

For families and light manufacturing purposes, have more simplicity, durability, and certainty of correct action than all other Machines. The Lotter A is adapted to all kinds of fabrics, and will perform all the essential elements of a machine stitch, from the finest cambric to the heaviest cloth. The machine is perfect and at all times reliable Family Machine. Great and constant improvements make Singer Machines the best and cheapest yet offered to the public. They Hem, Fell, Bind, Tuck, Gather, Quilt, Braid, etc., in the most perfect manner. The machine is entirely self-acting, and even the control of the operator, who can thereby avoid the perplexities and annoyances so frequently met with in other machines. The mechanism and method of construction is so simple, that any person of ordinary intelligence can become a skilful operator in a few hours' practice, which is now becoming so popular, that in its many inquiries, one can see a Singer Lotter A Machine in almost every family. Call and see it, examine, and you can be satisfied that it is the best machine in use. Needles, oil, and other articles, and machine tables for sale at all times.
☞ Full printed instructions accompany each Machine, and any one can acquire a knowledge of their use.
☞ Pamphlets, Price List, and specimens of work sent free, by any address.
THE SINGER SEWING MACHINE CO.
No. 323 Montgomery Street,
(Sucessors to D. M. Singer & Co.)
WM. BRODERICK, Agent.

HOTELS.
THE MANHATTAN HOUSE.
Nos. 703 and 707 Front street, near Pacific street.
D. McCARTHY has the pleasure to announce that he has refitted and refurnished the above-named premises, formerly as the "Monticello House," and can therefore now invite his friends and the public to a comfortable home. He would especially inform the public that this House is furnished with the best of Spring Beds, and that the Rooms are large and well ventilated.
Families can be accommodated with apartments completely separated from the general boarding and lodging department, and may rely upon every possible attention to their wants, as the House is conducted as a Temperance Hotel.
☞ Parties who have sent for their friends to the State—or who expect friends, will please notify D. McCarthy, and he will attend to them on arrival, and forward them with the same to their destination—and by this means no such persons may be cajoled—and much inconvenience avoided.
Rates of Board and Lodging:
Board per week.....$5 50
Board and Lodging per week.....6 50
Do per day.....1 00
Lodging.....50
An Omnibus and Baggage Wagon, with the name of the House, will be on the Wharf on the arrival of Steamers, to convey Passengers and Baggage to the House Free of Charge.
my 26 D. McCARTHY, Proprietor.

HOTELS.
NAPA HOTEL,
NAPA CITY.
J. S. HOGAN, - - - - PROPRIETOR.
The traveling public will find at this Hotel all the comforts of a home.

RAILROAD HOUSE.
(Fire-proof, Building.)
310 and 320 Commercial and 310 and 321 Clay streets, - - San Francisco.
C. A. JAMES, - - Proprietor.
Rooms newly furnished, supplied with Patent Spring Beds and Hair Mattresses, in Suite or single.
The Tables and Restaurant are supplied with the best the market affords. Guests of the Railroad House can board by the day, week, or at the Restaurant.
☞ The Railroad Coach will convey passengers to the House Free of charge.
☞ Barber shop and Bathing Rooms attached to the House. my-10

BROOKLYN HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO.
THE FAMOUS PROPRIETOR OF THIS WELL known and old established Hotel begs leave to inform his patrons and friends that no and after the first of November next he will remove from the old, dilapidated building on Broadway, where he resided for the last fifteen years, to the NEW, STAUNCH AND ELEGANT BRICK STRUCTURE, which was built expressly for him, on the south-east corner of Sansome and Pine streets.
THE NEW HOUSE IS FIRE PROOF and supplied throughout with gas, and will be furnished with Water Closets, and every convenience for the comfort of the city, and will contain 60 rooms, and will be ready for the reception of guests by the 1st of November. There is a large READING ROOM attached to the House and Library containing 500 volumes of Miscellaneous Works, exclusively for the use of its guests. Rooms will be let by the night, week or month, with or without board; also, elegant Suites of Rooms to families or others, at reduced rates.
THE TABLE will always be supplied with the choicest delicacies the Markets and Market Gardens of California can afford, and will be spread to set a table that will defy the criticism of the most fastidious epicure.
JOHN KELLY Jr.
Late Proprietor of the Brooklyn Exchange, have just opened the FRANKLIN HOUSE,
Corner of Broadway and Stockton Streets.
The Franklin House has been thoroughly renovated and fitted up in a first-class style. The proprietors will be able to accommodate their patrons and the traveling public with every accommodation at the most reasonable terms.
Board per week.....$5 to $7 00
Board and lodgings per do.....1 50 to 2 00
Single meals (Tickets).....25 to 50 cts.
The Franklin House is situated in the very centre of the business part of the city, one block from the Post Office, and close to the Steamer Landings. The omnibus will be in attendance to convey Passengers to and from the House.
my 16 MOSE CURRAN, Proprietor.

New Branch Hotel.
(FIRE PROOF BUILDING.)
No. 12 Detter street, between Montgomery and Sansome
(Late Branch Hotel, Sansome street.)
TERMS:
Boarding.....$6 per week
Boarding and Lodging.....$5 to $6 per week
Single Meals.....25 cents
Furnished Rooms to let. Good accommodations for Families. All the comforts of a home can be had at this Hotel No bar attached to the house. The House is liberally supplied with Spring Valley Water. au2 M. O'NEIL, Proprietor.

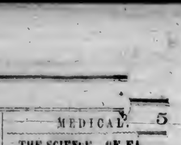
INTERNATIONAL HOTEL,
P. R. Wegnant, having sold his entire interest in the Tremont House, Tehama street, is now prepared to devote his whole attention to his patrons at the well known
"INTERNATIONAL,"
JACKSON STREET,
above Montgomery street, San Francisco.
This House has lately had extensive additions, and a thorough renovation including new beds, which makes it one of the largest and best conducted on Transient Principles, the most quiet and best appointed Hotel on the Pacific Coast.
Barber Shop attached to the Hotel.
☞ Free Cold and Warm Shower Baths for the Guests of the House.
Previous arrivings on Boats or Cars will always find the International Coach in readiness to convey them to the House, Free of Charge. mr-6

WESTERN HOTEL
No. 206 BROADWAY ST.,
Bet. Sansome and Montgomery, San Francisco.
JOHN HIGGINS. JAS. HOLONEY.
Board per Week.....$5 50
Board and Lodging per Week.....7 00
Board and Lodging per Day.....1 00
Lodging per Night.....25
Single Meals.....25
Superior Accommodations for Families.
☞ The Western Hotel Omnibus will be on the Wharf on the arrival of each Steamer to convey passengers and baggage to the House free of Charge.

MEDICAL.
THE SCIENCE OF EA
EVERY MAN ER
HIS OWN PHYSI


HOLLOWAY'S PILLS
AND
HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.
Disorders of the Stomach, Liver & Bowels.
The stomach is the great centre which influences the health or disease of the system.—Almost or debilitated by excess—indigestion, offensive breath and physical prostration are the natural consequences. Allied to the brain, it is the source of headaches, mental depression, nervous complaints and unrefreshing sleep. The Liver becomes affected and generates billious disorders, pains in the side etc. The Bowels sympathize by Costiveness, Diarrhœa and Dysentery. The principal action of these Pills is on the stomach, and the liver, lungs, bowels and kidneys participate in their recuperative and regenerative operation.
Erysipelas and Salt Rheum are two of the most common and virulent diseases prevalent on this continent, to these the Ointment is especially antagonistic, its "modus operandi" is first to eradicate the venom and then complete the cure.
Bad Legs, Old Sores and Ulcers.
Cases of many years' standing, that have pertinaciously refused to yield to any other remedy or treatment, have invariably succumbed to a few applications of this powerful agent.
Eruptions on the Skin.
Arising from a bad state of the blood or obstructed, or sluggish circulation, and a clear and transparent tint is attained by the restorative power of this Ointment.
Both the Ointment and it Pills should be used in the following cases:
Bunions, Mercurial Erysipelas, Scorbutic Glands, Burns, Piles, Sore Legs, Chapped hands, Rheumatism, Sore throats, Chilblains, Ringworm, Sore Heads, Fistula, Salt Rheum, Sore Breasts, Gout, Scalds, Stiff Joints, Tetter, Lumbago, Skin Diseases, Wounds of all kinds, Piles, Tetter, Coco Bolus, Tumors, Yaws, Fever Sores, Ulcers, Scurvy, Tumors of all kinds.
Caution!!
None are genuine unless the words "HOLLOWAY, New York and London" are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.
 Sold at the manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in pots and boxes at 25 cts, 62½cts and $1 each.
☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.
N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each pot and box.
☞ Dealers in my well known medicines can have Show Cards, Circulars, etc., sent FREE OF EXPENSE by addressing Thomas Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y
SOLD BY CRANE & BRIGHAM
SAN FRANCISCO,
And all dealers in Medicines.

Hostetter, Smith & Dean,
IMPORTERS OF
PROPRIETARY MEDICINES,
Druggists' Sundries, Etc.
AGENTS FOR
HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS HAVE REMOVED TO 401 Battery, cor. Clay St.

---

ARRESTED.—The Stockton Independent says that Ramon Felice, a notorious horse thief, was arrested at Jenny Lind on Friday last. He will be taken to Chinese Camp, the scene of his last exploit.

It is not so certain, after all, that the

It was t
Visits. In on the HOLY CALENDAR.
Mexican of victories day the and Daniel. of Tarsus their Celestine I., Pope and Confessor. brother
Hegesippus, Confessor.
annihila
Cyprian, Bishop of Corinth. numbers martyr (Scapilas, Sister of the D. V. Mary knew Anna—a compliant

MONITOR.

Santa A villion, le
the Inside.

SECOND PAGE.—The Deserter; Story of Killarney. The State of Europe; Manufactures in Ireland; Price's Address to Maryland.

THIRD PAGE.—Whither are we Drifting.

SIXTH PAGE.—When will Ireland Awake. Portrait of a "War Christian Abolitionist: Lord Palmerston Condemned; Tobacco Planting in Ireland; Time in Organics; The Irish Establishment; The Irish Regium Donum.

LOCAL RELIGIOUS NEWS

Very Rev. Father Brouillet, V. G., of the Diocese of Nesqually, arrived in this city Wednesday last, from Olympia. He leaves this morning for New York, on business connected with the Vancouver Mission. Our Portland correspondent writes: "The people of this city unite with his innumerable friends in wishing him a safe and speedy return to the field of his usefulness. Through the active perseverance and zeal of Father Brouillet, the Sisters have been enabled to open a Boarding and Day School at Walla Walla. The institution was dedicated on Sunday, Feb. 28, under the style of St. Vincent's Academy. After suitable religious ceremonies, an address was delivered by Capt. John Mullan, who took occasion to elucidate the energy, perfidence of the good Sisters, and to thank the citizens of Walla Walla Valley and the surrounding country for their liberality in subscribing so generously towards the erection of the first educational establishment east of the Cascade Mountains. Thus we find the Catholic Church taking another stride in educational progress. May it ever be so, until time blends itself with eternity."

Rev. Father Callan has resigned the Presidency of the Marysville Hibernian Benevolent Society, in consequence of being transferred to the Pastoral charge of Forest Hill. The members of the Society presented him with a fine gold watch as a testimonial of their esteem; and at the same time a chain was presented to Father Callan by one of his numerous friends.

The general appropriation bill passed the Senate Wednesday, with all the charitable institutions and asylums, giving $4,000 to the Catholic Orphan Asylum, and $ to the Asylum, which, at this time back, is a favorite object with the Legislature. Hedley is on a visit to Carson City, and has been interrogating the Legislature on the subject of erecting a Cathedral in Marysville. We understand that the meeting will grow out of the same strong sentiment.

The remains sold in Grass Valley St. Patrick's Day yielded over $1500. Rev. Father Hawkins was requested to be Sisters of Mercy.

The Board of Supervisors, Monday evening, [illegible] under existing certain incidental expenses, [illegible] Catholic Cemetery. The boundaries are defined as beginning at [illegible] of Dupont street, [illegible] and running [illegible] to the right angles to the northerly line of Vallejo street, [illegible] northerly line of Vallejo street, [illegible] to the place of beginning.

A large number of stereotypers are yet in arrears for the year 1863. Their attention is requested to the necessity of remitting amounts due without delay. I will be out of our pocket by so doing—sending the MONITOR to subscribers who neglect to settle their accounts.

We have not seen Assistant General Keane for a long [illegible] his appointment for 1863. It contains a complete history of military movements conducted and made during the past year. General Keane has taken a number of valuable suggestions, which if adopted by the Legislature would add much to the efficiency of the military arm of the State.

The list of deaths and marriages published weekly in the MONITOR are regularly copied in the metropolitan and provincial papers in Ireland. The Nation and Irishman are particular in this matter.

The steam frigate Wateree received her crew from New York March 1st, at Fort Monroe, and sailed next day for the Pacific.

The Eastern papers announce the deaths of Rev. Father Aschwenden, S. J., at Georgetown, Rev. Father Feely, at Baltimore, and Rev. Father Kennedy, at Windsor, Nova Scotia.

The State of Wisconsin exemplifies the wonderful and unprecedented character of the country in regard to the sources of its growth and inhabitants. The Legislature of that State has ordered the Governor's message to be printed in eight different languages: English, German, Norwegian, Irish, Welsh, Scotland, French and Bohemian.

The death of the Rev. Dr. Callan, the distinguished professor of Natural History of St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, is announced. He was born in Dromiskin, county Louth, December 26, 1799.

It is positively stated that General Fremont has determined to announce himself as an independent candidate for the Presidency, in case Lincoln is put in nomination.

Rome, at present, numbers within its walls a busy population of 180,000, besides 4,000 Jews, and 7,000 foreigners.

Attention is directed to the Card of Mr. John Hill, Stock Broker, Montgomery street, near Merchant.

Sweden is taking active steps to assist Denmark in its war with Germany. It is thought that the Danes will submit to the terms of Austria and Prussia.

GEN. McCLELLAN'S REPORT.

The report of Gen. McClellan, recently published, reveals much of the secret history of the first year of actual war. It is known to all our readers that Gen. McClellan was called to the chief command immediately after the disastrous battle of Bull Run. As he himself says, "when he reached Washington he found nothing but confusion and turmoil there. Of a military organization there was not even the slightest semblance." The General immediately set to work to bring order out of chaos. The amount of labor perf rmed by him at this time, would seem almost incredulous, if the facts and figures were but given in the report.

Up to about Christmas, 1862, General McClellan was in the Chief Command. His letters of instructions to General Halleck, Buell, and Burnside, set forth the general plan of campaign which he formed, and that it was the best that could be devised, subsequent events have fully demonstrated. The fundamental idea of his plan was the occupation of Eastern Tennessee and the seizure of the main Confederate line of communication with the South West. It is true that the National forces are now in the possession of this important section of the country, but they reached there only after a long series of campaigns in all parts of the country. If General McClellan's idea of marching upon that point first had been carried out, the National forces would have been in the Spring of 1862 where they are now, and all the bloodshed of the desultory campaigning in Middle Tennessee and Northern Alabama and Mississippi would have been avoided.

For some reason, however, which Gen. McClellan is not able to explain, the administration of Mr. Lincoln began to interfere and upset his plans about the commencement of the year 1862. Probably Mr. Lincoln and his Cabinet were dissatisfied with him because he had not marched forth to fight the enemy in midwinter, and accomplished results beyond the power of mortal man. The armies of the South West were ordered by Mr. Lincoln to advance before the army of the Potomac was ready to take the field. The result of this order was to destroy the unity of plan which should have been the main feature of the campaign. The armies of the West, as a consequence, were fighting while the army of the Potomac was lying idle in its intrenchments; and afterwards the army of the Potomac was contending against superior numbers while the armies of the West were resting on their arms. This want of unity of action enabled the Confederates to concentrate and win those victories which elated them so much.

The next step of Mr. Lincoln was to order the army of the Potomac to be divided into three grand corps d'armee against the express wish of General McClellan, who preferred that the division organization under the command of Brigadier-Generals should be kept up till experience in the field fitted those officers for the more responsible duties of Corps Commanders. His plan of campaign was then found fault with. Mr. Lincoln preferred the direct route to Richmond—the "on to Richmond" programme of Horace Greely—and a march of one hundred and sixty miles through a country better adapted to defense than any other in the world, and intersected with numerous streams capable of being hotly contested by the foe. It was only after a long and elaborate explanation on the part of Gen. McClellan, that Mr. Lincoln consented to his Peninsular plan of campaign. The moment, however, he set out on that expedition the work of breaking him down began. The steamer in which the General embarked for Fortress Monroe had scarcely steamed out of sight of the dome of the Capitol before an order was issued practically depriving General McClellan of the Chief Command. Of the change, the Commander of the Army of the Potomac was never apprised till he read the announcement in the National Intelligencer. One little incident will serve to illustrate the course of the President. He met Gen. McClellan by appointment, on the steamer upon which he sailed for Fortress Monroe, off Alexandria, for consultation. In the course of the interview he informed the General that he had been pressed to transfer Blenker's Division from his command to that of Fremont, for when the "mountain department" had first been created, Gen. McClellan remonstrated against the proposed change, and the President left him with the understanding that it would not be made. The astonishment of Gen. McClellan, the next day, at receiving a letter from Mr. Lincoln stating that he had transferred Blenker to Fremont, and adding that if " he (Gen. McClellan), had known the pressure that was brought to bear on him in this matter he would not blame him," can be more readily imagined than stated.

To follow Gen. McClellan through all the events of the Peninsula campaign is not necessary. The great point in connection with it is this: if McDowell who, during all the fighting in the Chickahominy, was either lying idle at Fredericksburg by order of the President, or marching on a wild goose chase after Stonewall Jackson, who had just made his celebrated diversion in the Valley of the Shenandoah, had advanced upon the flank of the Confederate army, when it is called out of Richmond to attack McClellan, what would have been the result? On this point we have the best possible evidence—evidence emanating from hostile sources. A Prussian officer in the Confederate service, has published a narrative of the seven days fighting on the Chickahominy, from which we make the following extract:

"All these military offensive operations, and the two preceding fights, must have given General McClellan knowledge of our intention to change our inconsiderate position at Richmond, and procure for ourselves more space and freedom of motion. He should then have instantly ordered the army corps of McDowell which for four months had lain inactive at Fredericksburg, to make a demonstration along the Richmond road. By such a movement even the flank march of Gen. Jackson would have been rendered impracticable. But Gen. McClellan must have been deceived in the character of Gen. McDowell; for, notwithstanding all the open manifestations in reference to our contemplated manœuvres, the latter remained with imperturbable indifference in his secure position, and left Gen. McClellan's army, which had suffered greatly by sickness and desertion, a prey to the heavy concussions of our attack. Yesterday, therefore, had Gen. Lee received information of McDowell's inactivity than a general and simultaneous attack on McClellan's whole line was resolved upon."

Beyond this the question need not be discussed. If Mr. Lincoln had not interfered with the plans of Gen. McClellan, intelligent persons in the Confederate ranks admit that the probabilities were that Richmond would have fallen in the summer of 1862. The future historian will not lay the blame of any of the disasters which befel the National Arms in the year stated, upon General McClellan. The real head of that campaign was Mr. Lincoln himself, and for all the blood then shed, and for much of that which has subsequently been poured out, posterity will hold him responsible.

NEWS FROM THE EAST.

The telegraph has not furnished much news during the week. It was silent several days. Paducah, in Kentucky, was captured by a Confederate force under Forrest, and the Federal garrison retreated to the fort, close at hand, allowing the former to carry out their designs. A place called Union City, in the same State, was previously captured by Forrest, with 400 men. Paducah was burned, or partly so, by the Federal commander. It would appear that all our troops are to be withdrawn from detached portions in the West, and concentrated at important points. The Confederates are about assuming the offensive in that quarter on a mighty scale. Advices from Richmond state that rebel plans have been formed for the reclamation of Tennessee and Kentucky. Jeff Davis believes that Richmond is almost impregnable, and the great bulk of the rebel forces will be concentrated at the West, when they intend recapturing Chattanooga, to reach Ohio, and again close the Mississippi. It is reported that they have fifty thousand men at Dalton, Ga., under Joe Johnston, and that Longstreet has gone into Kentucky with twenty-six thousand.

There is nothing new from Virginia. The new Lieutenant-in-Chief occupies much of time in traveling between Washington and the Head Quarters of the Army of the Potomac. He consults frequently with the President, Secretary of War and Gen. Halleck. At last dates he had his head-quarters at Culpepper. It is reported that he intends proceeding to the West as soon as the Army of the Potomac is fully organized, which he promises will be then one of the finest in the country. Among the rumors is one that McClellan and Fremont are soon to be assigned to active duty, at the request of Gen. Grant.

(From our Regular Correspondent).

ST. PATRICK'S DAY IN OREGON.

PORTLAND, Oregon, March 18, 1864.

Yesterday, the Irishmen of this city, who are members of the Hibernian Benevolent Society, celebrated the anniversary of Ireland's Patron Saint in a manner worthy the occasion and in a dialog done honor to themselves.—At half-past eight in the morning the Society marched from their hall, preceded by the Mechanics Brass Band, who exercised their lungs upon the enlivening strains of "St. Patrick's Day." The splendid banner of the Society—upon one side of which is a life-size portrait of Robert Emmett, surrounded by that well-known sentiment, "When my country takes her place among the nations of the earth, then, and not till then let my epitaph be written."—On the reverse is the name of the Society, the date of organization, and the object of its members; "We visit the sick and bury the dead." In the centre of the reverse, is painted a beautiful Irish Harp, surrounded by the sunburst, the whole presenting a magnificent appearance when so beautifully decorated as it was on the present occasion. The Society also possess a splendid silk American flag, presented to them by the ladies of this city.—The use of both emblems amounted to about $300. Leaving the hall, the Society proceeded to St. Mary's Academy, conducted by the Sisters of the most holy names, where they halted, and in order to afford the little orphans charge of those good Sisters an opportunity of witnessing the display. Marching from thence, the Society proceeded on to the Catholic Church, and accompanied by a large number of ladies, citizens and guests, proceeded to Vancouver, where they arrived at half-past eleven. Against the Fremont H. B. Society drawn up in line on the government wharf ready to receive us, and preceded by that band, the 69th Gen. Ill., esp. t. by the St. James Church. This edifice was tastefully decorated for the occasion, and was filled to overflowing. On the altar we noticed the Right Rev. Bishop A. M. A. Blanchet, Very Rev. Dean Wilbur, Very Rev. Dean Brouillet, Fathers Mans, Richards, and Younger, of the diocese of Nesqually, and Fathers Fierens and Tissuay of Oregon. The orphan children, under the care of the Sisters, occupied a portion of the sanctuary and one of the vestry rooms, and their healthy appearance and clean attire were generally admired. A Grand Pontifical Mass was celebrated for the occasion, the Rev Father Mans preaching the panegyric of St. Patrick. Hasleig glanced at the sectarian injuries performed by Patrick's Patron Saint, the reverend gentleman proceeded to impress upon the mind of his hearers the necessity of humility and brotherly love, pointing out to them the various occasions upon which those traits were made manifest during the life of St. Patrick. The usual collection was taken up for the orphans, and the choir sang in excellent taste, the festival hymn of "Hail Glorious St. Patrick." After the cessation of the services the societies again formed in line and marched through the principal grounds to the residence of the Brigadier General Alvord, whom they saluted as the highest representative of the United States military authority in this district. Salutes were also given to the Stars and Stripes, while passing the garrison flag.

The societies also halted in front of the Bishop's residence and saluted him in an appropriate manner. Returning through the garrison grounds the procession reached the business portion of Vancouver and proceeded to the Metropolitan Hall, where a splendid dinner had been provided by those Vancouver Society for their Portland brethren and other guests. At the head of the table sat the marshal of the day, supported on either side by the Presidents of the two societies, W. P. Burke and Colonel Patrick Will, late of Vancouver. Justice having been done to the numerous good things set before us, certain peculiar shaped bottles began to make their allotted places along the tables, and the occasion suggesting a few toasts, the following were given with appropriate responses:

1. "Ireland.—The land of our nativity. At her sons and daughters that the day of her deliverance from British tyranny is at hand, and hope are many years to greet her with the sunlight of an everlasting freedom.

—Great, glorious and free.

First flower of the earth, first gem of the sea.

2. "The Day we Celebrate"—May its annual recurrence find us more and more united in the cause on each occasion. (Responded to by Mr. Hayes in a pithy and well timed speech which the audience appreciated with enthusiasm).

3. "The United States of America"—The land of our adoption; may we ever be true to her constitution and laws. (Responded to by Mr. Hasleig in a few well chosen remarks, and the following sentiment by the President of the Common Council of Portland).

4. "The Liberty of the Press"—If Strikes had a free press, how much would we know about them. (Responded to by W. Lair Hill, editor of the Daily Bulletin).

5. "The Land we Left"—Ireland, Romantic, and the Patriots of Erin—May the epitaph of Emmett be written for Ireland.

6. "The Flag of the Union"—May the prospects of this glorious standard rise as bright as the clear sky of Italy, and her enemies receive the stripes they deserve.

The regular toasts having been disposed of, Mr. Myers, of Vancouver, favored the company with a song, after which the band performed several patriotic airs. The company then adjourned to the ballroom of the building, where they enjoyed themselves until half-past five o'clock, when the societies marched to the steamer, and the Portland Hibernians bade farewell to their kind hosts. To say that the festivities of the day were a success, is but a weak method of conveying the real pleasure participated in by those present. In speaking of the celebration the editor of the Portland Daily Union says:

"All in all we have never seen a more happy festival. The day was fine, and the appointments of the occasion, both on land and water, were superfine. The patriotic banners which were carried with the procession were little needed to show the enthusiasm of those who marched under them."

In the evening the members of the Vancouver Society, re-assembled at the Metropolitan Hall, and finished the day by dancing until the dawn of next morning.

During the hour allotted for dancing, a party of ladies and gentlemen paid a visit to the institution of the Sisters, where we were most agreeably entertained by those pious ladies—who conducted us through the several departments of their well-ordered establishment and delighted us with vocal and instrumental music, performed by the boarders.—The orphans also sung "Save my Bark to Erin's Isle," and "Strike the Harp for Erin," in beautiful style. St. John's Lucatic Asylum, located near the Sisters schools, is also under the charge of the Sisters of Charity, who have also male and three female patients under their charge at present. We regret that we could not accept the kind invitation of the Sister Superior to visit the Institution in consequence of limited time.

— M. A. C.

INAUGURATION OF THE DARGAN STATUE.

The Lord Lieutenant inaugurated the splendid bronze statue of William Dargan in the presence of a large assemblage of spectators, January 20. The statue, which has been produced by Mr. Thomas Farrell, R. H. A., is a noble work, and stands on a pedestal, representing a massive frustrum of a pyramid, standing eleven feet high and six feet square at the base. The material selected for this pedestal was Galway stone, perhaps one of the handsomest stone to be found in the three kingdoms, and is capable of receiving a brilliant polish. The site chosen was in front of the south end of the National Gallery, facing Merrion square. Amongst those who were assembled we observed the following:—The Lord Mayor, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Earl of Howth, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Wicklow, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Howth, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Carlisle, Sir Benjamin Lee Guinness, Bart., the Attorney-General, Sir R. Griffiths, T. M. Frewham, Sir W. Wilde, J. Lentaigne, Sir John Gray, F. Cobb, Esq., Dr. Corrigan, the Very Rev. Dean of Kilmacdaugh, Cotter Kyle, Dr. Mahaffy, Judge Hargrave, Alex. Hoyle, G. W. Hansell, Esq., J. M'Leroy, Sir H. Kane, Professor Shaw, C. Bianconi, Alex. Parker, P. Tiernay of Oregon. The orphan children, under the care of the Sisters, occupied a portion of the sanctuary and one of the vestry rooms, and their healthy appearance and clean attire were generally admired. A Grand Pontifical Mass was celebrated for the occasion, the Rev Father Mans preaching the panegyric of St. Patrick. Hasleig glanced at the sectarian injuries performed by Patrick's Patron Saint, the reverend gentleman proceeded to impress upon the mind of his hearers the necessity of humility and brotherly love, pointing out to them the various occasions upon which those traits were made manifest during the life of St. Patrick. The usual collection was taken up for the orphans, and the choir sang in excellent taste, the festival hymn of "Hail Glorious St. Patrick." After the cessation of the services the societies again formed in line and marched through the principal grounds to the residence of the Brigadier General Alvord, whom they saluted as the highest representative of the United States military authority in this district. Salutes were also given to the Stars and Stripes, while passing the garrison flag.

The societies also halted in front of the Bishop's residence and saluted him in an appropriate manner. Returning through the garrison grounds the procession reached the business portion of Vancouver and proceeded to the Metropolitan Hall, where a splendid dinner had been provided by those Vancouver Society for their Portland brethren and other guests. At the head of the table sat the marshal of the day, supported on either side by the Presidents of the two societies, W. P. Burke and Colonel Patrick Will, late of Vancouver. Justice having been done to the numerous good things set before us, certain peculiar shaped bottles began to make their allotted places along the tables, and the occasion suggesting a few toasts, the following were given with appropriate responses:

1. "Ireland.—The land of our nativity. At her sons and daughters that the day of her deliverance from British tyranny is at hand, and hope are many years to greet her with the sunlight of an everlasting freedom.

—Great, glorious and free,
First flower of the earth, first gem of the sea.

2. "The Day we Celebrate"—May its annual recurrence find us more and more united in the cause on each occasion. (Responded to by Mr. Hayes in a pithy and well timed speech which the audience appreciated with enthusiasm).

3. "The United States of America"—The land of our adoption; may we ever be true to her constitution and laws. (Responded to by Mr. Hasleig in a few well chosen remarks, and the following sentiment by the President of the Common Council of Portland).

4. "The Liberty of the Press"—If Strikes had a free press, how much would we know about them. (Responded to by W. Lair Hill, editor of the Daily Bulletin).

5. "The Land we Left"—Ireland, Romantic, and the Patriots of Erin—May the epitaph of Emmett be written for Ireland.

6. "The Flag of the Union"—May the prospects of this glorious standard rise as bright as the clear sky of Italy, and her enemies receive the stripes they deserve.

The regular toasts having been disposed of, Mr. Myers, of Vancouver, favored the company with a song, after which the band performed several patriotic airs. The company then adjourned to the ballroom of the building, where they enjoyed themselves until half-past five o'clock, when the societies marched to the steamer, and the Portland Hibernians bade farewell to their kind hosts. To say that the festivities of the day were a success, is but a weak method of conveying the real pleasure participated in by those present. In speaking of the celebration the editor of the Portland Daily Union says:

"All in all we have never seen a more happy festival. The day was fine, and the appointments of the occasion, both on land and water, were superfine. The patriotic banners which were carried with the procession were little needed to show the enthusiasm of those who marched under them."

In the evening the members of the Vancouver Society, re-assembled at the Metropoli-

ILLEGAL DRILLING IN IRELAND.

A fortnightly sitting of the Blarney Petty Sessions Court took place Feb. 16. The presiding magistrates were—Messrs. N. Duncombe, F. Crofts, T. Wall, M. D., and J. L. Croson, R. M.

Mr. S. Gillman, Crown Solicitor appeared to prosecute certain men—named Edward Horgan, Jeremiah Mahony, D. Ford, Charles Field, Edward Reilly, John Reilly, William Hogan, William Walsh, and John Cahill, for that they, with others, on the 28th of December, 1863, at or near Blarney, did assemble for the purpose of practising military evolutions, contrary to law, same being dangerous to the peace and security of her Majesty's liege subjects, and of her government.

Two other parties, named Patrick Neill and Michael Ryan, appeared on a summons, in which they were charged with training and drilling the above, with others, at the same time and place.

Walsh and Cahill did not make their appearance.

A sub-constable stated, after having proved service of summons, that he was informed that Cahill had gone to America.

Mr. M. J. Collins appeared for the defendants.

The case created great interest, and the court and its vicinity were thronged with a large crowd of persons anxiously awaiting the result of the case. A considerable body of police, under the command of Sub-inspector St. Leger, was in attendance.

Mr. Gillman said he appeared on behalf of her Majesty's Attorney-General, to ask the bench to take informations against the parties in custody, against the parties, for an offence of a very serious nature. For several months past, as some of their worships must be aware, a serious breach of the peace had been repeatedly committed by a number of parties marching in military array throughout the country. The offence was against a statute passed in 1819—the 60th Geo. III., cap. 1, by which "every person who shall be present at or attend any assembly for the purpose of training and drilling to the use of arms, or for the practice of military exercises, movements, or evolutions, or who shall aid or assist therein, being legally convicted thereof, shall be liable to be transported for any term not exceeding seven years, or be punished by imprisonment not exceeding two years." That statute was passed in consequence of the Defenders, and Ribbonmen, and Whiteboys. The others are charged with an offence created by the subsequent portion of the same section, and that states, "That every person who shall attend or be present at any such meeting or assembly as aforesaid, for the purpose of being trained or drilled, shall be liable to be punished by fine and imprisonment not exceeding two years." Fortunately for the country, the days of such meetings were passed, amidst loud applause.

The Lord Lieutenant said—My lords and gentlemen, we have been in the habit of meeting together in a most just and becoming tribute to the exalted public services and sinless whose statue we have just unveiled (applause.) His natural modesty, almost as remarkable as his great and unrivalled energy, will not allow me to say this day; but at all events I believe the time will arrive when the name of Dargan will be as familiar in the mouths of the people of Ireland as the name of William Dargan (applause.) The erection of public statues always has been considered to be the highest honor which free States and cities can pay to living merit.—Time have been frequently erected to kings and emperors, to warriors, statesmen, patriots, and, in Dublin, at least, we may say to poets (a laugh), but never could there have been a more appropriate memorial than that which we have place upon this ground to William Dargan (applause.) It is true that he never neither the diadem of monarchs, nor the laurels of conquerors—the hands do not sway the rod of empire or the living lyre, and we cannot doubt that his sturdy form and truthful lineaments are exactly cast in the mould of the Apollo Belvidere. But we raise his statue because he supplies a memorable instance of how a simple, earnest, honest man, without any help from birth or fortune, by the energetic exercise of the faculties which God has given him, may not only raise himself to a commanding level beyond his own original position, but may also confer signal benefits upon the men of his day, and upon the country which has learned to be proud of him and thus prides to show it (applause.) And we place his statue here, because on this very ground before it was that the patient zeal, the strong will, the disinterested liberality of Mr. Dargan brought to a successful issue that great Dublin Exhibition which gave a fresh impulse to the arts and sciences of art and science, of which we see the improving monuments before us. In the surrounding building which we are about to open we shall pay fitting honor to those fine arts which bespeak the highest progress of refinement, and adorn the summit of the social column. While thus recognising the public-spirited and illustrious workmen, we do well to mark that the true base of all material prosperity is to be found in the steady industry of which William Dargan was so eminently the type and teacher (loud applause).

Death of the King of Bavaria.

Maximilian Joseph II, third King of Bavaria, died in the early part of last month. He was born in 1811 and ascended the throne March 22nd, 1848, his father Louis Charles having abdicated in his favor. The latter reigned 23 years. Prior to 1806 Bavaria was a Duchy, but the Elector Maximilian Joseph I having become allied by marriage with the House of Bonaparte, Napoleon created it a kingdom. In 1813 Bavaria joined the league against France. The late King is succeeded by his son.

Bavaria is a constitutional monarchy; and is one of the most prosperous German states. The sittings of its Government are the same as in England and France. There are two Houses of Parliament. The upper consists of Princes of the blood royal, the Archbishops of the Protestant Consistory, Barons and heads of families of landed property. The lower house is composed of 149 deputies. One eighth are nobles, one eighth clergymen, one fourth citizens and the remainder landed proprietors. The population is 4,600,000, of which number over 3,000,000 are Roman Catholics. Bavaria is a well governed State and the Capital, Munich, is one of the finest in Europe. King Louis who abdicated in 1848 is still living.

Paper Money.

We would call the public attention, says the N. Y. Herald, to the following table, showing the amount of paper money which will probably be in circulation in the loyal States before the close of the present year:

| | |
|---|---|
| Legal Tenders of 1862 | $207,767,100 |
| Legal Tenders of 1863 | 144,232,900 |
| United Currency | 34,000,000 |
| Interest bearing Treasury Notes | 20,000,000 |
| National bank currency | 400,000,000 |
| State bank issues | 150,000,000 |
| Total | $1,016,000,000 |

By this it appears that we shall soon have a paper circulation amounting to over twelve hundred millions of dollars, against three hundred and fifty millions, gold and silver included, which was spread over the entire country three years ago. More than one thousand millions of the above amount has been added to the currency since the commencement of the year 1861.

Peter Tait, of Limerick, whose enterprise is now so well famed, has been delayed clovernor the line with clothing; also 5,000 military suits for a foreign power.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT TO DR. VAUGHAN.

ROOMS OF THE CONVENTION OF THE IRISH CIVIL SOCIETY, No 82 St. Patrick's Day, 1864.

At a general meeting of the Committee of the Irish Civil Society, held this day, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee of Convention have learned with deep regret of the death of the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, late Pastor of St. Patrick's Church, San Francisco.

Resolved, That in the departure, in the rich fullness of his years, of this venerable Priest, we feel that we have lost a friend, whose manifested and unaffected piety, whose pure heart and unbounded charity, whose kind and faithful friendship, and whose ever ready counsel and advice, will long be remembered by us, and by all who knew him, and shall be ever cherished in the memory of each and every one of us, as a sacred legacy, that our lasting deed will and shall be the words of truth and justice, and the example of his life, which was devoted to the service of his Master's needs.

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to present the Resolutions of the Convention, together with the Resolutions of Condolence, to the Rev. Pastor of St. Patrick's Church, and Secretary of the Convention.

Resolved, That the Emerald Isle—Patrick O'Farrell, President; Edward Hayes and John Healy, Delegates.

Erin's Hope—Lieut. Lloyd Harrold, President; Edward Cassidy and Richard Carey, Delegates.

Shamrock—Patrick Mahony, President; Michael Hanley and William Sexton, Delegates.

Father Mathew—Thomas Cleary, President; Joseph Hayes, Secretary; Patrick Mahony and John Cullen, Delegates.

Shamrock Protective Association—Joseph [illegible], President; James Cassidy and Daniel Crowley, Delegates.

EDWARD MURRAY,
Secretary of the Convention of the Irish Civil Societies.

Wholesale Prices Current.

FRIDAY, April 1, 1864.

The market for general merchandise remains in a quiet, and sales of groceries and provisions are now very small, although coffee, butter and some goods are firm in price. Breadstuffs are in moderate request for the large arrivals; produce has declined to 16c. and hides and tallow are in good supply and demand, and some heavy sales reported at quotations.

Auction sales were not very large, excepting for rice sugars, and coffee, and only sample lots sold.

Jobbing trade still dull.

| | |
|---|---|
| Coffee, Java, P lb | 21@22 |
| Rio | 20@21 |
| Sugar, Hawaiian | 9@10 |
| Crushed | 16@16½ |
| Powdered | 15@15½ |
| Coffee A | 14@14½ |
| Extra C | 13@13½ |
| Dry, do | 12½@13 |
| Golden C | 12½@13 |
| Brown, do | 12@12½ |
| Pekoe | 60@65 |
| Young Hyson | 60@65 |
| Hyson | 60@65 |
| Gunpowder | 60@65 |
| Japan, fine | 60@65 |
| Common | 50@55 |
| Rice, China, P lb | 6@6½ |
| Patna | 8@8½ |
| Carolina | 10@10½ |
| Flour, Extra, P bbl | 7 00@7 25 |
| Superfine | 6 50@6 75 |
| Corn meal, P bbl | 4 00@4 25 |
| Rye flour | 5 00@5 25 |
| Wheat, P bush | 1 60@1 65 |
| Corn, do | 1 00@1 05 |
| Barley, do | 1 00@1 10 |
| Oats, do | 60@65 |
| Beans, do | 2 00@2 25 |
| Potatoes, P sack | 1 00@1 25 |
| Onions, P lb | 2@2½ |
| Butter, Choice | 14@15 |
| Common | 12@13 |
| Lard, kegs | 12@13 |
| tubs | 11@12 |
| Candles, common | 12@13 |
| Yeast Powders | 2 25@2 50 |

MARRIED.

In this city, March 29, by Rev. Father Klug, Doctor H. Hast, of Danville, Illinois, to Mary Albert, daughter of B. Mcguire, of this city. (New York papers please copy.)

In this city, March 29, by Rev. Father Klug, Thomas Welsh, of Gloucestershire, England, to Margaret Welsh, of Gloucestershire, England.

In this city, March 26, by Rev. Father Doherty, Charles Hicks to Miss Ellen Mahony.

In this city, March 28, by Very Rev. Father Croke, Patrick Kelly to Miss Ellen Kelly.

In this city, March 28, by Very Rev. Father Croke, Patrick Hayes to Miss Margaret Hayes.

In this city, March 30, by Rev. Father Cotter, John Hicks to Miss Ellen Mahony.

DEATHS.

In this city, March 30, Charles Joseph, son of John and Ann McGuire, aged 7 years and 4 months.

In this city, March 31, Catherine, wife of George O. Ellison, a native of Ireland, aged 37 years.

In this city, March 30, Mary Ann, infant daughter of Thomas and Ann Hicks.

In this city, March 29, Jeremiah O'Keefe, a native of Ireland, aged 45 years.

In this city, March 30, Mary Ann, infant daughter of Patrick and Catherine Mahony.

In this city, March 30, Patrick Mahony, a native of Ireland, aged 45 years.

In this city, March 30, Ann, wife of James and Bridget Hanlon, aged 30 years.

In this city, March 30, ——, infant daughter of John and Ellen Hicks.

In this city, March 29, Isabella, daughter of Wm. and Isabella Sinclair, aged 2 months and 3 days.

In this city, March 30, Catherine, infant daughter of Wm. and Mary Ford.

In this city, March 29, Elizabeth, infant daughter of Thomas and Ellen Hagerty.

In this city, March 29, Jane, wife of Margaret and Charles Mahony, aged 4 years.

In this city, March 29, John, infant son of John C. and Mary A. Cotter, aged 1 year.

In this city, March 29, Patrick Cleary, a native of county Clare, Ireland, aged 45 years.

In this city, March 29, Mary Ann, infant daughter of [illegible], aged 1 year.

In this city, March 29, [illegible], aged 45 years.

In this city, March 29, [illegible], aged 1 year.

In this city, March 29, [illegible], aged 1 year.

In this city, March 29, [illegible], aged 1 year

WHEN WILL IRELAND AWAKE?

The plea of England, in the mouth of both sides of the English house alike (and, of course, in the mouth of the Irish slaves who act as officials or as henchmen to either), is that the wholesale Emigration which all admit threatens to drain the country to the verge of depopulation is but "a natural effect of natural causes beyond the control of legislation and government." Europe is asked to believe that Ireland is really not now so badly off at all; but that since she is not yet absolutely so rich or so comfortable as some other nations, her people are "naturally" attracted from her—first, by the temptation of unusually high wages in America; and second by the irresistible seduction of family affection prompting them to follow those whose invitations so unceasingly stream back to Ireland from the New World. And there was no Irishmen among Irish "representatives" in the House of Commons to tell Europe, from that platform, why it is that any wages in America should tempt her peasantry from Ireland, and why it is that America is already peopled by so many millions of the Irish race to invite their brethren to follow them out of the land of death and out of the house of bondage.

If there be any truth, in such reasons it is because the people of Ireland are robbed, by law, of their means of life at home—because the people of Ireland are deprived of the country which is theirs by the right of their fathers in the eye of God.

Disarmed, defenceless, long-suffering, hopeless, they leave their country because the result of the laws and of the government to which the connexion of that country with England condemns them, is to grind them to death here if they struggle to remain.

It is a gross and scandalous mockery of the name of Ireland—the suggestion of Messrs. Whiteside and O'Hagan, that a new industrial movement, forsooth—an extension of flax cultivation, forsooth—is what Ireland is to look to with hope, and we suppose thanks for being allowed to look that far. It is a gross and insulting mockery—hardly less than that of the English Lord Deputy Carlisle, when at the Mansion House he answered the gentle remonstrances of a respectful Lord Mayor by an exhortation to improved farming, in a style of speech which in other days might have readily conducted the speaker to the outside of any room full of Irish gentlemen in which it had been delivered.

Alas! the peasantry of Ireland will continue to flee in so hope of recovering at home what is their own. They go, indeed, in the hope of some day returning; but when? They look to return, most of them, enthusiasts as they are at heart, in arms if need be. This is quite true; they do, many of them, look to such a return as a matter of fact—and it is quite well that English statesmen as well as Irish politicians should know and admit that it is so. But it is also true that they must cherish such a hope as a logical consequence of their position and of the rights which they feel they possess. And who shall say that they ought not to do so, in honor as well as in "reason?"—for the end of all political argument, after all, is force—is the appeal to the sword; and no one that knows Ireland but knows that Ireland is heartily disaffected, and that it is not for want of will, but of means, that she has not long smothered such an appeal for alternative to her ultimatum.

There is no doubt of the fact of the universal disaffection of the people of Ireland to British rule. Even among the classes just above the people there is abundance of it, though on public occasions a pretence of the contrary is still kept up as flimsy as it is insecure and dishonest. The simple fact is, that in this promising season of the year of our Lord 1864, there are no friends of the British connexion, of the English Crown or Government in Ireland, except the enemy's garrison in the country, and such individuals of the purchasable classes as the promise of office, of title, of large fees, or of personal patronage, buys to set a lie before their country and the world.

This disaffection of the Irish people, though subject of pretty general conversation in private circles, has, however, no public voice but in the press. And we of the press, who sincerely proclaim it, cannot obtain a hearing for the country across the sea; because we are interdicted by English influence always at work between us and those we would reach; because we are falsely contradicted and disavowed by those whom an infamous system of Parliamentary misrepresentation places upon the only existing platform from which the world supposes it may expect an authoritative voice from Ireland; and because in the utter depression of a hopeless and now flying population, Ireland is still without a public organization empowered country to speak out before Europe the true demands of Irish Public Opinion.

"Irish Members" in the English House of Commons openly misrepresent and solemnly contradict without a blush what they know to be the truth of the feelings, the hopes, and the principles of their constituents—because they know they can do so safely, for want of the tribunal of a popular and national organization at home. It is on a large field, just what occurs under our very eyes in the Dublin Corporation—where patriotic persons lose no personal opportunity of professing a "loyalty" they know they do not feel to the Crown of England, and where the quasi-representatives of an outraged and insulted population are not ashamed to set up in the public ways of the city a monument of their individual meanness of soul, in the shape of a statue of a German prince, the only connexion of whose name with this most beaten nation is as that of the unprovoked perpetrator of a heartless insult.

If we had, as we ought long since to have had, a powerful, an honest, and a united national political organization such things would not be dared. Recreants who dishonor the name of Irishmen in the English House of Commons would be hunted from every hustings in the country with ignominy and scorn—as he will take their place. And obsequious traitors in the metropolitan Corporation would not only very soon meet their personal deserts at the hands of an outraged people through every Ward in Dublin, but the bronzed monument of their shame, if ever permitted to be hoisted to its intended place, would very soon find itself on its way to the deepest darkness of where the Puddle unites with the great sewer of the Liffey.

How long, fellow countrymen, shall we cry out for that Organization, the want of which every one of us, as each of you well knows, deplores, and sagely deplores, in the privacy of his own social circle? Let but such an organization raise its head for one week, as a reality, and already half the battle is gained, for half the difficulty has disappeared. In the press we are well nigh weary of defining and proclaiming the principles, of proving the justice, and of declaring aloud the nature of the hopes of the nation. We know that what we write is strictly true—is often indeed far behind the full extent of, the truth of what is felt and what is longed for by the people. But so long as in the English Parliament or on any other public platform the quasi representatives of that people are, and their falsehood is allowed to go without disavowal, and their treason to their fellow-countrymen is not only unpunished, but even unnoticed—so long will no one in all Europe believe that there yet remains a spark of living honor or a breath of manly hope in the breast of what was once a gallant Irish nation.

Dublin Irishman.

PORTRAIT OF A "WAR CHRISTIAN" ABOLITIONIST.

Half an hour spent in the society of a thorough japan black, double-dyed, charcoalmark-defying-out-and-out squid fish, exterminating Abolitionist, it is an admirable preparation for Colney Hatch and a padded room. You are introduced to a gentleman with a beneficient countenance and manners as soft as pumpkin squash, who, in mellifluous accents, talks shambles and blood-puddings. Your Christian friend holds a bible in one hand and a six-shooter in the other. He blesses you as a man and a brother, but he has another brother round the corner, whose bowels he longs to rip up incontinently. He will pray for you; but for the other brother he supplicates that fire, famine and slaughter may be his portion, and cling to him everlastingly. He would give him his State rights in brimstone and burning marl. He would hurl him over the rapids of a Niagara of vitrol and caustic soda. This gentleman's God is the God of battle, of wrath, and of vengeance. He doesn't care about fighting himself; but he will open his purse-strings liberally to swell the bounty which shall induce Paddy from Cork, or Hans from Bremen, or better still, the athletic, bony, valient men from the east and west of the Union, to become food for powder. There is a story of a Quaker tradesman in Philadelphia, who says to his assistant, "Samuel, if thee is determined to go to the wars, thy salary shall be continued during thy absence; but if thee has made up thy mind not to go, I have no further occasion for thy services." This is your Christian friend's way of thinking. It may almost without exaggeration be assumed that he wishes the war more longed in order that he may in want and blood. He likes blood as thousands drink to him. John, of Americus who might act, we're bound to say, "because they're bound away. The lad must be preserved. He'll let them come back and there's our land; and we'll see what we can do in making the best of a bad job and arranging the slavery difficulty." This by no means suits your Christian friend. The cause of the white man is with him of no account in comparison with that of his ideal black man. I say ideal, for to the genuine nigger he is slightly more reticent of affection. His desires to exterminate the South; he damns the South from the pulpit; for your Christian friend is frequently dubbed reverend. He stamps his foot on the platform, and wishes the South to be crushed under his heel.—Rights! they have no more rights.—States! they are are no longer States, but must be reduced to the condition of Territories. They are to be rooted out, exalled, incapacitated, civilly killed, squelched; and when secessia has been made into one vast slaughter-house, your Christian friend will be ready to mount the butcher's block and preach about crowning, mercies and saving grace.

LORD PALMERSTON CONDEMNED.

Mr. Goldwin Smith, in a letter to the Manchester Examiner, dated Oxford, Feb. 3, says: "Do we desire to help the oppressed? Let us help Ireland, where ages of ruthless government are now seen where it has been used it has never been known to fail.

For Neuralgia it will afford immediate relief in every case, however distressing.

It will relieve the worst case of Headache in three minutes, and is warranted to do it.

Toothache also will it cure instantly.

For Nervous Debility and general lassitude, this Liniment is a most happy and unfailing remedy. Acting directly upon the nervous tissues, it strengthens and restrains the system, and restores it to elasticity and vigor.

For Piles as an external remedy, we claim that it is the best known, and as a discharge it is a world in process as a cure. Every victim of this distressing complaint should give it a trial, for it will relieve in three minutes, and in a majority of cases will afford a real and speedy cure.

Quinsy and Sore Throat are sometimes extremely malignant and dangerous, but a liberal application of this Liniment will never fail to cure.

Sprains, Bruises, Wounds, Rheumatism, and enlargement of the joints is liable to occur if neglected. The worst case in any of these will be relieved in two or three days.

Burns, Cuts, Wounds, Scres, Ulcers, Burns and Scalds, yield readily to the wonderful healing properties of Dr. Sweet's Infallible Liniment, when used according to directions. Also, Chilblains, Frosted Feet and insect bites, and stings.

Every Horse Owner

should have this remedy at hand, for its timely use at the first appearance of Lameness, Scratches, or Grease will prevent the most formidable diseases to which horses are liable, and which render so many otherwise valuable horses nearly worthless.

Over four hundred voluntary testimonials to the wonderful curative properties of this Liniment have been received within the last two years, and many of them from persons in the highest ranks of life.

CAUTION.

To avoid imposition, observe the signature over the name of the Proprietor, on every bottle, and also, "Dr. Sweet's Infallible Liniment," blown in the glass of each bottle. Sold by Druggists, Merchants and Storekeepers.

Richardson & Co., Proprietors, Norwich, Ct.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents, No. 601 Battery street corner of Clay.

For sale by all Druggists and Storekeepers throughout the State. 19

TIME TO ORGANIZE.

The State Democratic Central Committee, says the Placerville Democrat, has issued a call for a State Convention on the 10th of May, and its none too early for the Democracy to commence organizing. We have a hard fight before us and we must prepare for it. In a short time we shall know who is to bear our banner, upon which is inscribed the glorious principles of our creed, in the great contest ahead—a contest which will bring out the full strength of the enemy, and which we are satisfied will be conducted by them with more than ordinary zeal, ability, deceit, and unscrupulousness. We do not propose to weigh the chances in favor of this or that man. We feel confident that such selections will be made as will receive the cordial indorsement of the party throughout the State. Now is no time to be squabbling about men, when principles of vital importance are at stake, far transcending in magnitude the claims, however just or eminent, of any individual. The ensuing battle is to be fought strictly on principle. There is no dodging the issue by sophistry or evasion. Let Democrats everywhere be up and doing, and the victory will be ours.

• • •

Again we say to the Democracy, organize for the contest. We have everything to lose by remaining idle—everything to gain by being active. In other States our brethren are preparing for the campaign. Our principles have received the approval of the good and great and patriotic, and the fact is evident that a large majority of the free and intelligent people of the Union endorses them now. Power has endeavored, and in a few instances successfully, to stifle their sentiment. To prevent a repetition of the outrage we must organize, and present to the enemies of civil liberty a united and determined front. Reason, justice and patriotism are with us, and in a fair contest fanaticism, corruption and treason must ultimately prevail—Democrats ought to feel that we are struggling upon the brink of national ruin, and that the salvation of the country depends upon the election of a Democratic President. We know very well that all the influence, power and money of a corrupt Administration and party are against us; for that reason we ought to make the greater effort. United and with one will let us be ready to rally around the flag of our principles. An efficient organization, we are convinced, is all that is necessary to insure success. Come, Democrats, go to work earnestly and organize thoroughly, and all will be well.

The Irish Establishment

Mr. Bright in his recent speech at Birmingham, said, "There can be no just Government of Ireland until you abolish the Irish Protestant Church (loud and continuous cheers). There have been no feelings in the history of the world that have so stirred men's love, and so stirred their hate, as the feelings connected with their belief. And, I say, if ever there was an act at once unjust and idiotic on the part of the English Government, it was to continue in Ireland a Church assuming their own national religious profession, but which was a Church that never could call within its fold probably more than about one-tenth of the people, and which from that day to this had never been able to convert—I was going to say a single real Catholic to Protestantism—but has made Catholics not only the belief of the people, but a patriotism (hear, hear, and loud cheers). For every Catholic has not only had the ordinary reasons for adhering to his Church which every man has who learned the doctrines and teachings of his Church from his mother, but he had this further reason, that the Church which is sought to be imposed upon him, and enforced by another nation therefore every [illegible] and every feeling of respect for a free man making him resist it, he will never come within the pale of such a Church as that (hear and cheers).

Sir J. Acton, speaking on the same subject at Dudley, said: I do not hesitate to say it is the most legitimate and glorious revolution recorded in modern history.—(Cheers.) Was the revolution of Brabant more provoked by wrongs less grievous than those which the law still inflicts on our Irish fellow countrymen.

The Irish Regium Donum.

Probably of all the claimants on the public purse the Irish Presbyterians are the most shameless. They are in the present receipt of £40,000 from the public exchequer. The regulation with respect to this grant is that any congregation of twelve families that can raise from voluntary sources £36 per annum shall be entitled to a donum from Government of £75. The result of this regulation has been such as any one possessed of the smallest knowledge of human nature might have predicted. It has starved the hearts of the people, and kept the Irish Presbyterian ministry in a position only one degree less degraded than that of their flocks. To raise the Government minimum of £35 a year has been the one great aim of every endowed congregation. In 1854, when the last return on this subject was made to Parliament, there were, out of 461 congregations only 183 which exceeded the sum of £36. Devices of all kinds have been resorted to to obtain this minimum without being compelled to pay it. Thus sums obtained from home missions, from the Sustentation Fund, from salaries attached to various offices, such as goal, military, and workhouse chaplaincies, have been put down to make up the £35; but this body is equal to greater exigencies than these. The same return informed us that when a few pounds or shillings were wanting to enable a church to comply with the letter of the law, the exact deficiency was always supplied. In eleven cases the Synod Fund made it up; in one case a marriage license supplied it; in another the precise balance came out of the interest of 'manse; and so no fewer than eighty-two miraculously manage to raise £34, neither a penny more nor a penny less. The evasions of the law which have been resorted to by some members of this body scarcely bear reporting, or would tell, as Mr. Bright told the House of Commons in 1854, of cases which are nothing less than a deliberate fraud on the State. We will remember, that since that time the sum granted by Government has been increased by £2000, and every farthing of respect for a free man and a free country, which the law still preserves within the pale of such a Church as that (hear and cheers).

Sir J. Acton, speaking on the same subject at Dudley, said: I do not hesitate to say it is the most legitimate and glorious revolution recorded in modern history.—(Cheers.) Was the revolution of Brabant more provoked by wrongs less grievous than those which the law still inflicts on our Irish fellow countrymen.

REMOVAL.

PHILADELPHIA

BOOT & SHOE STORE,

No. 725 Montgomery Street, Rose Block

Two doors from Pine street, opposite his late place of business

T. J. BRODERICK,

—IMPORTER AND DEALER IN—

Gents' Ladies' Misses' and Children's Best Quality of Boots, Shoes, and Gaiters, of every Quality and Style from the BEST MANUFACTURERS IN PHILADELPHIA AND NEW YORK

NEW STYLES

RECEIVED BY EVERY STEAMER.

NEW STYLE OPERA BALMORALS

BUTTONED, OPERA,

AND CONGRESS GAITERS

OPERA SLIPPERS, ETC.

FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS & SHOES

BOOTS MADE TO ORDER.

TOBIN, MEACHER & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in

HOSIERY, WHITE GOODS, LADIES' AND GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS,

Military Goods, Laces, Embroidery, Fancy, Pocket Cutlery, Paper and Envelopes, Hoop Skirts, Yankee Notions, etc., etc.

401 to 409 Sacramento street, corner Battery,

And 418 to 424 Battery street (up stairs.)

RICHARDSON'S NEW METHOD FOR THE PIANO - FORTE

An improvement upon all other systems that have ever been introduced, and is universally acknowledged by the numerous professors and amateurs who have purchased it, to be the most complete, thorough, and scientific work of the kind ever published. It is a thorough knowledge of piano-forte playing. It is adapted to all grades of tuition, from the first rudiments of the pianoforte, to the studies and exercises of advanced pupils. Two editions are published, adapting a medium, the other double fingering. Either the work is ordered, if no preference is mentioned, the edition with double fingering will be sent.

Persons that intend ordering it from us are particular to specify which edition they want.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston For sale by Music Dealers in the United States.

A CATHOLIC LADY, just arrived from New York, who has a wide experience in teaching, is desirous of meeting an engagement with a family. In town could be taught music, English branches, French, the Harp, Piano, Guitar and singing. Address M. S. A. Monitor office.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DR. HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS.

THE OPERATION OF THIS PALATABLE REMEDY upon the stomach, liver and excretory organs is regular and uniform, and unattended by irritation. It regulates, increases and purifies these. Dyspepsia in all its forms, yields to its control and invigorating properties.

I Vigorate the System.

Vigorous digestion and pure blood produce nutritious blood, a nutritious blood a healthy frame. Does the vision of a dyspeptic stomach and a disordered liver desire to know how the digestion may be improved, the bile and other fluids of the body purified?

Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

Will accomplish this desirable, reliable revolution in the system, regulating the secretions, giving tone to the sexual fibres which diseased or feeble, and giving every related nerve, muscle and fiber, and brings the whole machinery of vitality into harmonious and healthful play.

Strengthen the System.

The best means of imparting vigor to the broken down frame and shattered constitution, which has yet been invented, discovered, or produced in the herbs of both earth and adjacent to it.

Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

Debility, from whatever cause arising, may be cured, strength, in whatever manner it may have been wasted, may be restored by the use of the powerful and healing tonic. For infirmity, decay and all the pecularities of decay, bodily and mental, they are a positive specific.

A Word to the Aged.

In the decline of life the loss of first force consequent upon failing vigor, renders the mind peculiarly susceptible to every existing irritation, and the slightest ailment, real or imaginary, becomes a source of anxiety. Such symptoms are always the first indices of nervous disease, and should be counteracted by the use of the Bitters.

Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

As an invigorant and restorative, ingredients in its beneficial action and permanent in its effects. It tones the stomach, improves the appetite, acts like a charm upon the spirits.

For Females.

Thousands of ladies resort to it as a remedy for hysterics, fluttering of the heart, nervous headache, general debility, and all peculiar disturbances and derangements to which, as a sex they are subject, in others, and lightens the depressed mental powers as well as strengthens the body, and the use is never followed by any reaction.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.

Purchase only of reliable dealers. Sold everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents, No. 601 Battery street, corner of Clay.

San Francisco.

DR. HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS.

THE OPERATION OF THIS PALATABLE REMEDY upon the stomach, liver and excretory organs is regular and uniform, and unattended by irritation. It regulates, increases and purifies these. Dyspepsia in all its forms, yields to its control and invigorating properties.

I Vigorate the System.

Vigorous digestion and pure blood produce nutritious blood, a nutritious blood a healthy frame. Does the vision of a dyspeptic stomach and a disordered liver desire to know how the digestion may be improved, the bile and other fluids of the body purified?

Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

Will accomplish this desirable, reliable revolution in the system, regulating the secretions, giving tone to the sexual fibres which diseased or feeble, and giving every related nerve, muscle and fiber, and brings the whole machinery of vitality into harmonious and healthful play.

Strengthen the System.

The best means of imparting vigor to the broken down frame and shattered constitution, which has yet been invented, discovered, or produced in the herbs of both earth and adjacent to it.

Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

Debility, from whatever cause arising, may be cured, strength, in whatever manner it may have been wasted, may be restored by the use of the powerful and healing tonic. For infirmity, decay and all the pecularities of decay, bodily and mental, they are a positive specific.

A Word to the Aged.

In the decline of life the loss of first force consequent upon failing vigor, renders the mind peculiarly susceptible to every existing irritation, and the slightest ailment, real or imaginary, becomes a source of anxiety. Such symptoms are always the first indices of nervous disease, and should be counteracted by the use of the Bitters.

Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

As an invigorant and restorative, ingredients in its beneficial action and permanent in its effects. It tones the stomach, improves the appetite, acts like a charm upon the spirits.

For Females.

Thousands of ladies resort to it as a remedy for hysterics, fluttering of the heart, nervous headache, general debility, and all peculiar disturbances and derangements to which, as a sex they are subject, in others, and lightens the depressed mental powers as well as strengthens the body, and the use is never followed by any reaction.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.

Purchase only of reliable dealers. Sold everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents, No. 601 Battery street, corner of Clay.

San Francisco.

MEDICAL.

★ ★ ★

DR. SWEET'S

INFALLIBLE LINIMENT,

THE

GREAT EXTERNAL REMEDY

For Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Stiff Neck and Joints, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts and Wounds, Piles, Headache, and all Rheumatic and Nervous Disorders.

For all of which it is a speedy and certain cure, and never fails. This Liniment is prepared from the recipe of Dr. Sheffield Sweet of Connecticut, the famous bone setter, and has been used in his practice for more than twenty years with the most astonishing success.

As an alleviator of pain, it is unrivaled by any preparation before the public, of which the most skeptical may be convinced in a single trial.

The Liniment will cure rapidly and radically, Rheumatic disorders of every kind, and in the shortest of cases where it has been used it has never been known to fail.

For Neuralgia it will afford immediate relief in every case, however distressing.

It will relieve the worst case of Headache in three minutes, and is warranted to do it.

Toothache also will it cure instantly.

For Nervous Debility and general lassitude, this Liniment is a most happy and unfailing remedy. Acting directly upon the nervous tissues, it strengthens and restrains the system, and restores it to elasticity and vigor.

For Piles as an external remedy, we claim that it is the best known, and as a discharge it is a world in process as a cure. Every victim of this distressing complaint should give it a trial, for it will relieve in three minutes, and in a majority of cases will afford a real and speedy cure.

Quinsy and Sore Throat are sometimes extremely malignant and dangerous, but a liberal application of this Liniment will never fail to cure.

Sprains, Bruises, Wounds, Scres, Ulcers, Burns and Scalds, yield readily to the wonderful healing properties of Dr. Sweet's Infallible Liniment, when used according to directions. Also, Chilblains, Frosted Feet and insect bites, and stings.

Every Horse Owner

should have this remedy at hand, for its timely use at the first appearance of Lameness, Scratches, or Grease will prevent the most formidable diseases to which horses are liable, and which render so many otherwise valuable horses nearly worthless.

Over four hundred voluntary testimonials to the wonderful curative properties of this Liniment have been received within the last two years, and many of them from persons in the highest ranks of life.

CAUTION.

To avoid imposition, observe the signature over the name of the Proprietor, on every bottle, and also, "Dr. Sweet's Infallible Liniment," blown in the glass of each bottle. Sold by Druggists, Merchants and Storekeepers.

Richardson & Co., Proprietors, Norwich, Ct.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents, No. 601 Battery street, corner of Clay, San Francisco.

For sale by all Druggists and Storekeepers throughout the State. 19

MEDICAL.

MEDICAL ASSISTANCE.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF.

THE GREAT EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL

REMEDY,

STOPS THE MOST EXCRUCIATING PAIN

IN A FEW MINUTES,

AND

RAPIDLY CURES THE PATIENT.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

Proves its superiority to all other Medicines at once.

ITS FIRST INDICATION

Is to relieve the sufferer of PAIN, no matter from what cause it may originate, or where it may be seated.

If to the Head, Face, or Throat;
If from the Joints, Spine, or Shoulder;
If in the Arms, Breast, or Side;
If in the Joints, Limbs, or Muscles;
If in the Nerves, Teeth, or Ears;

Or if any other part of the body, the application to the parts or parts where the pain exists will afford immediate relief.

IF RISHED WITH PAIN

If in the Stomach, Bowels, or Kidneys;
In the Bladder, Spleen, or Liver;
In the Teeth, Ears or Throat;
In the brain or Nervous System;

One teaspoonful of RADWAY'S READY RELIEF in a wineglass of water will, in a few minutes, rupture the patient to ease and comfort.

If Lame, Crippled, or Bed ridden;
If Pained, Sodded, or Burned;
If Bruised, Wounded, or Cut;
If Sprained, Injured, or Doubled;
If an Ache, or seized with Fits;
If Weak in the Spine or Back;

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

should be applied to the part or parts afflicted. It instantly relieves the patient from pain, and quickly heals, soothes and strengthens the disabled parts. In all cases of Bites of Rabid Dogs, Reptiles, Bites of Poisonous Insects, the application of RADWAY'S READY RELIEF to the wound will prevent inflammation and mortification.

FEVER AND AGUE.

Persons exposed to the Malarias of Ague, are relieved with Chills and Fever, with a positive Antidote and Cure in RADWAY'S READY RELIEF. For two successive days, from [illegible] RELIEF, as directed, will prevent to many [illegible]

WHEN SEIZED WITH

CHOLERA, or Diarrhœa, or Flux;
Dysentery, Cramps and Spasms;
Bilious Cholic, or Gastritis;
Heartburn, Flatulency, or other Fevers;
Indigestion, Cough, or Colds;

Inflammation of the Stomach or Bowels;

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

SHOULD BE TAKEN INTERNALLY.

One dose will stop the pain; its continued use will, in a few hours, cure the patient.

HOW IT CURES.

The secondary indication of RADWAY'S READY RELIEF is to cure the patient of the disease. We ought only that occasions the pain, but it accomplishes rapid and radical cures. RADWAY'S is the great internal remedy.

RHEUMATISM, LUMBAGO, GOUT, NEURALGIA, TOOTHACHE, CROUP, INFLUENZA, SORE THROAT, SWELLINGS, INFLAMMATIONS, PAIN IN THE BACK, CHEST OR LIMBS, PALPITATION OF THE HEART, FEVER, INFLAMMATORY AND BILIOUS FEVERS, PAINFUL DISCHARGES, HEADACHE, sudden or Nervous Affections.

It instantly annihilates how quick RADWAY'S READY RELIEF cures the most excruciating of these maladies. The poor crippled, and pale-sufferers Rheumatism has not to wait days before a change takes place, but in a few minutes derives ease and comfort.

LONDON TIMES.

Twenty Years of Sleepless Nights.

Wm. Sydney Myers Esq., of Ottawa, Canada, the correspondent of the London Times, suffered with Acute and Chronic Rheumatism for twenty-five years, and for twenty-five years he was not one night's rest. He applied RADWAY'S READY RELIEF, and immediately gave him ease and sweet sleep. He is in pain and unbroken sleep during the twenty years. The sustained use of the READY RELIEF cured him.

PREVENTION BETTER THAN CURE.

THERE IS NO OCCASION FOR SICKNESS.

When you first feel pain, then take a teaspoonful of the READY RELIEF, in water, or apply it to the parts where pain exists, and rest satisfied.

ALL MALIGNANT DISEASES

first give warning of their presence, and if not promptly met by the means known to be entirely satisfied with its system, will be readily expelled.

SIGNS OF SICKNESS.

Headache, Pains in the Limbs, in the Stomach, Bowels, and Kidneys—Cold Chills, Fever, Flushes, Cloudy Tongue, Burning Pain, Nausea, Shivering, Dullness, Loss of Appetite, Restlessness, Giddiness, etc., are the premonitory symptoms of Malignant Diseases; they lose of the READY RELIEF is sufficient to break up and expel diseased action, and restore the patient to health.

IN THE ARMY

Dysentery, Bilious Cholic, Flux, Yellow, Typhoid and Scarlet Fever, Rheumatism, Small Pox, Measles, Letters from Medical Directors, Surgeons, and Military Officers endorse the importance of RADWAY'S READY RELIEF over all other medicinal remedies.

EIGHTH MAINE.

Eighth Maine regiment, Sergt. C. P. Lord, writes that RADWAY'S READY RELIEF cured the regiment from death while quartered at Tybee Island, S. C., also working it in the swamps, preventing fatal fevers. Every man seized with Typhoid and other Fevers, Fever and Ague, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Rheumatism, was cured by the use of the READY RELIEF.

CAUTION.

It is unnecessary to ask for RADWAY'S READY RELIEF. Those only should have the genuine. Ask for it. See that there is on the outside label of each bottle. Every agent is supplied with a new and fresh stock. Price 50 cents per bottle. Sold by Druggists, Merchants and Storekeepers.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents, No. 601 Battery street, corner of Clay, San Francisco.

mh7

MEDICAL.

IODINE WATER.

IODINE WATER IS THE MOST IMPORTANT DISCOVERY of modern chemistry, and its impossible to over estimate its influence as a remedial agent—it has just been established the most useful aid to in Materia Medica, and many of the most scientific and practical chemists and physicians, have investigated its effects upon the human system. It is now all upon the

Heart, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive Organs and Glandular System, and to have proved control over

SCROFULOUS AFFECTIONS.

Notwithstanding the trial and ability which have been devoted to its investigation, it remained simply for the gifted Dr. Henry Anders, a physician and chemist of New York, after years of patient labor and unquestioned, discovery a chemical process which enabled him to dissolve without a solvent. This, established impossible by the scientific world, is attested by certificates of analysis from Dr. J. R. Chilton of this city, and Professor Chilton, of N. Y., Philadelphia. The importance of this discovery was so highly appreciated by the Faculty that it was introduced in the Medical Journals and Medical Monthly's, and in most prominent Hospitals, Dispensaries, and Medical Institutions, Europe and America.

PURE IODINE IN PURE WATER

The Iodine is now made available to the public for the cure of Scrofula, Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous & Kindred Dyspepsia, Bronchitis, etc.

AS A TONIC,

its operation is without by strengthening the digestive organs and increasing the appetite. In cases of Dyspepsia, Emaciation and Debility, an increased nutrition of the body is the result of the employment of Iodine. The patient recovers flesh, strength and color, hitherto pale, sickly and feeble, becomes full, strong and florid.

Full directions accompany each bottle.

Sold by all druggists at One Dollar per bottle. Prepared by Dr. H. Anders & Co., Physicians and Chemists, New York.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents, 401 and 403 Battery st. cor. Clay.

WARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT.

THE BEST

BILIOUS & DYSPEPTIC REMEDY.

The most effectious and agreeable

SALINE APERIENT

For all Bilious and Febrile Diseases, Costiveness, sick Headache, Nausea, Loss of Appetite, Indigestion, Acidity of the Stomach, Torpidity of the Liver Gout, Rheumatic Affections, Gravel, Piles,

And all complaints where a gentle Aperient or Purgative is required.

It is in the form of a powder, carefully put up in bottles, to keep in any climate, and the efficacy never impaired upon it produces a delightful effervescent draught.

Manufactured by Warrant & Co., [illegible] and sold by all Druggists, Merchants and Storekeepers.

No. 601 Battery street, corner of Clay, San Francisco.

AMBOLINE FOR THE HAIR

KENDALL'S AMBOLINE.

FOR THE HAIR.

AMBOLINE

MOISTENS,

BEAUTIFIES,

ODORATES,

RENOVATES,

NOURISHES,

EMBELLISHES,

THE HAIR.

KENDALL'S AMBOLINE is a rare compound of stimulating extracts from Flowers, Roots and Herbs for the growth, Beauty and Permanent Vigor of the Hair.

"Highly beneficial where the hair requires a gentle stimulant." DR. CHILTON.

"I never have had anything while so perfectly answer the purpose of a hair dressing."

WARREN WARD, No. 377, Canal street, N. Y.

"After being BALD for over seven years, your AMBOLINE has restored to me entire crop with fine Hair."

Prof. JOHN SEMIS, No. 45, King street, city.

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers. Put up in brown-colored glass bottles. Price 50 cents.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents, Nov. 7. San Francisco.

CARPETS AND OIL CLOTHS.

CROSSLEY'S BEST

MEDALLION VELVET & BRUSSELS

CARPETS.

JEWETT'S OIL CLOTHS

Of Every Width and Quality.

Wholesale and Retail

Very Low for Cash,

—AT—

KENNEDY & BELL'S,

B. W. cor Montgomery & California sts.

San Francisco.

jy27

REAL ESTATE.

JAMES DALY, MICHAEL HAWKINS.

DALY & HAWKINS,

REAL ESTATE AGENTS,

No. 603 Pine street, one door west of Montgomery

Rose Building, San Francisco.

WILLIAM HAMILL,

REAL ESTATE AGENT

AND

Commercial Broker,

613 Merchant street, near Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

[ja31]

CHAS. D. CARTER,

REAL ESTATE AGENT

No. 610 Merchant street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Late, Dwellings and stores for sale and to lease.

CONVEYANCES, Deeds, Leases, Mortgages, Powers of Attorney, Contracts, Agreements, Specifications and all other Documents Drawn.

Legal Forms for sale or to lease or registered without charge, and open at all times for the inspection of the public. no8-1f

N. A. WATSON,

REAL ESTATE AGENT

AND

STOCK BROKER,

Montgomery Block, 630 Montgomery Street,

City Property and Mining Stocks bought and sold on Commission. 20

PIANOS, ETC.

WOODWORTH, ALLOVON & CO.,

Paris and San Francisco,

IMPORTERS OF

PIANO-FORTES, MELODEONS,

CHURCH AND PARLOR

HARMONIUMS,

HARMONIC PIANO-FORTES,

REED AND PIPE ORGANS,

MUSIC STOOLS, PIANO COVERS

MUSIC RACKS, Etc.,

Exclusive Agents for the sale of the Goddard Piano Forte and Prince Melodeon. Piano-Fortes for hire at the Temple Building, cor. Montgomery and Post streets.

my10 [Entrance on Post street.]

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS

Great International Exhibition at Paris, 1867, over the two hundred and fifty other Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The special European medal of Steinway & Sons' endorsement by the jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be had at the Agency.

PIANO TUNING M. GRAY, 615 Clay street, from Steinway & Sons' Factory, New York. no15-1f

PRICES OF

MASON & HAMLIN'S

Cabinet Organs and Melodeons.

PATENTED OCT. 21, 1862.

Pronounced "The Best" by all the Eminent Musicians in the Country.

CABINET ORGANS.

No. 13. Four Octave, Plain Reed, in Walnut or Oak Case.....$75

No. 15. Five Octave, in elegant Rosewood Case.....$95

No. 18. Five Octave, Single Reed, in Walnut or Oak Case.....$110

No. 19. The Same, in elegant Rosewood Case.....$120

No. 16. Four Octave, Double Reed, in Walnut or Oak Case.....$125

No. 17. Five Octave, Double Reed, in Walnut or Oak Case.....$135

No. 20. The Same, in elegant Rosewood Case.....$150

No. 21. Five Octave, Double Reed, in Walnut or Oak Case.....$165

No. 22. The Same, in elegant Rosewood Case.....$185

No. 23. The Same, in Solid Carved Walnut Case.....$195

No. 10. Pedal Bass Cabinet Organ, in Walnut or Oak Case.....$300

Cases of Extra Finish made to Order.

No. 12. Eight Stop Cabinet Organ, in Walnut or Oak Case.....$200

No. 24. The Same, in elegant Rosewood Case.....$250

No. 11. Six Stop Cabinet Organ, in Walnut or Oak Case.....$280

MELODEONS.

No. 4. Six Octave, Plain Style, Rosewood Case.....$100

No. 5. Five Octave, Plain Style, Rosewood Case.....$125

No. 6. The same, Portable, Rosewood Case.....$145

No. 7. The Same, Portable, Walnut Case.....$145

No. 8. Four-and-a-half Octave, Portable, Rosewood Case.....$90

No. 9. Four Octave, Portable, Rosewood Case.....$75

TERMS CASH.

N.B. The moderate advance in prices is occasioned by the increased cost of manufacture, coupled with a rigid determination to keep our Instruments fully up to their present acknowledged standard in quality.

HAZEN & ERAMER,

Sole Agents, 211 and 213 Washington street, and 636 Sansome st., San Francisco. ja 15

DRY GOODS

LATE IRISH NEWS.

The French journals is announcing the recent launch of a war-vessel built in China for the defense of French interests, says that the first built at Ning Po—has been named after Rear-Admiral Protet, who was killed on the Henry Kenney, Esq., of Ballyfree, county Roscommon, Ireland.—Limit. Times, April 19 leading the French column at Ning-Po, on the 10th May, 1863.

The following has been published at the office of duties received at the Port of Dublin for the week ending Jan. 30, 1864: Tea, £1,338 14s; refined sugar, £593 9s. 6d.; Muscovado sugar, £334 4s. 8d.; coffee, £75 21s. 3d.; wine, £1,768 5s.; spirits, £920 9s. 6d.; tobacco, £10,121 2s. 6d.; timber, £50 6s. 1d.; miscellaneous, £754 6s. 9d. Total, £16,076 2s. 2d.

A branch of the Union Bank of Ireland was recently opened at Chesterville, county Cork, under the management of Mr. Richard Daly.

A correspondent, who has lately visited several counties in the south and west, informs us (Sligo Journal), that he observed a large breadth of ground under potatoes, and that the farmers generally were briskly engaged in preparing land for this crop.

The Spring Assizes on the Connaught Circuit were to have begun at Leitrim, on Monday, Feb. 22; Sligo, Thursday, Feb. 25; Roscommon, Monday, Feb. 29; Mayo, Thursday, March 3; Galway, Tuesday, March 8. Mr. Justice Fitzgerald and Baron Hughes were to have been the presiding judges.

The Spring Assizes, North-east Circuit, were to have commenced at Londonderry, Monday, Feb. 29; Dundalk, Tuesday, March 2; Monaghan, Thursday, March 3; Armagh, Saturday, March 5; Down, Monday, March 11; and Antrim, Wednesday, March 16.

The Munster Spring Assizes were to have opened at Ennis (for Clare) on Monday, Feb. 29; Limerick, Thursday, March 3; Tralee, Wednesday, March 9; Cork (county), Saturday, March 12; Cork (city), Thursday, 17th March, Judges—Chief Justice Monahan and Justice Keogh.

The Carlow Sentinel says: The funeral of a centenarian recently took place at the village of Paterson, county Wexford. Deceased was 103 years of age, in humble circumstances; and for upwards of ninety years of her long life, it is said, she never were shoes or stockings, or any kind of covering on her feet. She enjoyed excellent health, and retained all her faculties until a short time previous to her death. During the latter period of her life she was living on the bounty of W. F. Barton, Esq.

OUR AGENTS.

ALVARADO—Michael McNamara.
ALLEGHANY DIGGINGS—Calaway.
ARCH'S CAMP—Michael Cosgrove.
ARADOR—Michael McDonald.
ALDER CREEK—Patrick Mahoney.
ARAGON, Mono co.—Charles McShriffrey.
BEAR VALLEY—T. C. Brady.
BODEGAS, Albany Flat—Jas. McGuirk.
BENICIA—Charles Quig.
BIG BAR, Trinity county—D. B. Murphy.
BIG OAK FLAT—John Carlon.
BLACK'S, on Mokelumne River—Thos. Murphy.
CAMPO SECO—Patrick O'Hare.
CARSON'S CREEK—Mr. Ginger.
CORONOR (Patterson P. O.)—H. Cassidy.
CHINESE CAMP—M. Byrne.
COLOMA—Dugald Clifton.
CORTEMADERA—R. Fowler.
CUMMINGS—Wm. Ryan.
DIAMOND SPRINGS—James Daly.
DOWNIEVILLE—John J. Tinney.
EUREKA FLAT—Andrew Sullivan.
ECKLEY (Humboldt Co.)—Patrick McMahon.
FRENCH CORRAL—George Ryan.
FORBESTOWN—Philip Sullivan.
GOLD SPRINGS—John Boyle.
GEORGETOWN—Thomas Cody.
GROSSETOWN—P. G. Ryan.
GRASS VALLEY—J. O. Duffy.
HILLSBOROUGH—Jas. Spencer.
HONOLULU, S. I.—E. D. Adderley.
HORSETOWN—Patrick Winn.
JACKSON, Oregon—P. M. Brennan.
JACKSON, Amador Co.—Gerald Cullen.
JAMESTOWN—E. McPhillips.
KNIGHT'S FERRY—David Pennessy.
KESSEY'S—Mr. Mallon.
LAKE COUNTY—Nicholas Phelan.
LAURANCE—Caleb Coakley.
LEWISTON—James McNally.
LOS ANGELES—John King.
LAMOE—Peter—Matthew Murray.
LITTLE GRASS VALLEY—M. Byrne.
MARYSVILLE—John W. Cay.
MERCED—Patrick Padden.
MISSION SAN JOSE—John Regan.
MOKELUMNE HILL—Michael Hanrahan.
MOORE'S FLAT—Jas. Manogue.
MUD SPRINGS—James McGuirk.
MURPHY'S CAMP—A. Blache.
MILPITAS—Thomas Sinnott.
NEVADA CITY—Daniel Clancy.
NAPA CITY—M. L. Haas.
ORONVILLE—Hr. James O'Brien.
OREGON CITY—Andrew Rafferty.
ORLEANS FLAT—Sam Henry.
OAKDALE—Michael Sullivan.
PLACERVILLE—Daniel Owens.
PETALUMA—James Daly
PAT WISE—James Dean, Jr.
POVERTY HAR—John Fitzsimmons.
RED BLUFF—Richard Kennedy.
RED DOG, Sierra co.—J. J. Fahy.
RICHON AND RAILEY—Patrick Hare.
SIERRA BUTTE—John Sullivan.
SHAW'S AND BROWN'S FLAT—James Barry.
SOUTH FORK—Fergus Leary.
SAN ANTONIO—John Sullivan, M. Garry.
SAN DIEGO—Louis Rose.
SAN LUIS OBISPO—P. A. Dunn.
SAN JUAN—P. Breen.
SAWYER'S BAR—Owen Harkins.
SONORA—Wilkie Bradford.
STOCKTON—T. C. Mallon.
TRINIDAD—John Cosgrove.
TEHAMA—H. Mooney, J. B. James.
TUOLUMNE—F. E. Brady.
UNION VALLEY—Thos. Casey.
VALLECITO—William Hill.
VALLEJO—P. Mellroy.
VICTORIA, V. I.—Patrick O'Dwyer.
VANCOUVER, W. T.—Patrick O'Keefe.
WILKS WILLIE Bradford.—E. E. Kelly.
WASHINGTON—Edward Brimshill.
WOOLSEY'S FLAT—Michael Fox.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CATHOLIC BOOK STORE
AND BOOK BINDERY.
P. B. BATEMAN,
NO. 27 DUPONT, NEAR SUTTER
STREET.

Catholic Books can obtain the Holy Bible, of any style by my own hands, in Plain Gilt Edge,
Also,
Life of Christ,
and Life of St.
of the Blessed Vir-
miscellaneous
of the Saints.
Prayer Books,
AT
For the Navy
Bibles, or any of the above books, sold monthly or weekly, or monthly, by sending their names and address in the above Agency.
☞ Each number contains a beautiful Steel Engraving.
☞ Old Bibles, Prayer Books, Magazines, Library Books and Newspapers, rebound and gilt or plain as good as new.
H. C. BEYERAR,
204 Kearny Street.
6c16

THE STYLE
OF GENTLEMEN'S DRESS HATS
FOR Spring and Summer, 1864,
IS NOW READY,
AT McGANN & CO'S,
HATTERS.
WE WOULD CALL THE ATTENTION OF THE PUBLIC to our new and second store of FINE AMERICAN AND FRENCH SOFT HATS, at 20 per cent. less than any other house in the city.
McGANN & CO.,
626 Washington Street, North side,
Two doors From Kearny.
no4

REMOVAL,
McNALLY & HAWKINS
Plumbers and Gas Fitters,
Have removed from 408 Pine street to 129 Montgomery street, between Bush and Sutter.
McNALLY & HAWKINS are prepared to perform all descriptions of PLUMBING and GAS FITTING. They have on hand a large and well assorted stock of Gas Fixtures,
Lead Pipe,
Iron Pipe,
Marble Sinks,
Cooking Ranges
Bath Tubs,
Force, Etc.,
together with a large assortment of Materials necessary for the above business, which they will sell at the lowest market rates. Having had many years experience in the business, they feel confident that all work in their line of business in a manner not to be excelled in California, and at very moderate prices.

PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
436 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
INSURE against loss or damage by fire, on Buildings, Merchandize, Wares and other Personal Property.
CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $750,000.
The largest sum at present to be taken on any one risk, is $30,000. All Losses promptly paid at the Office in this City.
The Personal Liability of Stockholders, under the Law of this State, is unlimited.
The following List of Directors (ex sufficient guarantee of the stability and responsibility of the Company:
Louis McLane, W. C. Ralston, Wm. Alvord, Frederick Billings, H. Sather, Jr., Wm. M. Lent, J. O. Sullivan, J. B. Truman, J. O. Day, Sam'l Lawton, J. P. Whitney, Jr., Edward Martin, I. N. Beckwith, Jas. Dutton, Geo. Barstow, Wm. Alvord, Charles Wagner, Erwin Davis, P. L. Weaver, Samuel C. Bigelow, Herman Nichols, H. L. Dodge, R. H. Lansdale, H. Schmieden, Morton Clemmens, M. M. Newhall, Jacob Cakerhill, Edgar Mills, Sacramento.
C. T. Wheeler, Sacramento
J. H. Lewis, Marysville.
J. C. Ainsworth, Portland, O.
J. HUNT, President.
A. T. RALSTON, Secretary. No 6

UNDERTAKERS.
GOLDEN & CRAIG,
UNDERTAKERS,
LATE CITY AND COUNTY SEXTONS,
721 Market Street, opposite Dupont Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
O. & C. will make a liberal discount to the poor.
UNDERTAKER.
ATKINS MASSEY,
PRACTICAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER. Receive's Burial Casket always on hand, and Agent for Fox's Metallic Burial Cases.
☞ Everything necessary for Funerals, kept constantly on hand. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention, at moderate charges.
☞ Office of the City and County Coroner at the Storehouse 631 Sacramento street below Kearny street.
ATKINS MASSEY.

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS
AND
LOAN SOCIETY.
Office—No. 526 Jackson street, first Building west of Montgomery street.
OFFICERS:
President.....M. D. SWEENY.
Vice President.....D. C. DUCLLIVAN.
TRUSTEES
JOHN McMULLIN,
D. C. DUCLLIVAN,
JOHN SULLIVAN,
J. DUNN,
M. J. O'CONNOR,
D. J. CALLAGHAN,
J. CALLAGHAN,
P. McKAN,
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD,
T. J. SRODERICK.
Treasurer.....EDWARD MARTIN
Attorney.....RICHARD TOBIN.
MONTHLY MEETINGS.
The monthly meetings of the Society are held on the fourth Tuesday of each month. Depositors are requested to attend.
Remittances from the Interior.
Remittances from the Country may be sent through Express Companies, Post Office Orders, Bankers' Checks, or Drafts on San Francisco. The signature of the Depositor should be forwarded for comparison. A proper pass book will be delivered to the agent by whom the deposit may have been made.
Deposits received from two and one-half dollars upwards.
Office Hours—From 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

DONOHOE, RALSTON & CO.,
BANKERS,
Sell Exchange on
NEW YORK, BOSTON,
PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE,
ST. LOUIS,
And other Principal Cities of the Union.
ALSO,
LONDON AND THE BANK of IRELAND.
DONOHOE, RALSTON & CO

PAINTS, OILS, &C.
OILS. OILS. OILS.
10,000 GALLS. PURE BOILED LINSEED OIL;
10,000 gallons No. 1 Lard Oil,
10,000 gallons Crystal Illuminating Kerosene;
2,000 gallons Pure Neatsfoot Oil;
1,500 gallons Boiled Sperm Oil;
500 gallons Pure Sperm Oil;
2,500 gallons Raps Seed Oil.
WHITE LEAD.
100 tons in wood and tin.
PAINTS.
50,000 lbs. assorted Colors, Dry and in Oil.
BRUSHES
500 dozen assorted sizes.
Now landing and in store, and for sale in lots to suit, at very lowest rates, by
D. J. OLIVER,
Paints, Oils and Glass Depot,
314 and 316 Washington street,
312 and 318 Drumm street.

JAMES R. KELLY,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN
PAINTS, OILS, TURPENTINE, VARNISHES, BRUSHES, GLASS, ETC.
Gold Leaf, Glue, Etc.
No. 36 California street, two doors below Davis,
SAN FRANCISCO.
☞ House and Sign Painting, &c.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.
WITH prompt, disordered and vitiated blood, you must be sick, sooner or later. It may burst out in Pimples, or sores; it may cause chills, fevers, and ague; it may secretly lay the germs for dyspepsia and liver complaint, or some other painful disease. Ayer's Sarsaparilla purges out these impurities and vitalizes the organs with a new vigor-action, restoring the health and expelling disease. Hence it rapidly cures a long list of complaints which are caused by impurity of the blood, such as Scrofula, or King's Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Salt-rheum, Ringworm, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples or Pustules, Blains, Scald Head, Blue Worms, Chronic or Ulcerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Liver complaints and Female Disorders. Try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it obtains these results. Price $1 per bottle.
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is so universally known to possess over other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Croup, Asthma, Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. For sale by all druggists.
Ayer's Cathartic Pills—for Costiveness, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Foul Stomach, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Piles, Rheumatism, Dysentery, Worms, and in short for all purposes of a purgative medicine.
Prepared by Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and SOLD BY CRANE & BRICHAM
SAN FRANCISCO,
And all dealers in Medicines.

EDUCATIONAL.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,
SAN JOSE, CAL.
THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL session of this institution will commence on TUESDAY, AUGUST 18th. The system of instruction embraces all the branches of a solid and useful education. Its aim is to form young ladies to virtuous habits, to inculcate strict order and economy, and to cultivate in them those qualities which render both amiable and useful.
TERMS:
Each pupil is to provide herself with two sets of Sheets, two Pillow Cases, two Towels, two Napkins, Knife, Fork, Spoon, Tumbler, Comb and Brush, Soap and Clothes Bag, all marked with her name.
Bed and Bedding, per session.....$15
Board and Tuition, per session.....150
Washing, per session.....20
Use of Piano, per session.....10
The half session will close the first Thursday in December.
Piano and Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges, but there is no extra charge for the French, Spanish, or German languages; nor for Plain Sewing and Fancy Needle Work.
Payments are required to be made half a session in advance, and no deduction is made for half a session commenced, unless in case of sickness.
Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.
1y7

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
SAN FRANCISCO.
THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION is to impart a sound practical education, at the most possible cost. Having placing its advantages within reach of all. The Course of Instruction, including the usual English branches, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Book-keeping, Surveying, &c., to that high standard necessary for qualifying students as well as it fits them for future avocations.
The Scholastic Year—Ten months divided into two sessions.
Students can enter at any time, commencing their accounts with the month in which they enter.
For further information apply to the President of Saint Mary's College, Santa Clara, Cal., or to Rev. A. Maraval, S. J., St. Ignatius Church, Market street, between Fourth and Fifth, San Francisco.
no12

SAINT IGNATIUS' COLLEGE,
MARKET ST., between Fourth & Fifth
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.,
THIS INSTITUTION, CONDUCTED BY
The Fathers of the Society of Jesus, was opened for the reception of students on the 16th of October, 1855.
On the 30th of April, 1859, it was incorporated and empowered to confer degrees and bestow honors in all the learned professions, and to exercise all the rights and privileges common to any other literary institution in the United States.
The object of the institution is to give a thorough English, Classical, Mathematical, and Philosophical education. It is not intended for the solely pecuniary benefit of its conductors, but for the intellectual, moral, and religious improvement of the pupils.
The Collegiate Course embraces the Greek, Latin and Spanish Languages, Rhetoric, Logic, Moral Philosophy, Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Algebra, Mathematics, Geometry, Natural History, Geology, Mineralogy, Botany, Astronomy, and the Evidences of Religion.
Besides these studies, there is a Preparatory Department, where the Elementary Branches, and the English language are taught, to which a Primary Class is attached for the benefit of the younger pupils.
The scholastic year is divided into two sessions of five months each. Each pupil is expected to be provided with an outfit, which can be procured at the College at the price of $30. Each piece of clothes, linen or towel, must be distinctly marked with the owner's name.
The annual payment for boarders is charged to defray the cost of bedding furnished by the Institution. No pupil can be received for a shorter period than half a year. No deduction will be made for pupils leaving before the expiration of the time for which payment has been advanced, except in cases of sickness. No money can be advanced to the pupils. Spending money is a superfluous expense.
Pupils will return after vacation, as well as new ones, who will call to mark to their admission to be present at the examination on the 15th of September.
The annual payment, in advance, for boarders and day scholars, is $200 per session.
Pupils leaving the College before the close of the session will be charged twenty dollars for their board during that time.
TERMS PER ANNUM.
Board and Tuition.....$200
Washing.....40
Physician's Fee.....10
There is no extra charge for French, Spanish, and Drawing.
All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Lady Superior.
Letters may be addressed to FATHER CONSTANTINE CONRILL, O.S.D., President.
sep1

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE.
THE Thirteenth Annual Session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, the 4th of August, for the reception of students. This session embraces two regular courses—the Collegiate and the Commercial Studies, and a Preparatory Department.
TERMS:
Entrance, or Matriculation fee, $10 00, payable only once.....$10 00
Board and Lodging, including fuel and light, the use of Bed and Bedding, per session of five months.....$150 00
Tuition, in all branches—Modern Languages excluded—per week.....1 50
Washing, including mending of articles washed, per week.....1 25
Stationery, viz: Paper, Ink and Pens, per week.....10
Medical attendance and medicines (should patronize the Institution, the risk of paying the full bill), per week.....25
Bed, per session of five months.....$8 00
Use of bedstead or forty days' week.....2 00
Philosophy, and of Chemistry, per month.....$ 3 00
Modern Languages, each, per month.....3 00
Piano, with the use of Instrument.....5 00
Flute, Clarionet, or Brass Instruments, each, per month.....5 00
Violin, per month.....3 00
Vocal Music, per month.....3 00
Drawing of any kind, per month.....3 00
Painting in Oil, per month.....5 00
Painting in Water-colors.....3 00
Commercial Diploma.....$ 5 00
Bachelor of Arts.....10 00
N. B.—In cases where there are two or more brothers, each additional one pays only $100 per session.
For further information apply to the President of Santa Clara College, Santa Clara, Cal., or to Rev. A. Maraval, S. J., St. Ignatius Church, Market street, between Fourth and Fifth, San Francisco.
no12

EDUCATIONAL.

A CATHOLIC LADY, just arrived from New York, who has a wide experience in teaching, desires to make an engagement with a school or family. Is qualified to teach the English branches, French, the Harp Piano Gui or and singing. Address M. B. A. Monterey office.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE, CAL.
THE SEVENTH ANNUAL SESSION will COMMENCE on the 15th of September. The system of instruction is the same as in the Academy of San Jose.
TERMS:
Board and Tuition per Session.....$200 00
Washing, per Session.....40 00
Physician's Fees.....10 00
Piano, Guitar, and Vocal Music, Painting and Painting, form extra charges, but there is no extra charge for the French, Spanish, or German languages; nor for needle work.
Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.
1y6

STEAMERS.
PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.

The following Steamships will be dispatched in the month of APRIL, 1864:
April 5—GOLDEN AGE, Wm. F. Lapidge Commander.
April 15—CONSTITUTION, Charles Dawson Commander.
April 25—ST. LOUIS, Wm. H. Hudson Commander.
From Pulton street Wharf, at 9 o'clock A. M., precisely.
PASSAGE.
Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the Panama Railroad Company, and from Aspinwall to New York by the Atlantic and Pacific Steamship Company.
Rates of Fare for Golden Age.
First Cabin.....$210 00
Second Cabin.....150 00
Steerage.....70 00
Round Cabin.....300 00
Round Steerage.....100 00
A. B. FORBES, Agent P. M. S. Co.
Corner Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

REDUCTION OF FARE
TO SAN JOSE AND SANTA CLARA.
ON AND AFTER SUNDAY, DECEMBER 13th, and until further notice, the California Steam Navigation Company's steamer will make three trips per week, leaving Broadway Wharf (FRIDAYS, TUESDAYS and SATURDAYS, at 10 o'clock A. M.
SOPHIE McLANE,
Returning, will leave Alviso MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS and FRIDAYS, at 3 o'clock A. M., in connection with Stage that leave San Jose and Santa Clara at 8 o'clock A. M.
For Freight or Passage, apply on board, or to
J. WHITNEY, Jr., President.

SOUTHERN DISPATCH LINE OF PACKETS
FOR SAN DIEGO
AND INTERMEDIATE PORTS.
Connecting with the steamer Prince of Wales for Guaymas, Mazatlan, &c.
PRIDE OF THE OCEAN.....Capt. S. Garetz
The steamer Brig
DOTTIE.....Capt. W. H. Morton
The new clipper Schooner
LEWIS PERRY.....Capt. W. Hughes
Sailing regularly every day.
For freight or passage, apply on board, at Commercial street wharf, or to E. PERRY & Southern Packet office corner Market and Davis streets.

MISCELLANEOUS.
GEORGE A. HUMBOLDT. HUGH MURRAY
REYNOLDS & MURRAY,
COMMISSION PRODUCE DEALERS
No. 202 Clay Street,
Between Davis and Front,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HAVE ON HAND
BARLEY, OATS, FLOUR, POTATOES,
ETC., ETC.,
GILLESPIE'S
BUREAU OF RECORDS
FOR
ARCHIVES OF LAND TITLES,
A. D. 1848.
731 Washington street, adjoining THE BALL OF RECORDS.
C. V. GILLESPIE,
Investigator, with FIFTEEN YEARS Experience in connection with the Alcalde and County Recorders, now within the Limits of the State of California.
ABSTRACTS
Full and complete, with TITLES, ACCURATELY DEFINED.
REMOVAL.
THE TWO FIRST PREMIUMS
Awarded by the MECHANICS' INSTITUTE and S. D. AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY, to
H. PRICE,
FOR CUTLERY,
110 Montgomery st.,
Between Bush and Sutter
Have the report of Committee—Mr. Price exhibits a case of Cutlery, comprising knives, scissors, pruning knives, Hunting knives, Sporting Knives, Carving Knives and Dirk Knives, and the whole is of very strong workmanship, and in every stage of manufacture, from the rough material to the finished article, and we find that cannot be beat. The Committee cannot speak in too warm terms of praise in allusion to this case of cutlery—the Bowie-Knives are equal to the best of Sheffield manufacture, and we recommend that they be awarded the first premium and any other reward that may be bestowed either in
W. B. FARWELL,
J. WARD EATON,
ED. COFFEY,
Judges.
Mr. Price wishes you to remember the name, whether you want to purchase or not; and in regard to the quality of his knives, you can read at his shop over fifty autographs of the principal Barbers and Hair Dressers in this city.

THE MONITOR:
A WEEKLY JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO
Irish and Catholic Literature
AND
GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.
Printed and published every Saturday, by THE LYONS. JOHN T. BARRY.
LYONS & BARRY,
Office—539 Clay street, bet. Montgomery and Kearny sts.—(Rooms 1 and 2 up stairs.)
The business department of this journal is under the control of Mr. Denis Lyons, to whom communications will be addressed.
TERMS (Payable in Advance):
To subscribers, per year.....$5 00
Served by Carriers, per week.....10cts
CLUB RATES:
Each of 10, in advance.....$40 00
Each of 20, in advance.....80 00
And one paper free to the person who gets up each club.

Immigration to America.

The following letter, on a subject of vital interest to all true Irish-Americans, was addressed to the editor of the Cork Examiner, from St. Paul, Minnesota. We deem it worthy of notice here in connection with the efforts now being made to attract the tide of European emigration to the shores of California:

SIR:—Your remarks in your issue of June 18, on Irish emigration, so happily coincide with the views expressed in the letter I forwarded to you, and which you were good enough to publish subsequently, that I am inclined to accept the circumstance as a good omen that you will honor me able pen, at least, has come to the aid of the poor Irish emigrant. I have for years had a bee in my bonnet that I would have new tombstones and tracts to raise over, and again be placed in situations where her loyalty should be proved, and again found preponderating in the balance with the loyalty of Great Britain.

In 1715, and in 1745, the British and Scotch people again forgot their oaths and their allegiance, and again revolted in favor of that very prince whom Ireland had been so armed and stigmatized for defending against themselves.

The Stuarts again, claimed the aid of Ireland. But Ireland, in the interval, had grown fealty to the House of Brunswick; and Ireland, though groaning under slavery, remained faithful to her obligation. Neither oppression, no pikes, guns and swords, could her from the line of her allegiance. The noblest blood of Scotland was poured upon the scaffold, and the lands of Scottish Peers were confiscated upon the grave of London; Britons in crowds expiated their disloyalty by the cord of the executioner; the battle-field of Culloden Brunswick fell with desolating weight upon Great Britain; but through all this Ireland was true to her allegiance. English ingenuity could not find a single traitor to exculpate in Ireland. She preserved her loyalty and her country during two rebellions, but she gained neither favor nor character by that preservation; and her laudable fidelity was only rewarded by new oppressions, and by the increased calumnies of that same people who had sell dom lost an opportunity of "kicking Ireland when down."

Treachery, Treachery, Treachery, Treachery and Catholic was to be hanged. "By 7th George II." any barrister or attorney refusing to plead in the Courts of Law, or being a Catholic, to be disbarred. "By 2nd Anne," Papist clergymen coming into Ireland and performing religious exercises, to be hanged. "By 8th Anne," fifty pounds reward for all informers against Catholic archbishops and vicar-general.

But the most extraordinary of these Penal Statutes, is that of 7th William III. by Papist to be disarmed, and by 2nd George III. Papists residing in Ireland, shall make good to Protestants all loss and damage they may sustain by any Catholic thing rescuing the custom of Ireland.

29th George II. barristers and attorneys refusing to take their privilege, and betray their clients, if Papists.

Literally outlaws in their own country, Ireland's people were thus disarmed on their own demesnes, to raise palaces for the descendants of those casting hypocrites who from the throne of England sent her foreign soldiers of that gloomy and ambitious prince, who had subdued away the loyalty of the children from their parents, and had compiled the throne of their banished faith" (Barrington's Rise and Fall of the Irish Nation).

An Important California Invention.

Yesterday we visited the box-manufactory of Messrs. Hobbs & Gillmore, where we were shown a dove-tailing machine, recently invented by Elmider Heath—one of the workmen of the establishment. The machine is one of the most perfect we have ever seen. It is nothing more than a series of circular saws, set in a peculiar manner, and they perform the work of cutting the joint so quickly that one is perfectly astounded. The joints are close fitting and remarkably strong, and the machine is so simple that any boy can attend it. We timed the invention while he made a box twelve inches long, eight wide, and found that from the time he took the board in his hand until he handed us the box put together—in a half minute. These machines can be built for about $250 in gold coin. The inventor is a hard-working mechanic, and gave Messrs. Hobbs & Gillmore the right to the Pacific Coast for the aid they furnished him during the time he was employed in constructing the machine. Mr. Heath has invented several machines, but this is, we understand, the first one he has ever patented.—Call.

Condition of Ireland in the Last Century.

For nearly a century after the capitulation of Limerick had been signed and violated by William, Ireland exhibited a scene of oppression, suffering and patience, which existed the wonder and sympathy of every people of Europe. The inveterate system of British political and commercial policy invariably practiced against her interests, excluded all hopes of progressive prosperity, and if it were possible, she must have retrograded in the career on age. But even during this state of depression, it was destined that Ireland should have new tombstones and tracts to raise over her ashes; and again be placed in situations where her loyalty should be proved, and again found preponderating in the balance with the loyalty of Great Britain.

In 1715, and in 1745, the British and Scotch people again forgot their oaths and their allegiance, and again revolted in favor of that very prince whom Ireland had been so armed and stigmatized for defending against themselves.

The Stuarts again, claimed the aid of Ireland. But Ireland, in the interval, had grown fealty to the House of Brunswick; and Ireland, though groaning under slavery, remained faithful to her obligation. Neither oppression, no pikes, guns and swords, could her from the line of her allegiance. The noblest blood of Scotland was poured upon the scaffold, and the lands of Scottish Peers were confiscated upon the grave of London; Britons in crowds expiated their disloyalty by the cord of the executioner; the battle-field of Culloden Brunswick fell with desolating weight upon Great Britain; but through all this Ireland was true to her allegiance. English ingenuity could not find a single traitor to exculpate in Ireland. She preserved her loyalty and her country during two rebellions, but she gained neither favor nor character by that preservation; and her laudable fidelity was only rewarded by new oppressions, and by the increased calumnies of that same people who had sell dom lost an opportunity of "kicking Ireland when down."

Treachery. Treachery and submissive, though in absolute servitude, nearly one hundred years ago was Ireland. The great Irish Commentator of the Irish nation continued to be deprived of every political right, and the Catholic was to be hanged if he was found in arms, or since enacted, against Catholics, were—"By 7th William III." no Protestant in Ireland was allowed to instruct any Papist. "By 9th William III." no Papist was permitted to be sent out of Ireland to receive instructions.

By these statutes, as the great body of the Irish people were Roman Catholics, more than nine-tenths of the inhabitants of Ireland were legislatively prohibited from receiving any education, either from a Protestant or a Catholic, either at home or abroad, or from going out of Ireland for that purpose; consequently the darkest and most profound ignorance was enforced under the severest penalties in Ireland. Nor can the Irish Catholics admire the memory of that prince who debased them to the level of slaves, that he might retain them in a state of slavery!

Even so late as the 12th George I. any Catholic clergyman performing a Protestant and Catholic was to be hanged. "By 7th George II." any barrister or attorney refusing a Catholic, to be disbarred. "By 2nd Anne," Papist clergymen coming into Ireland and performing religious exercises, to be hanged. "By 8th Anne," fifty pounds reward for all informers against Catholic archbishops and vicar-general.

But the most extraordinary of these Penal Statutes, is that of 7th William III. by Papist to be disarmed, and by 2nd George III. Papists residing in Ireland, shall make good to Protestants all loss and damage they may sustain by any Catholic thing rescuing the custom of Ireland.

29th George II. barristers and attorneys refusing to take their privilege, and betray their clients, if Papists.

Literally outlaws in their own country, Ireland's people were thus disarmed on their own demesnes, to raise palaces for the descendants of those casting hypocrites who from the throne of England sent her foreign soldiers of that gloomy and ambitious prince, who had subdued away the loyalty of the children from their parents, and had compiled the throne of their banished faith" (Barrington's Rise and Fall of the Irish Nation).

Notice.

Escaped from the hospital, Coldstream Guards, Beggar's Bush, a lunatic soldier. He disappeared near Bull's Bridge, July 18; at 11 A. M. Five shillings reward will be given to any person bringing him back to hospital, or giving the necessary information.

N. B.—He had on a blue flannel trousers, no coat or cap.

The above may be read on the walls along with police notices holding forth more tempting inducements for the restoration of stray terriers and lost trinkets. It is high time that our army was purified of the refuse. A soldier of the highest regiment in the service of her Majesty—the pet and pampered Guards—is only not entirely dotty, with the opinion of the authorities. No doubt, if he were dressed in full uniform with his brilliant scarlet coat and stately busby, with the rich black plume, to say nothing of the rest of his make-up for parade, he would be worth a good round sum to an out fitter; but observe the significant "N. B." at the foot of the notice, and it will explain all. He fled on, you see, no coat or cap, and the five shillings offered for him was, perhaps, more than it would cost to replace his "blue flannel trousers."—Daily Express.

Shameful Treatment of a Peer.

And a very distinguished member of that peerage is the most noble the Marquis of Westmeath. His lordship is only eighteen years old at present, but he has been "in reform the church." Indeed, until the Marquis and some of his illustrious colleagues (such as an Archbishop of Canterbury and a Littleton) turned up, if, ignorant Celt as I am, thought the "Church" had been thoroughly reformed long ago by that most clement prince and most virtuous moralist, the Eighth Henry, aided by that continent prince and brazen-faced of two living wives, Cranmer—with the help of such a postscript as Anna Boleyn's virgin daughter got to the holy work. But it appears that the said Church is only a leaky old wooden craft after all, the pick and choice of whose crew are deserting it, and whose beams and leaks, the pious lordship boys of the peers have got a special mission to "caulk and staunch." Westmeath was a lively nobleman in his time; but for many years he has taken to that line of exemplary living which a celebrated character in Shakspeare professed to himself: he "lives cleanly," he "eschews sack"—and pitches into Pope and Popery, Jesuits, Puseyites, and such like abominations as long as Parliament is sitting. His pious lordship does not appear to be a favorite in the lords' porters' lodge. Like Mr. Whalley, he is persecuted by the newspapers. But he has discovered the cause of all this: it is a conspiracy—the Jesuits supply all the papers with reporters and writers, and so his lordship, the bulwark of Protestantism, is their victim. The atrocious way in which the Reporters treat him is a positive outrage on inspection. All noble creatures have their parasites: every lion has his own jackal. Even insects have their tormentors feeding on their vitals: they are elephants. Try all to mind what Swift says about the ungrateful sea; their zeal was thwarted, and they were satisfied by a single bite.

Poor old Westmeath had his respectable and delicate moments left, it seems, even during the Reporters' gallery, to hear what those respectable and useful functionaries said about him. One of the fellow gut into the gallery it is hard to tell; but when he had heard all he wanted he hurried away to the Lords' Committee Room, and told him that the Reporters, had talked of him as to a lunatic asylum.

One Reporter also had the honorable and venerable statesman as "that dand old idiot, the Marquis of Westmeath!" Poor old soul! what a blessing it may be for him to have what Sheridan would have called "a damned good-natured friend," who tells him so faithfully the estimate in which he is held by the world. The Marquis says his friend and take bearer is a leading Orangeman. I great part of which occupied by whiskers of a busy amphitaste. "Who, sir, are you?" exclaimed the High-Sheriff, in a tone of perfect astonishment, when he recognized an Canton, where he had long resided in the service of the East India Company.

"Mr. Mahon, sir—O'Gorman Mahon," was the reply, delivered with a firmness which clearly showed that the person who had conveyed this piece of intelligence thought very little of a High-Sheriff and a great deal of O'Gorman Mahon. The Sheriff had been offended by the general appearance of Mr. Mahon, who had discarded the public attention from his own contemplation; but he was particularly irritated by observing the insurgent symbol of "the order of Liberators" dangling at his breast. "I tell that gentlemen," said Mr. Molony, "to take off that badge." There was a moment's pause, and then the fellow-servant was slowly and articulately pronounced: "This gentleman" (laying his hand on his breast) "tells that gentleman" (pointing with the other to the Sheriff) "that if that gentleman presumes to touch this gentleman, this gentleman will defend himself against that gentleman, or any other gentleman, while he has got the arm of a gentleman to protect him." This extraordinary sentence was followed by a loud burst of applause from all parts of the courthouse. The High-Sheriff looked aghast. The expression of self-satisfaction and magisterial complacency passed off like the vinegar, and he looked utterly blank and dejected. After an interval of irresolution, down he sat. "The son" of O'Gorman Mahon (to use Curran's expression) "walked forth in its own majesty," he looked "redreamed, regenerated and disenthralled." The medal of "the order of Liberators" was pressed to his heart. O'Connell surveyed him with gratitude and admiration; and the first blow was struck, which sent dismay into the heart of the party of which the Sheriff was considered to be an adherent.

Death of the Hon. James A. McDougall.

—The Call has the following on the death of our late distinguished Senator:

The telegram advises us of the death of ex-Senator McDougall, at Albany, New York, on the 3d of September. The event was not unlooked for; but it will cast a gloom over his many friends in this State, who admired his intellect and manliness of character. Mr. McDougall was not free from faults; and while admiration was expressed for him it was accompanied by deep regret that his splendid natural and acquired talents were shadowed by a failing by which many strong and brilliant intellects are held in thrall, and to which many have succumbed. Let the good he has done live after him, and may his faults be hidden by too green turf under which rests his mortal remains!

It is not so certain, after all, that the Irish Salvation Generalship will fall on Mr. Herriam. Mr. Parnell, Q.

BURGH;

OF A STERDAM.

PENINSULAR WAR.

...ed the advent of ...

...ere bringing about a series of ...ity which that beautiful but ill-...ntity was for years destined to ...theatre. Little did young Hitherto ...friends dream of the sad part they ...doomed to sustain, as the curtain ...on the bloody drama.

"I don't see, for the life of me, what right or title Emanuel Godoy has to the province of Alentejo and the Algarves," said the Canon, one evening, to conclude the close of a rather lengthened argument with Don Diego, "neither can I for anything like justice in the dismemberment of Portugal."

"Nor can I," replied his companion; "you already perceive the ruinous effect produced on our commercial affairs by Napoleon's policy. In fact, Spain suffers not as much as Portugal by his enmity."

And so full the Prince of Peace! I remember the time when that name Godoy felt honored when raised to the rank of a guardsman! I fear much these shameful transactions bode no good to our country."

A few grave nods formed the conclusion of reply, as he rose to depart for ...

French troops now commenced ... into Spain by virtue of the right ... ages [as Portugal conceded ... in the articles of Fontainebleau]. ... myriadons swarmed across the eastern Pyrenees, and occupied the garrisons of the North, while Dupont and Moncey advanced into the very heart of the kingdom. Still Carlos IV. looked on in blissful blindness. His faithful secretary Cevallos, his son—the Prince of the Asturias—the voice of the public journals warned him of his danger. But Godoy ... seemed his only oracle. At last, ... when too late, his eyes were opened, and after an unsuccessful ... flight in America, he abdicated his crown, and was succeeded by his son, Ferdinand VII., on the 20th March, 1808. Three days after, Joachim Murat entered Madrid at the head of forty thousand French veterans.

Girt by such an overwhelming force, the city lay wholly at their mercy, and the new king scarcely retained the shadow of royalty. With the basest obsequiousness, the grandees complied with, nay anticipated, every wish of their marshal; and it was only in the dark, scowling looks, and muttered curses of the multitude, that Murat could learn what the feeling at large was in his rear. Such was the wily policy of Napoleon that it best to weaken the populace for ... till disunion among themselves should seem more fully in his power. To this purpose, the arch-detective ... was dispatched to Madrid. His ... which may be guessed at by the ... before he reached ... close of our narrative.

Step by step Ferdinand was decoyed, first to Burgos, next to Vittoria, and finally to Bayonne, where he was forced to exchange the crown of Spain for the dungeon of Valencay. He had been duped and deceived from the beginning, and on the very day Savary announced to him the extinction of his line as monarchs of Spain, had dined, in terms of friendship with the man whose brother was destined to usurp his crown in the morrow. A few weeks later his mother worshipped to go through the mock ceremony of relinquishing his claim to a kingdom which he had already renounced, and which he well knew was then firmly clutched in the rapacious grasp of the Corsican. On this condition ... was he suffered to spend the remnant of his life in moping imbecility at Compiegne, Rome, Marseilles. But to the last of his days he must no more return. The Bourbon dynasty was ended forever in Spain—as at least thought Napoleon—and the heirs and successors of Joseph Bonaparte were to be for evermore its rulers.

The events we have just recorded filled the colonial with dismay. Though all resulted in the downfall of Godoy, none could think of the departure of the king without feeling the most alarming. Private meetings were now held in almost every house—at refreshments ... ard, and projects set on foot for ... forcible expulsion of the foreigners.

Among the most strenuous advocates for armed resistance was a young nobleman named de Ruiz, who had lately made his appearance in the city. Few knew him, but his equipages were the finest in Madrid, and he lavished more ... sion in the Plaza Santa ... now ... open to the ceremonies of each rule. By this means he became acquainted with ... some of the most distinguished families, and with the ... greatest Don Diego soon ... Nay, ... however, with Magdalena ... visited, she contrived to avoid ... or if obliged by ... to ... ceremony, ... ... was usually given ... day. Whether ... feelings ... Don Diego ... does not appear, ... felt but little ... for Hymen ... could not ... could not ... required ... many suitors—and ... Raymond would ... us, that had the gratification ... Don Jose's favor, ... would have been less ... this as it may, both Raymond and Lorenzo, whatever their antipathy to Don ... himself, were heart and soul devoted to ... the cause of whose ... and night after ...quent among ... Don Diego's ... they met in secret council at his dwelling.

We have said that their meetings were held without the knowledge of Don Diego, or they know that—he was of too wise, or too peaceful a disposition, to approve of their plans, or sanction a recourse to arms, at the same time that he spoke in no measured terms of the French ... ing, when discussing that all-engrossing topic within the limits of his own family circle. He even expressed a hope that shame itself, if no juster motive influenced him, would at lengthen ... duce Napoleon to withdraw his troops, provided no premature onslaught of the people on Murat gave him a pretext for further measures of an aggressive character. This latter event was what he most dreaded, and he appealed to his friend the Canon, if the premature rising of his own countrymen was not the cause of the ... masters that led himself to seek shelter in Spain.

"Well, but the people were goaded on to insurrection in '98," interrupted the ... appealed to.

"True, but the insurgents on Vinegar Hill would not have beaten the whole royal army, had they but proper arms and ... munitions, why six months' previous training.

"I grant you all that, father," replied Don Diego, "and that is precisely what makes for me. Do you imagine that Murat would not exact as any monterey of ... pping his bloodhounds on the people; or do you think Savary has neglected to learn from those who first drove Ireland into rebellion, and then bounded her over to the peace by the Union? I firmly believe that both he and his master would gladly imitate Castlereagh, were it possible, and find as willing agents for carrying out their atrocious designs in Murat's army, as Pitt or Castlereagh did in Lake's."

The Canon agreed with him, and we ... for Lorenzo had he duly weighed his father's views. But his young blood chafed at the indignities offered to his country, in the imprisonment of her king, and the occupation of our capital by a foreign soldiery.

On the first night of May—an event ... not one for Raymond, being the anniversary of his departure from Ireland—he accompanied the ... for ... Lorenzo for the ... last time to the ... Rabiera. Business ... commence till near midnight, and ... at the close of the ... proceedings, ... friends again stood in the Plaza Santa ... with ... a few hours ... to ...

"What a lovely morning," said Lorenzo, rather abstractedly.

"In truth it is ... ," ... tion, "and I don't remember ... when I saw the moon look so brilliant ... as the dial last night."

"And yet when she sets again it ... be in blood," replied Lorenzo, with a ...

"Oh, away with such gloomy forebodings!" ... "But I cannot get rid of them, Raymond; I feel as if we were destined soon to part forever."

His friend was about to make some reply, when Lorenzo pressing his hand, stopped him.

"Bear with me, Raymond. You are my friend indeed. Emily's friend—is she not? God grant that our friendship be not the cause of sorrow to her. Deeply do I now regret having ever suffered you to join our club. And my poor father and Magdalena! Oh! will you not be their friend if I fall? But ... all; ... bear my dying love to Emily—for I have now no secrets from you."

Raymond was utterly astonished at the last words of the speaker. He even began to fear for his intellect, till he saw him take from his bosom, and press to his lips, a little coral rosary which he knew to have once belonged to Emily. Assuming a gay tone, he strove to turn the current of his friend's thoughts.

"Again," resumed Lorenzo, "what is Rabiera! I cannot tell why I so dislike his attentions to my sister—but—"

The clock of St. Ildefonso struck 1 as the speakers reached the portern of ... father's mansion. Opening the wicket, he silently entered with Raymond, who ... that the Insurgents on Vinegar Hill ... ssassins that led himself to seek shelter ... Spain.

... but the people were goaded on ... to insurrection in '98," interrupted the ... appealed to.

"True, but the insurgents on Vinegar Hill would not have beaten the whole royal army, had they but proper arms and ... munitions, why six months' previous ...

RAYMOND DE BURGH;

OR,

THE MEMOIRS OF A STETSON.

A TALE OF THE PENINSULAR WAR.

The year of 1807 was the advent of trouble over all the Continent, and the harbinger of a world-wide struggle. The petty spacing of a court minor, the daily chicanery of a crowned imbecility, were little brought about a series of events which that beautiful but ill-fated country was for years destined to go on the theatre. Little did gay, hitherto happy friends dream of the sad part they were doomed to sustain, ere the curtain fell on the bloody drama.

"I don't see, for the life of me, what right or title Emanuel Godoy has to the province of Alentejo and the Algarves," said the Conde, one evening, towards the close of a rather lengthened conversation with Don Diego, "another can I see anything like justice in the dismemberment of Portugal."

"Nor can I," replied his companion; "you already perceive the ruinous effect produced on our commercial affairs by Napoleon's policy. In fact, Spain suffers first as much as Portugal by its edicts. And as for the 'Prince of Peace' I remember the time when that name Godoy felt honored when raised to the rank of a guardsman. I fear much these shameful transactions bode no good to our country."

A few grave nods formed the Conde's reply, as he rose to depart for the night.

French troops now commenced pouring into Spain by virtue of the right of passage into Portugal conceded to them in the articles of Fontainebleau. Immense myrmidons swarmed across the Pyrenees, and occupied the garrisons in the north, while Dupont and Moncey advanced into the very heart of the kingdom. Still Carlos IV. looked on in silence. His faithful secretary Cevallos, his son—the Prince of the Asturias—the voice of the public journals—warned him of his danger. But Godoy was accused his only oracle. At last, when too late, his eyes were opened, and after an unsuccessful [illegible] to seek flight in America, he abdicated in favour of his son, and was succeeded by [illegible] VII., on the 20th March, 1808. Three days after, Joachim Murat entered Madrid at the head of forty thousand French veterans.

Girt by such an overwhelming force, the city lay wholly at their mercy, and the new king scarcely retained the shadow of royalty. With the basest obsequiousness, the grandees complied with any anticipated, every wish of their martial lord; and it was only in the dark, secluded nooks, and muttered curses of the populace, that Murat could learn what the feeling at large was in his regard. The wily policy of Napoleon thought it best to soothe the populace for a time, till disunion among themselves placed them more fully in his power. For this purpose, the arch-detective Ofalia was dispatched to Madrid. But [illegible] other pet jest [illegible] which may be guessed at by the reader before he reaches the close of our narrative.

Step by step Ferdinand was decoyed, first to Burgos, next to Vittoria, and finally to Bayonne, where he was forced to exchange the crown of Spain for the dungeon of Valencay. He had been duped and deceived from the beginning, and on the very day Spain announced to him the extinction of the house of Bourbon, Napoleon's letter announcing the [illegible] of Spain, had already been on its way [illegible] days.

"Now can I," replied Don Diego, "but [illegible] the cause of wheels; and night after night almost Don Diego's vehicle and [illegible] met in secret council at his dwelling.

We have said that their meetings were held without the knowledge of Don Diego, or they knew that he was of too wise, too peaceful a disposition, to approve of their plans, or sanction a recourse to arms under existing circumstances; at the same time that he [illegible] to measured terms of the French occupation, when discussing that alarming topic within the limits of his own family circle. He even expressed a hope that shame itself, if no juster motive influenced him, would at length induce Napoleon to withdraw his troops, provided no premature onslaught of the people on Murat gave him a pretext for further measures of an aggressive character. This latter event was what he most dreaded, and he repaired to his friend the Conde, if [illegible] a mature rising of his own country men was not the cause of the disasters that had [illegible] to seek shelter in Spain.

"Alas, but the people were goaded on to insurrection in [illegible] against the [illegible] who [illegible] the insurgents of Vimeur Hill would not have beaten the whole retreating army, had they but proper arms and ammunition, with six months' previous training.

"I grant you all that, father," replied Don Diego, "and that is praise, which [illegible] me. But can you imagine that Murat would not exult in every opportunity of [illegible] his bloody hands on the people, or do you think Savary has neglected to learn from those who first drove Ireland to open rebellion, and then bound her over [illegible] to the peace by the Union? I firmly believe that both he and his master still [illegible] and [illegible] willing agents for carrying out [illegible] designs in Murat's army, as Pitt or Castlereagh did in theirs."

The two agreed with him, and we fear Don Diego had [illegible] his perfect views. But his young friend Raymond [illegible] indignation [illegible] country, in the imprisonment of her king, and the usurpation of her capital by a foreign military [illegible]

On the first night of [illegible] an event [illegible] for Raymond, [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] from Ireland [illegible] Don Diego [illegible] last time to the death [illegible] Rabiera. [illegible] near midnight, when [illegible] the proceedings [illegible] in the Plaza [illegible] a few hours [illegible]

"What a beautiful night," said Don Diego, rather [illegible]

"In truth it is [illegible] tion, "and I don't remember [illegible] the moon look so brilliant as she did last night."

"And yet what she sets [illegible] be in black," replied Lorenzo, with a sigh.

"But I cannot get rid of them, boy mond; I feel as if we were [illegible] to part forever."

His friend was about to make [illegible] reply, when Lorenzo pressing his hand, stopped him

"Hear with me, Raymond. You are my friend and Emily's [illegible] may God grant that our [illegible] not the cause of sorrow to her. [illegible] no regret having [illegible] join our club. And my poor father and Magdalena! Oh, will [illegible] be their friend if I fail? But [illegible] dying love to Emily—for I [illegible] secrets from you."

Raymond was utterly [illegible] at the last words of the speaker. He even began to fear for his reason, till he was [illegible] him from his bosom, and presented [illegible] a little coral rosary, which he [illegible] to have once belonged to Emily. Assuming a gay tone, he strove to turn the current of his friend's thoughts.

"Again," resumed Lorenzo, "must I [illegible] Rabiera! I cannot tell why! [illegible] attentions to [illegible]

The clock of St. [illegible] a signal to the speaker to [illegible] the door, [illegible] father's mansion. Opening the [illegible] he silently entered with Raymond, [illegible] their footsteps [illegible] apartment, [illegible] entrance, the [illegible] words of [illegible] he [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The result of [illegible] was, as the reader may have already guessed, a [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Weekly Calendar.

Sunday, Sept. 15.—Fortieth after Pentecost. Monday, 16.—St. Cyprian and Justina, MM. Tuesday, 17.—Impression of Corporals on St. Francis. Wednesday, 18.—St. Joseph of Copertino. Thursday, 19.—St. Januarius and Company, MM. Friday, 20.—St. Eustace and Company, MM. Saturday, 21.—St. Matthew, Apostle and Conf.

Summary of the Week.

THE PAD END OF THE ELECTION.

The election excitement has passed away with the publication of the official returns; but a ludicrous exhibition on Wednesday last, arising out of a wager, served to keep the idlers in talk a while longer; and to gently let the citizens down to the routine of ordinary life. On that day a stout gentleman, whose faith in Gotham previous to the late election was of the most robust kind, proceeded to grind an organ along Montgomery street for the benefit of the Catholic and Protestant orphan asylums. A very large number of the citizens turned out to enjoy a regular day's folly; and as the organ hero, preceded by a band and a large procession of municipal and unsuccessful candidates for office, sweated along under the weight of his instrument, it was sometimes almost impossible for him to force a way through the dense crowd. His performance, although limited to a solitary tune, produced a golden and silver harvest—such as probably organ or monkey boys never produced before—and the orphans must have realized something over $6,000 from the frolic.

THE MAINE ELECTION.

The Republicans have carried the election in the lumber State, but the great diminution in their majority since last year being about one-fifth of the whole, is a considerable damper on their success. It really seems as if the nation was already growing weary of the Congressional policy which excited so much enthusiasm last year, and it will cause little surprise if the Middle States, at the next election, should follow the example of Democratic California, as Oregon and Nevada even more probably will.

THE STATE FAIR.

The exhibition of Californian products at the State Fair in Sacramento is said to be the finest display ever made of the class of articles. The silk worms, cocoons, reeled and reeled silk, and other articles connected with that branch of industry, give promise that at no distant date California will derive a large profit from silk raising, while the woolen goods manufactured near this city are said to yield the palm of excellence to no imported fabric. Native wines, it is said, are only poorly represented, though no branch of our agricultural resources is more promising; but we hope this defect will be remedied the next time. Without unduly exaggerating the value of these public exhibitions, there is no doubt but they are useful in exciting competition, in bringing valuable but neglected industries into prominence, and generally diffusing technical knowledge; so we hope the State Fair will prove financially a success, as this is the only sure means to insure its due resurrence.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

If the New York Tribune's special is to be believed, which is not by any means an admitted certainty, there seems every prospect of a war breaking out between Russia and Turkey. The former has, some what coolly we must say, called on the latter to hand over Crete to Greece just when the war there was ended, and sent the insolent demand in the form of an ultimatum. We sympathize most sincerely with the Cretans in their struggle for independence; but on what grounds England can interfere on their behalf, while she herself outrageously violates the rights of nationality in Poland and Circassia, it passes our comprehension to tell. However, in politics, even in the nineteenth century, might is too often right, and Russia can get a chance of pushing on to Constantinople she will try to make the most of it without troubling herself much about appearances.

JOHN BULL IN ABYSSINIA.

Great Britain, "on whose empire the sun never sets," &c., has been treated in the most free and easy style, by his serene Majesty Theodore, Emperor of all the Abyssinians, whom he is able to hold in terror of his arms. Theodore, who is a gentleman of color, having heard some three years ago that the Queen of England was a widow, proposed for her royal hand, and no answer being returned, seized upon all the Englishmen who were unlucky enough to find themselves in his dominions, and has kept them in durance vile ever since. Explanations, promises, threats, all were wasted on his colored majesty, and finally John Bull is now about starting an expedition against him, though with evident reluctance, as it is not unlikely to be a failure, owing to the nature of the country. Theodore does not seem to be much impressed with respect for the British empire; nevertheless, he is said to be an able and energetic ruler of his dusky subjects, and probably the expedition will cost a nice sixpence for no purpose to the AFFAIRS.

It seems that the negroes of Hayti, having disposed of his Majesty Soulouque I., and a considerable number of rulers, or would-be rulers, under various republican cities, since his departure, are now anxious to fuse with their neighbor San Domingo. There are at present two republics on the island—the French negro State of Hayti, which is the smallest but most populous, and the partly white Spanish Sant Domingo. The latter made a gallant struggle against Spain lately, and altogether shows more signs of vitality than its negro neighbors, though neither exhibits very much. It is an interesting experiment to try if the negroes can manage a republican form of government by themselves, or even with some help, though we would sooner see it tried in Hayti than nearer home.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal on this Coast
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.....SEPT. 14, 1867.

The Fenian Congress.

The Fenian Brotherhood in the East, has at length taken steps to heal the split which so long divided it into two hostile camps, and brought so much discredit on our race with those who were only too ready to find fault with any and everything Irish. The New York Fenians, a few days back, agreed to place John Savage at the head of both branches, in the capacity of Chief organiser, and now representatives from most of the States have met at Cleveland, and chosen Col. Roberts, President of the Fenian Brotherhood. This is at least a step in the right direction. Whatever good the Brotherhood can accomplish for Ireland and the Irish race, united—and the men of a national Irish society in the United States are manifold—it could only serve to make them ridiculous while disunited. Moreover, we are glad to perceive there is no foolish talk about an immediate appeal to arms, or promises to conquer, or invade Ireland or Canada at a fixed date. Such assertions, recklessly made, have ere now done more to bring the cause to Ireland into disrepute than a mere failure could have done; and men who applauded the 'ninety-days' political promissory notes of Seward and Stanton, so often dishonored and yet set afloat again, do not hesitate to charge the Irish with absurd credulity, and to wonder their cause so hopelessly lost, because a few speakers and leaders failed to come to time with their engagements. There are, however, some points in the report transmitted to us by telegraph, which are not so satisfactory. The President is reported to have made an immediate call for money to the amount of half a million, which was promised by the Congress. What the object of this amount is, is not stated; but we presume it is for the equipment of the army of the Brotherhood in America. In Ireland there is no immediate prospect of an insurrection; in fact, such attempt, unaided by external force, would be the merest folly, and consequently the transmission of arms there just now would be useless. The possessors would not long their military use in the present state of the country; and in the event of a foreign war with England, it would be, at least, as easy then as at present to introduce arms. We may conclude, therefore, that it is for the use of the American Fenians that equipments are to be provided, and for that object we scarcely think an immediate demand for such a sum necessary. Though extremely small when compared with the ordinary expenditure of governments on armies, and altogether inadequate to commence a war against England, still it is a serious burthen upon the different circles, and one that should not be imposed without urgent need, which to us does not appear to exist. Of course, it may be said that there is such need, though its whereabouts cannot be safely indicated; but we must confess this trusting to the promises of leaders that the funds asked for will be well applied, has been carried too far, and has too often led to disappointment to make us wish to see the experiment repeated.

Supposing, then, that the purpose of the assessment is to equip the Irish Republican army here, we think it entirely unnecessary. In the present state of affairs, that force can only practically exist as separate companies, or battalions, except perhaps in one or two great cities, for it cannot be expected that the members can devote themselves as completely to their military duties as a regular army. They must confine themselves like the ordinary State militia companies, to company training, and the requisites for such drill can best be supplied by personal or local efforts. The other wants of an army, such as artillery, tents, transportation facilities, commissariat, &c., certainly do not require to be prepared so far in advance of a campaign as common sense would tell the present time to be; and certainly, considering the result of former levies, any unnecessary demands should be avoided now. Another point to which we object altogether is engaging the organization, as such, in American politics. We are not of those who believe allegiance to America incompatible with Irish patriotism, or that Irishmen in their capacity of American citizens may not use their efforts to obtain the freedom of their native land by every lawful means. Lafayette was not considered a bad Frenchman because he exerted his influence to urge his country into war with England on behalf of the United States; and we do not see why Irish-Americans should be considered bad United States citizens for following his example; but we entirely object to mixing up an organization of Irishmen, established for a definite non-American object, with party politics. Political parties are essentially domestic organisations, and have no business whatever in the foreign transctions of the State. While, therefore, Irishmen, as individual American citizens, have a perfect right to exercise their political efforts on behalf of Ireland, they would be entirely wrong were they to negotiate an alliance with any political party, as an organization, having its main objects outward of America, and the party which would make such an alliance would degenerate into a mere faction—one of the greatest plagues of republican government. In addition to this abstract reason, there is another very serious practical objection to the Fenians mixing themselves in American politics, which is, that if they do so they are tolerably certain to be diverted from their real object. While waiting for an opportunity to free Ireland, if they dabble in politics here, their political friends will find it, doubtless, much easier to provide office for some of the leaders than armies to combat England; and while fighting the battles of party at the ballot-box, the cry of distress from home will be unheeded. It is perhaps unnecessary to have said so much on the evil of mixing up the organization with either Republicans or Democrats, or any other party, but we deemed it well to give our candid opinion thereupon, owing to the reported resolution of the Cleveland Congress. Probably more mature deliberation will convince all of the impolicy of such a course, which the common sense of the body has avoided all through its existence.

The Lesson of the Election.

Since our last issue the result of the election has been proclaimed by the agency of the press and telegraph throughout the Union, and the extraordinary and complete triumph of the Democratic party of California is now an element to be counted by both Conservatives and Radicals in settling the future status of the country. The party which for the past six years has held the reins of power here, and which, up to the election day, believed itself sure of victory, has been beaten by a heavy majority, and beaten in such a manner as to leave no doubt of the general feeling of the entire State. The whole State ticket, two Congressmen, a large majority in the Legislature, and most of the local officers in the different counties have been elected by the party which, a few months ago, was thought by its opponents to be dead past hope of resurrection. So complete a success was not even hoped for by the Democrats, and their joy over it was proportionally great. Indeed its effect, coming thus after the elections in Connecticut and Kentucky, the only bona fide ones held this year, and entailing as it probably does the adhesion of all the Pacific Coast, can scarcely be overrated, and certainly no such victory has been achieved by the party since 1860. The causes of so decided a change in the political position of California since 1864 are various. There has been of course a considerable change of population, owing to our peculiar position, which may, or may not, have affected the result; the puritanical ideas of a section of the party in power; which found vent in the Sunday Law, coupled with the conduct of the same class in those parts of the East where they have things their own way, excited considerable disgust among a large body of the citizens, native and naturalized, who felt little relish for a revival in California of the Calvinistic code of New England, and the pressure of taxation which, whether reasonably or unreasonably, is attributed by numbers to their secession to power, and which galls the more, now that the war excitement is dead—all combined to insure the popularity of the dominant party, but these alone would not suffice to effect such a change. The security which the Republican politicians felt in the [illegible] ever, and which was ten-fold increased by the vaporings of the partisan papers, a majority of which usually stick to the faction in office, led them into the belief that the Government was a kind of private property, to be disposed of by a small ring of men able to work primaries and pull the wires in conventions. A skillful manipulation of the primaries secured the Republican nominations in some of the most important cases, to men of suspicious antecedents and who had no claims on public esteem sufficient to exalt them to office. Having accomplished so much, the successful nominees believed they could force themselves into office by appeals to the party feelings of the Republicans, and that the latter would prefer to sacrifice the national rather than their party interests. The result shows that they reckoned without their host. The Union party, which has controlled the State for so many years, was welded together from former Democrats and Republicans by the pressure of the war; and now that its great issues are settled, the majority of the voters who belonged to that body feel their party allegiance little lightly enough on them. Violent politicians may announce that all is lost unless the Congressional policy is carried out; but the bulk of the people do not regard affairs in that light; and while they take sides either with the Union President or the Union Congress, they scarcely consider the policy of either such an urgent national necessity as to justify them in electing suspicious characters to high office, solely because they profess attachment thereto. This feeling is not only natural, but perfectly just. Party is only useful as long as it is subservient to the national interests; and when it is turned against the general good of the State, either by maintaining injurious principles or supporting unworthy men, then fidelity to party becomes mere faction. Without in the least denying the influence of the coincidence of heavy taxation even in peace, and the arbitrary, not to say unconstitutional course of the present Congress, in strengthening the Democratic party here during the past three years, there is little doubt but the personal character of some of the Union nominees told powerfully against the success of their ticket. We trust the lesson will not be lost upon their successors. With the prestige of their late victory, it will be comparatively easy for them to retain their newly acquired power, if they are satisfied to do so by the same means as those by which they have attained it—that is, by putting forward candidates whose return is a national not less than a party advantage; who will be content with the legitimate exercise of the authority entrusted to them, without seeking to make it an engine for the most acknowledged engine of personal aggrandizement at the public cost. Should the professed politicians feel unwilling to follow such a system, they have learned a lesson this week of the real power of the people—a power which cannot be controlled by conventions or primaries, and which will just as easily overturn any other faction that attempts to make the Nation a slave to party.

California's Anniversary.

After the national July festival there is no political anniversary more honored by Californians than the 9th of September, that of the Golden State's admission into the sisterhood of the United Republic. In many respects California possesses a much more marked individuality than any of the other States. She sprang into statehship without passing through any intermediate organization—her name has become a household word throughout the world. In foreign lands, where the tides of older and more populous States are scarcely known, she is counted a country in herself; and California and the Eastern States are spoken of almost as if they were two equal portions of the American Republic. The discovery of gold in such immense quantities, and the consequent enormous immigration from every clime, the strange phenomenon of thousands of civilized men flocking themselves suddenly in a country almost without government, without laws, without any power to control them—emancipated as they were, even from the influences of home and family, and yet organizing a complete State out of the chaos in an incredibly short time, all these circumstances turned the eyes of the world towards California, and attracted here a more world-wide immigration than was ever told of in history. Even the similar events which have since taken place in Australia, British Columbia and New Zealand failed to make California be forgotten, and she is everywhere regarded as the pioneer of modern gold countries. Notwithstanding its as yet comparatively small population, California, both by its wealth, its position and its future prospects, exercises an influence both in the United States and throughout the world far surpassing that of much more populous States. The establishment of a civilized community on this side of the Continent, has contributed most powerfully to drawing forward the limits of the Eastern settled country—the spirit of adventure, unparalleled since the days of Cortez and Pizarro, which has been developed by the rush of a quarter of a million of men across an unsettled continent, has given an immense impulse to American enterprise, and contributed powerfully to breaking down the narrow and exclusive spirit which some quarter of a century ago, and even later, was striving, to convert this broad continent—the natural home for the crowded populations of Europe—into a park for the descendants of Anglo-Saxon settlers. In the multitude of immigrants from every country, the word foreigner was well nigh forgotten—or rather all were foreigners alike, and the returning awarness of American carried the liberality acquired here back to the East, and thus helped to spread a broader and more cosmopolitan spirit throughout the land.

All these circumstances combine to give this State a much more marked individuality than any of the other members of the Union, and accordingly it is not undeservedly that Californians, having celebrated the birth of the nation on the Fourth of July, should also, on the 9th of September, duly honor the birthday of the Golden State.

Death of Rev. Father Neal Gallagher.

It is our painful duty to record the untimely decease of this most exemplary priest, whose short career among us has sufficed to make us know his worth, and deplore his loss. On Sunday last, his remains were brought down to this city, and lay in St. Mary's Cathedral, during the celebration of the last solemn office of the Church. Very Rev. Father Croke, V. G., presided at the ceremonies, at which assisted Revs. J. Prendergast, J. A. Gallagher, Fathers Arcolli, and Bushard, S. J., Fathers Meliorini and Veynes, O. P., Fathers Gray, Brennan, Slattery, Gibney, Bowman, Nugent, Griffin, Dreiss, McBult, , McCullough and Delmas. Rev. Father Cotter preached the funeral oration, and really surpassed himself in his eloquent and pathetic discourse. The subject was, indeed, one well worthy of his finest efforts, for to know the deceased was to love reverence and admire him.

Father Gallagher, was a native of the county Leitrim, Ireland, and was born in the year 1829, so that at the time of his decease, he was in his thirty-eighth year. His vocation to the ecclesiastical state was somewhat late, and in fact, he had nearly completed his studies in the medical profession, ere he became convinced of his vocation to a higher and more perfect state. He accordingly entered the ecclesiastical college at Carlow, in his twenty-fifth year, and having completed the necessary course, was ordained priest in 1859, and shortly afterwards started for California. On his arrival here, he was charged with the assistant pastorship of St. Rose's Church, in Sacramento, by the Most Rev. Dr. Alemany, and continued to discharge the pastoral office in that parish, until the establishment of St. Mary's College, when he was made vice president of that institution. In the latter capacity, his genial and kindly disposition endeared him to those entrusted to his care, but his stay among them was only a brief one. In 1865, he was entrusted with the pastoral charge of Folsom, in which office he remained until the period of his death. His labors among his flock were incessant, his liberality boundless, and his gentle, fatherly manners won for him not only the sincere affection of his own spiritual children, but the hearty goodwill and respect of men of all religions. His exertions for the relief of the sufferers in the great floods of '61, when he sailed through inundated districts in a boat loaded with provisions and other necessaries, will be long remembered in Sacramento county. Nor was that the first occasion on which he gave singular and public proof of his unselfish charity. During his passage from Ireland to Boston, on the Hibernia, that vessel was destroyed by fire, and while saving property remained in danger of life, Father Gallagher refused to quit the sinking vessel, but continued administering aid and consolation up to the last moment. While laboring faithfully and indefatigably in his pastoral duties at Folsom, Father Gallagher contracted the inflammation of the lungs, which soon forced him to exchange the altar for the bed of sickness; and after a struggle of a few weeks, cut short the thread of his life, and summoned him away to receive the reward of his labors.

The Irish Relief Fund.

THE IRISH RELIEF FUND.—By the last steamer the Irish Relief Committee of this city sent a remittance of $5,000 to the Most Rev. Archbishop MacHale for the use of the suffering families of the Irish political prisoners. The amount is creditable, considering the many calls upon the charity of our countrymen in California, and the best thanks of all are due to the members of the committee who amid the pressure of business duties found time to devote to the cause of the needy ones in poor Ireland. The committee are very anxious that all parties holding collection books would transmit the amounts they may have on hand, with their books, to them, as soon as possible, as they are most anxious to balance their accounts. With the balance they have now on hand, amounting to about $600, and the amounts they expect to receive from the outstanding books, they feel confident of being able to make another handsome remittance.

The Irish Relief Fund.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9, 1867.

MOST REV. JOHN MACHALE, Archbishop of Tuam:—Most Rev. Sir:—It affords us great pleasure to remit to you the enclosed bill of exchange in your favor of one thousand pounds sterling, drawn by Messrs. Donohoe, Kelly & Co., of this city, on the Bank of Ireland.

It is the first result of the contributions in California and on this coast in aid of the suffering families of the Irish State prisoners, and of others dependent on them, who are in need of succor.

Whatever may be men's opinions as to the merits of the recent outbreak in Ireland, on account of which those prisoners have been punished with such excess of severity, all are agreed that it is in its way, but one more and the latest of the ever-recurring protests of a trampled but unconquered race against the tyranny of centuries. All are equally agreed, that when the cry of human suffering is heard the voice of criticism should be hushed. But throughout these distant shores men of every race, Irish or American, as they cast each his mite into our treasury of charity, do it also as an expression of their hearty condemnation of a system of misgovernment which is the standing reproach of Christendom.

We have thought that no one could be selected so worthy in every respect to have the distribution of such a fund as the Archbishop of Tuam—"The Lion of the fold of Judah"—illustrious for his devotion through long and honored life to the highest interests of his country.

The fund, of which the present remittance is a part, has been contributed by men of all races and opinions for the purpose mentioned.

The distribution for that purpose is cheerfully confided to your discretion. We have the honor to be, Most Rev. Sir, very truly and respectfully, your friends and servants,

D. D. SWEENY, Chairman Irish Relief Fund,
P. J. OLIVER, Treasurer.
THOMAS MAGNEY, Secretary.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.—For some time past we have had great cause to complain of the negligence of a large number of our subscribers, in not remitting their subscriptions, which are past due. We are aware of recent appeals having been made to them in behalf of very worthy objects; also, that they were generous, as which assisted Revs. J. Prendergast, J. A. Gallagher, Fathers Arcolli, and Bushard, S. J., Fathers Meliorini and Veynes, O. P., Fathers Gray, Brennan, Slattery, Gibney, Bowman, Nugent, Griffin, Dreiss, McBult, , McCullough and Delmas. Rev. Father Cotter preached the funeral oration, and really surpassed himself in his eloquent and pathetic discourse. The subject was, indeed, one well worthy of his finest efforts, for to know the deceased was to love reverence and admire him.

Father Gallagher, was a native of the county Leitrim, Ireland, and was born in the year 1829, so that at the time of his decease, he was in his thirty-eighth year. His vocation to the ecclesiastical state was somewhat late, and in fact, he had nearly completed his studies in the medical profession, ere he became convinced of his vocation to a higher and more perfect state. He accordingly entered the ecclesiastical college at Carlow, in his twenty-fifth year, and having completed the necessary course, was ordained priest in 1859, and shortly afterwards started for California. On his arrival here, he was charged with the assistant pastorship of St. Rose's Church, in Sacramento, by the Most Rev. Dr. Alemany, and continued to discharge the pastoral office in that parish, until the establishment of St. Mary's College, when he was made vice president of that institution. In the latter capacity, his genial and kindly disposition endeared him to those entrusted to his care, but his stay among them was only a brief one. In 1865, he was entrusted with the pastoral charge of Folsom, in which office he remained until the period of his death. His labors among his flock were incessant, his liberality boundless, and his gentle, fatherly manners won for him not only the sincere affection of his own spiritual children, but the hearty goodwill and respect of men of all religions. His exertions for the relief of the sufferers in the great floods of '61, when he sailed through inundated districts in a boat loaded with provisions and other necessaries, will be long remembered in Sacramento county. Nor was that the first occasion on which he gave singular and public proof of his unselfish charity. During his passage from Ireland to Boston, on the Hibernia, that vessel was destroyed by fire, and while saving property remained in danger of life, Father Gallagher refused to quit the sinking vessel, but continued administering aid and consolation up to the last moment. While laboring faithfully and indefatigably in his pastoral duties at Folsom, Father Gallagher contracted the inflammation of the lungs, which soon forced him to exchange the altar for the bed of sickness; and after a struggle of a few weeks, cut short the thread of his life, and summoned him away to receive the reward of his labors.

THE IRISH RELIEF FUND.—By the last steamer the Irish Relief Committee of this city sent a remittance of $5,000 to the Most Rev. Archbishop MacHale for the use of the suffering families of the Irish political prisoners. The amount is creditable, considering the many calls upon the charity of our countrymen in California, and the best thanks of all are due to the members of the committee who amid the pressure of business duties found time to devote to the cause of the needy ones in poor Ireland. The committee are very anxious that all parties holding collection books would transmit the amounts they may have on hand, with their books, to them, as soon as possible, as they are most anxious to balance their accounts. With the balance they have now on hand, amounting to about $600, and the amounts they expect to receive from the outstanding books, they feel confident of being able to make another handsome remittance.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.—For some time past we have had great cause to complain of the negligence of a large number of our subscribers, in not remitting their subscriptions, which are past due. We are aware of recent appeals having been made to them in behalf of very worthy objects; also, that they were generous, as which assisted Revs. J. Prendergast, J. A. Gallagher, Fathers Arcolli, and Bushard, S. J., Fathers Meliorini and Veynes, O. P., Fathers Gray, Brennan, Slattery, Gibney, Bowman, Nugent, Griffin, Dreiss, McBult, , McCullough and Delmas. Rev. Father Cotter preached the funeral oration, and really surpassed himself in his eloquent and pathetic discourse. The subject was, indeed, one well worthy of his finest efforts, for to know the deceased was to love reverence and admire him.

Father Gallagher, was a native of the county Leitrim, Ireland, and was born in the year 1829, so that at the time of his decease, he was in his thirty-eighth year. His vocation to the ecclesiastical state was somewhat late, and in fact, he had nearly completed his studies in the medical profession, ere he became convinced of his vocation to a higher and more perfect state. He accordingly entered the ecclesiastical college at Carlow, in his twenty-fifth year, and having completed the necessary course, was ordained priest in 1859, and shortly afterwards started for California. On his arrival here, he was charged with the assistant pastorship of St. Rose's Church, in Sacramento, by the Most Rev. Dr. Alemany, and continued to discharge the pastoral office in that parish, until the establishment of St. Mary's College, when he was made vice president of that institution. In the latter capacity, his genial and kindly disposition endeared him to those entrusted to his care, but his stay among them was only a brief one. In 1865, he was entrusted with the pastoral charge of Folsom, in which office he remained until the period of his death. His labors among his flock were incessant, his liberality boundless, and his gentle, fatherly manners won for him not only the sincere affection of his own spiritual children, but the hearty goodwill and respect of men of all religions. His exertions for the relief of the sufferers in the great floods of '61, when he sailed through inundated districts in a boat loaded with provisions and other necessaries, will be long remembered in Sacramento county. Nor was that the first occasion on which he gave singular and public proof of his unselfish charity. During his passage from Ireland to Boston, on the Hibernia, that vessel was destroyed by fire, and while saving property remained in danger of life, Father Gallagher refused to quit the sinking vessel, but continued administering aid and consolation up to the last moment. While laboring faithfully and indefatigably in his pastoral duties at Folsom, Father Gallagher contracted the inflammation of the lungs, which soon forced him to exchange the altar for the bed of sickness; and after a struggle of a few weeks, cut short the thread of his life, and summoned him away to receive the reward of his labors.

THE IRISH RELIEF FUND.—By the last steamer the Irish Relief Committee of this city sent a remittance of $5,000 to the Most Rev. Archbishop MacHale for the use of the suffering families of the Irish political prisoners. The amount is creditable, considering the many calls upon the charity of our countrymen in California, and the best thanks of all are due to the members of the committee who amid the pressure of business duties found time to devote to the cause of the needy ones in poor Ireland. The committee are very anxious that all parties holding collection books would transmit the amounts they may have on hand, with their books, to them, as soon as possible, as they are most anxious to balance their accounts. With the balance they have now on hand, amounting to about $600, and the amounts they expect to receive from the outstanding books, they feel confident of being able to make another handsome remittance.

Weekly Telegraph Summary.

EASTERN.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The Tribune's special says that the report of McCulloch shows that over $120,000,000 of the public debt was paid last year, and at this rate it would be paid off in July, 1877.

RICHMOND, Sept. 7.—A negro having bought a first-class ticket, and being put off the railroad car, yesterday, because he would not ride in the negro car, got $100 damages by compromising.

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—The Times' special says the result of the California election produced much good feeling with the President and his friends of the political firm of Blair, Black & Co. Johnson looks upon it as an endorsement of his position, making an 8th side of the Radical flood. The effect will be to cause him to persevere in his present course.

Gen. Sheridan issued the following order on the 5th: "In accordance with the directions contained in paragraph one, of order 8, current series, headquarters of the army, the undersigned hereby relinquishes the command to Major-Gen. Chas. H. Griffin, U.S.A.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General Commanding."

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 3.—Sheridan was escorted to the depot by the members of the Council and many citizens. Several gentlemen addressed him in complimentary terms, and he responded. A resolution of regret at parting was read by the mayor. One gentleman nominated Gen. Sheridan for the Presidency.

RICHMOND, Sept. 8.—Official registration returns of the whole State received at headquarters show a total vote of 218,000. The ratio of voters is 11 whites to 9 blacks. The Whig has information that the Commanding General will order an election to be held on the 16th inst., for delegates to the 10th and 13th of October.

DETROIT, Sept. 7.—Professor Watson, of Michigan University, reports that on Friday night, while making observations in the vicinity of Lake Superior, he discovered still another planet, hitherto unknown, the brilliancy of which is equal to a star of the fifteenth magnitude. It is situated in right ascension fourteen degrees and fifteen minutes, and in declination six degrees and ten minutes north.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Sept. 8.—Gov. Helm died at his residence at 12½ o'clock to-day.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Gen. Griffin, commanding in the Fifth District, has asked and received permission to fix his headquarters temporarily at Galveston, owing to the fact that he has but one staff officer fit for duty, and that the surgeons are all sick, and that his own child is at the point of death, and that to proceed to New Orleans under the circumstances would be deserting his post in the face of the enemy.

General Ord telegraphs that Vicksburg is under quarantine. There were 43 cases of yellow fever on the 6th.

PORTLAND, Sept. 9.—Returns from the election in eastern towns give Chamberlain (Republican) 8,083; Pillsbury (Democrat), 5,631—majority, 2,452. The same towns last year gave Chamberlain a majority of 5,819, showing a Democratic gain this year of 3,368. Pillsbury gives a Dem ratio majority of 21 against 90 last year.

LATER.—One hundred and nine towns give Chamberlain (Rep.) 27,715; Pillsbury, 18,683. The same towns last year gave Chamberlain 21,650; Pillsbury, 16,565. Chamberlain's majority this year is 9,032, against 13,085 in the same towns last year, showing a Republican loss of 9,053. The aggregate vote in these towns was 43,398, against 38,215 last year. The total vote of the State last year was 115,760; this year will probably fall under 100,000. Seven-tenths of the State are in, with a loss of nine-tenths of a Republican majority on last year. The same ratio will reduce the Republican majority to about 15,000, or a loss of about 1,400. The Democrats will gain representatives in some towns, but not enough to give much power in the Legislature.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Sept. 10.—The Herald, this evening, contains an account of the dedication of the Catholic Church of Norwich, just closed, though a strict oath of secrecy was exacted the building was guarded by soldiers. The proceedings were carried through here and came near breaking up in a row. A secret message from President Roberts was given, but it is an account of his visit to the circles of Great Britain and Ireland, and the revolutionary Irish Brotherhood in Paris. He found great encouragement, and had succeeded in visiting all factions. The acting Secretary of War's report says the Adjutant-General will order an election to be held on the 16th inst., for delegates to the 10th and 13th of October.

DETROIT, Sept. 7.—Professor Watson, of Michigan University, reports that on Friday night, while making observations in the vicinity of Lake Superior, he discovered still another planet, hitherto unknown, the brilliancy of which is equal to a star of the fifteenth magnitude. It is situated in right ascension fourteen degrees and fifteen minutes, and in declination six degrees and ten minutes north.

FLORENCE, Sept. 7.—Garibaldi passed here to-day, en route to the Peace Congress. He dined with the Prussian Minister.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Francis Morris, of New York, has concluded arrangements here with Capt. Pim, of the Royal Navy, looking to the establishment of a new intercoastal line across Nicaragua by railroad, connecting with steamers on the Lakes.

GENEVA, Sept. 8.—Delegates to the Peace Congress are arriving from all parts of Europe. Garibaldi has arrived at Florence. His reception was enthusiastic. In his speech he said his purpose if marching by Rome was unalterable. The plan of action of the congress for the past year. It appeared that a year ago the assets of the company were $500,000 to the amount of twelve months the assets had been increased to $1,000,000. The assets on the 30th of April, 1867, were:

| | |
|---|---|
| Total assets | $1,194,045 97 |
| Deduct for unpaid losses | 11,500 00 |
| Unearned premiums | 37,750 97 |
| Reinsurance | 450 00 |
| Commission, and salary of Gen'l Treasurer | 8,000 00 |
| Gold and silver coin | 38,937 50 |
| Total | $1,042,356 51 |
| Total assets one year previous | 1,042,356 51 |
| Increase | $152,189 46 |

In addition to the surplus above reported, in the Treasurer's hands are 2 per cent. dividends:

| | |
|---|---|
| Surplus April 30th | $37,500 00 |
| Increase assets | 152,189 46 |
| Deduct as 2 per cent. dividend | 8,000 00 |
| Surplus as per report 1867 | 181,689 46 |
| Less | 8,000 00 |
| Advance value of stock premiums, which are now estimated at $60,000 | 18,000 00 |
| Total profits reported over all dividends | $18,000 00 |

The amount of loans a year ago was $60,000 per month. The present average of monthly loans is $100,000 per month.

The Surplus on hand a year ago was $60,000. The assets on hand to-day are $1,000,000 (cheers).

It was moved and seconded that the President's report be accepted. Carried unanimously.

The President then announced that the elections of the Board of Directors were at an end, and it was for the shareholders present to elect a new Board to carry on the business of the Company.

Gen. H. A. Cobb then moved that the Board of Directors who have so successfully managed the affairs of the Company for the last year, be elected by acclamation.

Motion seconded by Mr. Samuel Crim, and carried unanimously.

The Secretary then read the vote for the following gentlemen, composing the retiring Board, to wit: Thomas Mooney, Edward McKeon, W. H. Chapman, H. Weir, Jr., Cornell, J. W. Mellmick, C. A. Jenke, Hermann Schwarze, and J. W. McKenzie.

Col. McKenzie then presented the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That a Committee of Three be appointed to consider the early services of Mr. Mooney, the President, in connection with the Bank, which Committee shall, for the period of eighteen months, and report to this meeting what, if any, allowance shall be made for such services.

Gen. H. A. Cobb moved the adoption of the resolution. Motion carried, and Messrs. H. A. Cobb, Dr. James Shoverly and Samuel Trim were appointed such Committee.

The Committee retired for consultation, and on their return reported that the sum of $2,500 be awarded Mr. Mooney for the purpose of erecting a homestead, in compensation for his early services, and that this meeting express confidence in him for the faithful discharge of his trust.

It was moved that the report be accepted and carried unanimously.

Mr. Mooney returned his thanks, and, on motion, the meeting adjourned.

CORRECTION.—Lest some of our readers should imagine that the festival held in Placerville, was for the benefit of Father Largan, we would now inform them that it was in aid of the Church, and the Reverend gentleman derived no personal benefit whatever.

Meeting of the California Building and Loan Society.

The above Society met on last Tuesday evening at the office of Messrs. H. F. Williams & Co., in California street, when the following officers for the ensuing year were elected: Mr. Mooney, President, called the meeting to order at 8 o'clock p. m.; Mr. H. V. Herbert acting Secretary. The President read the report of progress for the past year. It appeared that a year ago the assets of the company were $500,000 to the amount of twelve months the assets had been increased to $1,000,000. The assets on the 30th of April, 1867, were:

| | |
|---|---|
| Total assets | $1,194,045 97 |
| Deduct for unpaid losses | 11,500 00 |
| Unearned premiums | 37,750 97 |
| Reinsurance | 450 00 |
| Commission, and salary of Gen'l Treasurer | 8,000 00 |
| Gold and silver coin | 38,937 50 |
| Total | $1,042,356 51 |
| Total assets one year previous | 1,042,356 51 |
| Increase | $152,189 46 |

In addition to the surplus above reported, in the Treasurer's hands are 2 per cent. dividends:

| | |
|---|---|
| Surplus April 30th | $37,500 00 |
| Increase assets | 152,189 46 |
| Deduct as 2 per cent. dividend | 8,000 00 |
| Surplus as per report 1867 | 181,689 46 |
| Less | 8,000 00 |
| Advance value of stock premiums, which are now estimated at $60,000 | 18,000 00 |
| Total profits reported over all dividends | $18,000 00 |

The amount of loans a year ago was $60,000 per month. The present average of monthly loans is $100,000 per month.

The Surplus on hand a year ago was $60,000. The assets on hand to-day are $1,000,000 (cheers).

It was moved and seconded that the President's report be accepted. Carried unanimously.

The President then announced that the elections of the Board of Directors were at an end, and it was for the shareholders present to elect a new Board to carry on the business of the Company.

Gen. H. A. Cobb then moved that the Board of Directors who have so successfully managed the affairs of the Company for the last year, be elected by acclamation.

Motion seconded by Mr. Samuel Crim, and carried unanimously.

The Secretary then read the vote for the following gentlemen, composing the retiring Board, to wit: Thomas Mooney, Edward McKeon, W. H. Chapman, H. Weir, Jr., Cornell, J. W. Mellmick, C. A. Jenke, Hermann Schwarze, and J. W. McKenzie.

Col. McKenzie then presented the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That a Committee of Three be appointed to consider the early services of Mr. Mooney, the President, in connection with the Bank, which Committee shall, for the period of eighteen months, and report to this meeting what, if any, allowance shall be made for such services.

Gen. H. A. Cobb moved the adoption of the resolution. Motion carried, and Messrs. H. A. Cobb, Dr. James Shoverly and Samuel Trim were appointed such Committee.

The Committee retired for consultation, and on their return reported that the sum of $2,500 be awarded Mr. Mooney for the purpose of erecting a homestead, in compensation for his early services, and that this meeting express confidence in him for the faithful discharge of his trust.

It was moved that the report be accepted Carried unanimously.

Mr. Mooney returned his thanks, and, on motion, the meeting adjourned.

Pacific Coast Items.

CITY.

A Chinaman, named Pah Ah Tan, who was at work on a farm near the Seventeen-Mile House, while dumping a wagon fell over a precipice some 50 feet in height, and striking upon a stick, which was driven through the eye socket into his brain, was instantly killed.

The Vulcan Iron Works have just completed for the Government an iron lighthouse for Cape Mendocino. The cost of the structure will be $18,000 in greenbacks.

When it became known that our State had gone Democratic, dispatches were sent to prominent Californians sojourning in the East informing them of the fact. The news created the greatest excitement in all circles, and the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. Wm. T. Coleman, in answer to one telegram, sent word that 100 bushes of choice champagne were to be opened at the Metropolitan Hotel in New York in honor of the event.

The assistant manager of the S. F. Sugar Refinery left for China on the steamer Great Republic. He is a defaulter in the sum of $100,000.

On Sunday last James McPherson jumped from the window of a house on Dupont street, between Pine and California, and broke his leg.

D. O. McCarthy having drawn out of the concern, the employees of the American Flag intend running the affair themselves.

Last Monday was the 110th anniversary of the birth of Lafayette.

Complete official returns of the election have not yet been received.

There is a possibility of Gov. Low calling a special session of the Legislature for the purpose of

Weekly Calendar.

Today, Sept. 15. Fiftieth after Pentecost.
Monday, 16. SS. Cyprian and Cyprian, MM.
Tuesday, 17. Impressing of the Stigmata on St. Francis.
Wednesday, 18. Ember Day. Fast. Vigil of Apostles.
Thursday, 19. St. Januarius and Companions, MM.
Friday, 20. Ember Day. Fast.
Saturday, 21. St. Matthew, Apostle and Evangelist.

Summary of the Week.

WAR FAG AND ——THE ELECTION.

The election excitement has passed away since the publication of the official returns; but a ludicrous exhibition on Wednesday last, arising out of a wager, served to keep the idlers in talk a while longer; and to gently let the citizens down to the routine of ordinary life. On that day a stout gentleman, whose faith in Gorham previous to the late election was of the most robust kind, proceeded to grind an organ along Montgomery street for the benefit of the Catholic and Protestant orphan asylums. A very large number of the citizens turned out to enjoy a regular day's folly; and as the organ hero, preceded by a band and a large procession of successful and unsuccessful candidates for office, sweated along under the weight of his instrument, it was sometimes almost impossible for him to force a way through the dense crowd. His performance, although limited to a solitary tune, produced a golden and silver harvest—such as probably organ or monkey never produced before—and the orphans must have realized something over $6,000 from the frolic.

THE MAINE ELECTION.

The Republicans have carried the election in the lumber State, but the great diminution in their majority since last year being about one-fifth of the whole, is a considerable damper on their success. It really seems as if the nation was already growing weary of the Congressional policy which excited so much enthusiasm last year, and it will cause little surprise if the Middle States, at the next election, should follow the example of Democratic California, as Oregon and Nevada even more probably will.

THE STATE FAIR.

The exhibition of Californian products at the State Fair in Sacramento is said to be the finest display ever made of that class of articles. The silk worms, cocoons, floss and reeled silk, and other articles connected with that branch of industry, give promise that at no distant date California will derive a large profit from silk raising, while the woolen goods manufactured near this city are said to yield the palm of excellence to no imported fabric. Native wines, it is said, are only poorly represented, though no branch of our agricultural resources is more promising; but we hope this defect will be remedied the next time. Without unduly exaggerating the value of those public exhibitions, there is no doubt but they are useful in exciting competition, in bringing valuable but neglected industries into prominence, and generally diffusing technical knowledge; so we hope the State Fair will prove financially a success, as this is the only sure means to insure its due recurrence.

GREECE AND TURKEY.

If the New York Tribune's special is to be believed, which is not by any means an admitted certainty, there seems every prospect of a war breaking out between Russia and Turkey. The former has, somewhat coolly we must say, called on the latter to hand over Creto to Greece just when the war there was ended, and sent this modest demand in the form of an ultimatum. We suppose this must answer with the Cretans in their struggle for independence; but on what grounds Russia can interfere on their behalf, while she herself outrageously violates the rights of nationality in Poland and Circassia, it passes our comprehension to tell. However, in politics, even in the nineteenth century, might is too often right, and Russia can get a chance of pushing on to Constantinople she will try to make the most of it without troubling herself much about appearances.

JOHN BULL IN ABYSSINIA.

Great Britain, "on whose empire the sun never sets," &c., has been treated in the most free and easy style, by his serene Majesty Theodore, Emperor of all the Abyssinians, whom he is able to hold in terror of his arms. Theodore, who is a gentleman of color, having heard some three years ago that the Queen of England was a widow, proposed for her royal hand, and no answer being returned, acted upon all the Englishmen who were unlucky enough to find themselves in his dominions, and has kept them in durance vile ever since. Explanations, promises, threats, all were wasted on his colored majesty, and finally John Bull is now about starting an expedition against him, though with evident reluctance, as it is not unlikely to be a failure, owing to the nature of the country. Theodore does not seem to be much impressed with respect for the British empire, nevertheless, he is said to be an able and energetic ruler of his dusky subjects, and probably, such as artillery, tents, transportation facilities, commissariat, &c., certainly do not require to be prepared so as in advance of a campaign as common sense would tell the present time to be; and certainly, considering the result of former levies, any unnecessary demands should be avoided how. Another point to which we object altogether is engaging the organization, as such, in American politics. Were not those who believe allegiance to America incompatible with Irish patriotism, or that Irishmen in their capacity of American citizens may not use their efforts to obtain the freedom of their native land by every lawful means, Lafayette was not considered a bad Frenchman because he exerted his influence to urge his country into war with England on behalf of the United States; and we do not see why Irish-Americans should be considered bad United States citizens for following his example; but we entirely object to mixing up an organization of Irishmen, established for a definite non-American object, with party politics. Political parties are essentially domestic organizations, and have no business whatever in the foreign transactions of the State. While, therefore, Irishmen, as individual American citizens, have a perfect right to exercise their political efforts on behalf of Ireland, they would be entirely wrong were they to negotiate an alliance with any political party, as an organization, having its main objects outside of America, and the party which would make such an alliance would degenerate into a mere faction—one of the greatest plagues of republican government. In addition to this abstract reason, there is another very serious practical objection to the Fenians mixing themselves in American politics, which is, that if they do so they are tolerably certain to be diverted from their real object. While waiting for an opportunity to free Ireland, if they dabble in politics here, their political friends will find it, doubtless, much easier to provide office for some of the leaders than armies to combat England; and while fighting the battles of party at the ballot-box, the city of distress from home will be unheeded. It is perhaps unnecessary to have said so much on the evil of mixing up the organization with either Republicans or Democrats, or any other party, but we deemed it well to give our candid opinion thereupon, owing to the reported resolution of the Clerical Congress. Probably more mature deliberation will convince all of the impolicy of such a course, which the common sense of the body has avoided all through its existence.

The Lesson of the Election.

Since our last issue the result of the election has been proclaimed by the agency of the press and telegraph throughout the Union, and the extraordinary and complete triumph of the Democratic party of California is now an element to be counted by both Conservatives and Radicals in settling the future state of the country. The party which for the past six years has held the reins of power here, and which, up to the election day, believed itself sure of victory, has been beaten by a heavy majority, and beaten in such a manner as to leave no doubt of the general feeling of the entire State. The whole State ticket, two Congressmen, a large majority in the Legislature, and most of the local officers in the different counties have been elected by the party which, a few months ago, was thought by its opponents to be dead past hope of resurrection. So complete a success was not even hoped for by the Democrats, and their joy over it was proportionally great. Indeed its effect, coming thus after the elections in Connecticut and Kentucky, the only bona fide ones held this year, and entailing as it probably does the adhesion of all the Pacific Coast, can scarcely be overrated, and certainly no such victory has been achieved by the party since 1860. The causes of so decided a change in the political position of California since 1861 are various. There has been of course a considerable change of population, owing to our peculiar position, which may, or may not, have affected the result; the puritanical ideas of a section of the party in power, which found vent in the Sunday Law, coupled with the conduct of the same class in those parts of the East where they have things their own way, excited considerable disgust among a large body of the citizens, native and naturalized, who felt little relish for a revival in California of the Calvinistic code of New England, and the pressure of taxation which, whether reasonably or unreasonably, is attributed by numbers to their accession to power, and which galls to the quick, now that the war excitement is dead—all combined to cause the popularity of the dominant party, of these causes would not suffice to account for such a change. The security which a Republican policy gives our candid opinion thereupon, owing which was ten-fold increased by the rapturings of the partisan papers, a majority of which usually stick to the faction in office, led them into the belief that the Government was a kind of private property, to be disposed of by a small ring of men able to work primaries and pull the wires in conventions. A skillful manipulation of the primaries secured the Republican nominations in some of the most important cases, to men of suspicious antecedents and who had no claims on public esteem sufficient to exalt them to office. Having accomplished so much, the successful nominees believed they could force themselves into office by appeals to the party feelings of the Republicans, and that the latter would prefer to sacrifice the nation-al rather than their party interests. The result shows that they reckoned without their host. The Union party, which has controlled the State for so many years, was welded together from former Democrats and Republicans by the pressure of the war; and now that its great issues are settled, the majority of the voters who belonged to that body feel their party allegiance sits lightly enough on them. Violent politicians may announce that all is lost unless the Congressional policy is carried out; but the bulk of the people do not regard affairs in that light; and while they take sides either with the Union President or the Union Congress, they scarcely consider the policy of either such an urgent national necessity as to justify them in electing suspicious characters to high office, solely because they profess attachment thereto. This feeling is not only natural, but perfectly just. Party is only useful as long as it is subservient to the national interests; and when it is turned against the general good of the State, either by maintaining injurious principles or supporting unworthy men, then fidelity to party becomes mere faction. Without in the least denying the influence of the coincidence of heavy taxation even in peace, and the arbitrary, not to say unconstitutional course of the present Congress, in strengthening the Democratic party here during the past three years, there is little doubt but the personal character of some of the Union nominees told powerfully against them of their ticket. We trust the lesson will be lost upon their successors. With the prestige of their late victory, it will be comparatively easy for them to retain their newly acquired power, if they are satisfied to do so by the same means as those by which they have attained it—that is, by putting forward candidates whose return is a national not less than a party advantage; who will be content with the legitimate exercise of the authority entrusted to them, and always be ready to give a ready and most acknowledged degree of personal aggrandizement at the public cost. Should the professed politicians feel unwilling to follow such a system, they have learned a lesson this week of the real power of the people—a power which cannot be controlled by conventions or primaries, and which will just as easily overturn any other faction that attempts to make the Nation a slave to party.

California's Anniversary.

After the national July festival there is no political anniversary more honored by Californians than the 9th of September, that of the Golden State's admission into the sisterhood of the Great Republic. In many respects California possesses a much more marked individuality than any of the other States. She sprang into statehood without passing through any intermediate organization—her name has become a household world throughout the world. In foreign lands, where the titles of older and more populous States are scarcely known, she is counted a country in herself; and California and the Eastern States are spoken of almost as if they were two equal portions of the American Republic. The discovery of gold in such immense quantities, and the consequent enormous immigration from every clime, the strange phenomenon of the rapid development and high prosperity of a country almost without government, without laws, without any power to control them—emancipated as they were, even from the influences of home and family, and yet organizing a complete State out of the chaos in an incredibly short time, all these circumstances turned the eyes of the world towards California, and attracted here a more world-wide immigration than was ever told of in history. Even the similar events which have since taken place in Australia, British Columbia, and New Zealand failed to make California be forgotten, and she is everywhere regarded as the pioneer of modern gold countries. Notwithstanding its as yet comparatively small population, California, both by its wealth, its position and its future prospects, exercises an influence both in the United States and throughout the world far surpassing that of much more populous States. The establishment of a civilized community on this side of the Continent, has contributed most powerfully to drawing forward the limits of the Eastern settled country—the spirit of adventure, unparalleled since the days of Cortez and Pizarro, which has been developed by the rush of a quarter of a million of men across an unsettled continent, has given an immense impulse to American enterprise, and contributed powerfully to breaking down the narrow and exclusive spirit which some quarter of a century ago, and even later, was striving, to convert this broad continent—the natural home for the crowded populations of Europe—into a park for the descendants of Anglo-Saxon settlers. In the multitude of immigrants from every country, the word foreigner was well nigh forgotten—or rather all were foreigners alike, and the returning swarm of Americans carried the liberality acquired here back to the East, and thus helped to spread a broader and more cosmopolitan spirit throughout the land.

All these circumstances combine to give this State a much more marked individuality than any of the other members of the Union, and accordingly it is not undeservedly that Californians, having celebrated the birth of the nation on the Fourth of July, should also, on the 9th of September, duly honor the birthday of the Golden State.

Death of Rev. Father Neal Gallagher.

It is our painful duty to record the untimely decease of this most exemplary priest, whose short career among us has sufficed to make us know his worth, and deplore his loss. On Sunday last, his remains were brought down to this city, and lay in St. Mary's Cathedral, during the celebration of the last solemn office of the Church. Very Rev. Father Croke, V. G., presided at the ceremonies, at which assisted Revs J. Prendergast, J. A. Gallagher, Fathers Accolti and Bushard, S. J., Fathers Mehorist and Veyries, O. P., Fathers Gray, Brennan, Slattery, Gubney, Bowman, Nugent, Griffin, Derham, McNally, McCullough and Delmas. Rev. Father Gitter preached the funeral oration, and really surpassed himself in his eloquent and pathetic discourse. The subject was, indeed, one well-worthy of his finest efforts, for to know the deceased was to love and esteem him.

Father Gallagher, was a native of the county Leitrim, Ireland, and was born in the year 1822, so that at the time of his decease, he was in his thirty-eighth year. His vocation to the ecclesiastical state was somewhat late, and in fact, he had nearly completed his studies in the medical profession, ere he became convinced of his vocation to a higher and more perfect state. He accordingly entered the ecclesiastical college at Carlow, in his twenty-fifth year, and, having completed the necessary course, was ordained priest in 1850, and shortly afterwards started for California. On his arrival here he was charged with the assistant pastorship of St. Rose's Church, in Sacramento, by the Most Rev. Dr. Alemany, and continued to discharge the pastoral office in that parish, until the establishment of St. Mary's College, when he was made vice-president of that institution, in the latter capacity, by his amiable and kindly disposition endeared him to those entrusted to his care, but his stay among them was only a brief one. In 1865, he was entrusted with the pastoral charge of Folsom, in which office he remained until the period of his death. His labors among his flock were incessant, his liberality boundless, and his gentle, fatherly manners won for him not only the sincere affection of his own spiritual children, but the hearty goodwill of the people of the city. The contributions for the relief of the sufferers in the great floods of '65, when he sailed through inundated districts in a boat loaded with provisions and other necessaries, will be long remembered in Sacramento county. Nor was that the first occasion on which he gave singular and public proof of his unselfish charity. During his passage from Ireland to Boston, on the Hibernia, that vessel was destroyed by fire, and with a single person remained in danger of life. Father Gallagher refused to quit the sinking vessel, but continued administering aid and consolation up to the last moment. While laboring faithfully and self-sacrificingly in his pastoral duties at Folsom, Father Gallagher contracted an affection of the lungs, which soon forced him to relinquish the charge for that of lighter duties; and after a struggle of a few weeks, cut short the thread of his life, and summoned him away to receive the reward of his labors.

THE IRISH RELIEF FUND.—By the last steamer the Irish Relief Committee of this city sent a remittance of $5,000 to the Most Rev. Archbishop MacHale for the use of the suffering families of the Irish political prisoners. The amount is a creditable one, considering the many calls upon the charity of our country men in California, and the best thanks of all are due to the members of the committee who amid the pressure of business duties found time to devote to the cause of the needy ones in poor Ireland. The committee are very anxious that all parties holding collection books would transmit the amounts they may have on hand, with their books, to them, as soon as possible, as they are most anxious to balance their accounts. With the balance they have now on hand, amounting to about $600, and the amounts they expect to receive from the outstanding books, they feel confident of being able to make another handsome remittance.

The Irish Relief Fund.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9, 1867.

MOST REV. JOHN MACHALE, Archbishop of Tuam:—Most Rev. Sir: It affords us great pleasure to remit to you the enclosed bill of exchange in your favor of one thousand pounds sterling drawn by Messrs. Donohoe, Kelly & Co., of this city, on the Bank of Ireland.

It is the first result of the contributions in California and on this coast in aid of the suffering families of the Irish State prisoners, and of others dependent on them, who are in need of succor.

Whatever may be men's opinions as to the merits of the recent outbreak in Ireland, on account of which those prisoners have been punished with such excess of severity, all are agreed that it is in its way, but one more and the latest of the ever-recurring protests of a trampled but unconquered race against the tyranny of centuries. All are equally agreed, that when the cry of human suffering is heard the voice of criticism should be hushed. But throughout these distant shores men of every race, Irish or American, as their past each his mite into our treasury of charity, do it also as an expression of their hearty condemnation of a system of misgovernment which is the standing reproach of Christendom.

We have thought that no one could be selected so worthy in every respect to have the distribution of such a fund as the Archbishop of Tuam—"The Lion of the fold of Judah"—distinguished for his devotion through a long quarter of a century to the best interests of his country.

The fund, of which the present remittance is a part, has been contributed by men of all races and opinions for the purpose mentioned.

The distribution for that purpose is cheerfully committed to your discretion. We have the honor to be, Most Rev. Sir, very truly and respectfully, your friends and servants,

M. D. SULLIVAN, Irish Relief Fund.
P. J. HARRIS, Treasurer.
THOMAS MAHONY, Secretary.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.—For some time past we have had great cause to complain of the negligence of a large number of our subscribers, in not remitting their subscriptions, which are past due. We are aware of recent appeals having been made to them in behalf of very worthy objects; also, that they were passing through the ordeal of an exciting election canvass—which caused us to refrain from making any urgent appeals in our own behalf. But now that the excitement is over, and that gentlemen are in a state of mind to give their private matters some consideration, we would respectfully call their attention to their indebtedness to THE MONITOR. Each individual is, no doubt, fully aware of the amount he owes, and, therefore, must feel the moral obligation he is under to pay, together with the urgent necessity to the publisher, who furnish him a newspaper in good faith. We hope this appeal will be promptly responded to. If not it will be quite unnecessary for parties whose papers may be stopped to be writing to us to know the cause, as we will be the non-payment of their subscriptions. Any person receiving our paper at present, and not disposed to pay for it, is requested kindly to say so at the back, for we have no desire to furnish reading matter gratis. Remittances can always be made either by registered letter or Wells, Fargo & Co's express, deducting the cost of remittance from the amount of the subscription.

CONSECRATION OF SAN FRANCISCO CHURCH, WALLING, SUTTER—If I gave as great pleasure to observe the energetic manner in which the parishioners of St. Francis are bestirring themselves for the completion of their church, a work in which they deserve the aid of every San Francisco Catholic, St. Francis' is essentially the Catholic church of San Francisco—it was the cathedral until the erection of St. Mary's, to which the members of its congregation contributed liberally, and surely itself now deserves some assistance. The church has been built in an unfinished state owing to the many heavy demands for other objects on the congregation, but the latter have now resolved to have a place of worship which will both externally and internally be creditable to the city. The completion of the work has been entrusted to Mr. England, the original architect of the edifice, who has now nearly completed the drawings necessary for commencing. The ladies of the congregation, on their part, are working energetically at the Fair to raise as much as possible of the funds required. The basement of the Church is tastefully fitted up for the purpose, and lotteries, tableaux, etc., furnish important attractions for all. It is to be hoped that enough will be realized to meet most of the expenses of the work, and we may soon see the church completed in a manner worthy of the Catholic Bishop, truly and respectfully, your friends and servants, representative of the Catholic City, where it represents the pioneer Temple of Divine worship. The ladies thus engaged to exert themselves with zeal, but they have made all preparations to meet them.

The Stevens and Roberts wings were formerly united, under the name of the Irish Republic. Roberts was elected President, but declined, and Stevens and Colonel Lynch would raise half a million dollars for immediate use. The amount being pledged, Roberts accepted. The Circles will be called on for all funds on hand, to be sent to headquarters, and to waive sum for flags or trappings. The bonds of the Irish Republic were reported to realize only 25 cents on a dollar. A resolution of respect to the late Gen. Meagher was carried amid cheers and hisses. A committee was appointed to draft an address to the United States Government in behalf of the Fenians and say they would support only the party that would support them.

HAVANA, Sept. 5.—The cigar makers of this city are making earnest endeavors to induce all, among their fellow workmen to join unanimously, and declare themselves on a strike for the pay they were receiving on the early part of the year, before the new tax law went into force. The city authorities take active steps with the employers in keeping the wages down.

It is estimated that the sugar crop will be about the same as last year.

The object of the negro rising in Santiago de Cuba was to attack the Spaniards and proclaim their freedom. It is reported from St. Thomas that there has been an uprising, and three hundred negroes attacked a fort. They were quickly repulsed, and five were killed and several wounded. Fifty have been imprisoned. The uprising was caused by some sanitary measures decreed by the Governor and Board of Health.

European Summary.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 5.—The report that the Government of Denmark has sold the Danish Island in the West Indies to the United States is officially denied.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—Returns of the recent elections in all parts of Prussia and the other States of the Confederation show that the Liberal candidates for the North German Parliament are generally successful.

PARIS, Sept. 6.—Moustier has issued a circular stating that the Saltzburg Conference was one merely of condolence over the fate of Maximilian, and that there was a general exchange of views on the European situation, but no alliance or combination were planned by the Emperors, as has been stated.

BERLIN, Sept. 6.—John A. Kasan, of Iowa, representing the United States in negotiating with Prussia for a postal treaty similar to that just concluded between England and America, has arrived here.

Spanish official dispatches report that thousands of insurgents in Catalonia have taken advantage of the amnesty and surrendered.

The bands in Aragon are reduced to 400, who are now moving towards the frontier, pursued by the royal troops.

DUBLIN, Sept. 7.—The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland has decorated with medals the police who distinguished themselves during the Fenian outbreak.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Advices from Candia report that the Turkish authorities interfered with an American vessel aiding Cretan refugees to escape, and compelled it to disgorge.

VIENNA, Sept. 7.—Count Beust has reorganized the Cabinet. Count Von Taaffe, minister of Public Instruction.

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—A pacific note has been issued from the Russian Foreign Office, in which Moustier's note is alluded to as being highly satisfactory.

FLORENCE, Sept. 7.—Garibaldi passed here to-day, en route to the Peace Congress. He dined with the Prussian Minister.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Francis Morris, of New York, has concluded arrangements here with Capt. Pim, of the Royal Navy, looking to the formation of a new interoceanic ship canal across Nicaragua, he assisting, connecting with steamers on the Lake.

GENEVA, Sept. 7.—Delegates to the Peace Congress are arriving from all parts of Europe. Garibaldi has arrived at Florence. His reception was enthusiastic. In his speech he said his purpose of marching to Rome was unaltered. The plan of action will soon be carried into effect.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—The Tribune's Constantinople special says: "The Russian Ambassador in this city has presented to the Porte another note from his government, demanding the cession of Crete to Greece, and full equality to be granted to Christians and Mahometans in all the provinces of Turkey. This demand is declared to be the ultimatum of Russia. An answer is asked within ten days. War is regarded as almost inevitable.

Meeting of the California Building and Loan Society.

The above Society met on last Tuesday evening at the residence of Messrs. H. F. Williams & Co., on Mission street, when there were present Mr. Mahoney, President, called the meeting to order at 8 o'clock. Mr. H. L. Herbert acting Secretary, pro tem. The President read a report of business for the past year. It appeared that a year ago the assets of the company were $40,000. In the course of the year the assets had been increased to $100,000. The assets on the 30th of April, 1867, were

| | |
|---|---|
| Loans on real estate | $70,000 00 |
| Loans on personal security | 10,000 00 |
| Cash on hand | 1,000 00 |
| Cash in bank | 19,000 00 |
| Interest on loans, and premiums, advanced | 1,000 00 |
| Total | $101,000 00 |

The estimated assets on the 30th of April, 1868, were as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| Loans on real estate | $100,000 00 |
| Loans on personal security | 10,000 00 |
| Cash on hand | 1,000 00 |
| Cash in bank | 19,000 00 |
| Interest on loans, and premiums, advanced | 1,000 00 |
| Total estimated assets | $131,000 00 |

Total profits expected on dividends ..... $30,000 00
The amount of loans a year ago was $5,000 per month. The present average of monthly loans is $10,000 per month.

The assets for a year ago were $40,000. The assets in hand to-day are $101,000, showing a handsome increase.

It was moved and seconded that the President's report be accepted. Carried unanimously.

The President then announced that the functions of the Boarded Directors were at an end, and it was for the shareholders present to elect a new Board to serve for the ensuing year.

Gen. H. A. Cobb then moved that the Board of Directors who have so successfully managed the affairs of the Company for the past year, be elected by acclamation.

Motion seconded by Mr. Samuel Crim, and carried unanimously.

The Secretary then cast the vote for the following gentlemen, composing the retiring Board, to be re-elected: Messrs. John A. Mahoney, W. B. Stocking, W. Ward, D. D. Colnett, J. W. Mitchell, Mr. C. A. Zemke, Hermann Schwartz, and J. O. Kincaid, Esq.

Mr. Mahoney then presented the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That a Committee of Three be appointed to audit the yearly accounts of Mr. Mahoney, the President, in connection with the Secretary, and that they report to the next meeting of the Board with respect to the meeting about to be held, and that they be empowered to act in the premises.

Gen. H. A. Cobb moved the adoption of the resolution, which was carried, and Messrs. H. A. Cobb, James Mahoney, and Samuel Crim were appointed such Committee.

The Committee retired for consultation, and on their return reported that the sum of $2,000 be awarded Mr. Mahoney for the purpose of erecting a homestead, in recognition of his early services, and also for the many years' unselfish devotion to the interests of the Company.

Mr. Mahoney returned his thanks, and on motion the meeting adjourned.

Oregon and Idaho.

The following theory concerning the formation of the Poorman lodge, in Idaho, is offered by a geologist who lately made a thorough examination so far as the work of development enabled him to investigate: Its soft vein stone has been so extensively acted upon by the steam vapors and ebullitions of hot water, probably it might have been the vent of some ancient water volcano. The boiled, rotten and sodden character of its wall rock looks like this. If this crevice had been for ages a boiling salt sulfatora or mud volcano, whose walls are often slopping and grinding upon each other, and whose rocks were softening, and the rich sulphurets and ruby ores were slowly changing to chlorides, till at last it became quiet and still, we have, in my opinion, a fair theory for this celebrated vein.

The Umatilla Press has the following: "The soldiers under Lieutenant Forge, have had a battle with the Snakes at Burnt river. Much skill was displayed by the Lieutenant, in getting the Indians into a body, in a place from which it was impossible for them to retreat. He then, after giving them a volley from their carbines, rushed upon them with drawn sabres, killing and capturing every one. Four soldiers were killed and nine wounded.

The Oregonian says of the Butte Creek mine: Of several specimens of Butte Creek limestone sent to this city on Saturday, we have reserved one. The stone is a bluish gray, apparently made up of pyrites and shells, and is very unlike any other specimens we have ever seen on this coast. The mine is situated on the bank of Butte Creek, about sixteen miles from Salem, and belongs to Frank Cooper.

A report reaches the Olympia Tribune that both surveying parties engaged in the search for a route for the Northern Pacific Railroad reached the summit of the Cascade Mountains several days ago. It is also reported that the Snoqualmie Pass is 1 400 feet high, while the Cowlitz or Natchez Pass is 2,600 to 3,000.

Thomas O'Connor, Deputy Marshal of Portland, who was shot by Frank Miguel on the 23d ult., died of his wounds on the 29th.

A man named Patrick McManus, a teamster, who has been in the employment of the Oregon Iron Company at Oswego, for nearly a year, was thrown from a wagon on Saturday last, and falling before the wheels, was run over and crushed about the neck and jaws in a horrible manner. A couple of other teamsters, who witnessed the accident from some distance, immediately ran to his assistance.

British Columbia

By the arrival of the steamer Active, we have received files of Victoria journals to Sept. 6.

The brig Crimea was loading at Esquimault with lumber for this market.

At the Shawnigan District, a few days ago, a young man named Beddesson was killed while gunning, by the accidental discharge of the contents of his companion's gun.

A free school is to be established at Nanaimo.

Gov. Seymour, on the 3d inst., reviewed the Victoria firemen.

The William Creek correspondent of the Colonist, writing under date of the 15th ult., says: "The unfortunate man Barry, who was convicted of the murder of C. B. Hopper, near Beaver Pond, and the Indian who killed Morgan a few miles from the Soda Creek, have suffered the extreme penalty of the law."

THE CROPS.—The Columbian has the following: "The weather continues exceedingly favorable for harvesting, but although as high as $60 a month and board is offered for laborers in the interior, we are assured that thousands of bushels of grain and hundreds of acres of hay will rot on the ground, owing to the impossibility of procuring sufficient help. Think of that, $60 a month and found offered, and can't get it.

It is estimated that British Columbia contains about 220,000 square miles, or 140,000,000 acres, of which, up to date, only about 60,000 acres were settled by white men. The colony is considerably more than double the size of the United Kingdom.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTHLY OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, TUESDAY, Sept. 11, 1867.

FLOUR — Our quotations are as follows: Extra bakers', in bbls, at $6 50@6 75; do in lots, $6 25@6 50; extra family, both city and country, in half-bbls, at $5 75@6 for Meeks, and $6@6 25 for others; superfine in bbls at $5 50@5 75 at $5@5 25; fine in bbl-sks at $4 25, and do in sks at $4 50 @4 75; Oregon extra at $5 25@5 75 in sks or bbls, and superfine at $4 75@5 per bbl.

WHEAT—Quotable as to quality at $1 80@1 90 @ 100 lbs.

BARLEY—$1 10@1 75 @ 100 lbs.

OATS—Quotable at $1 40@1 80 @ 100 lbs.

HAY—Quotable at $12@15 @ ton, as to quality.

BRAN—A moderate demand prevails mostly for home consumption. Quotable in round lots as follows: Bay-ge, $22 75; Butter at $2 75@2 87½; Small Whites at $2 25; Pearls at $2 50; Peas at $2 50@3; Feed Barley at $2 @ 100 lbs.

POTATOES—In the market at $1 @$1 50 @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—Quotable at $1 00@1 50 @ 100 lbs.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE.

Slaughter house rates are as follows:

BEEF—At 6@8c @ lb.

VEAL—At 9@12c @ lb.

MUTTON—At 8@9c @ lb.

LAMB—At 7@8c @ lb.

PORK—At 8@9c @ lb., as to size.

TALLOW (CRUDE)—Sales at the following rates for round lots:

BACON—California quotable at 14c @ lb.; Oregon at 13c @ lb.

HAMS—California 19@20c, and Oregon at 18@19c @ lb.

BEES—Smoked at 14@15c, do shoulders at 14c @ lb. Mess at $13@16 @ bbl.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

FIRKIN—Here, large size, at $2 @ dozen; young chicken at $7 @ doz.; and small do. at $5@6 do.

DUCKS—Tame at $6 @ doz.

GEESE—Tame at $18 @ doz.

TURKEYS—At $26 @ lb. for large sizes.

HARE—Wild, at $1 @ doz.

RABBITS—At $1 00 @ doz.

VENISON—Sales—@25c @ lb.

PIGEONS—Tame at $2 00 @ doz.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Wholesale prices rule as follows:

BUTTER—Choice to prime roll, 35@45c; new packed at 27@35c.

CHEESE—Prices firm at quotations; the demand is quite active, quotable at 12½@13c @ lb. Clear Lake at 16c @ lb.

EGGS—In 100 lots, ranging 12½@12c @ lb.

EGGS—At 47½@50c @ doz.

In another column our readers will find the prospectus of a library which has just been organized at St. Mary's Hospital. As will be seen in Rule 7th, the funds remaining over will be applied for the benefit of aged and infirm females; and were this the only good work to be performed, that one good intention ought to commend the society to the attention of the Catholics of San Francisco. We sincerely wish it the success it deserves.

FAIR FOR ST. VINCENT'S CHURCH, VALLEJO.—We are pleased to learn of the success attending the Fair for the benefit of St. Vincent's church, Vallejo. The Fair, which opened on Thursday last, will continue one week. The steamer Amelia runs to Vallejo every morning, leaving here at 10 o'clock, thus giving the charitably inclined people of the city an opportunity to contribute towards its success. The church in course of erection in Vallejo will, we are informed, have no superior in the State, outside of San Francisco. It reflects the greatest credit on the energy and perseverance of their worthy pastor, Rev. Father Daniels, and on the spirit and generosity of the Catholics of Vallejo. We wish them every success.

THE FAIR in aid of the new convent at Oakland has been postponed until Tuesday, October 8.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—The servant girls held a monster meeting on Saturday night, Sept. 7, protesting against any further demands of money for the Fenians. Resolutions questioning the honesty of previous expenditures and the propriety of attempting to liberate Ireland by subjugating Canada were passed.

MAKING LIGHT OF IT.—The Santa Rosa Democrat illuminated their dwellings and places of business on Saturday last.

RELIEF FUND

FOR THE

Families of the Irish State Prisoners.

The following named gentlemen have constituted to this fund since our last publication:

SAN FRANCISCO.

M. Daly ..... $20 00

MENLO PARK.

(Collected and for remitted by J. D. Slattery, Esq.)

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| J. D. Slattery | $10 | Patrick Byrne | $5 00 |
| Mrs. Slattery | 5 | Mrs. Byrne | 5 00 |
| Miss Slattery | 5 | Mrs. Kelly | 5 00 |
| Miss Slattery | 5 | Mrs. Carmody | 5 00 |
| Miss Josephine Slattery | 5 | Mrs. Hanley | 5 00 |
| Annie Taylor | 5 | John Meehan | 5 00 |
| Mrs. Mahoney | 5 | Mrs. Meehan | 5 00 |
| John Farrell | 5 | Edward Sargent | 5 00 |
| Thomas Carroll | 5 | Mrs. Sargent | 5 00 |
| Michael Murphy | 5 | Edward Sargent, Jr. | 5 00 |
| Mrs. Murphy | 5 | Miss Sargent | 5 00 |
| Total | | | $101 00 |

LOS ANGELES.

(Collected by Patrick Downey and John Kins, Esqrs.)

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| John G. Downey | $20 | Mrs. Kins | $5 00 |
| Patrick Gallagher | 5 | Mrs. Gallagher | 5 00 |
| Annie Fitzpatrick | 5 | Mrs. Downey | 5 00 |
| Mrs. Fitzpatrick | 5 | Mrs. Kelly | 5 00 |
| Mary Hussey | 5 | Mrs. Hussey | 5 00 |
| Mrs. Hussey | 5 | Mrs. Cardwell | 5 00 |
| Timothy Reed | 5 | Mrs. Reed | 5 00 |
| Mrs. Reed | 5 | Mrs. Kins | 5 00 |
| Mrs. Kins

European Intelligence.

FENIANISM AND THE NATIONAL TEACHERS.—The Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, in their thirty-third annual report, specially refer to the recent arrests of thirty-seven of their teachers for alleged complicity with Fenianism. Against two only have serious charges been preferred, and one of these was sentenced to two years' penal servitude. Thirty-three were arrested while actually in charge of national schools, but thirty were discharged with or without bail. In the rebellious times preceding 1798, they say, the masters of what were called Hedge Schools were almost universally teachers of sedition, but when the National system was instituted one of the first labors of the Board was to root out from the school-manuals a considerable residue of the revolutionary literature of the schoolmasters of 1798. Since then there have been four periods of political commotion—the Tithe agitation, the Repeal agitation, the agitation of 1848, and the Fenian conspiracy, and the last-named alone, "the most artful and seductive of all the political agitations," which "recognizes the school-master as a political power, first tries by flattery to win him over to the ranks of revolution," made any way among the National teachers, who are 8,000 in number, from seventeen years of age and upward, and persons taken from the lowest ranks of the people.

THE FENIAN RISING—THE SHOOTING OF CONSTABLE SWANSE.—On Wednesday.—Edmond O'Loughlin, an intelligent looking, well dressed young man, aged thirty, was placed at the bar charged with the wilful murder of Patrick Sheedy, a sub-constable, at Midleton, on the night of the 5th of March last. It appeared that on the night of Tuesday, the 5th of March, a patrol left the police barrack of Midleton about half-past nine o'clock; it was under the command of Constable Gramey, with whom were sub-constables O'Brien, O'Donnell, and Sheedy. On the bridge leading to Cork they saw numbers of men forming in military array. The police returned to the barracks and reported this, and it was then went out into the town. When they reached the other bridge near the back lane they came met by a party of about thirty or forty men marching in order, and were called upon by a man named Timothy Daly (a carpenter in the town, who appeared to be the commander), to "surrender to the Irish Republic." Daly then seized the rifle of O'Donnell, and presented a pistol at his head, fired, wounding O'Donnell in the neck. Immediately a volley was fired at the police from thirty to forty shots were fired. Sheedy cried out "Oh! oh!" and after grappling along the wall fell mortally wounded and died in a few minutes. Constable Gramey was wounded on the back of the left hand and in the knee, a shot also took effect on his cap. In the armed body was seen the prisoner, who was known to the police as doing buttings in the hardware establishment of Messrs. Moore, in the Main street of Midleton. From the weapon in his hand a flash was seen to issue. This constituted the evidence on which the Crown relied for a conviction. The prisoner was arrested at Cashel on the Thursday after the rising. Daly was killed at Castlemartyr, on the Tuesday night. [As will be seen by our last issue, the jury in the trial of Mr. O'Loughlin failed to agree and were discharged.—ED. MONITOR.]

ESCAPE OF A RETURN FENIAN LEADER.—DROGHEDA, July 8K.—The following singular incident has been the cause of much genital conversation in this town for the last two or three days: It appears that a gentleman residing in our town, of the highest respectability, and an acquaintance of his, entered the residence of the former, unexpectedly the half door being at the time open, when they came upon a stranger man, who was recognized to be no other than the redoubted Colonel Leonard, an Irish-American, who was supposed to have headed the insurgents at the Fenian rising in Drogheda, in March last. The stranger fled towards the back door, it is said, and got into the yard, when the police were at once sent for; but ere they had arrived he had opened a side gate leading to another street. Here he got provided with a key for the latter operation in a mysterious manner, and it is said that the whole of the house, and it is nearly opened. The fugitive was observed to run very rapidly when outside, and disappeared in a short time. That the man was the Fenian general in question, the police entertained little doubt, as they have been on the lookout for him since March. It is supposed that the servants, who are all female, have concealed him on the premises since the rising. No trace of the man has since been had.—Northern Whig.

DRIVEN MAD.—In the House of Commons on Tuesday, in reply to a question from Mr. Blake, Lord Naas admitted the fact that two of the Fenian prisoners in Mountjoy have gone mad—because we might write it "driven mad." The Chief Secretary, of course, is desirous of satisfying any suspicion of his, western, and gratuitously informed the House that one of the prisoners was "subject to delusions," before he was arrested. What a proof he has for saying so we know not. Having explained one case away in this manner, he summarily dispenses of the second by boldly asserting that in his case it is "feigning madness." They both, however, are now in lunatic asylums, and it is not for us to say how far the treatment the Fenian prisoners in general have been subjected to have been conducive to the desired end. Some have escaped the rope and have already been done to death in prison; others are at present fast going the way of all flesh, and their inquest some morning will coolly record "Natural Death." "Killing is no murder" where Fenians are to be disposed of, and it is a marked improvement in the process of doing to death to first drive your victim mad. Verdict—Died from natural causes."—Universal News.

SWALLOWED BY SHARKS.—The vessel despatches, Captain Mitchell, from Remedios, Island of Cuba, arrived at the bar, bor on Monday night. The master reports the loss of two men, whom, he alleges, were swallowed by sharks while the vessel was lying to anchor off the island. Captain Mitchell having found it necessary to go on shore, set off in a small boat which was rigged with a sail. He was accompanied in the boat by the mate and two men. Before they got on board, and when they were about half way a squall suddenly arose, which upset the craft. The men had been in the boat began to root out from the school-manuals a considerable residue of the revolutionary literature of the schoolmasters of 1798. Since then there have been four periods of political commotion—the Tithe agitation, the Repeal agitation, the agitation of 1848, and the Fenian conspiracy, and the last-named alone, "the most artful and seductive of all the political agitations," which "recognizes the schoolmaster

European Intelligence.

FENIANISM AND THE NATIONAL TEACHERS.—The Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, in their thirty-third annual report, specially refer to the recent arrests of thirty-seven of their teachers for alleged complicity with Fenianism. Against two only have serious charges been preferred, and one of these was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. Thirty-three were arrested while actually in charge of national schools, but thirty were discharged with or without bail. In the rebellious times preceding 1798, they say, the masters of what were called Hedge Schools were almost universally teachers of sedition, but when the National system was instituted, one of the first labors of the Board was to root out from the school manuals a considerable residue of the revolutionary literature of the schoolmasters of 1798. Since then there have been four periods of political commotion—the Tithe agitation, the Repeal agitation, the agitation of 1848, and the Fenian conspiracy, and the last-named alone, "the most artful and seductive of all the political agitations," which "recognizes the schoolmaster as a political power, and tries by flattery to win him over to the ranks of revolution," made any way among the National teachers, who are 6,000 in number, from seventeen years of age and upward, and persons taken from the lowest ranks of the people.

THE FENIAN RISING—THE SHOOTING OF CONSTABLE SHEEDY.—CORK, Wednesday.—Edmond O'Loughlin, an intelligent looking, well dressed young man, aged thirty, was placed at the bar charged with the wilful murder of Patrick Sheedy, a sub-constable, at Midleton, on the night of the 5th of March last. It appeared that on the night of Tuesday, the 5th of March, a patrol left the police barrack of Midleton about half-past nine o'clock; it was under the command of Constable Greany, with whom were sub-constables O'Brien, O'Donnell, and Sheedy. On the bridge leading to Cork they saw a number of men forming in military array. The police returned to the barracks and reported this, and then again went out into the town. When they reached the other bridge near the bank they were met by a party of about thirty or forty men marching in order, and were called upon by a man named Timothy Daly (a carpenter in the town, who appeared to be in command), to "surrender to the Irish Republic." Daly then seized the rifle of O'Donnell, and presenting a pistol at his head, fired, wounding O'Donnell in the neck. Immediately a volley was fired at the police—from thirty to forty shots were fired. Sheedy cried out "Oh! oh!" and after groping along the wall fell mortally wounded and died in a few minutes. Constable Greany was wounded on the back of the left hand and in the knee, a shot also took effect on his cap. In the armed body was seen the prisoner, who was known to the police as doing business in the hardware establishment of Messrs. Moore, in the Main street of Midleton. From the weapons in his hand a flash was seen to issue. This constituted the evidence on which the Crown relied for a conviction. The prisoner was arrested at Cashel on the Thursday after the rising. Daly was killed at Castlemartyr on the Tuesday night. [As will be seen by our last issue, the jury in the trial of Mr. O'Loughlin failed to agree and were discharged.—ED. MONITOR.]

ESCAPE OF A RETURNED FENIAN LEADER.—DROGHEDA, July 27.—The following singular incident has been the cause of much general conversation in this town for the last two or three days: It appears that a gentleman residing in our town, of the highest respectability, and an acquaintance of his, entered the residence of the former, unexpectedly the hall door being at the time open, when they came upon a stranger man, who was recognized to be no other than the redoubted Colonel Leonard, an Irish-American, who was supposed to have headed the insurgents at the Fenian rising in Drogheda, in March last. The stranger fled towards the back door, it is said, and got into the yard, when the police were at once sent for; but ere they had arrived he had opened a side gate leading to another street. How he got provided with a key for the latter operation is a mystery; for the key of the wicket was still in the house, and it is rarely opened. The fugitive was observed to run very rapidly when outside, and disappeared in a short time. That the man was the Fenian general in question, the police entertained little doubt, as they have been on the lookout for him since March. It is supposed that the servants, who are all females, have concealed him on the premises since the rising. No trace of the man has since been had.—Northern Whig.

DRIVEN MAD.—In the House of Commons on Tuesday, in reply to a question from Mr. Blake, Lord Naas admitted the fact that two of the Fenian prisoners in Mountjoy have gone mad—perhaps we might write it "driven mad." The Chief Secretary, of course, is desirous of shifting any suspicion off his masters, and gratuitously informs the House that one of the prisoners was "subject to delusions" before he was arrested. What proof he has for saying so we know not. Having explained one case away in this manner, he summarily dispenses of the second by boldly asserting that the prisoner is "feigning madness." They both, however, are now in lunatic asylums, and it is not for us to say how far the treatment the Fenian prisoners in general have been subjected to have been conducive to the desired end. Some have escaped the rope and have already been done to death in prison, others are at present fast going the way of all flesh, and their last great some morning will coolly record "Natural Death." "Killing is no murder" where Fenians are to be disposed of, and it is a marked improvement in the process of doing to death to first drive your victim mad. Verdict—"Died from natural causes."—Universal News.

SWALLOWED BY SHARKS.—The vessel Josephine, Captain Mitchell, from Ruma-Josh, island of Cuba, arrived off the harbor on Monday night. The master reports the loss of two men, whom, he alleges, were swallowed by sharks while the vessel was lying to anchor off the island. Captain Mitchell, having found it necessary to go on shore, set out in a small boat which was rigged with a sail. He was accompanied in the short but fatal voyage to shore by two mates, seamen on board; and when they had got about half way a squall suddenly sprung up, which upset the craft. Some barrels that had been in the boat began to float, and Captain Mitchell, who was struggling in the water, directed the men to seize the barrels and hold on to them, he himself catching the mast and lashing himself thereto. The three men continued to struggle for sometime, when suddenly the two sailors screamed out, and at the same time disappeared beneath the water. At first Captain Mitchell was unaware of the cause which produced such a phenomenon, and he was only convinced of the fate of the unfortunate men when he saw a quantity of blood rise to the surface immediately after their disappearance. It was evident they had been swallowed by sharks which abound in great numbers on the coast. Night came on, and no assistance arrived, and Captain Mitchell was obliged to battle against the waves during the weary hours of darkness. At daylight in the morning he found himself in company of the two monsters which had doubtless devoured his men. They were a short distance away, and now and again they made their presence disagreeably known to the drowning man by evolutions of a hostile character in the water. For thirteen hours he continued to struggle, with the assistance of a mast, and to his preservation he may altogether attribute the providential circumstance that the sail remained attached to the spar, and by its action in the sea kept at bay the treacherous animals, which so long watched their coveted prey. A lighter came to his aid in the morning, and rescued the poor captain in a most exhausted state.—Cork Herald, Aug. 7.

One of the most ominous signs of the times in England is tone which some of the British publications in the journalistic press adopt towards the Royal family. The Tomahawk, for instance, hurls itself very sharply at the Royal Household. The Queen has lately been favoring the public with a "Life of the Prince Consort;" and this journal gives an unfavorable list of royal publications as a probable list of royal publications as a criticism upon that performance. Among them is mentioned as being "in the press" "Recollections of his Nursery," by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales (edited by his nurse). "How I Fought my Brother for Two Shillings a Side and a Humming-top by H. R. H. the Duke of Edinburg, and "Travelling Lessons," by the Princess Beatrice. There is a reckless and desperate sarcasm in all this, a sarcasm which no one can mistake. "But the rame journal is generally severe on his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. In a letter from the Sultan to the Sultana he says H.R.H. "is a scholar not to be imitated by good," "I have got quite confidential," the potentate, talking of his visit to England, "by all I have had to eat. The Prince of Wales, the heir to the throne, seems to be liked, but I noticed about your young man, he is obliged to take a great deal of wine to keep his strength." This is something rather pointed, and seems purposely to be made so. The Tomahawk clearly does not, much mind the disunity that doth hedge a king, if he be a descendant of the Georges.

THE POLICY OF RUSSIA AND ITALY.—The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post, a strong Protestant paper, speaks thus of the policy of France and Italy: It has been long known to both the French and Italian Governments that "the party of action" have been engaged in organizing bands of armed men who are to invade the frontiers of the States of the Church by sea or by land, and incite a conflict with the Pontiff's troops. It is then believed that this party (most erroneously believed) that the papal troops would eventually come to the aid of the invading bands, and thus march on to the capital. The Papal force, including the foreign legion, are supposed to retreat and disperse as the Italian royal forces advance, headed by the Garibaldians, who are to be finally received at the gates of Rome by the native Roman Catholic committee. Pius IX. would be invited to remain as spiritual head of the Roman Catholic world, whilst Rome would be proclaimed the capital of the Italian kingdom. Such is the programme of the misguided enemies of Italy—that old Mazzinian party who have given all the cabinets of King Victor Emmanuel so much trouble. It is only just to say that the Ratazzi Government have used and are still employing all necessary precautions for thwarting the mischievous designs of those who make the noble-hearted but childish patriot Garibaldi their dupe. Additional troops have been sent to the frontiers of the Pontiff's dominions, and the troops of Pius IX. have been disposed of, it is said, by an experienced French officer, so as to overawe and crush the forces of Italy. The Florence Cabinet thinks there is little reason for alarm, and say that the precautions taken are rather to satisfy France than anything else. When it is considered how delicate is the ground on which the September Convention rests, too much precaution cannot be expressed. The Emperor of France in the name of France has taken upon himself the guardianship of Pius IX. and the existing temporal power of the Papacy. Austria and Spain have withdrawn; France is as much at Rome now as when her flag floated from St. Angelo. Some of the advisers of the Pope are suspected of identifying any disturbing cause which might give Pius IX. an excuse for flight, an event sure to be followed by great complications for France as well as Italy.

THE following is extracted from the Pall Mall Gazette:

THE DIET IN IRISH PRISONS.—We perceive with satisfaction that the starvation diet at present enforced in Irish prisons is subject to which we called attention two months since—was last night brought under the notice of the House of Commons, and that the Secretary for Ireland has promised that measures shall be taken to mitigate that cruel grievance during the parliamentary recess. Admitting the existence of the evil, Lord Naas dwelt—as he was ex officio bound to do—on all that could be alleged in excuse for having permitted it to exist so long, viz: that in effect in requiring crime has been signal, that it is a bad thing to pamper prisoners, that the normal diet of the lower classes in Ireland is lower than that of England, and that therefore prison diet in Ireland should be lower too. He said he did not believe there had been any great loss of health or life in consequence of the insufficient dietary which now obtains, and which, pitched on a very low scale in 1849, has since been lowered on several occasions, until it has become what it now is, viz: eight ounces of meal for dinner, and fourteen ounces of bread for dinner, the two meals being separated by a fast of eighteen hours; on which regimen Irish prisoners are compelled to perform shot drill, to work on the treadmill, and to submit to the depressing effects of solitary confinement.

WAR PREPARATIONS.—The continuance of warlike preparations on the part of France and Prussia is causing much anxiety in Europe. Here are some little items of the intelligence on that head supplied by the Moniteur of the Chamber of War, since the 1st of July last received, or is to receive—329,500 metres (the metre is rather more than 1¼ yards) of cloth, 160,000 metres of white flannel, 75,000 caps, 24,000 knapsacks, 400,000 pairs of shoes, 50,000 haversacks, 200,000 tents, 30,000 cases, 250,000 flannel belts, 50,000 pairs of cavalry boots, 10,000 saddles. The Paris says the relations between France and Prussia are not cordial, and could not be cordial in presence of the fact that M. Bismarck shows no intention of abating the just susceptibilities of France in the execution of Article 5 of the Treaty of Prague, and on the other hand shows a decided intention to complete the political absorption of Southern Germany. And the Nouvelle Gazette says that "no Russia, under the pretext of military manœuvres, a real concentration of war is now being held between the staffs of the Russian and Prussian armies under the Czar presiding. A plan of campaign is under consideration, no doubt, and a war between France and Germany, and a war in which Russia and Prussia would be on the one side, and France, Austria and Italy, and possibly Sweden and the Ottoman empire, on the other."

From the correspondence of one of the London journals we learn that "the apprehensions of a Congress to be on the increase. All the liberation [illegible] are lower on account of the [illegible] no considerable fall at the [illegible] Course, it is only because the Bourse is almost at war prices already. Rumors of an alliance between France, Austria and Italy are circulated, and the Sultan is eagerly canvassed to join it." The same writer says: "It is certain that the French Emperor is meditating war on a grand scale; and, with that virulent horror of any acquisition of territory which so well becomes a gentleman, he adds, 'it is equally certain that the object is an extension of territory to restore his prestige, and that at the Mexican failure, and at the reactionnaires.' From all which it would seem that the prophecies which in January were uttered incessantly since the battle of Sadowa, that we would have a great war in the spring, are very likely to be fulfilled.

Dublin, July 27.—Four of the prisoners recently arrested in Dundalk to five were placed [illegible] on a charge of treason-felony by an armed body of police from the county jail at Dundalk to Monaghan Police Office, Edward and Patrick Wall, [illegible] and Lalor Fullam, [illegible] Kelly and Patrick Wall.

The old established Dutch banking firm of Labouchere & Co. has amalgamated with the Union Bank. It was the wealthiest private bank in Holland, and at one time transacted the money business of the principal landed proprietors of that country. The late partner was a constant client of Goethe's up to the period of his death.—Cork Herald, Aug. 7.

Dr Medical Advice.—Dr Ran F. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming "the town talk" in matters of our State and Society of our citizens, and is rapidly extending reputation, although it may seem incredible to some, and be a signal for pish, and tush, and the shrug of the shoulder with a frown. Were we personally acquainted with the Doctor, and had no faith in his skill, we would not advise our friends to take advantage of every stultification that presents itself in Physic; but as we have personally tested the skill of the Doctor in many delicate cases, and have found him successful, we can conscientiously advise our friends to call on him. Dr. Doherty is a graduate of medicine, and has had many years experience, and is not only determined to cure, but to cure speedily, and restore to health and vigor the shattered constitution of the victim of quacks' fame. The Doctor confines his attention to those diseases of a private nature, which require skill and experience, and for the treatment of which he has devoted the best years of his life, and has become so well versed that he can accept or reject at pleasure. Those afflicted with secret diseases should call on Dr. Doherty at once. A call costs nothing, and may save you much suffering. Persons afflicted with secret diseases should not be deterred from calling on the Doctor by the fear that they will be exposed to the public eye. The Doctor's office is on Kearny street, above the Custom House, opposite the Occidental Hotel. Strangers remember the number—7 Kearny street.

TIME PAST NEVER RETURNS.

IF YOU WANT TO HAVE YOUR CLOCKS OR WATCHES keep good time, and save paying your money, you had better call on the undersigned. He is regularly employed by Messrs. Phelps and Dewey as their principal watchmaker. You will please bear in mind that it is not a question of cheapness, but of good work, as I employ none without Watchmakers, and all work is done under my watching eye.

D. A. O'CONNELL,
WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER,
155 Third street, near Howard.

He has the largest and best assortment of clocks, also of watches at very moderate prices. Parties having watches with them all the time they were having it cleaned elsewhere.

He has for sale Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silver Plated Ware, at cost and always as can be bought in the city. A stock of jewelry made to order.

Please give him a call; you will save money and have satisfaction. 31y5

BUSINESS CARDS.

W. C. BURNETT. JOHN M. BURNETT.
BURNETT & BURNETT,
Attorneys at Law,
EXCHANGE BUILDING—ROOMS 57 & 58,
Northwest corner Montgomery and Washington streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Particular attention paid to the presentation of claims to the Congress for ex-Senator Lundy. mh8 1f

T. P. DUFFICY,
Attorney-at-Law,
OFFICE: EXCHANGE, BUILDING,
Mission San Jose, Alameda County, Cal.
Je 2 3m

JOHN GORMAN,
Notary Public,
610 MERCHANT STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
jy27 1f

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers in
Foreign and American Dry Goods and CLOTHING,
Sansome street, corner of Sacramento.
ap6-1y

MONEY TO LOAN,
ON PER CENT. PER MONTH
ON GOOD CITY PROPERTY,
BY THE
Hibernia Savings and Loan Society,
No. 526 Jackson street.
mh18 1f EDWARD MARTIN, Treasurer.

N. SWEENY,
Merchant Tailor,
153 Second street,
(Opposite 11 Engine House.) SAN FRANCISCO.

T. CANTY,
Merchant Tailor
37 Sutter street, near Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Suits of California clothes made in the latest style, at the ruling prices. jy6 1f

B. CURRAN,
Merchant Tailor,
No. 209 Kearny street,
Assembly Hall Building, near Post street.
ap6

O'ULLAHAN & HILL,
Real Estate Agents
No. 507 Montgomery street, corner Sacramento, San Francisco.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES and CONTRACTS carefully drawn. Titles examined, Rents collected, and all other legal documents drawn. Loans negotiated. Real Estate for sale or to lease on favorable terms. Agents upon all times for the inspection of the public. au4

GEO. A. REYNOLDS. HUGH MURRAY
REYNOLDS & MURRAY,
COMMISSION PRODUCE DEALERS
No. 209 Clay street,
Between Davis and Front, San Francisco.
REFER TO BANK OF HAWAII
BARLEY, OATS, FLOUR, POTATOES, ETC., ETC.

EDMUND MARKS & CO.,
WHOLESALE GROCERS
Nos. 225 and 227 Front street,
Corner of Commercial, San Francisco.

WM. CUTTRIDGE & CO.,
Jobbers in
Flour, Grain, Potatoes, Onions, and PRODUCE GENERALLY,
129 Clay street, between Davis and Drum, SAN FRANCISCO.
Commissions executed. ap6 1y
J. C. MALLON. R. W. DUGAN.
MALLON & DUGAN,
(Successors to C. Mallon & Co.)
Forwarding and Produce Merchants
Brick Building, Levee, opp. Steamboat Landing, Stockton.
WE WILL BE PREPARED FOR ALL GRAIN consigned to our care, and promptly forward the same to the proper owners. Je 29 3m

JACOB SHIEW,
PIONEER PHOTOGRAPHER,
612 Clay street, north side, four doors above Montgomery,
Takes a kinder of Photographs in the most approved style. Particular attention to the beautiful art of CRAYON PHOTOGRAPHY and Cartes de Visite. All work guaranteed at the establishment. ap6

CANTY & WAGNER,
(Late of the firm of Canty & Co.)
WHOLESALE
Confectioners
113 Montgomery street,
Between Bush and Sutter streets.
N. B.—All Candies sold by us are warranted to be Manufactured from PURE SUGAR, and to be equal to any made in this city.
Orders promptly attended to and goods delivered in any part of the city free of charge. ap6

Special Notice.
W. B. HIGGINS,
NUMBER 242 THIRD STREET,
(West side) Between Howard and Folsom, Miss'n
W. B. HIGGINS Having been for the last seven years foreman of Matthias & Wilson's Soap Factory, corner of Montgomery and Commercial streets, and having now established himself in the same line, and guarantees to offer customers satisfaction in his patronage. Having purchased the Recipe, Secret and Machinery of the late firm of Matthias & Wilson, he is the most competent to manufacture their celebrated soaps.

Hotel Machines always on hand, for sale or for hire by the month.

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY
526—606 Jackson st., first building east of Montgomery.
OFFICERS:
President. V. P. SWEENY.
Vice-President. C. D. O'SULLIVAN.
TRUSTEES:
M. D. SWEENY. M. J. O'CONNOR.
C. D. O'SULLIVAN. P. MARVIN.
JOHN SULLIVAN. GUSTAVE TOUCHARD.
C. J. TOBIN. T. J. BRODERICK.
PETER DONAHUE.
Treasurer. EDWARD MARTIN
Attorney. RICHARD TOBIN.

Remittances from the country may be sent through Cal., Yuba & Co.'s Express office or any reliable banking house, but the Society will not be responsible for their safe delivery. The signature of the depositor should accompany his first deposit. A proper pass book will be issued to the depositor to whom the deposit is made. Deposits received from $1 upwards.
Office Hours—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Joseph A. Donohoe, San Francisco. Edward Kelly, New York.
DONOHOE, KELLY & Co.
SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE KELLY & Co.,
NEW YORK
BANKERS
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON
BANK OF IRELAND..... DUBLIN
Payable at all the Branches,
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

FARMERS' AND MECHANICS' BANK OF SAVINGS.
220 Sansome street, near California street.
jy20 1f

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

P. J. WHITE. C. A. HOOP.
P. J. WHITE & CO.,
Wholesale Dealers in
GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS.
Removal
ROWLAND, BAILEY & CO.,
GROCERS,
HAVE REMOVED TO THEIR
New Store,
Nos. 610 and 612 Washington street,
Where they are offering a complete assortment of Groceries, at Lowest Rates. Quality guaranteed.
Orders delivered at any point within the city limits.

C. O. OBCUTAU. W. F. GORMAN. H. HARMON.
SULLIVAN & CASHMAN,
Importers and Jobbers in
WINES AND LIQUORS,
Corner of Front and Jackson sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

P. Riley & Co.,
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
No. 506 FRONT STREET,
Between Jackson and Pacific streets,
JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.,
Fine wood Store, 421 Front street, cor. Clay & Washington
SAN FRANCISCO.
Produce Depot: Stockton.
Also, dealers in native California wines and brandies.

F. CASSIN,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN
Wines & Liquors,
MANUFACTURER OF
SYRUPS, CORDIALS, BITTERS, Etc.
SOLE AGENT FOR
California Grape Brandy Bitters.
220 Front street,
Between Washington and Jackson, San Francisco.

WM. B. DOLAN,
WINE AND LIQUOR MERCHANT,
Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Retail, in FRENCH WINES AND BRANDIES,
Irish Whisky
Imported direct from Ireland.
Family trade supplied at the lowest rates. 1y

FASHION SALOON,
N. E. CORNER MONTGOMERY AND WASHINGTON STS.
Wines, Liquors, Cigars & Oysters.
Families supplied with the purest Japanese sake at wholesale rates. JAMES HAYES, Prop'r. jy6

JOHN MORONEY,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN IMPORTED AND DOMESTIC
Wines & Liquors,
No. 414 SACRAMENTO STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

MACHAN & TIBBALS,
Photographers and Retouchers,
No. 11 Montgomery street,
(LATE HAMILTON & TIBBALS.)
A LIKENESS OF WORK KNOWN TO THE ARTIST, and all the finest finish of Photographic Art, at the lowest rates consistent with first-class work.
Copying of every description done to all large sizes, finished with India ink and crayon equal to life size, from any old picture, however scratched or defaced. jy6 1f

EDUCATIONAL.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,
SAN JOSE, CAL.
SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION will commence on Tuesday, August 20th, 1867. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a polite education, and is conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, assisted by able professors and teachers of eminency, and by the best French and English authors. The location is both healthy and attractive.
TERMS:
Entrance to be paid once. $10 00
Board and Tuition, per quarter. 60 00
Washing, per quarter. 7 50
Physicians' fees (unless he is preferred to pay the bill in private practice), per quarter. 2 50
Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges. But there is no extra charge for the French, Spanish or German Languages, nor for piano among extras.
Pupils are required to be made half a session in advance. Payments will be made in gold or its equivalent.
Clothing, Washing, Bed and Bed Clothing, are furnished by parents per use.
Each pupil is required to furnish—
Two mattresses. $100 00
Toilet set, Spoon, Knife and Fork. 5 00
Napkin Ring. 2 00
Pupils will also be taught music free of charge, if they remain at the Academy for that purpose.
The Sisters of Charity are wholly devoted to education, and spare no pains to render it solid and varied, while their constant care of the pupils entrusted to them will be to form them to habits of order, neatness, economy, and to be instructed not only in the various branches of polite literature, but in the most useful knowledge of domestic duties and household management. my20

WILLIAMS'
Commercial and Scientific Academy,
No. 969 Minden street,
Between Harrah and Fifth streets, San Francisco
Under the direction of Professor W. J. G. WILLIAMS, A. M.

THIRD SCHOLASTIC YEAR OF THIS INSTITUTION will commence on the 1st day of July, 1867. The object of the Institution is to thoroughly qualify Boys for SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS LIFE, MECHANICAL and PROFESSIONAL pursuits. To this end they the highest branches of a practical English education are taught. The French and Spanish languages will be taught by native teachers. Also, Book-keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, Surveying, Navigation, Astronomy, Geography, Drawing, Civil Government, Political Economy, Chemistry, Geology, and the Natural Sciences, &c., &c.
The Academy is located in a healthy and pleasant part of the city, between the blocks of Bush and Pine, and the cars of the Omnibus Railroad pass the door every five minutes.
Pupils may enter at any time. Terms reasonable. Hours of session from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. Saturdays excepted.
TERMS PER ANNUM—Payable half yearly in advance:
For Boarders, including washing and mending. $200 00
For Boarders, to be paid half yearly. 100 00
For Day Scholars. 40 00
For Evening Classes at the Academy during vacation will be charged. 20 00
Pupils will be required to furnish their own bedding, towels, and napkins. Each pupil will be required to furnish a gold pen, pencil, and pencil case, and a set of drawing instruments. Each pupil will be required to furnish a certificate of character, or a letter from the parents or guardians of the pupil, before admission. Pupils will be received from any part of the State. The Academy is easy of access by the Omnibus Railroad cars, which pass the door every five minutes. The school year is divided into two sessions of five months each, and one of two months. Pupils will be received at any time during the session, except in case of sickness. Pupils will be required to attend the whole session, except in case of sickness. Pupils will be required to attend the whole session, except in case of sickness. Pupils will be required to attend the whole

The Seminole's Reply.

[The attack on Fort Bolton was made. It is supposed, by Pilaka and his gang. The action must have taken place before the information of the truce could have been received by the Indians who made the attack.—Southern paper.]

Blaze! with your serried columns,
I will not heed the hoax;
The shackle ne'er again shall bind
The arm which now is free!
I've mail'd it with the thunder
When the tempest mutter'd low;
And where it falls, ye well may dread
The lightning of its blow.

I've scared ye in the city,
I've scalped ye on the plain;
Go, count your dozens where they fall
Beneath my tender rain,
I mourn your proffer'd treaty,
The pale face I defy;
Receive the answer I pen my spear,
And "Blood" my battle cry.

Some strike for hope of booty,
Some to defend their all—
I battle for the joy I have
To see the white man fall—
I love, among the wounded,
To hear his dying moan;
And rush, with glee shining at his side,
The music of his groan.

Ye've trail'd me through the forest,
Ye've track'd me o'er the stream,
And, struggling through the everglade,
Your bleeding hoof-prints gleam.
But I stand, at bound the warrior,
With his rifle and his spear;
The scalp of vengeance still is red,
And warms ye—"Come not here."

Think ye to find my homestead?
I gave it to the fire;
My lonely household do you seek?
I am a ruthless sire;
But should ye crave Ishi's nor shimmer,
Enough I have, and good:
I love an hour—the day is hard,
Yet light is not my food.

I loathe ye with my bosom,
I scorn ye with my lip,
And I'll taunt ye with my latest breath,
And defy ye till I die.
I ne'er will ask ye quarter,
And I ne'er will be your slave;
But I'll swim the seas of slaughter,
Till I sink beneath the wave.

[It will be remembered that many of the Seminoles fled to the Everglades—they being considered, [illegible]

VOTE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

ELECTION HELD SEPTEMBER 4TH, 1867.

[Official Figures.]

GOVERNOR.

| | Majorities. |
|---|---|
| George C. Gorham | 6,36 |
| Henry H. Haight | 6,867 |
| F. M. Pixley | 6,867 |

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.

| | |
|---|---|
| A. P. Jones | 7296 |
| W. T. Wallace | 6277 |

MEMBER OF CONGRESS—FIRST DISTRICT.

| | |
|---|---|
| T. D. Sheridan | 7,264 |
| S. B. Axtell | 10,249 |

SECRETARY OF STATE.

| | |
|---|---|
| W. H. Parks | 6,619 |
| H. L. Nichols | 10,262 |
| William Jones | 6,623 |

STATE CONTROLLER.

| | |
|---|---|
| R. Pacheco | 7,292 |
| Antonio F. Coronel | 10,288 |

ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

| | |
|---|---|
| J. H. McClung | 7,291 |
| H. H. Haight | 10,102 |

SURVEYOR-GENERAL.

| | |
|---|---|
| Charles F. Reed | 7,305 |
| [illegible] | 3,667 |

STATE PRINTER.

| | |
|---|---|
| D. O. McCarthy | 5,974 |
| Dan. W. Sinnicks | 10,132 |
| John O'Meara | 5,229 |

CLERK SUPREME COURT.

| | |
|---|---|
| Jacob Reed | 7,335 |
| George Calderwood | 4,170 |

BANKER COMMISSIONER.

| | |
|---|---|
| Thomas Brown | 7,305 |
| John H. Coffee | 10,158 |
| | 2,845 |

STATE SENATOR.

| | |
|---|---|
| John H. Redington | 5,728 |
| [illegible] | 10,071 |
| [illegible] | 6,956 |
| [illegible] | 10,071 |
| John H. Haight | 10,076 |
| John H. Boardman | 6,956 |
| John Bonner | 3,224 |
| [illegible] | 2,964 |
| [illegible] | 6,956 |
| [illegible] | 6,956 |
| [illegible] | 6,956

AIMEE'S SACRIFICE.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

To the lonely girl Robert was literally all—mother, and brother, and lover in one. Her happiness, not his own gratification, was the pervading thought of his life. She was not only loved, but watched over tenderly and cared for with unceasing thoughtfulness. There was, of course, nothing to wait for; and as soon as the settlements were drawn up, Easter would have come, and the marriage would take place. Knowing Aimée's love for the country, Robert took a cottage in one of the pretty villages that surround London, and there, as he planned, they could garden together in the summer evenings and sometimes take a row upon the Thames.

Meanwhile, Robert took Aimée away as much as possible from the gloomy atmosphere of Russell Square. They went together to the Parks and to Kensington Gardens, where the trees were fast beginning to put on their first, fresh green; and they went together to the different Catholic churches, for the beautiful services which abound in each variety during Lent; and during their walks to and fro Aimée learned more and more of the nobility of the mind that was hereafter to guide and govern her own. They were no ordinary lovers, these two; their affection was too pure, too real to need much outward demonstration, or many expressions of its warmth. They knew each possessed the other's heart, and that was enough. Their conversation often ran on grave subjects—and often, leaving the things of earth, they mounted to the thoughts of a higher and better life—and Aimée found, to her astonishment, that the young merchant, active in business, the laughing, merry Robert in society, was in reality leading in secret a life of strict Christian holiness, and that the secret of the perpetual sunshine of his nature proceeded from his having found out where alone the heart of man can find it. Deep as was his love for her, Aimée knew it was second only to his love for his Creator; and at the call of duty he would not hesitate to sacrifice the dearest hopes of his life. Here, she felt, she could not follow him; her love for him very nearly approached idolatry. The thought was painful, and she banished it from her mind, and gave herself up to the full enjoyment of her first perfect dream of bliss.

It was a late Easter, and the feast came in a glorious burst of spring. Only a brief ten days now intervened between Aimée's marriage-day. Already the simple bridal attire was ready; "For," as Mrs. Connell observed, "what's the use running like being in time;" and the orange flowers and the veil were already in the good housekeeper's charge, and she looked forward with no little pleasure to the novel sight of a wedding from her master's—the worst of fast cards for their future home; and early in Easter week Mrs. Connell accompanied them thither, to give her sage advice as to the finishing touches of furniture and house-linen. It Robert's persuasion, and Dr. Bruce was summoned. The doctor ordered his patient to bed, looked serious and promised to come again in the morning. By that time Mr. Morton was delirious, and it was with no surprise that the household learnt the illness was a low typhus fever. A nurse was sent for to assist Mrs Connell. Aimée was forbidden to approach the bedroom, and the wedding was postponed.

CHAPTER V.

Robert's first wish had been to send Aimée away, but she shrank from the idea, and as Dr. Bruce considered the risk of infection had already been run, he did not press the point. He was careful to take her out as much as possible into the open air, and to prevent the silence and gloom of the house from depressing her. Mr. Morton's life was in the utmost danger, and therefore, do what they would they could not be so cheerful as before. Hitherto the lovers had, by a tacit consent, avoided the mention of Aimée's uncle; for the six months that had elapsed since she had entered his doors had made no difference apparently in Mr. Morton's feelings toward her. He was as icy as ever; and when her engagement was announced, he never wished her joy or seemed glad of it for her sake. Cold and hard he naturally was, but Aimée could not but feel that he had a natural dislike to her; for he would smile now and then at Mr. Hulme's jokes, and his manner to Robert often verged on cordiality. With her only he was invariably silent, stern and freezing; and poor Aimée's heart, so full of affection, so ready to be grateful for the little he did for her, felt deeply pained. But now Robert and she spoke anxiously of that soul which was hanging in the balance between life and death. He had lived without God, in open defiance of his laws, in avowed disbelief of the very existence of his Maker, and now was he, without as hour's consciousness, without any space for repentance, to be hurried into the presence of his Judge? They shrank in horror from the thought; and many were their prayers, many were the Masses offered up that God in his mercy would not cut off this man in his sins. Their prayers were granted; he did not die; after three weeks of intense anxiety the crisis passed, and he began to mend. Mental improvement was not to be perceived with returning health. No expression of gratitude for having escaped death crossed his lips—apparently the shadow of death had not terrified him—he rose up from his sick bed as hard, as cynical, as icy as before. And Aimée's last hope had at last its mould thaw to her was disappointed. As soon as Mr. Morton could leave his room, Dr. Bruce prescribed change of air, and it was arranged that Robert and Aimée should accompany him. Mrs. Connell was so thoroughly used up with nursing that she was to be sent to take a holiday under her friends in Ireland.

[illegible] fell on his shoulder.

"Robert, I feel as if it were much too bright for earth. The curé always seemed to be trying to prepare me for a life of suffering, for a sad, future, for a heavy cross. Long before mamma's death, he used to speak so much in the confessional of the love of suffering, of enduring life—and I always believed he had [illegible] some strange insight into the future. But where is the suffering in my lot now, Robert, I ask myself sometimes, where is the cross?"

"It will come, my dear one," answered he with his bright smile; "never fear, God gives us sunshine sometimes, and we must be ready for the clouds when they come, but we need not be looking out for them. We may have some great trials together—who knows? But now come and look at the way I am going to lay out my garden." Aimée followed him without answering, but in her heart there swelled the thought that, with him, no trial could be really great.

On returning to town, Robert took leave of Aimée at the station and put her and Mrs. Connell into a car, and promised to return to Russell Square for dinner. As the car rolled through the streets, now bright and cheerful in the sunlight, Aimée thought of her first journey through them six months before, and how her life, then so sad, had so strangly brightened; and it was with a radiant face that she entered the gloomy portal of her uncle's house.

The footman stopped Mrs. Connel as she followed her young mistress. "My master has come home," he said, "and asked for you, and precious cross he was because you wasn't in; he seems ill like, for he sent for a cup of tea."

"Master at home! a cup of tea!" ejaculated Mrs. Connell in dismay, and she hastened to the study to find Mr. Morton shivering over the fire, and so testy and irritable it was difficult to know what to do for him. He was evidently ill, but would not hear of sending for a doctor. "Nonsense, he was never ill; he should dine as usual," he exclaimed sharply; but when dinner-time came, he was unable to partake of it, and his illness was so evidently going on him that he yielded to call from which I can return in that direction." So saying, he turned into another road.

Mr. Morton was ready when they returned to dine, and the three passed up on the cliff and wandered on far beyond their usual distance. They came to a part where the cliff was one sheer sheet of rock descending to the beach, save one large crag which jutted out, and on one side obscured the view. Aimée had a great horror of looking down any steep place, and shrank back from the cliff, while Mr. Morton, who despised her weakness, always chose to walk at the very edge.

"See here, little one," said Robert, "here is a safe place for you." As iron stanchion had been thrust into the ground, and a thick rope was carelessly coiled round it. "It must be used for throwing signals to the boats below," said Robert, "but you can lean against it Aimée."

"I think I shall step on that crag, Robert," said Mr. Morton, "if you will lend me an arm. I want to catch the whole view at once."

"O uncle!" said Aimée, in a tone of terror.

"Do you think it is very prudent, sir?" remarked Robert. "It is none too wide to stand on."

"Oh! very well," said Mr. Morton testily, "if you are afraid, I shall go by myself." Robert's merry laugh was the only answer, and giving his arm to Mr. Morton, they both descended.

Aimée hid her face, sick with terror. She heard their voices for a minute, then, O horror! what was that? A crash, a rush, a sudden shout of pain! She rushed to the edge to see the crag detach itself from the rock, and the two figures falling. She saw both clutching for some support—she saw both catch hold of different bits of rock jutting out from the cliff, and then she was overpowered by fear, that they could not long sustain their weight. She thought of the rope, rushed for it, uncoiled it, and ran back. All was the work of a moment. An unnatural activity seemed to possess her. She was like one in a dream. She saw the rope would not reach both; she distributed her large fortune among the various good works. A fair church replaces the humble building in which Robert and she for the last time prayed together, and a convent stands near the spot where he breathed out his last sigh to God. And when her work was done, death came to Aimée; and, with a smile on her lips, and joy in her eyes, she went to meet again those fondly loved, so strangely lost on earth.

THE END.

The semi-official organ at St. Petersburg, in contradicting the essential portions of the statement in the French press that Russia was below the ordinary standard as regards wheat, raw material, its men and its resources, says that she has no international hatred, and does not obtain a preponderance in power, but at the same time will not suffer the arrogation of it by any other State.

Anglican Reasons for Opposing Popery.

There was a large class of persons in this country, continued Archdeacon Jolly, who, having no definite religion of their own, and being slenderly endowed with common sense, were indebted to the Roman Catholic Church both for employment and maintenance. Let Mr. Keble restrain his excitement; he would explain his meaning. He did not, of course, include Mr. Kibble among the class in question, though he believed that gentleman would willingly accept the statement of Sterne, who candidly confessed, that if when he had little to say, or little to give his people, he had recourse to the abuse of Popery. Hence he called it his "Cheshire Cheese." It had a twofold advantage: it cost him very little, and he found by experience that nothing satisfied so well the hungry appetite of his congregation. They always devoured it greedily."

Perhaps Mr. Kidds was not aware that in his zeal to hasten the downfall of Popery—which, even according to modern prophets, had still a few years to last, and which, judging by a recent tour he had made on the Continent, presented anything but a moribund aspect—he was not only contributing to many excellent and devoted Protestants. The persons to whom he alluded were, at this moment, full of anxiety, and hope would perish too soon! They could not afford to say farewell to their old friend at present, and desired only to keep him on his legs a little longer. Mr. Kidds was probably ignorant that a society had recently been formed in London, in connection, he believed, with the Protestant Reformation Society, to which it was designed to act as a timely and important auxiliary. The title of this new association was "Society for considering the best means of keeping alive the exceptions to Popery in the interests of Gospel truth." It was, of course, a strictly secret organization, but he had been favored, he knew not why, with a copy of the prospectus, and as he had no intention of becoming a member, he would communicate it to the House. It appeared from this document, and could be confirmed by other means of information, that a deputation was sent last year to Rome, to obtain a private interview with the Pope, in order to entreat His Holiness not to reform a single Popish corruption. He was assured that they had reason to believe, he did not know on what grounds, that the Pope was about to introduce extensive reforms, beginning with the substitution of the Thirty-Nine Articles for the creed of Pope Pius, and a permanent Anglican Convocation in lieu of an œcumenical Council. A handsome present was entrusted to the deputation, and a liberal contribution to the Peter's Pence Fund. The motive was, that the assemble of the address presented to His Holiness were, in substance, of the following nature: They urged that a very large number of most [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Weekly Calendar.

Sunday, March 15.—St. Zachary, J. P. C.
Monday, 16.—St. Abraham, H.
Tuesday, 17.—St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland.
Wednesday, 18.—St. Gabriel, Archangel.
Thursday, 19.—St. Joseph, Spouse B.V. B.
Friday, 20.—St. Cuthbert, B. C.
Saturday, 21.—St. Benedict, Abbot.

Summary of the Week.

THE MINORITIES TRIUMPHANT.

The Radicals, in their annoyance at the defeat of their pet constitution in Alabama, have hit upon a brilliant idea. Mr. Wilson proposes that in that favored State, the minority of the registered voters shall be considered the majority, and that as the constitution has been rejected by the people, therefore it shall be looked upon as adopted by them. Congressional tenderness for minorities has been wonderfully developed by the late elections: still, Mr. Wilson's plan of administering popular government against the will of the people, by simply taking votes by contraries, deserves to immortalise his name.

THE IMPEACHMENT QUESTION.

Preparations for the President's trial are still dragging along in Washington. With his usual admirable taste, Ben Wade, the man who has the strongest personal motive for forcing the President out of office, is most anxious to sit in judgment on his case. A disputant, modestly seeking to be appointed judge in his own case, would be about as delicate a proceeding as Mr. Wade's. But the "moral-idea" men have peculiar views of propriety; so, doubtless, the illustrious Ben is actuated in this by the sentiments of his friends. The people will soon be able to give their opinion on the matter, however, and their verdict will probably be somewhat different from that of Wade & Co.'

LEGISLATION MADE EASY.

The Virginia Convention has adopted a summary plan for dealing with a reluctant minority. Its members who declined to vote, and expressed his disapprobation of the proceedings of the Convention, was expelled by the majority. The plan of making assemblies unanimous by expelling the dissentients, is very effectual, but still it has its drawbacks. As almost every question that divides opinion produces a majority and minority, expelling the latter is likely to thin out the members rapidly. We do not suppose there would be much grief in Virginia if the motley Convention that is now holding its sittings there should expel all its members in succession.

COMFORT FOR IRELAND.

England is just now giving a valuable earnest of her desire to redress the grievances of our country. A commission, we understand, is to be appointed to inquire into the relations between landlord and tenant, and an attempt is even to be made to satisfy the supposed hankering of the Irish people after "royalty." Of course the Queen, personally, could not be expected to leave her beloved Highlands, but, as a compensation, she has her apparent is to visit Ireland. John Bull has taken it into his head that Irishmen only want more royalty among them to make them happy, so he is resolved to gratify them as far as he can. Who will say after this that England is to blame for misrule in Ireland?

SOULESS CORPORATIONS.

The railroad companies or company—since one organization is reported to be securing the control of nearly all the railroads in the State—are making a bold effort to add to their already enormous wealth, at the expense of the public. They have a bill at present before the Legislature, giving them the right to purchase seventeen hundred acres of tide land between Hunter's Point and Mission Rock, and a much larger tract south of the city, near the water front, for personal price. The Pacific Railroad Company has been already, too richly endowed with public funds and lands, and it should certainly be able to pay as well as any one else, for whatever accommodations it needs in San Francisco.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S REPORT.—Hon. Chas Gilbert has forwarded us the Report of the Adjutant-General for 1867. He recommends that the militia law be so revised as to exempt members from jury duty; that a camp of instruction for officers and first sergeants, be held at least once a year; that fresh appropriations be made for the better equipment of the force, and that the General Government be requested to issue breech-loaders in lieu of the muskets now in use. The report tells us that the aggregate military force is 7,128 men (on paper) including 257 officers, or one commissioned officer for every fifteen men. The First Brigade has: Brigadier General and Staff, 11; rank and file, 0; Second Brigade, 2,260; Third Brigade, 810; Fourth Brigade, 1,486; Fifth Brigade, 492; Sixth Brigade, 11 commissioned officers. There are 4 companies of artillery, 11 cavalry, and 58 infantry.

DISTRIBUTION CONTEST.—We have reason to believe that the personages referred to in the Weekly Register as likely to be conducted among the converts to Catholicity are "the Most Rev. the Lord Bishop of Salisbury, the Rev. Rowland, and the Rev. Dr. Machonochie. The bishop of Salisbury, the Rt. Rev. Walter K. Hamilton, enjoys an income of £5,000 per annum for his bishopric.—Dublin Freeman.

LONDON, March 10.—The Prince of Wales is about to visit Ireland, and is to be a Knight of the Order St. Patrick.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal on this Coast
SATURDAY.....MARCH 14, 1868.

Saint-Patrick's Day.

If we except the Jews, no nation has probably ever been scattered so widely as the Irish people, and none have held their nationality in foreign lands with more tenacity. From the days when the ruthless Cromwell deported the Irish Catholics by thousands, to perish under the burning sun of Barbadoes and Jamaica, or to drag out a life of slavery in Virginia, down to our own time, an everflowing stream of emigration has been spreading our people over the face of the earth. In every nation their representatives are to be found. The Milesian O or Mac marks the race of its bearers amid the snows of Russia, on the torrid coast of Central America, in the Councils of haughty Spain, leading the armies of France or Austria, or ruling the destinies of the struggling republics of South America, as well as throughout the wide extended lands where the English tongue is spoken. Yet through all its migrations there is one chord in the Irish heart which is never touched in vain, and that is, love of native land. Springing from the very nature of the old Celtic race, fostered by a struggle of seven centuries, against English sway, strengthened by the bonds of a common religion, sympathies, and traditions, Irish nationality refuses to be absorbed in any Anglo-Saxon community, and though the natural distinction of language has been well nigh effaced, the Irish people eagerly seize every opportunity of asserting the imperishable vitality of their race. The celebration of a national anniversary, when the scattered children of Ireland might renew their patriotism and strengthen the ties of their common brotherhood, is too natural a suggestion, and one too congenial to Irish notions, to be neglected by Irishmen; and accordingly, in every quarter of the globe, beneath the southern cross on Australia, on the pampas of Buenos Ayres, in the crowded cities of the Eastern States, on the boundless prairies of the Mississippi valley, and the gold-bearing mountains of the Pacific slope, as well as in the green valleys of our old mother land, do Irishmen come together to honor the festival of Saint Patrick. The manner may vary in different lands, but wherever Irishmen are found, there the national holiday is celebrated. And what more noble occasion for national rejoicing could be chosen than the commemoration of Christianity's triumph over paganism in the home of our race.

Where other nations may celebrate their conquests, or their change of government, or the overthrow of tyrants, or the assertion of national independence, but the Irish people justly regard it as their highest boast that they accepted the pure doctrines of Christianity without the effusion of a drop of blood. Principles are eternal, and in Christianity Ireland has found the safeguard of her nationality through all her trials. The great republics and monarchies of Europe have risen and decayed: since Patrick preached to the Irish, monarch after monarch, Venice, Florence and Genoa have passed away: nations, Saxon England has bowed to the Norman-French yoke, but Irish nationality, oppressed for centuries, with its native tongue crushed out, its cultivation on Irish soil a crime, its very existence ignored by English tyranny, is as vigorous and a hundred times more widely extended now than it was in the days of St. Patrick. Well, then, may we commemorate the feast of our national Saint, to whom we owe in so remarkable a degree the preservation of our national life. We trust that the Irish of California will not be backward in honoring the day, and that the trifling differences which may occur between different bodies of them will not be allowed to mar the harmony which should distinguish our proceedings. On an occasion of the kind petty rivalries should be forgotten, and all should unite in making the celebration of the day a credit to our people.

IRISH NATIONAL BANQUET.—A number of the Irishmen of San Francisco propose to celebrate Patrick's Day, by a social re-union and dinner at the Occidental Hotel. It is understood that his Honor, Mayor McCoppin, will preside. Hon. Eugene Casserly, Senator elect, will also be present. Tickets may be had from the members of the committee of arrangements, whose names will be found in our advertising columns.

Waverley may complaints of persons not receiving their papers until the middle of the week, when they should arrive on Monday at the latest. All we can say upon the matter is, that we post all our papers on Friday noon, and if they do not come to hand in due time, it is owing to the negligence of the Postmasters in the country offices.

The Alabama Again.

For the last few years the British Parliament has enjoyed the peculiar advantage which must be keenly appreciated by would-be orators, anxious to display their eloquence. It possesses a standing subject for debate, on which even the most timid may exert his powers without fear of dangerous consequences. Even in those rare intervals when John Bull has no "little wars" on hand, to force British opium or cotton goods, down the throats or on to the backs of reluctant Asiatics at the point of the bayonet, and when the "model of wives and mothers" is not affording her subjects occasion to prove their loyalty, by filling the royal begging box for weddings and christenings, even on these rare occasions the Alabama question is ever on hand to furnish a debate in Parliament. The claims of America may have been laughed at and pooh-poohed a dozen times; Russell the blustering, and Stanley the haughty, may have closed all correspondence on the subject again and again; the mouthpieces of the government may have flatly refused to listen to them, but still when reform agitation wazes dull, and Ireland is duly entrusted to the Lord Lieutenant's mercies, when Fenian scares have abated, and King Theodore's income tax been laid on British and Irish tax-payers, the ghost of the Alabama is conjured up to keep the Honorable Members awake. What Popery is to a large class of Protestant preachers, the Alabama question is to the British Commons; that is to say, a theme on which the dullest can find something to say. Mr. Bright and his followers eagerly seize the opportunity of descanting upon American institutions, and talk enthusiastically of "our common language, and "Anglo-Saxon (?) race." The thoroughgoing Britons express their dislike and contempt for "republican license," as typified in the United States, in intelligible if not elegant language; and the aristocratic representatives, with an air of judicial wisdom, pronounce the American claims utterly unjustifiable, and laud the policy of their own government. Finally, when all who want to speak have had their say, when the civil war has been minutely described again, the nice points of international etiquette been fully discussed, and everybody pronounced on everybody else in perfectly free from blame in the matter, the subject is quietly suffered to drop, and next day the papers get into contacts over British affairs, as evinced in the debate. The Alabama farce has just been repeated for the tenth or twentieth time in London, and as usual, ended as it began, in smoke. Mr. Lefebvre, a mild specimen of an English Democratic member, was moved by some unkno wn spirit to remind the House that the negotiations on the subject had failed, and accordingly, that a little talk about it could do no harm, and might be even useful. He trusted, as well he might, that anything he would say would not embarrass the worthy Foreign Secretary, who had just broken off all correspondence on the subject with the urbane Seward. Having thus eased his conscience, the worthy Lefebvre proceeded to lay before Parliament a brief account of our civil war, from the capture of Fort Sumter—which must have been news to his hearers—and with genuine Pickwickian wisdom, declared that if Earl Russell had not rejected the Alabama claims, he might have done something else, which is an undeniable truth. Having no particular suggestion to make, the sagacious speaker next remarked that needless irritation ought to be shunned, and then finally resumed his seat with the air of a man who had stood up to say nothing, and had said it. Lord Stanley followed with a long argument in defense of England's acknowledging the South as a belligerent, and lamenting the unreasonableness of the Americans, who would not be satisfied without John Bull's paternal sympathy, which the latter was, according to Lord Stanley, unable to afford them. Still, England's liberality was not to be chilled even by American mulishness, so Lord Stanley was willing to submit his case to the people of the entire world. Where or when that court holds its sittings, the noble lord did not specify; in fact, he doubtless considered "that was the world's look out," but at all events, he was willing to abide by its decision. As nothing else resulted from the discussion, and the Times considers America ought to be fully satisfied thereby, we suppose that the Alabama claims are finally referred to the world at large for arbitration. How the claimants will feel, at the prospect of waiting for its decision, we cannot say, but we would really like to know what course of reasoning our government intends to argue its case with. Cardinal Ximenes once informed the discontented Spanish nobles who wanted to submit their troubles to the arbitration of the world, that artillery was the final argument of princes. Are protocols and dispatches to be the final argument of modern society, and will Europe allow the success of the good nuns in reclaiming their erring sisters is amply attested by the fact that only nine of that large number have been sent away or left incorrigible. A task which the Cardinal failed to accomplish with a thousand disciplinarians, and finding the amount of capital stock required as $100,000. The same body displayed their partiality by postponing indefinitely a bill to increase the San Francisco police force from eighty to a hundred men, for no particular reason that can be seen, except that they consider no policemen better than Democratic ones.

A bill passed to engrossment giving the Supervisors of San Francisco a salary of $250 per month each.

The Assembly passed a measure for the improvement of the harbor of San Diego.

A bill making clerks, mechanics, laborers, and servants, preferred creditors in case of the death or failure of employers, passed the Senate.

Mr. O'Malley's School Bill, giving the San Francisco Board of Education the power to elect the superintendent, and abolish them to levy a building tax, is attracting some attention in the Senate. Being a Democratic measure, it will probably be rejected, though the consequence will be, that the schools will have to be closed a considerable portion of each year, for want of the funds which Mr. O'Malley would appropriate to them.

There are no less than three bills before the Legislature on the subject of the Pueblo Lands. The first, or Supervisors' bill, gives the lands in full possession to the present occupiers, with the exception of a few public reservations. The second, or Pueblo League measure, ignores to a great extent any rights in present possessors, and proposes a distribution of the lands among the citizens generally. The third appears to keep the golden mean between the others, and while providing for parks and public conveniences, and paying due regard to the equitable rights of possession, proposes to divide the lands among the citizens for homesteads. It is to be hoped the Legislature will pass this bill, and so settle the vexed question of the outside lands.

The Pacific Railroads, not content with the enormous grants already made to them by the General and State Governments, are modestly asking for nearly two thousand acres of San Francisco land, including two of the three-quarter miles of water front to erect their buildings upon. For this they are willing to pay a hundred dollars an acre! Really the companies had better ask for the State government at once, if the public property is to be given away for their benefit; but if not, we trust, they will be allowed no preference over any other purchasers of State lands.

Local Catholic Intelligence.

Among the passengers on the steamer Constitution for Panama on the 5th inst. were the Rev. Fathers Croke, V. G., St. Lorme, Vicar of Oregon, and Fouquet. Father Croke will be absent about two months, and we hope to return to California to the comfort of a new mantle, Father De Lorme will not return for two years, the success of the good nuns in reclaiming

Farmers and others visiting San Francisco, wishing to purchase Silverware, Watches, Chains, Jewelry, Diamonds, etc., should be careful where they buy. J. W. Tucker & Co., 604 and 606 Montgomery street, on the corner of Sutter, by the Lick House, is the oldest and most reliable house in the city; they sell everything at wholesale prices. mh14

St. Mary's Theatricals postponed.—All temperance men of Irish birth or descent are cordially invited to participate with the St Mary's Temperance Society in celebrating St. Patrick's day. The association will be accompanied by the U. S. Dragoon band, and will march in procession from the Hall of St. Mary's Cathedral, California street, at 91 o'clock a.m. Members and invited guests will be furnished with badges at the hall.

Brevities.—Rawson.—We notice an exhibition at Houston & Hastings', Montgomery street, a magnificent rig for the Lafayette P. D. Association. The harp and sunburst in a wreath of shamrock finely painted are displayed in its folds. It is made of green silk, trimmed with gold fringe. It will be given to the breeze on St. Patrick's Day.

Notices of New Books.

The Irish in America. By John Francis Maguire. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., New York; M. Flood, San Fragisco.

Mr. Maguire's book has made a decided sensation both in Europe and America, and, indeed, wherever the English language is spoken. For the last half century the tide of Irish emigration has been flowing noiselessly on to the shores of America, but it is only within the last few years that its results and the immense growth of our race here have attracted general attention. Since McGee's brief sketch, no one has attempted to describe the condition and prospects of the Irish in America, until Mr. Maguire took the subject in hand, and although he has left much unsaid that a fuller acquaintance with the country would have suggested to him, he has certainly told enough to attract the earnest attention of both the friends and foes of Ireland. It is to be regretted, however, that he did not extend his travels further, and make himself better acquainted with our people personally, especially in the Western States, before commencing his task. The portion of the book which is most satisfactorily written, to our mind, is that which describes the condition of the Irish in the British Provinces. Had he given as full an account of their countrymen in the States, the author would have left little to be desired in his work; but, unfortunately, he has not done so. California is, in fact, the only State in which he has attempted to describe their condition in detail; and even here, the information that is given chiefly relates to San Francisco. In our opinion, too large a portion of the book is occupied with mere personal anecdotes, which, though good enough in themselves, are not of sufficient importance to entitle them to a place in the history of a nation. In fact, taken altogether, we must say that, in an Irish-American point of view, Mr. Maguire has not thrown much light on the condition of our people. He has undoubtedly laid before the Irish and English people a mass of information regarding this country; but he has not investigated the matter deeply enough to enable him to communicate much knowledge to those who are the subject of his volume. His remarks on the impolicy of Irish agricultural emigrants remaining in the great cities, will be endorsed by every friend of our race, and will, we trust, have a salutary effect upon those in Ireland who intend to make this country their future home. The chapters devoted to the history of the American Church, occupy a considerable space, Mr. Maguire justly considering that Catholicity and the Irish race advance with equal stride. This portion of the book is well executed, although the true nature of the anti-English feeling here, will destroy many a fondly-hugged fallacy in England, and, we have no doubt, will render good service to the cause of our unfortunate country. The chapter on the Irish Press is perfectly free from blame in the matter, the subject is quietly suffered to drop, and next day the papers get into contacts over British affairs, as evinced in the debate. This Alabama farce has just been repeated for the tenth or twentieth time in London, and as usual, ended as it began, in smoke. Mr. Lefebvre, a mild specimen of an English Democratic member, was moved by some unkno wn spirit to remind the House that the negotiations on the subject had failed, and accordingly, that a little talk about it could do no harm, and might be even useful. He trusted, as well he might, that anything he would say would not embarrass the worthy Foreign Secretary, who had just broken off all correspondence on the subject with the urbane Seward. Having thus eased his conscience, the worthy Lefebvre proceeded to lay before Parliament a brief account of our civil war, from the capture of Fort Sumter—which must have been news to his hearers—and with genuine Pickwickian wisdom, declared that if Earl Russell had not rejected the Alabama claims, he might have done something else, which is an undeniable truth. Having no particular suggestion to make, the sagacious speaker next remarked that needless irritation ought to be shunned, and then finally resumed his seat with the air of a man who had stood up to say nothing, and had said it. Lord Stanley followed with a long argument in defense of England's acknowledging the South as a belligerent, and lamenting the unreasonableness of the Americans, who would not be satisfied without John Bull's paternal sympathy, which the latter was, according to Lord Stanley, unable to afford them. Still, England's liberality was not to be chilled even by American mulishness, so Lord Stanley was willing to submit his case to the people of the entire world. Where or when that court holds its sittings, the noble lord did not specify; in fact, he doubtless considered "that was the world's look out," but at all events, he was willing to abide by its decision. As nothing else resulted from the discussion, and the Times considers America ought to be fully satisfied thereby, we suppose that the Alabama claims are finally referred to the world at large for arbitration. How the claimants will feel, at the prospect of waiting for its decision, we cannot say, but we would really like to know what course of reasoning our government intends to argue its case with. Cardinal Ximenes once informed the discontented Spanish nobles who wanted to submit their troubles to the arbitration of the world, that artillery was the final argument of princes. Are protocols and dispatches to be the final argument of modern society, and will Europe allow the ### Legislative Proceedings.

The Assembly has passed the appropriation to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum by a large majority. The Senate passed the extraordinary insurance bill, giving the home insurance offices power to nominate an Insurance Commissioner, and fixing the amount of capital stock required as $100,000. The same body displayed their partiality by postponing indefinitely a bill to increase the San Francisco police force from eighty to a hundred men, for no particular reason that can be seen, except that they consider no policemen better than Democratic ones.

A bill passed to engrossment giving the Supervisors of San Francisco a salary of $250 per month each.

The Assembly passed a measure for the improvement of the harbor of San Diego.

A bill making clerks, mechanics, laborers, and servants, preferred creditors in case of the death or failure of employers, passed the Senate.

Mr. O'Malley's School Bill, giving the San Francisco Board of Education the power to elect the superintendent, and abolish them to levy a building tax, is attracting some attention in the Senate. Being a Democratic measure, it will probably be rejected, though the consequence will be, that the schools will have to be closed a considerable portion of each year, for want of the funds which Mr. O'Malley would appropriate to them.

There are no less than three bills before the Legislature on the subject of the Pueblo Lands. The first, or Supervisors' bill, gives the lands in full possession to the present occupiers, with the exception of a few public reservations. The second, or Pueblo League measure, ignores to a great extent any rights in present possessors, and proposes a distribution of the lands among the citizens generally. The third appears to keep the golden mean between the others, and while providing for parks and public conveniences, and paying due regard to the equitable rights of possession, proposes to divide the lands among the citizens for homesteads. It is to be hoped the Legislature will pass this bill, and so settle the vexed question of the outside lands.

The Pacific Railroads, not content with the enormous grants already made to them by the General and State Governments, are modestly asking for nearly two thousand acres of San Francisco land, including two of the three-quarter miles of water front to erect their buildings upon. For this they are willing to pay a hundred dollars an acre! Really the companies had better ask for the State government at once, if the public property is to be given away for their benefit; but if not, we trust, they will be allowed no preference over any other purchasers of State lands.

Local Catholic Intelligence.

Among the passengers on the steamer Constitution for Panama on the 5th inst. were the Rev. Fathers Croke, V. G., St. Lorme, Vicar of Oregon, and Fouquet. Father Croke will be absent about two months, and we hope to return to California to the comfort of a new mantle, Father De Lorme will not return for two years, the success of the good nuns in reclaiming

Farmers and others visiting San Francisco, wishing to purchase Silverware, Watches, Chains, Jewelry, Diamonds, etc., should be careful where they buy. J. W. Tucker & Co., 604 and 606 Montgomery street, on the corner of Sutter, by the Lick House, is the oldest and most reliable house in the city; they sell everything at wholesale prices. mh14

St. Mary's Theatricals postponed.—All temperance men of Irish birth or descent are cordially invited to participate with the St Mary's Temperance Society in celebrating St. Patrick's day. The association will be accompanied by the U. S. Dragoon band, and will march in procession from the Hall of St. Mary's Cathedral, California street, at 91 o'clock a.m. Members and invited guests will be furnished with badges at the hall.

Brevities.—Rawson.—We notice an exhibition at Houston & Hastings', Montgomery street, a magnificent rig for the Lafayette P. D. Association. The harp and sunburst in a wreath of shamrock finely painted are displayed in its folds. It is made of green silk, trimmed with gold fringe. It will be given to the breeze on St. Patrick's Day.

Weekly Telegraphic Summary.

EASTERN.

WASHINGTON, March 4th.—In the Senate, the Chair submitted a communication from Chief Justice Chase, giving his views in regard to the manner in which the impeachment trial should proceed. He said he thought it unquestionable that the Senate should act as a Court of Impeachment. He thought the Court should be organized before the House presented articles of impeachment, and that the Court, and not the Senate, should fix its own rules to govern the trial, and should issue its summons and process.

At five minutes past one o'clock the managers on the part of the House appeared, followed by the members of the House, the latter ranging themselves outside the bar of the Senate. The Speaker of the House was invited to a seat beside the President pro tem., and escorted to his seat by Senator Grimes. Silence having been restored, the Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Bingham, said:

"Mr. President: The managers on the part of the House of Representatives, by order of the House, are ready, at the bar of the Senate, to present articles of impeachment for the maintenance of the impeachment preferred against Andrew Johnson, President of the United States."

"The President then said:—"The Sergeant-at-Arms will make proclamation."

Sergeant-at-Arms:—"Hear ye! hear ye! All persons are ordered to keep silence on pain of imprisonment while the House of Representatives exhibit to the Senate articles of impeachment against Andrew Johnson, President of the United States."

Mr. Bingham then rose and read the articles of impeachment that Congress is standing, with the exception of Mr. Stevens.

At a quarter to five the reading of the articles was concluded, and the managers and other members of the House retired.

Mr. Anthony moved an order that, during the pending trial no persons shall be admitted to the galleries except on tickets issued only by the Sergeants-at-Arms—does not exceed the number that can be accommodated with seats, leaving the passage entirely free. Tickets shall be issued to all foreign legations, each Senator to be entitled to four tickets, and each Member of the House to one; the Chief Justice and each Judge of the Supreme Court two.

BALTIMORE, March 5th.—An immense meeting was held in front of Guy's Tavern last night, to sustain President Johnson. The building was densely packed. The Fenian sympathizers were in full force, and numerous resolutions were adopted.

The N. Y. Times' Washington special says personal feeling is developing into a opposition to elect a new President of the Senate, in order that the succession to the impeachment trial would not result in the elevation of Wade to the Presidency.

WASHINGTON, March 6th.—Shortly after the opening of the Senate chamber to-day, and after some unimportant business had been transacted, the President pro tem of the Senate vacated the Chair, and the Chief Justice was then advanced up the aisle, clad in his official robes, and escorted by Senators Nelson, and escorted by a committee appointed for the purpose, followed by the managers of the House, who took their seats. The Chief Justice ascended to the President's chair, and in a solemn and impressive voice: "Senators, you are sworn or notice I have appeared to join with you in the trial of Andrew Johnson, President of the United States. I am ready to take the oath."

Judge Nelson then administered the following oath: "I do solemnly swear, that in all things pertaining to the trial of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, I will do impartial justice, according to the Constitution and laws. So help me God."

The Secretary then called the roll, each Senator advancing and taking the oath prescribed by the rules. The only Senators absent were Messrs. Howard, Rice, Saulsbury, Patterson of New Hampshire, and Saulsbury.

When the name of Senator Wade was called, Mr. Hendricks rose and inquired whether the Senator from Ohio, being one of the managers, would succeed the President, and be entitled to sit as Judge in the case.

After a somewhat lengthy debate upon the point, the Senate adjourned, leaving it unsettled.

During the debate, Senator Sumner argued, from Rome's papers and the Constitutions of the Virginia Convention, as well as the United States Convention which adopted the Constitution, that the Senate had the right to suspend the President from office during trial for high crimes and misdemeanors. He also stated that the object of the framers of the Constitution, in providing that the Chief Justice shall preside over the Senate when sitting for the trial of the President, was that the lawful presiding officer of that body, the Vice-President, might be relieved from the duties in the Senate.

ANNAPOLIS, March 5th.—The Legislature met this morning for Senator to-day, with no election. Thomas and Swann are the leading candidates.

NEW YORK, March 5th.—A serious riot broke out among the emigrants on Ward's Island, this morning. The cause of the disturbance was the refusal of the Commissioners to issue whiskey to the emigrants. The Irish were armed to make useless attempts to get it, and a fight ensued. The trouble is to say: "Our laws in Ireland are all right, but unfortunately, the people are most unsatisfactory; there is nothing to alter or improve in the laws here in America, but the people are a bad lot." It anybody dares to point out that France, through Napoleon, is the head of the Universal Prince Minister, M. Guizot, that Austria, though ruled by Protestants, has a mass of her people Roman Catholic, while in England a Roman Catholic has no more chance of being appointed to a position in the Cabinet, we can reply that "we are a great people, we are far ahead of you, your bigoted priest-ridden Continental states, and that, in fact, Ireland has symbol, so many Irishmen have left her shores, namely Daniel O'Connell, who has written (or biographies) to Wm. M. Evarts, W. S. Groesbeck and others, but received no reply as yet.

Chief Justice Chase evinces no intention promoting the impeachment trial. It is understood that the Senate Committee of Managers has agreed that it is for Mr. Chase to decide as to the admissibility of Wade, and will be called upon to act.

The President's friends argue that the trial must be finished during the next four or six months.

Attorney General Stanberry was closeted with the President several hours yesterday. The Tribune's New Orleans' special gives the proceeding of the Republican Convention.

It sympathizes with Congress, reconstruction, the removal of Hancock, and declares regard cheers for Jeff Davis and others by some men, sufficient cause for rejoicing (Gen. Hurlbut).

The Tribune says Hancock has asked to be relieved of the command of the Fifth Military District. He does this because Grant brooked his orders removing certain members of the City Council; also the order regarding the Texas Commissioner. The request is made in the usual formal manner, through the Army Headquarters.

The Patrick's Day Ovation.

THE COMMITTEE OF DISPATCH ASSEMBLED AT THE BROOKLYN HOTEL TO MAKE ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE CELEBRATION.—SOME OF THE DIFFICULTIES TO BE OVERCOME.

Patrick's Day!—Gentlemen! I should before this have acknowledged the receipt of your favor of the 2d inst., but I have been so busy in selecting me to deliver a discourse before you on Ireland, on our National Anniversary. I hesitated in undertaking the task, from my sincere conviction of inability to do the subject justice, but as I consider that the annual address should be delivered by some one who is a native of the Emerald Isle, rather than orators, was the demand of the hour, I consented to speak what I feel regarding the land of my birth. I find, however, that I have undertaken a very delicate and responsible task, and that the Rev. Father O'Farrell, a most accomplished scholar, is announced to deliver an oration on St. Patrick's Day, at Platt's Hall, and in deference to his eminent abilities, I respectfully leave to withdraw from the undertaking. I am sure, gentlemen of others, that it would be decidedly objectionable to the cause of Ireland, to have two "orators of the day," before divided bodies of Irishmen; and with a hope that parties may be prevail among Irishmen in San Francisco, I cheerfully resign from the honorable duty. I shall keep my speech for another occasion, more likely to be of use to Ireland. Trusting that you will excuse my silence this time, and believe me, when I assure you that what I now decline to do, is the best service which I can render to our beloved native land. I remain, gentlemen, yours sincerely and fraternally. THOMAS MOONEY.

California street, San Francisco, Feb. 29th, 1868.

Pacific Coast Items.

INTERIOR.

The Mendocino Herald of February 29th has the following items: On Friday last the hull of a new vessel came ashore near Mendocino. We have no information as to what vessel it was, or how it came about. Imagination suggests that is was a new vessel, perhaps on her first trip, and that the entire crew were lost.

A man named Alexander McDonald was brought to Ukiah on Monday last, by Deputy Sheriff McManus, charged with the murder of an Indian woman called Mary, from Cooper Creek.

The Sacramento Reporter has the following intelligence: The American river is falling rapidly, and the Sacramento river is at a high stand, the latter being only a trifle over 24 feet above low water mark. Under the influence of the fair weather prevailing the waters will soon abate.

Active operations will be resumed in a few days by the contractors, in regard to the grading of the section of the Western Pacific Railroad between this city and Stockton.

About 200 cars have been sent up for the purpose of clearing the Central Pacific Road. The afternoon train, headed by the locomotive Yuba, was composed of seven new cars, and six platform cars loaded with iron.

We take the following from the Calaveras Chronicle of the 7th: The Angels Camp Water Company expect to have their new ditch completed in about six weeks; iron pipes will be substituted for wooden flumes during the summer.

The Grand Jury of Calaveras county, have found indictments against the following persons, who, though authorized by law, refused to pay taxes on their respective polls, and refused to give them facilities for ministering to their poverty, or the poverty of their neighbors in their ditch. This is a part of the same question: Jim Hamilton, an Englishman; John Hamilton, Irishman and Scotchman; Jim Hamilton, Irishman and Englishman; Jim Hamilton, Irishman and Scotchman; Jim Hamilton, Irishman and Irishman; Jim Hamilton, Irishman and Irishman; Jim Hamilton, Irishman and Irish

Foreign Miscellany.

Ireland.

TREMORS LIFEBOAT.—The Emperor of the French, it seems, has been pleased to award to Richard Johns, James Mulligan, Stephen Fricker and James Lahil—coast-guards of the Tramore station, Waterford Division—each a silver medal and certificate, in token of their distinguished services, under circumstances of great danger, in rescuing the crew of the French schooner Antienne of Nantes, wrecked off the Tramore coast in the spring of 1867. The medals and certificates were forwarded to the men on January 24th, by Commanding Capt. Butler of the Royal Naval Reserve. It is, however, to be regretted that the ready assistance of John Kelly, John Joy, Thos. McInerney, T. Taylor, John Dunne, Michael Hally, Jas. Keoghan and Michael Downey, men of Tramore, who were out in the lifeboat on the occasion, were lost sight of, and no reward has been given them.

THE Waterford police arrested on July 24th, an attorney's clerk named Wm. Hearne, who was employed by Mr. Joseph Ambrose, solicitor, with whom he had been for a great many years. The police have had their eye on Mr. Hearne's movements for some time past. The prisoner was searched, and a party of the constabulary proceeded to his residence in Henry street, which was also searched. The result of the search has not been made known. The prisoner was in very comfortable circumstances, being the owner of some house property, and enjoyed the confidence of his employer.

WE are glad to say that trade and business generally in Dublin are steadily improving. The depression which prevailed is passing away, and commercial prospects generally in this country are decidedly encouraging. We understand, says the Irish Times, that several of our nobility and gentry have determined to spend a larger amount of time than they have hitherto done both on their estates and in the Irish metropolis. We hope that this example will be followed by many others.

WE have received the first number of the Weekly Observer, a journal in which Mr. A.J. McKenna proposes to continue the important services to Catholicity, liberalism and nationality which he has already rendered in the Limerick Observer. With the latter paper, as our readers may have seen, he has ceased to be connected. It is almost superfluous to remark that the absolute necessity of having in the capital of Ulster a fearless and able championship of Catholic interests, and we accordingly glad that Belfast seems likely to retain the services of Mr. M'Kenna.

AT the spring assizes last year, constable Duggan, the orderly, was badly spoken of by the grand jury for the valor he displayed when he met the Fenian party, by whom he was subsequently fired at and shot, near the Cork Examiner. A resolution was passed to the effect that a subscription be raised for the purpose of presenting him with a testimonial in appreciation of their approval of his conduct. The result of that resolution was that a sum of £111 10s. has been presented to constable Duggan by the grand jury, through the High Sheriff, Nicholas Donovan, Esq. With that resolution a highly complimentary testimonial was presented to constable Duggan. A sum of £11 14s. 6d. has also been given the poor woman who sheltered the constable on the night he was attacked.

Great Britain.

A MODEL CLERGYMAN.—The following advertisement appeared recently in the London Times: "The clergyman for whom this paragraph is written is of the Established Church, twenty years in orders, a Cambridge man, with the highest testimonials from the late bishop in whose diocese he had labored; in one parish a memorial was sent to the bishop to beg his lordship to make such arrangements as would enable him to remain their pastor; in another a silver jug was presented to him. He is a fine reader and preacher, unmarried, and married; of no extreme views. He loves order and neatness in his church, but is no pietist. His sermons are short and practical. His friends insert this advertisement in the hope that some kind patron may see it and sympathize with him, and so do time offer him a living. His name has been placed on the Lord Chancellor's list by one of the Privy Council, who has known him all his life. He is now in charge of two parishes with a stipend of £60 per annum, and the rector an absentee. Address the Hon. and Rev.——Wollaton, Nottingham."

THE Honorable Arthur S. Peter, Lord Peter's brother, who has most extensive and influential Roman Catholic connections throughout England, was elected a director of the National Bank, at the annual election in January.

TERRIBLE STORM ON THE WELSH COAST.—On the night of the 29th Jan., twelve or fourteen vessels were wrecked on the Gower coast, Glamorganshire, and it is feared that about thirty lives were lost. They had just left the Bay for the mouth of the Llanelley. The night being fine, the masters of the vessels wished to take advantage of it, having long been windbound; but there was a terrific ground sea, and at the bar, near the mouth of the bay, it ran mountains high. This, however, did not deter the vessels from proceeding, as the masters thought they would soon be in smooth water; but unfortunately, the wind was not sufficiently strong to take them over the bar. They consequently sank into the trough of the sea, and the water not being sufficiently deep to float them over, they grounded on the sands and were literally knocked to pieces by the force of the waves. Of the nineteen vessels which left the port only five have returned, the remainder having, it is feared, become total wrecks. It is estimated that at least thirty lives have been lost.

PENZANCE, Jan. 29.—Nicholas B. Dowing, Esq., reports that the Prussian brig the Bonnie was lost on the Peace Sands, some miles from this place. The bishop of Richard Lewis, belonging to the National Life boat Institution, was got down there in two hours after receiving the intelligence, but unfortunately was too late to be of use, as the ship had gone to pieces and nine men of the crew were drowned.

MR. LEVER, M. P.—At adjourned meeting was held in the Bankruptcy Court, London, on Jan. 29th, in the case of Mr. J. O. Lever, formerly M. P. for Galway. The account return debts of £9,918, and a surplus of £47,971, comprising claims against companies and firms. Mr. Lawrence represented the assignees, who were willing that the bankrupt should receive his order; but the bankrupt desired an adjournment; with a view to the payment of the creditors in full. It appearing that there was a reasonable hope of the arrangement being concluded, the commissioner ordered a further adjournment.

France.

PARIS, Jan. 29th.—The La France of this evening publishes a letter addressed to it by M. De Jaquerroiere, in which he expresses his regret at the condemnation of the newspapers. He regards the doctrine upheld by the sentence as an excessive and intolerable restriction. It would be better to have absolute prohibition. For the newspapers sentenced the trial was but a small evil, but, as regards the Government it was an error which all sensible men deplore. To remedy this error the Government ought to propose in the law on the press an additional article settling the question. The Patrie of this evening believes it may state that M Magnes's report on the financial condition of France is ready, and will be published on Monday or Tuesday next. A loan will be proposed without, however, the amount or period of issue being fixed. The Patrie is of opinion that the amount of the loan will be 400,000,000 of francs.

THE FRENCH ARMY BILL.—The following circular is said to have been recently addressed by the Minister of the Interior to the prefects throughout France: "Sir,—The Government has often declared both before and during the discussion of the Army Bill, that it desired peace, and that all its efforts would tend to maintain it. It cannot have two utterances, since it has not two policies. It is therefore essential that the journals which defend us should not credit alarms or propagate anxiety. The discussions aroused by the military law may have occasioned some excitement; but it ought more than ever to harmonize with the maintenance of of pacific dispositions, which the emperor and his ministers have several times affirmed. I beg you, sir, to remember that the journals which support us do not deviate in their discussions from the declarations made by the government, which would be a mark of contradiction; nothing so reassures and fortifies as unity of language and direction."

Hungary.

PESTH, Jan. 28th.—The sum of 23,000,000 florins has already been subscribed in Hungary towards the cost for the construction of the Hungarian Railways, and it is expected that 15,000,000 more will be raised in the course of years to it is thought probable that Hungary will take up a fourth of the entire loan. The rural communes and savings banks participate largely. Subscriptions to a considerable amount have been received in Vienna from Galicia, Bohemia, Styria and Tirole. The contract for working or awarded to reliable quarters from Paris state that a large amount has been subscribed towards the loan in that capital.

Belgium.

MADRID, Jan. 24th.—In to-day's sitting of the Senate in the Government presented a bill proposing several reforms of the existing laws relative to concessions granted companies for the execution of public works. The discussion of the bill modifying the law relating to mines commenced, to-day. A decree has been issued granting the Royal pardon to the persons under sentence for participation in the insurrection under General Prim. The only persons exempted from this pardon are military men who have not surrendered for trial. Trials of persons accused of having offended against the press law are postponed, and deserters from the navy are pardoned.

The Archbishop of Algiers, in a letter to the editor of La Monde, makes a touching appeal in behalf of the unhappy victims of famine in that colony. He says: "Famine with all its horrors is decimating a population

Catholic Intelligence.

Foreign.

NEW BISHOP OF NORTH CAROLINA.—Rev. James Gibbons, of the Baltimore cathedral, has been confirmed by the Pope, and will soon be consecrated Catholic Bishop of North Carolina.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN INDIA.—To those who interest themselves in the propagation of our holy faith in India, it will be gratifying to read the following article, which appeared in the Gazette de Liege on the 23 of January:

"On Tuesday, the 31st of December, five Daughters of the Cross left the mother house in this city en route for Indis, there to rejoin their Sisters, nine of whom preceded them in 1862 and 1864, to establish convents of their Order in the British Presidency of Bombay. The moment of departure was one of deep and painful emotion to these good nuns, and to their Sisters in religion, for, notwithstanding the generous self-devotedness and courage of which they were giving proof, and which, in many present, suggested a comparison between them and those heroic sons of the Church, our brave Zouaves still, they were taking a last farewell of a venerable founder and foundress, receiving their warm parting blessings, and bidding adieu to Sisters they were never more to meet on earth. The youngest of the Daughters of the Cross, of which numbers many establishments in Prussia, Belgium, and one in England, at Chelsea, has been received in the East Indies, at Kurrachee, a town of 60,000 inhabitants; at Bandora, in the immediate vicinity of Bombay; and at Belgaum, a place of growing importance, schools, to be elementary and superior, as also to the asylums, orphan and aged natives. Such are the works undertaken by the Sisters under the direction of the Rev. Jesuit Fathers to whom the mission is confided. The Rev. G. Cooke, S. J., who returned to Europe from India some months since, accompanies the Sisters of Calvary, of whom two are Belgian and three English ladies. His lordship the Bishop of Liege, happy to find so much zeal in a portion of his diocese, repaired to the mother house last Saturday to give the travelers his pastoral benediction."

WE believe, says the Weekly Register, there is a brighter future opening for the Catholic-minded men of the Anglican Church. Why God is delaying the movement He best knows; but, that a movement—a vast exodus from the Establishment to the one only Church of the Apostolic and Roman Church—will ere long take place, there can hardly be a doubt amongst those who watch the signs of the times. That it is even now going on by individual conversions we all know. It is calculated that, within the limits of the diocese of Westminster, more than two thousand persons were formally received into the Church during the year just passed. Of these, about half belonged to the upper, and upper-middle classes. Let us pray that the date of returning to the old faith bes at last begun to flow in sundry parts of Ireland. Let the Protestants of Ireland, for once, be content and still be impossible. Which rose they will prefer we need hardly say, for already many hundreds among them are yearly selecting the only safe one.

THE two hundred Chinese who have recently been converted to Catholicity in tonnua.

The Freeman states that intelligence has been received announcing the death of the Most Rev. Dr. Fennelly, Catholic Bishop of Madras.

HOW ANTI CATHOLIC RIOTS ARE GOTTEN UP.—We extract the following suggestive paragraph from the London Register:

The scandalous story respecting a nunnery, which Mr. Gathercole brought before the Birmingham, publicly declared to be true, has resulted in the following report, which we copy from the Daily Post. The "committee, which was constituted to inquire into the charges of gross immorality in a convent, consisted of two Catholics and two Protestants, and here is what they have published to the world:

"We, the undersigned, having been requested by Mr. Gutteridge, and by gentlemen representing the Roman Catholic community in this town, to investigate the truth of the statement made by Mr. Gutteridge in the lecture delivered by him in the Town Hall, on the 13th of November last, with reference to alleged immorality in a nunnery, and having examined such evidence as Mr. Gutteridge has produced, and the statements of the Catholics, do find—That the whole statement is untrue, and without foundation in fact in any one of its details. That Sister, A. the principal of Mr. Gutteridge at the Town Hall, together with other details not mentioned by him, was first retained in the convent by the Gutteridge family on the 21 of July last. On the following day it was repeated to Mr. Gutteridge, by whom it was taken down in writing. That the narrator was a young girl of nineteen years of age, who was employed in Mr. Gutteridge's household as seamstress, and has continued so employed up to the present time, during this period she has again and again repeated her story, with the addition from time to time of pretended occurrences, which gave the statement a great appearance of reality; and so recently as three weeks ago in the most solemn manner reasserted the truth of all she had said. That the girl has appeared before us, and at once declared that the whole narrative was false and unfounded, and entirely her own invention. She firmly adhered to this declaration under a severe cross-examination. The narrative included details, some of which were capable of corroboration, if true; others bore on their face manifest improbability. We find that no effort was made by Mr. Gutteridge to test the truth of any of these statements; to one of us, even, he refused to enter or permit the threshold to make inquiry. We have still felt it our duty, as far as possible, to test such of the alleged facts as were capable of inquiry, and have failed to obtain confirmation in any one instance. We, on these circumstances, therefore, are compelled to arrive at no other conclusion than that Mr. Gutteridge's statement was utterly untrue, and that he had no grounds whatever for making the charge."

T. C. SMYTH KENNERSLEY, J.P.
J. B. MOLINEUX, M.D., J.P.
JOHN PONCIA, J.P.
J. D. GOODMAN, J.P.

"BIRMINGHAM, January 17, 1868.

We, shall be curious to see, says the London Register, whether the Record, the Morning Chronicle, and all the other newspapers that made so much capital out of this affair, will be as ready to publish this report of its committee as they were to make known far and wide the slander of Mr. Gutteridge—a slander infamous in every way, for it left the public to fix upon any one of the several convents near Birmingham as the scene of the alleged wickedness, and that at a time when the minds of the vulgar mob in and around Birmingham were greatly excited against everything Catholic and everything Irish. So far as it is possible to judge of men's intentions, Mr. Gutteridge evidently intended to excite a popular tumult against the convents near Birmingham. If every one got their deserts, this fellow ought certainly to be sent for twelve months to the treadmill.

FROM the Canadian Journal we learn that the numerous friends of the Right Rev. Dr. Moran, Vicar-Apostolic in the Eastern Districts of the Cape of Good Hope colony, assembled in St. Patrick's school- room, at eight o'clock on Monday evening, December 9, to present his lordship with an address and a purse containing 350 sovereigns. The room was crowded. On the platform were a number of ladies and gentlemen of various religious denominations. The chair was taken by Mr. Justice Fitzgerald, and speeches congratulating the Bishop on his safe return to his diocese from the great Assembly of Bishops at Rome were made by several of the gentlemen present. Dr. Moran has been Vicar-Apostolic of Grahamstown and the Eastern District of the Cape Colony for about twelve years, and is greatly beloved by his flock.

THE CHURCH IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.—In London, on the 20th of last Jan., the Rt. Rev. Dr. Elloy, who has been for many years a missionary in the islands of the Pacific, and who has just returned from the scene of his labors, bringing with him the son, the daughter and the grandson of the cannon on fourteen years of age, and who is to be educated for the priesthood, devoted a sermon, the only kind of which was in his power, to describing the condition from a religious point of view of the districts beneath his episcopal sway. The most striking of all details that our Saviour sent his Apostles all over the world to preach His doctrine, so to the present day the priests of God have to go to the remote districts to carry the same blessed message. Every year a number of clergymen left Europe, arrived at Sydney, and were then scattered over the many islands which form the South Seas. For instance, in the large portion of the islands, the special care of evangelizing which had been devolved on the Marists, there were from 80 to 100 priests of that Order. Of the large number of pious missionaries who annually left Sydney some certainly returned to Europe—for there were many whose fate it was impossible to ascertain—had received the crown of martyrdom, and one of his predecessors in the vicariate had the happiness of laying down his life for his faith. He had been twelve years working among the people of the islands, and he had the happiness of seeing the Church triumphantly surmount its earliest struggles, and carry the faith into the homes and hearts of the people. In the island of Juman, for instance, the earliest pioneers of Catholicity had sealed their faith with their blood. Well, in that island, they had now the felicity of seeing churches raised to the true God, children educated in the true faith, and the relics of idolatory disappearing. At first, of course, they could not be very particular about the accessories of divine worship, but they were now turning their attention to them points. At present, a church 150 feet long by 70 wide, was in process of erection in the island, and the work was being executed by the people of three villages, all of them, he need scarcely say, being Catholics. The people, who a few years ago, were quite ignorant of the arts and sciences, had in a few years made a most wonderful progress, and they were now building the large edifice with a skill not hardly edge which was quite astonishing. While the people of one of the villages worked at the building, those of the two others worked with the land and supplied with food the men engaged in building. Under the direction of labor a noble church was being erected in an island, in which, a few years since, there was no building more pretentious than the huts of the poor inhabitants. In the island of Tonga they had a great deal to do, great after a while they, as in the other instance, conquer the obstacles, which, to try their faith, Providence had placed in their path. They had in the island schools of every grade and it was almost impossible to find anywhere where a child who did not know how to read and write. And while the education of the children in secular matters was not neglected, neither was their education in matters religious, and, therefore, still more important. The children all knew their Catechism, and in addressing them in learning all kinds they also compete with the boys and girls of races more advanced in the scale of civilization. The adults in the island had also made the most remarkable advance to the knowledge of their faith, not nothing could be more touching than to hear whole congregations of the people singing with excellent taste and skill the sacred songs of the Church. Catholicism had been to these people, he need scarcely add after what he had already stated, a great mental as well as moral benefit, and could only regenerate. Amiable, affectionate and generous, even in the days of paganism, the national character of the island of the Tonga Islands, Wallace, Rotuma, Rotumah, Tonga, Samoa, Fiji, Navigators, Solomon, Banks, Hebrides, Caledonia, New Caledonia, Loyalty, Pines, Norfolk, Lord Howe, Bonin, Marianne, Caroline, Pelew, Admiralty, Duke of York, New Britain, New Ireland, Admiralty, Bass Strait, Moluccas, Timor, Celebes, Philippines, Sooloo, Borneo, Java, Sumatra, Nicobar, Andaman, Ceylon, Maldive, Laccadive, Mauritius, Bourbon, Madagascar, Comoro, Seychelles, Amirantes, Aldabra, Farquhar, Providence, Cosmoledo, Assumption, Astove, Chagos, Diego Garcia, Rodriguez, Agalega, Cargados, Carajos, St. Brandon, Rodrigue, Reunion, Amsterdam, St. Paul, Kerguelen, Heard, Macdonald, Crozet, Prince Edward, Marion, Tristan d'Acunha, Gough, Inaccessible, Nightingale, Middle, Stoltenhoff, Clerke, Diego Alvarez, Trinidad, Martin Vaz, Rocas, St. Peter, St. Paul, Fernando de Noronha, Atol das Rocas, St. Matthew

John Mitchel's Letters to John Martin

A Military Athlete.

The following sketch of General Philip Kearney's physical characteristics is extracted from a biography of that hero, printed in the New York Citizen:

Phil Kearney very much resembled the great Prussian hero Blucher in his tastes, habits and characteristics, not only as an individual but as a soldier. Like Blucher, and all natural-born soldiers, he could not live without excitement. He was fond of wine as a gentleman—a real gentleman should be in moderation—of good cheer, of good company, of the society of the accomplished of the opposite sex, and speculation, which in him represented Blucher's addiction to games of hazard. In speculation he was eminently successful, for his judgment, despite the vivacity of his temperament, was excellent. Like Blucher, also, he was passionately fond of horses, rode like a centaur and like the wind.

His appearance was very deceptive. Ordinary observers would have set him down as a light weight and slightly built. On the contrary, he was a powerfully built man, weighing about one hundred and sixty pounds, and about five feet ten inches in height. His make was perfection for a trooper, his chest massive, his legs sinews columns. He lay on the emblazoning table, a perfect specimen of manly strength. He was as striking in his carriage as in his character; his step was as elastic as an Indian's, and in his movements he was lithe and active as a panther; in fact, he was sorry as a scarecrow, despite the loss of an arm. Few men were more winning in their address, although he seemed somewhat haughty in his manners. His conversation, always agreeable, at times was perfectly brilliant. To know him was to be won by him. On horseback, he was in his element. On his famous white or flea-bitten grey (almost white) charger "Moscow"—the handsomest nurse, perhaps, I ever saw—he looked the picture of a cavalier, and as a modern centaur. In battle he generally rode a smaller but extremely active black, on which he was killed, and some times, on parade, a long tailed charger.

Even after he lost his bridle arm he continued to be the same fearless rider as before. One-armed, he would dash through the woods or leap walls, ditches and obstructions in such a manner as to astonish the boldest riders who had the use of all their members; and yet, strange to say, although the loss of his arm did not interfere with his movements while on his feet, when visiting me in 1855, he always had to fix a pillow under his left shoulder at night for fear of suffocating if he rolled over on his left side, since, from its shortness or some other difficulty connected with his stump, he could not then turn over readily in bed without assistance. Such was his reckless riding, that he had several fearful falls with—not from—horses, since, having but one arm, he could not save himself, or break his fall. Once, in Paris, his horse fell over backward upon him, and he struck the back of his head a fearful blow on the pavement. Another time his horse tumbled with him through a bridge, in St. Lawrence County, New York, and smashed him up generally. He could swim like a fish, and would undress, plunge in, disport amid the waves, come out and dress himself far better and quicker than most active and adroit men with a whole complement of limbs.

Destitution in the Atlantic Cities.

NEW YORK.—The fact that there is severe suffering among the poor of New York is accepted, but few know the extent or magnitude of the evil. At least 20,000 men are out of employment, or if employed at all, are working at odd jobs, which, out of the line of their own business, are badly done, and furnish just enough to keep the workmen from utter starvation. The evil is of New York proportions, and even New York charity can hardly compass it. All the ordinary charities are strained to their utmost. The churches are begging from door to door, and with all the funds thus raised, are utterly unable to meet the demands on them.

The destitution is seen in its full force on the east side of the town, for there the great bulk of the workmen who depend on their daily labor for their daily bread, is found. A walk through the streets gives no idea of the suffering. There are found the well dressed, the employed, and the professional beggar. In the tenement houses which open on them, or on the alley-ways running into them, the real suffering is to be found. Proud poverty and honest destitution must be looked for to be believed. The unusual suffering has to some extent been met in one of the wards by the organization of the Thirteenth Ward Relief Club, an organization for the gentlemen, who seek to relieve all actual destitution, without distinction of person, except as between the truly needy and the pretenders, which latter portions the club cries. Their system is to have inquiries made by some member, relative to the actual condition of any needy person brought to their notice.—N. Y. Times gentlemen, 18.

CONDITION OF THE WORKING PEOPLE.—It is conceded by those best informed upon the subject that, with the exception of the hard winter of 1854, destitution was never so general in this city as at present. The reports from the various missions and other benevolent societies, as well as those from private individuals, speak of extraordinary privations among the poor, including an unparalleled number of Americans. This winter, for the first time in the experience of the police, American mechanics nightly seek the shelter of the station houses; and not alone for a night, or in few numbers, but by dozens, and accompanied in some instances by their wives and little children. In many cases the applicants for shelter are women and children—frequently the widows and orphans of those who lost their lives in the war. Some of these lodge at the station house many nights in succession. In Massachusetts, the Gloucester Advertiser gives some instances of destitution among the working people at that place, and makes a strong plea for their relief. The Lewiston (Me.) Journal says that the demand for laborers for the mills in that city, is increasing. The mills are all to be put in motion very soon. The Fall River (Mass.) weavers have taxed themselves two and a half cents per month to sustain the "Weavers' Union." From Kittery (Me.) Navy Yard there have been discharged seventy-five men, ship building being dull. The Winsted (Ct.) Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of south ern hoes, have stopped work entirely for the present, throwing about sixty hands out of employment. The Howe Sewing Machine Company, at Bridgeport, Ct., have adopted the system of giving out their work to contractors, and employ many less workmen than before to turn out a larger number of sewing machines.—New York Post.

In New Jersey, the Paterson locomotive builders have an order from the Union Pacific Railroad for fifty locomotives. Most of the knitting mills at Cohoes, New York, and also the tool factories, have been temporarily closed but business men are making their arrangements to prepare for its approaching season. A Lowell correspondent of a Portland paper says that the shipbuilders there are taking advantage of the depression in their labor to have their work done cheaper, and are making arrangements to do more the coming season than has been done for several years. The Lewiston (Me.) Journal says there is now more demand for labor in that city than there has been hitherto for several months. Lumbering prospects are A man in New York advertises to furnish employers with working men who will work for their board until spring. The number of applications made to the Overseers of the Poor of Boston, during the past few weeks, has been about ten per cent. greater than at this period last year and other previous years. A great many men are out of employment, and those who are not entitled to receive aid from the city are assisted by the charitable associations, whose books show a larger increase in the way of applications than those of the Overseers of the Poor. One gentleman in South Boston, who usually employs but a few hundred men, has only seventy or seventy-five at work, and the number of employés in many stores and manufactories has been greatly reduced. It is probable that some public action will soon be taken for the relief of those who are suffering.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The puzzling name "tariff" is derived from the town of Tarifa, at the Straits of Gibraltar, and the most southern point in Europe, not even excepting Cape Matapan, at the foot of the Morea. Tarifa was the last stronghold which the Moors disputed with the Christians, and is still within three leagues of the Empire of Morocco. When the Moors held possession of both the pillars of Hercules it was here that they levied contributions for vessels entering the Mediterranean—whence the generic name.

A machine for removing the stones from cherries at the rate of one hundred a minute, is noticed in a recent invention. The New York Evening Post commenting on this, says that a machine for boning shad would also be very popular, and hopes soon to hear of one.

A frightful accident happened at Mantes, France, during the frost. A countryman made a bet he would cross the frozen Seine there, driving a cartload of hay. Twenty-eight people followed the cart to see the result of the wager. In the middle of the river the ice broke and the whole party fell into the water; nine only were rescued. The bodies of the others have since been found. Among the victims was the Mayor of Persbeville, Canal.

Catholic Churches- Hours of Service.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH.

ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH.

ST. JAMES'S CHURCH.

ST. ANTHONY'S CHURCH.

ST. BRIDGET'S CHURCH.

ST. ROSE'S CHURCH.

ST. BONIFACE'S CHURCH.

ST. ANN'S CHURCH.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH (Chinese).

ST. PETER'S CHURCH (German).

ST. ANTHONY'S CHURCH (German).

ST. BRIDGET'S CHURCH (German).

ST. ROSE'S CHURCH (German).

ST. BONIFACE'S CHURCH (German).

ST. ANN'S CHURCH (German).

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH (German).

Chapels of Religious Institutions.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTON OFFICE, San Francisco, } THURSDAY, March 12, 1868. }

FLOUR—Market firm. Extra bakers', in bbl sks at $8 00@8 25; do in qr sks, $8 50@8 75; Superfine in bbl and qr sks, at $6 75@7 25, as to quality.

WHEAT—Quotable as to quality at $2 42½@2 75 ₱ 100 lbs.

BARLEY—$2 00@2 07½ ₱ 100 lbs.

OATS—Quotable at $2 25@2 35 ₱ 100 lbs.

HAY—Quotable at $18@21 ₱ ton, as to quality.

BRANS—Quotable in round lots as follows: Bayos, at $1 00; Butter, $4.50—Small White, scarce—$1 50; ——, Reds, $2 25@2 50; Pea, at $4 50@——; Pink, at $2 12½@3 00 ₱ 100 lbs.

POTATOES—The market closes at $1 25@1 45 ₱ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—Quotable at $——@—— ₱ 100 lbs.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE.

Slaughter house rates are as follows:

BEEF—At 6@7½c ₱ lb.

VEAL—At 8@10c ₱ lb.

MUTTON—At 8@10c ₱ lb.

LAMB—At 10@12c.

PORK—At 6@8c ₱ lb., as to size.

MEATS (CURED)—Sales at the following rates for round lots:

BACON—California quotable at 14@15c ₱ lb.; Oregon at 14@15c ₱ lb.

HAMS—California quotable at 14@15c.; Oregon ——c.

BEEF—Smoked at 14@15c.; do shoulders at ——.

POULTRY AND GAME.

FOWLS—Hens, large size, at $7 00@7 50; young Roosters at $6 50@7 00, and small do at $5 50@6 ₱ doz.

DUCKS—Tame at $6 50 ₱ doz.

GEESE—Tame at $5 00@6 ₱ doz.

TURKEYS—At 17@18c ₱ lb.

HARE—Wild, at $3 50 ₱ doz.

RABBITS—At $1 50 ₱ doz.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Wholesale prices rule as follows:

BUTTER—Fair to prime roll, 30@32½c; new packed at ——c.

CHEESE—Quotable at 20@22——₱ lb for choice dairy.

LARD—In 10@20 lbs tins, 15@15½c ₱ lb.

EGGS—At 25c ₱ doz.——cash.

A novelty in railroad travel is the introduction of family coaches, or cars on the line between New York and Chicago. These coaches are so arranged as to accommodate families with the privacy of a hotel. Each apartment can be arranged at night to accommodate six passengers, and during the day afford all the comforts of a first-class drawing room. Each car is supplied with the best improved annunciators, which connect each room with the servants' apartment. Passengers have only to touch the bell to summon servants, who accompany each car.

Suicide.

Mr. PATRICK CUMMINGS left a canvassing tour through Santa Clara county. He is empowered to receive subscriptions for the Monitor and receipt for the same.

Always speak gently and reverently of your mother; always act toward her kindly and tenderly; and in after years, your memory of her whose love and care were the blessings of your infancy and childhood will be very sweet.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NINTH ANNIVERSARY GRAND BALL OF THE McMAHON GRENADIER GUARD IN HONOR OF St. Patrick's Day

Tuesday Evening, March 17th, 1868,

AT PLATT'S HALL.

COMMITTEE OF RECEPTION.
(Green and White Sashes.)

FLOOR COMMITTEE.
(Red Rosettes.)

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY BALL OF THE SONS OF THE EMERALD ISLE IN HONOR OF St. Patrick's Day

Will take place

AT HAYES' PARK PAVILION,

ON THE

Evening of the 17th of March, 1868.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

TICKETS (admitting gentleman and ladies).....$1 00

ST. PATRICK'S BALL, 1868.

A GRAND

MILITARY AND CIVIC BALL

WILL BE GIVEN

AT UNION HALL, HOWARD ST.,

ON

EVENING OF THE 17th MARCH.

Proceeds to be handed to the FAMILIES OF POLITICAL PRISONERS IN IRELAND AND FAMILIES OF THE MANCHESTER MARTYRS.

TICKETS.....$1 00

MURRAY & CO.,

IMPORT

FRESH AND SALT FISH

22 COMMERCIAL MARKET, and 20 HOWARD STREET MARKET, San Francisco.

THE DAILY

INDEPENDENT DISPATCH;

VOLUME I. HOWARD, EDITOR

THE DISPATCH IS PUBLISHED EVERY AFTERNOON, (SUNDAYS EXCEPTED,)

AT

12½ CENTS PER WEEK.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Information Wanted.

Information Wanted.

PUBLIC NOTICE

College Homestead Association.

UNDERTAKER.

ATKINS MASSEY,

BOOKS, ETC.

NEW CATHOLIC WORKS

JUST RECEIVED BY

H. C. BATEMAN.

IMPORTER AND

Wholesale and Retail Dealer,

727 Kearny st., bet. Hush and Sutter.

PRINTING OFFICES.

J. MULLIN. FRANK MAHON. WM. M. HINTON.

MULLIN, MAHON & CO.

BOOK, CARD

AND

JOB PRINTERS

No 505 Clay street,

Southwest corner Sansome ——— Eystreet.

Particular attention given to the correct Printing of Briefs, Transcripts, and Legal Documents generally, without unnecessary abbreviations.

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL BALL OF THE COMMERCIAL

BOOK AND JOB STEAM

Printing House,

517 Clay Street,

And 510, 514 and 516 Commercial street.

FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO.

Having constantly a full new Material, until their Fall Importations arrive, are prepared to promptly Execute

Most Extensive on the Pacific Coast,

EVERY KIND OF PRINTING,

DEFY COMPETITION.

TWENTY PRESSES

Driven by Steam Power ready them to execute all orders with unusual dispatch.

A Half-Medium Degener Press for Sale, and other sizes of second hand Type and Material, at a great bargain.

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,

Have the Largest Office,

Do the most work,

And do it better

Than other offices

In this City.

536 Try them

With a Job,

And you will be Satisfied the above

Statements are facts

Their office is at 536

Clay St., below Montgomy's,

Over Pacific Fruit Market.

C. DESMOND,

FASHIONABLE

HATTER,

COSMOPOLITAN HOTEL,

(CORNER OF KEARNY AND SANSOME STREETS.)

Has on hand the largest and most select assortment of HATS and CAPS to be found in the city, which he sells at the Lowest Prices

☞ Mr. Desmond has also for sale a large and varied assortment of Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods.

It will cost you nothing to remember his goods, and should you call he is sure that you don't regret it.

CASSIN'S

CALIFORNIA GRAPE BRANDY BITTERS!

Are pronounced the best in the State

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

☞ DEPOT, 523 FRONT STREET. ☜

Jy1-ly

LEGAL.

REMOVAL.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.

HAVE REMOVED TO THE NEW BUILDING,

No. 1 Battery Street, Corner Market,

ORIENTAL BLOCK

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE,

No. 1 BATTERY ST., Cor. Market

RETAIL WAREHOUSE,

No. 9 Montgomery st., Lick House.

Are offering at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES their usual extensive stock of

Linens, Napkins, Damasks, Marseilles Quilts, Piqué, Huccaby, Furnishing Goods, Linen Sheeting and Shirting, Towels, Handkerchiefs, Embroideries, Laces, Edgings, Suspenders, Corsets, Gents' Dressing Gowns, Dressing Flannels, Hair Nets, Trimmings, Elastics, Fancy Goods, Yankee Notions,

AND ALL KINDS OF

DRY GOODS

MOUNT VERNON DUCK COMPANY

No. 1 to No. 8 SAIL MAKERS

1 to 12 in HYDRAULIC HOSE

22 to 54 inches wide for WAGON COVERS, &c.

Orders strictly attended to.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.

KENNEDY & DRISCOLL

Importers and Dealers in

DRY GOODS

HAVE REMOVED

FROM 108 to 118 THIRD STREET

(FORMERLY KNOWN AS 107 AND 109 STEVENSON STREET)

THE STYLES

FOR SPRING

ARE

NOW READY.

LAMOTT'S

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

His Hats excel all others in point of symmetry of style and richness of quality. He not only has an eye for the passing styles, but selects such as are not dressed.

THE MONITOR:

A WEEKLY JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO

Irish and Catholic Literature

—AND—

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Publish and published every Saturday, by PETER YORKE. JOHN T. BARRY.

LYONS & BARRY,

Office—633 Clay street, bet. Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Entrance 1 and up stairs.)

JAMES LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER.

☞ All communications, whether relating to the business or editorial departments, should be addressed to "Lyons & Barry."

TERMS (Payable in Advance):

All subscribers, per year.....$5 00

Subscribers, per year.....$4 00

CLUB RATES:

Each of 10, to one address.....$40 00

Each of 20, to address.....$80 00

Any 2 who paper free to the person who gets up such club.

Pastoral of Archbishop Alemany.

TO THE CLERGY AND LAITY OF THE DIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO—Beloved Children: It is nothing less than the sacred duty of a pastor, that I feel myself bound to perform at this time, in behalf of the Redemption Parish, and we have the consolation to state, with pleasure and gratitude, that your response has confirmed our hopes. Your pastor's protestations of love for the Spouse of Christ, the Church, when the honor of the Church was at stake, have not been mere words of exaggeration, but the expression of your real sentiments. Your deeds have been better than in endeavoring to prove the glory of God, you could neither intend nor attempt. Your minds and hearts then threw completely aside all human respect.

The power of God is the supreme law and sanction of the universe. Before it the pride of the proud and earth had an head of silver and gold, is to be humbly obeyed. Before it the mighty and the rich are but as the brittleness of the potter's vessel. Before it the wisdom of the wise is but as the foolishness of the ignorant; and in the same way he had an necessary power, and the weak and the poor, and the ignorant, may create intelligence where it is not. And yet how few are there who, in the present day, have any good, for their own good, but that which is temporal, and that only for the present moment. Many are the souls that are lost to the Church, and these could be saved in the beginning of all things, as these things were in the inspired proverbs of solomon: "The Lord hath made all things for himself" (Prov. 16, 4.) While in his power and wisdom he delighted in his works in the act of creating, adorning each with fitting properties, and giving to each its proper place in the general plan of the universe, he could not but feel all should justly and gracefully act in the sphere of their activity, and each and every member bless the homage of praise and thanksgiving to the Author of the divine exaltation of St. Thomas Aquinas, who, in the midst of the splendor of his gifts, gratification and honors, could say: "I have all things, and they existed and were created for me, that I might enjoy them." (Apoc. 6, 11.)

The beautiful thing in the universe with which we are surrounded, is the order which appears in its parts; but as an expansive population is attained by the increase of the individuals, and that made in what is, so also and the same does Holy Church grow and expand in the course and will of time. The Pope is the centre of unity, and the Bishops are the centres of unity in their dioceses, and the Bishops and Pope are the centres of unity in the city and world of San Francisco; and in the centre of the Bishop and Pope is the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Jesus Christ, the Spirit of Truth, the Spirit of Love, the Spirit of Peace, the Spirit of Unity, the Spirit of Holiness, the Spirit of Sanctification, the Spirit of Grace, the Spirit of Glory, the Spirit of Eternity, the Spirit of Infinity, the Spirit of Omnipotence, the Spirit of Omniscience, the Spirit of Omnipresence, the Spirit of Immensity, the Spirit of Immutability

John Mitchel's Letters to John Martin

A Military Athlete.

The following sketch of General Philip Kearney's physical characteristics is extracted from a biography of that hero, printed in the New York Citizen:

Phil Kearney very much resembled the great Prussian hero Blucher in his tastes, habits and characteristics, not only as an individual but as a soldier. Like Blucher, and all natural-born soldiers, he could not live without excitement. He was fond of wine as a gentleman—a real gentleman should be in moderation—of good cheer, of good company, of the society of the accomplished of the opposite sex, and speculation, which in him represented Blucher's addition to games of hazard. In speculation he was eminently successful, for his judgment, despite the vivacity of his temperament, was excellent. Like Blucher, also, he was passionately fond of horses, rode like a centaur and like the wind.

His appearance was very deceptive. Ordinary observers would have set him down as a light weight, and slightly built. On the contrary, he was a powerfully built man, weighing about one hundred and sixty pounds, and about five feet ten inches in height. His make was perfection for a trooper, his chest massive, his legs sinews rollomns. He lay on the saddle like a centaur, a perfect specimen of manly strength. He was as striking in his carriage as in his character; his step was as elastic as an Indian's, and in his movements he was lithe and active as a panther; in fact, he was apty as a cat, despite the loss of an arm. Few men were more winning in their address, although he seemed somewhat haughty in his manners. His conversation, always agreeable, at times was perfectly brilliant. To know him was to be won by him. On horseback, he was in his element. On his famous white or iron-lilten grey almost white) charger "Morrow"—true handsomest noise, perhaps, I ever saw—he looked the picture of a cavalier, and was a modern centaur. In battle he generally rode a smaller but extremely active Flack, on which he was killed, and some times, on parade, a heavier brown.

Even after he lost his bridle arm he continued to be the same fearless rider as before. One-armed, he would dash through the woods or leap walls, ditches and obstructions in such a manner as to astonish the boldest riders who had the use of all their members; and yet, strange to say, although the loss of his arm did not interfere with his movements while at his feet, when visiting me in 1855, he always had to fix a pillow under his left shoulder at night for fear of suffocating if he rolled over on his left side, since, from its shortness or some other difficulty connected with his stump, he could not then turn over readily in bed without assistance. Both was his reckless riding, that he had several fearful falls with—not from—horses, since, having but one arm, he could not save himself, or break his fall. Once, in Paris, his horse fell over backward upon him, and he struck the back of his head a fearful blow on the pavement. Another time his horse tumbled with him through a bridge, in the Lawrence County, New York, and smashed him up generally. He could swim like a duck, and would undress, plunge in, disport himself in the water, come out and dress himself far better and quicker than most active and adroit men with a whole complement of limbs.

Destitution in the Atlantic Cities.

NEW YORK.—The fact that there is severe suffering among the poor of New York is accepted, but for how know the extent or magnitude of the evil. At least 20,000 men are out of employment, or if employed at all, are working at odd jobs, which, out of the line of their own business, are badly done, and furnish just enough to keep the workmen from utter starvation. The evils of New York proportions, and even New York charity can hardly compass it. All the ordinary charities are strained to their utmost. The churches are begging from door to door, and with all the funds thus raised, are utterly unable to meet the demands on them.

The destitution is seen in its full force on the east side of the town, for there the great bulk of the workmen who depend on their daily labor for their daily bread, is found. A walk through the streets gives no idea of the suffering. There are found the well-dressed, the employed, and the professional beggar. In the tenement houses which open on them, or on the alleyways running into them, the real suffering is to be found. Penal poverty and honest destitution must be looked for to be relieved. The unusual suffering has to some extent been met in one of the wards by the organization of the Thirteenth Ward Rebel Club, an organization of twenty-five gentlemen, who seek to relieve all actual destitution, without distinction of person, except as between the truly needy and the pretenders, within their portion of the city. Their system is that no inquiries made by some member, relative to the actual condition of any needy person brought to their notice.—N. Y. Times, Feb 19.

CONDITION OF THE WORKING POOR.—It is conceded by those best informed upon the subject that, with the exception of the very hard winter of 1854-5, destitution was never so severe in this city as at present. The reports from the various missions and other benevolent societies, as well as those from private individuals, speak of extraordinary privations among the poor, including an unparalleled number of Americans. This winter, for the first time in the experience of the police, American mechanics nightly seek the shelter of the station house; and not some for a night, or in few numbers, but by dozens, and accompanied in some instances by their wives and little children. In many cases the applicants for shelter are women and children—frequently the widows and orphans of those who lost their lives in the war. Some of these lodge at the station house many nights in succession. In Massachusetts, the Lowell Advertiser gives some instances of destitution among the working people at that place, and makes a strong plea for their relief. The Lewiston (Me.) Journal says that the demand for labourers for the mills in that city, is increasing. The mills are also to be put in motion very soon. The Fall River (Mass.) weavers have taxed themselves two and a half cents per month to sustain the "Weavers' Union." From the Kittery (Me.) Navy Yard there have been discharged seventy-five men, ship carpenters, during the last week. The Portsmouth Cotton Company, manufacturers of sheeting, have stopped work entirely for the present, throwing about 400 hands out of employment. The Howe Sewing Machine Company, at Bridgeport, Ct., have adopted the system of giving out their work to contractors, and employ many less workmen than before to turn out a larger number of sewing machines.—New York Post.

In New Jersey, the Paterson locomotive builders have an order from the Union Pacific Railroad for fifty locomotives. Most of the knitting mills at Cohoes, New York, are shut down. The Fall River (Mass.) weavers have taxed themselves two and a half cents per month to sustain the "Weavers' Union." From the Kittery (Me.) Navy Yard there have been discharged seventy-five men, ship carpenters, during the last week. The Portsmouth Cotton Company, manufacturers of sheeting, have stopped work entirely for the present, throwing about 400 hands out of employment. The Howe Sewing Machine Company, at Bridgeport, Ct., have adopted the system of giving out their work to contractors, and employ many less workmen than before to turn out a larger number of sewing machines.—New York Post.

In New Jersey, the Paterson locomotive builders have an order from the Union Pacific Railroad for fifty locomotives. Most of the knitting mills at Cohoes, New York, are shut down. The Fall River (Mass.) weavers have taxed themselves two and a half cents per month to sustain the "Weavers' Union." From the Kittery (Me.) Navy Yard there have been discharged seventy-five men, ship carpenters, during the last week. The Portsmouth Cotton Company, manufacturers of sheeting, have stopped work entirely for the present, throwing about 400 hands out of employment. The Howe Sewing Machine Company, at Bridgeport, Ct., have adopted the system of giving out their work to contractors, and employ many less workmen than before to turn out a larger number of sewing machines.—New York Post.

Wholesale Market Report.

[Monitor Office, San Francisco,] Tuesday, March 10, 1868.

FLOUR—Market firm. Extra bakers' in bbls at $5 @ $5 25; do in sks, $5 50 @ $5 75; Superfine in bl and sk do, at $5 50 @ $5 75, as to quality.

WHEAT—Quotable as to quality at $2 @ $2 25 @ 100 lbs.

BARLEY—$2 @ $2 02 @ 100 lbs.

OATS—Quotable at $2 25 @ $2 50 @ 100 lbs.

HAY—Quotable at $18 @ $21 @ ton, as to quality

BRAN—Quotable in round lots as follows: Bags, at $1 @ ; Butter $1 50 ——— Small White, scarce—$1 ——— Reds, $2 25 @ 2 30; Pea, at $1 50 ——— Pink, at $2 @ 2 50 @ 100 lbs.

POTATOES—The market closes at $1 @ $1 25 @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—Quotable at $ ——— @ 100 lbs.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE.

Slaughter house rates are as follows:

BEEF—At @ ; @

VEAL—At @ ; @

MUTTON—At @ ; @

LAMB—At @ ; @

PORK—At @ ; @

MEAT (retail)—Sales at the following rates for round lots:

BACON—California quotable at @ ; @

LARD—In kegs, at @ ; @

HAMS—California, @ ; and Oregon ——

BEEF—Smoked, at @ ; @

Hides at ——— @ ; @

POULTRY AND GAME.

FOWLS—Hens, large, @ ; @ young chickens, @ ; @

DUCKS—Tame, @ ; @

GEESE—Tame at $ @ ; @

TURKEYS—At @ ; @

HARE—Wild, at $ @ per pair.

RABBITS—At $ @ per pair.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Wholesale prices rule as follows:

BUTTER—Fair to prime roll, @ ; @

New packed at ——— @ ———

CHEESE—Quotable at @ ——— @ for choice dairy.

EGGS—In lots, @ ; @

FRESH—At @ per dozen.

A novelty in railroad travel is the introduction of family coaches, or cars on the line between New York and Chicago. These cars are so arranged as to accommodate families with the privacy of a hotel. Each apartment can be arranged at night to accommodate its passengers, and during the day afford all the comforts of a first-class drawing room. Each car is supplied with the best improved ventilators, which can never reach room with the sectional apartment. Passengers have only to touch the bell to be conductor, who accompany each car.

A frightful accident happened at Mantes, France, during the frost. A countryman made a hut he would cross the frozen Seine there, driving a cartload of hay. Twenty-eight people followed the cart to see the result of the wager. In the middle of the river the ice broke and the whole party fell into the water; nine only were rescued. The ladies of the others have since been found. Among the victims was the Mayor of Perchesville, Canal.

Catholic Churches—Hours of Service.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

SUNDAY.—Beginning at the Day; Hymn ringing out by the solemn voice in Montgomery, Montgomery to Pacific, Pacific to Mason, Mason to Broadway, Broadway to Larkin, Larkin to Ninth, Ninth to Folsom, Folsom to Market, Market to Third, Third to Stockton, Stockton to Market, Market to Fifth, Fifth to Howard, Howard to Sixth, Sixth to Harrison, Harrison to Fifth, Fifth to Folsom, Folsom to Sixth, Sixth to Howard, Howard to Fifth, Fifth to Mission, Mission to Third, Third to Howard, Howard to Second, Second to Mission, Mission to First, First to Stockton, Stockton to Market, Market to Kearny, Kearny to Pacific, Pacific to Montgomery, Montgomery to Day.

ST. MARY'S CATHEDRAL.—Northeast corner of California and Dupont streets. Pastoral residence, Archbishop's House, on California street. Most Rev. Archbishop Alemany, Archbishop; Very Rev. James Croke, V. G., Rector; Rev. J. J. Prendergast and Rev. P. Yorke, Assistants. Rev. P. Bennett, Secretary. Masses at 6, 8 and 10 o'clock A. M., in Summer; at 8 and 10 o'clock A. M., in Winter. Vespers at 3 o'clock P. M., in Summer, and at 2 o'clock in Winter.

The Archbishop's hours for business on week days are from 9 to 11 A. M., and from 2 to 4 P. M. Days for receiving Ladies—Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Week days at 7 A. M., Mass; at 8 A. M., Vespers and Benediction of the Most Holy Sacrament.

ST. FRANCIS CHURCH.

SUNDAY.—Hymn opens at Post, Post to Stockton, to Sutter, Sutter to Dupont, Dupont to Bush, Bush to Kearny, Kearny to Pine, Pine to Dupont, Dupont to Post. Rev. Father Accolti, Provincial; Rev. Father Maraschi, Rector; Rev. Father Bottaro, Rev. Father Soracco, Rev. Father Scandolera, Rev. Father Antonini, Rev. Father Ponte, Rev. Father Sasia, Rev. Father Bandini, Rev. Father Pelletier, Rev. Father Bacigalupi, Rev. Father Pellegrini, Rev. Father Bandini, Rev. Father Pelletier, Rev. Father Pellegrini, Rev. Father Bacigalupi, Rev. Father Pellegrini, Rev. Father Bacigalupi, Rev. Father Pellegrini, Rev. Father Bacigalupi

HERMAN BLENNERHASSETT.

A SINGULAR BIOGRAPHY.

BY MAJOR MESERVEY.

[Aaron Burr's conspiracy, as it was called, involved many persons of note, but none whose fate excited so much sympathy as that of Blennerhassett. Wm. Wirt's forensic eloquence at Burr's trial placed him high in public opinion, and threw a halo of romance around Blennerhassett which has been considered more or less mythical. The following condensed biography, which we take from the Irish Citizen, shows that it was at least eventful:]

"Man proposes, but God disposes," is a true old proverb, and Hermen Blennerhassett's life is a curious illustration of it. With a handsome property and the tastes of a literary man and a philosopher, he thought of living a quiet, unpretentious life, and passing away calmly in the midst of his family and friends. But he was unexpectedly brought into a world-wide notoriety, and ended his days alone in exile and indigence.

Blennerhassett belonged to a respectable Irish family, the branches of which lived for centuries in the counties of Cork and Kerry, where some of them still hold a high place among the gentry, and count kindred with the best names in the country. Herman was a Blennerhassett of Ballyreagh Castle, fisherfilling or shilelagh there of what must have been a good estate. He was born in 1767, in England, where members of his family seem to have temporarily resided, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in the usual way; after which he was admitted to the Barristers' Society, of Castle, Dublin, in 1790. But he had no taste for the drudgery of the law and resolved to live his life in his own way without it. He went to Paris in 1789, and looked calmly about him in the midst of the republican hurricane then raging; sympathising, however, with the people and wishing them the happy deliverance they expected, but which they did not exactly in the end. He was, as all philosophers must needs be, the friend of liberty, and he read and thought much about the liberation of the American Colonies, their wealthy resources and the future that opened before them. Like George Berkeley, and others of that class of thinkers, he felt himself interested in that attractive theme, far more than in anything transpiring where the Government was bent on putting an end to both Irish Volunteers and Irish Parliament. His thoughts were with the beautiful Ohio, instead of the Law or the Liffey; and while the aforesaid Parliament was in its last throes, he sold his estate in Kerry to Mr. Blennerhassett, Young Young, and went to England, where his sister, noblest and oldest of the Anglo-Irish houses, and at present one of the poorest, having little more than its ancient renown to live on.

In the house of his sister De Courcy, Herman Blennerhassett met the beautiful and accomplished Miss Agnew, granddaughter of General Agnew, who was killed at the battle of Germantown, in America. They naturally talked together of the fresh, free, new world, of the forest-crowned and beautiful Ohio, of a home upon its fertile banks, washed by its bright waters—a cottage with Elizabethan gables and a vine covered porch; and that last happy picture did their hearts good, as the saying is. They fell in love over it, and were married; after which Blennerhassett got together an extensive collection of books and a chemical apparatus for the purpose of continuing the philosophical experiments in America which he was so attached to at home, and, with all his earthly property on board, and his best hopes, left the old country, and landed at New York in the year 1797.

They remained but a short time in this city, or rather that city; for the present New York is quite another place altogether. Their destination was westward; and, in the fall of September, they were found themselves at Marietta, on the Ohio, which looked remarkably like the place that had appeared to them in several successful dreams. But on looking farther they found the very spot—a small island of the Ohio, about two miles below Parkersburg, near the mouth of the little Kenawha river. Blennerhassett purchased part of this island—a demesne of about 170 acres—for $4,600, and he and his wife found themselves in their own wild and satisfactory log cabin in the fall of the year 1798. This was the happiest period of their lives, for it was full of pleasant anxieties and surprising seldom-events. The wild forest was changed into fields, lawns, gardens and orchards, and a picturesque and magnificent residence in accordance with the architectural taste of the owner rose by degrees to be the landmark of the little paradise and the wonder of that region of the country. It is said that over $50,000 were expended on this beautiful home, which contained nearly all the elegant conveniences and ornaments of the best city residences. Blennerhassett himself, as a philosopher, did not care much for these things: but they gratified his wife, and that was enough for him. His own wants and ways were very simple, to suit the notions of a plain-looking and unobtrusive man like himself—slight and six feet high, with a somewhat reserved and dignified manner, much of which was probably owing to his nearness of sight. He dressed usually in a careless, comfortable way, and took his diversions in the manner of an old-established farmer. He is liked to go out with his gun; but, on account of his shortness of sight, he never brought down anything, and only "made them leave that place, anyhow," after the manner of Brinsley Sheridan, who always gave his birds a wide margin and a fair chance for their lives. Stories are told of Mr. Blennerhassett going out with him sometimes, and giving timely directions about firing, such as "Now!—to the right!—there!—fire!" and those might have been even the truth in them. His eyes, in fact, were only fit for his books and papers and his experiments in chemistry and philosophy, his microscope for wonderful insects, and his telescope for the Georgium Sidus and the Belts of Jupiter; on clear nights. He knew that much of any sort is sometimes turned into edipocere in water, and he told his wife he should provide her with a stock of that substance, which would be a cheap and excellent light for the house. He put some meat in a creek, accordingly, and, after a proper interval, went to examine it. But he found that the fishes had eaten it all up.

Mrs. Blennerhassett was as remarkable as her husband—but in another way. She was a fine looking woman, with brown hair and a most engaging countenance, under a head-dress of colored silk, worn in the manner of a turban. She was a great equestrian, and on horseback, in her scarlet riding-dress, spangled with gold lace and buttons, and her soft hat with its ostrich feather flying to the wind, she rode as gracefully and triumphantly as Walter Scott's Diana Vernon. She was also an admirable pedestrian, and could, without fatigue, accompany her husband in his usual forest rambles.

With all this, she loved literature as much as he did. She new the French and Italian languages, and was an admirable writer, at some pieces of her poetry sufficiently show. She could reserve the plays of Shakspeare as well as Fanny Kemble Butler or Mrs. Scott Siddons, and would sometimes represent scenes from them with the assistance of some of the company at her house; for the Blennerhassetts, on the Island of Backus' Island, as it was called—did not live so much to themselves as not to entertain company at times, and make their occasional visits memorable. These thought the rich Irishman something of an oddity, and wondered he did not become a shot and a fox-hunter in the rest of the country.

They knew he was a highly educated man, and recommended him to the Governor of Virginia for the magistracy. This appointment was sent him unasked. But the literary hermit feared it would take him from his books and the care of his two or three little children, and so declined to serve.

Such was the new home of the Blennerhassetts and their way of life for eight years. In 1806 came a change, which drove them out of their paradise on the Ohio.

One evening, in the fall of 1806, while Blennerhassett was absent from the island, the servants ran in to his wife to say that a gentleman was coming. She invited the strangers in, and were surprised and pleased to learn that they were Aaron Burr, late Vice-President of the United States, and his niece, Mrs. Shaw. Subsequently, Mr. Burr wrote to Blennerhassett (who was in New York on a visit to his old friend, Thos. A. Emmet), that he intended to purchase him on the score of his sapariority, invited him to consider a grand scheme which he (Burr) had then in hand—one that promised great wealth to those worthy to engage in it. This was, in fact, that great Conspiracy business with which Burr's name is so historically connected, and which requires an effort to understand it. The affair was very jumbled and very indistinct, and nobody can say what it might have led to. But it certainly was manifest—some direction—since Burr had the chief hand in it. He set out with telling Blennerhassett and a thousand others of that riverine West, that they were going to war with Spain, and inviting them all to bear a hand and get up a river expedition to New Orleans. No harm in that. He also said he had purchased the Bastrop property of millions of acres, in North Louisiana, which property the woodchuckers would have among them very easy terms. No harm in that, either. The result was, that on the Ohio, the Mississippi and the confluent rivers of the great Valley, a great number of persons either felt anxious to join in that movement, or wished it well. Indeed, it was the general belief that the United States should pitch into Spain at once, and take as much of Florida and Mexico as they wanted. They might have done it—taken Texas in 1805 instead of 1845—about the time when Napoleon I. told Jefferson that if they engaged Spain they should engage France, too. Jefferson would no longer hear of war.

But Burr would have the flotilla, and —go somewhere—to that estate of his on the Washita, in Louisiana; and the work went on. Blennerhassett knew that he was the Governor of

Weekly Calendar.

Sunday, Feb. 21—St. Severianus, Bishop & Martyr.
Monday, 22—Chair of St. Peter at Antioch.
Tuesday, 23—St. Peter Damian, Bp., Conf., & Dr.
Wednesday, 24—St. Matthias, Apostle.
Thursday, 25—St. Tarasius, Confessor.
Friday, 26—St. Alexander, Bishop and Confessor.
Saturday, 27—St. Leander, Bishop and Confessor

Summary of the Week.

EXECUTION OF WHELAN.

Whelan, the supposed murderer of D'Arcy McGee in Canada, was executed on the eleventh of this month. It may be remembered that the evidence against him was altogether circumstantial with the exception of Lacroix's testimony, which was self-contradictory on an important point; and as Whelan made no confession, it is open to very serious doubt whether he committed the crime for which he suffered death.

THE FENIAN AMNESTY MOVEMENT.

The agitation in Ire and to obtain a pardon for the Fenians who are now serving out various terms of imprisonment in the English convict cells, grows in strength. The petition has been placed at the chapel doors in most of the Catholic dioceses, and in Dublin alone under the auspices of Carroll, the Lord Mayor, it is said that a hundred thousand signatures have been affixed to it. It is not likely that the new government of Gladstone will resist such a pressure, especially at the present time, though it will probably complete the release of the prisoners with the condition of their leaving Ireland. The prisoners are, we believe, considerably over a hundred in number, and some of them have now been more than three years in the prison pens of England. Their families are sanguine of their release, which is not unlikely to accompany the restoration of the Habeas Corpus Act in Ireland, a measure which the ministry intend to introduce into Parliament at an early date.

THE DARIEN CANAL.

After the rumors that have been flying during the past months concerning Cushing's mission to New Granada, it appears that he has really secured for the United States a valuable concession for a ship canal between the two oceans. A grant of six miles from each side of the line is to be made by the New Granada government, half to the United States, and in return one-fourth of the profits of the canal are to accrue to New Granada. It is said that a company in New York are ready to supply the necessary funds, something like a hundred millions, and to build the canal on those terms; so we may expect a speedy commencement of the enterprise.

THE CUBAN INSURRECTION.

The Cuban insurgents continue to maintain the contest with the governments with all the dogged tenacity and recklessness of results so characteristic of Spanish races everywhere. Dulce, the new Captain General, finding it impossible to restore peace by concessions, has withdrawn the amnesty proclamation issued a short time ago, and is proceeding with vigor against the rebels, who are mainly confined to the western and less populous district of the island. Troops are arriving from Spain, but the insurgents are also said to be receiving succor from Florida and Georgia, so there is no immediate likelihood of the rebellion being speedily suppressed, and Spain is likely to taste for a long while one of the blessings of her revolution in the war of Cuba.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.—Monday next will be the anniversary of one of the greatest and purest public men that ever lived and died. We hear hardly anything of suitably commemorating the day. To let it pass without an appropriate display would be a great reproach; therefore we hope all necessary preparations will be forthwith commenced to make a grand demonstration. Next to Independence Day, the anniversary of George Washington's birth should be the greatest on the political calendar of America.

A NEW IRISH SOCIETY.—Eight or ten young Irishmen of the city have organized a society, to be known as the Ancient Order Hibernians, and elected Mr. James Waters President. The society is said to be quite extensive in the Atlantic States. They will meet once a month.—The above is the gist of a communication from Mr. Thomas F. Clinton.

MOUNTAIN VIEW.—The following are the prizes for the one dollar subscription in behalf of the church lately erected in the village of Mountain View, Santa Clara county: Florence Sewing Machine, No. 166; Lady's elegant Stamped Saddle, No. 105. The prizes can be had by calling on the pastor, Rev. Father Joseph Bixio, S. J.

DEATH OF WM. G. CODE.—It is our painful duty to record the death on the 14th inst. of Mr. Wm. J. Code, of San Rafael. Mr. Code was highly esteemed by all who knew him. May his soul rest in peace.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—The Catholic World and Sadlier's Catholic Directory for 1869. Will review next week. M. Flood has both on sale.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish or Catholic Journal on this Coast

SATURDAY.....FEB. 20, 1869.

Grave Charges of Corruption.

New York has long stood preeminent as the most corrupt city in the United States. Its Board of Aldermen and Common Council has become a synonym for official thievery. Men of known bad character have sought and found offices in that great city, whose only recommendation was experience at managing primary conventions, and whose sole purpose was robbery; for it is as much robbery to appropriate the money or property of a community, as it would be to enter a man's house and take therefrom that which did not legally belong to you. San Francisco seems to be fast rivaling the Empire City in the character of its officials as well as in maritime prestige. Last Monday night we were edified with the spectacle of a member of our Board of Supervisors charging some of his official associates with outright corruption. The asseveration was not denied; leaving the inference that the assertion was true. Mr. Canavan (the Supervisor who made the charge) declared, with the outspoken boldness and honesty characteristic of the man, that an agent or middleman was engaged in collecting signatures to deeds "in favor of a person named Clausen," who had been acting as "a sort of special counsel or adviser of the Outside Land Committee," and that the person so engaged was a lawyer named Smythe. Mr. Canavan further stated that the agent referred to was asking land holders who had been benefitted by the action of the Outside-Land Committee "to sign deeds of gift of lots to the Outside Land Committee." Supervisor Ashbury, who was one of the Land Committee, exonerated his own innocence, and was exonerated by Mr. Canavan; but the other members of the Committee had not a word to say in contradiction. The charge is a grave one, and one which we feel sure a responsible gentleman like Mr. Canavan would not make without sufficient evidence to sustain him. Rumor has been busy for a long time past with the names of several with the Outside Lands and other matters, in a manner not at all creditable to their honesty. Mr. Canavan, as become an honest officer, has given those rumors tangible shape; and it now becomes his imperative duty to make them good before the Grand Jury. If he does so, he will have made San Francisco his debtor, for it will be the destruction of the dishonest conclave that now exists in the Board of Supervisors; and transfer from the City Hall to San Quentin a few men who, to use the mildest possible term, reflect no credit on the community. In this purifying crusade, Mr. Canavan should receive the support of every honest citizen; for if he succeeds, he will have effected more than a vigilance committee ever would; but if he fails he will have strengthened the wrong-doers and added a thousand fold to their prestige. Our citizens look with hope to Mr. Canavan's course in this affair; they have hopes he will do nothing to sully the high reputation he has thus far gained as champion of the people's rights, and as an executor of fraud. He is now at it to him as a man and an officer of the municipality to make good the damaging charges he has so publicly asserted.

CONFIRMATION AT ST. PATRICK'S.—On Sunday last the sacrament of Confirmation was administered by the Archbishop immediately after 9 o'clock. The children received their first communion from Father Moriarty, who also addressed to his Grace in his usual kind and effective manner. About 87 children and adults received the Holy Sacrament. The children of the orphan asylum were all neatly attired in white, and made a very pleasing appearance under the superintendence of the good Sisters. A neat and appropriate address was read by one of the orphan girls to those about to receive the Sacrament. The ceremony of Confirmation will be administered at St. Patrick's on Sunday, (Sunday), at St. Peter's church at 3 o'clock a. m.

SAINT PATRICK'S DAY.—A second meeting of the committee heretofore appointed by Mayor McCoppin, in pursuance of a resolution passed at the Hibernian dinner held the previous year, to make arrangements for the celebration of the next annual anniversary, was held at the Hibernia Bank building on Wednesday last. The committee heretofore appointed made their several reports, which were read and accepted; whereupon it was unanimously resolved that a dinner would be given at the Occidental Hotel on the evening of St. Patrick's day. From the spirit and enthusiasm manifested on the occasion by those present, there is no doubt the dinner will be on a scale of magnificence worthy of the Irishmen of San Francisco.

FOURTEEN persons died from small-pox last week.

The Alta is a Theological Reformer.

Our reverend contemporary on California street has taken up the theological cudgels in defence of Protestantism against Dr. [illegible] of New York, an Episcopalian clergyman, whose onslaughts upon the mis-called "reformation" and its fruits have excited considerable attention in the East. Last Sunday's Alta contained an article on the subject, which for driveling silliness and the amusing gravity with which it tries to prove a point entirely beside the question, was highly characteristic of that ponderous journal. Dr. Ewer's lectures on the failure of Protestantism we have not read, but we gather from the Alta that he accuses Protestantism of being a religious failure, because it leads directly to unbelief in revelation, and because it exercises no religious influence on the masses. Regarding the "Reformation" from a Christian standpoint, we presume that the Doctor judges it by the standard of Christianity that he asks how far it has been instrumental in impressing a belief in the Christian revelation and the observance of the laws of Christian morality upon mankind, and that finding its only real effect has been to lead men to utterly disbelieve or ignore Christianity, he naturally pronounces it a failure. Of the truth of his judgment, none acquainted with the utter indifference to all religion of the masses of the English people, the less stolid, but scarcely less strongly marked want of faith among the bulk of non-Catholic Americans, and the spread of rationalism among even the Protestant clergy of Germany, can well doubt; but it is not with facts such as these that the Alta grapples. The manner in which it handles the question is strongly suggestive of the reasoning in vogue at old ladies' tea-parties, when some novel opinion is brought up for discussion. "Dear me," exclaims the California street oracle, "how can any one call Protestantism a failure when the people that profess it (for the greatest portion, it must be confessed, do so without any very clear idea of what they do profess) are all so rich and respectable? Is it not as clear as noon-day that a religion which has been professed by the greatest nations of the world cannot be a failure?" The Alta unconsciously to be convincing to those who believe that the enjoyment of the good things in this world is the surest passport to Heaven in the next; but unless the Alta's edition of the New Testament contains a special emendation of the text about the difficulty of a rich man's entering Heaven, it is a curious one to bring forward in defense of a system calling itself a Christian religion. Did the triumphs of the Roman arms in the ancient world prove the truth of the Roman Paganism, or did the wealth of the Pagan Empire, its rich literature, its matchless art and its heroic traditions of war-like deeds and deep statecraft, overcome the poverty of the fishermen of Galilee and the ignominy of Calvary. That a professed defender of any form of Christianity should borrow arguments from the apologists of ancient paganism, and arguments, too, of whose worthlessness the Cross, which towers so proudly over conquered Rome, is the irrefragible proof, is too great a pitch of absurdity for even the Alta to proceed to; but our contemporary's blunders do not stop there. Even the prosperity which it claims for its peasage is woefully at variance with facts. So far from the Protestant countries of Europe being, in proportion to their population, the wealthiest and most powerful or their power dating from the era of the Reformation, the contrary is the case. The England of Edward the Third and Henry the Fifth was more powerful in relation to her European neighbors than is the England of the present day. The German Catholic Empire of the Hohenstaufens and Saxon emperors occupied a far more important place in Europe than the new Confederacy of Bismarck, and Prussia, as statistics show, is at present behind France or Belgium in material prosperity. As to he supposed hostility of Protestantism to ecclesiastical authority, despotism and a union of Church and State, it is a little too absurd. Is it possible that our contemporary's years have taught it so little that it is not aware that in every important Protestant State the Sovereign is the head of the Church; that in England, Prussia and Sweden, the Church is a mere dependent of the State, and that finally, it is only Protestant Sweden and Mechlenburg that, in company with Russia, still refuses to grant religious liberty to their subjects. As for the claptrap of Protestantism, having "stopped the sale of indulgences and corrected many great abuses," it is too stale and has been too often refuted to deserve more than a passing notice. Nevertheless, in spite of the anti-Catholic bigotry displayed by the reverend clergy employed to preach against the pretended corruptions of a good cause he feel amongst themselves, the cause is undoubtedly far greater than that of his predecessor in office; and his military training may render him more likely to try an appeal to arms to settle the question. In any case, his first official speech, as we may call it, gives promise of an energetic presidency, and we shall await its further developments with an interest mixed with both hope and fear.

The Gas Monopoly.

Monopolies and soulless corporations are one of the growing evils of the country, and San Francisco is favored with even more than her share of them. Two of the necessaries of city life are in the hands of companies whose power of putting the screw on the pockets of the citizens is apparently only limited by the capacity of the said pockets, as there who have to pay gas and water bills know only too well. It is not merely private citizens that suffer from these monopolies, but the public at large, as the scanty allowance of gas to our lamps and our illushed sewers can testify. The corporations are not more liberal in their dealing with the city than with the citizens; they know their power as monopolists, and they use it against the public and individuals alike. One of the coolest instances of this spirit is the refusal of the Gas Company to make any contract for lighting the city for a less period than five years, and their endeavors to get one for no less than fifteen. Considering the present state of science, the number of substitutes for gas as a lighting agent that are already known, and the almost certainty of others being speedily discovered, the offer of the company to furnish gas for fifteen years to the city is about as modest as that of the editor of a newly-started Western journal, who offered a reasonable reduction on subscription rates in consideration of ten years' payment in advance. Even the shorter term of five years is altogether too long to enter into a contract in such a matter. Fortunately, a new company has applied for the privileges necessary for supplying gas to the city, so that there is hope that in that article, at least, we shall be no longer left at the mercy of a monopoly, so that we trust no contract will be made that would place the new company at a disadvantage whenever it is ready to commence its operations.

St. Vincent de Paul Society.

Following is the annual report of the St. Patrick's Conference of the Society of Saint Vincent de Paul. This society has relieved an immense amount of distress since its establishment here a few years since. Following are the reports:

PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

TO THE MEMBERS OF ST. PATRICK'S CONFERENCE OF THE SOCIETY OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL:—Ladies and Gentlemen: It is my duty and privilege to submit to you the following report of the condition of the Conference of St. Vincent de Paul in this city during the year 1868. The number of visits admitted has been thirty; two per cent greater than during the previous year, as in other words the growth of the institution and the enlarged sphere of utility which is now occupies. The total number admitted was sixty-six, eleven of whom are forty-nine were discharged, and three are still under treatment. The mortality of the year has been eight, for which they were treated and the cause of death in each case are described in the items accompanying list. We omit the list as being of no consequence to the public, and the proportion of the deaths that occurred were the result of pulmonary consumption—a disease which is usually far advanced before those afflicted by it are brought under the influence of this society. Leaving out of consideration all expenditures for fuel, groceries, &c., which are compared with the admissions, only amounted to one dollar and forty-nine cents, we have every reason for entire satisfaction with the excellent management of the Sisters of Charity in charge of the Infirmary, their admirable care of the sick, and the attention paid to the sanitary arrangements so important to health, but so often neglected in the dwellings of the poor. I have the honor, ladies and gentlemen, to remain respectfully, Attending Physician of St. V. de P.'s Infirmary, San Francisco, Jan. 1, 1869.

CONFERENCE'S STATEMENT.

1866—No. of persons relieved.....2,616
Amount expended.....$2,076 70
1867—No. of persons relieved.....3,726
Amount expended.....$2,449 96
1868—No. of persons relieved.....2,997
Amount expended.....$2,909 92

DAVID LAPPEUS, Secretary.

The foregoing table shows that $7,439 55 were expended in relieving the necessities of 6,956 persons.

LADIES' CONFERENCE.

1866—No. of persons relieved.....1,626
Amount expended.....$719 17
1867—No. of persons relieved.....1,631
Amount expended.....$1,732 41
1868—No. of persons relieved.....1,660
Amount expended.....$2,232 30

The Conference beg to acknowledge the receiving of two years' donation of seeds from Messrs. R. O'Neil, M. O'Brien and others.

Rev. Thomas Ingoldsby, President.
Miss Louisa Lannan, Secretary.
Miss Hussey, Treasurer.

The Ladies' Conference expended $1,679 78, and cared for 6,607 persons.

Brief City Items.

JUDGE SAWYER sustained the Eight-Hour law in so far as it relates to street contracts.

LEFT FOR MEXICO.—We understand that Augustine Guerrero, who shot Mr. Harry Logan some weeks since in a saloon on Montgomery street, left his ranch at Half-Moon Bay about ten days ago, in a small boat, and succeeded in obtaining transportation to Mexico by a passing vessel.

WILLIAM GARDEN SMITH and Thomas Savage, indicted for the murder of Commander John G. Mitchell, on the 21st of Oct. last, were arraigned for trial before Judge Sawyer, of the Fourth District Court, on the 15th inst.

THE suit of Mary J. Kete against Paul Valentine, for $10,000 damages, claimed for breach of promise of marriage and seduction, which has been on trial in the Fourth District Court since the 8th inst., terminated at a late hour on the 10th, the jury rendering a verdict awarding the plaintiff the full amount claimed.

THE residents on outside lands, justly getting alarmed at the large and partial assessment made by the Outside Land Committee of the Board of Supervisors, have organized a league to resist the collection of the assessment. The tax (10½ per cent.) is enormous; and has been unequally levied—many of the lots being assessed for more than they would bring at private sale, while others have been passed at less than one-third their market value.

FENIANISM.—Mr. John Hamil, State Centre of O'Neil wing of the Fenian Brotherhood here, has received a sample of the new breech-loading rifles with which the Brotherhood are supplied. It is the old Springfield rifle altered to a needle breech-loader, thereby rendering the opposite of the former with the quickness of loading and firing of the latter. It is considered a very excellent gun, and capable of firing eighteen shots a minute. They are being manufactured by the Brotherhood in their own armories in the East, and the Order throughout the States will be supplied with them in a short time.

CORRUPT OFFICIALS.—At a meeting of the Democratic Union on the evening of the 11th, a gentleman there present said, he "knew of two officials in the city who stole no more money daily, than would pay the salaries of all the Judges in the State. These parties have so many lacquers and hangers-on that the people are afraid to expose them. There is perhaps no city in the Union which has more need of a thorough cleansing officially than San Francisco. Men defrauded in various ways out of small moneys, varying from $10 to $20, cannot afford to pay lawyers' fees to recover such a small amount. The unscrupulous use of the machinery of organization should keep itself entirely aloof from politics, and then it will be a success.

ANOTHER GAS COMPANY!—On Saturday last, the City Gas Company filed articles of incorporation with the County Clerk. The object is to erect gas works, lay down mains, and furnish to the citizens of San Francisco. Capital stock, $10,000,000, divided into one hundred thousand shares. Term of existence, fifty years. Place of business, San Francisco. Trustees: A. Hayward, [illegible] Fernandez, [illegible] Ward, and Henry C. Robinson. Our worthy City Fathers should look after this unconscionable job. Gas companies are becoming a perfect nuisance, while the men whose charge the destinies of the nation are entrusted, conduct themselves, unrebuked in a manner more befitting the prize ring than a legislative assembly.

General Grant on his side has at last broken through his accustomed taciturn habits and made some plain statements, in reference to his future policy, with the tone of a man who knows his own mind and intends to act according to it. He evidently appreciates the gravity of the present situation of the country, and declares that the revenue must be honestly collected, and the unbridled extravagance of the public expenditures be reduced within reasonable limits, if he can effect it. On another point, the removal of dishonest or incapable officials, he is not less explicit, and he declares that he will make no difference between his own appointees and those of his predecessors if either should fail in the discharge of their duty. As the tenure of law is still in force and its repeal by no means certain, the General's declaration looks like an open defiance of Congress, but we can hardly think he would venture on such a step at the very commencement of his presidential career. However, even if he should not proceed to such a length as to act in defiance of the existing tenure law, he and Congress are not likely to work in harmony. Grant as a soldier and a man is accustomed to go the shortest way to his end, and as he has made up his mind to reform the financial state of the country, we may look out for collisions between him and the politicians and wire-pullers who wield such power in Congress. The task before him is a far more difficult one than the capture of Vicksburg or Richmond. An increasing expenditure has to be brought within reasonable bounds, the corruption of thousands of subordinate officials has to be remedied, the influence of the numerous rings which have been so long growing rich on the spoils of the country has to be overcome, and all this with the supreme power in the hands of almost identically the same Congress that has allowed such abuses to exist since the war. The General, undoubtedly, has public opinion on his side, but the substantial power is on the side of Congress, and it is context occure between them it is difficult to foresee what its results may be. Between the soldier who, in spite of his no-policy declaration, evidently has a reform policy of his own and means to carry it out, and the Congress which has given so unfavorable a specimen of its inclination to reform, issues must arise, and no one can say which is likely to give way. If Grant's policy should con-

In Memoriam (Mrs Margaret Mahoney)

[FOR THE MONITOR.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

True register of Christian grace!
Fair crown of deathless fame!
And fitting epitaph to know
Beneath the sculptured stone,
Where follow with unfeigned tread
The footsteps of their Lord.
In rain forth showed every golden prize,
For there 'twas worthless dross,
And sought could there thy steadfast eyes
From Truth's unfading cross?
For Wisdom lent her all divine,
And his pure glance could see
The music of that dawning sign,
"All else is vanity."
Rare feelings rich thy precious life
By blest example taught—
By deeds with Duty's fragrance rife,
With Heaven's sweetness fraught.
The stricken hearts in anguish bowed,
The eyes that weep with pity,
Yet see the stars within the cloud,
The hope o'er the grave,
The light reflected from thy crown,
The pure and peaceful ray,
Sent from the home of brightness down
To guide their lonely way.
Sweet memory of thy virtues shrined
The pall of woe hereafter,
Bright garland of thy graces, twined
With flowers of cypress wreath.
Tis in thy legacy of love
A comfort clothes the tomb—
These are the star beams from above,
Still shining through the gloom.
And those shall deck the golden stair
O'er which thy loved shall tread,
To claim, with thee, their places fair
Among the blessed dead.

MARIE

[We republish the above, hoping some annoying typographical errors marred its beauty last week.]

Weekly Telegraphic Summary.

EASTERN.

The report is current and generally believed in Washington that Secretary Seward will be Secretary of State in the new Cabinet. The Eastern Radicals are reported to be very indignant at this announcement.

The South American Republics on the Pacific coast have agreed to accept the mediation of the United States in regard to their war with Spain, and a congress of agents plenipotentiary from the belligerents is expected to meet in Washington next spring.

The President has confirmed Sanford Conover, sentenced to five years' imprisonment for perjury, because Conover has given Government important information.

Kerlinger, a banker of Peru, and the town of Peru has been totally destroyed by the shocks.

The Mayor of [illegible], Virginia, has suspended the Chief of Police of that city from office for his action in preventing the holding of Republican meetings.

Senator Stewart has introduced a bill declaring the naturalization of all persons of foreign birth, who have ever participated in the rebellion, and who now are or shall hereafter become permanent residents of the country, and who desire to become citizens.

Senator Sumner objected to the word "white" in the bill.

Senator Cole has introduced a bill granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Yreka to the nearest connect with the Southern Pacific Railroad.

The bulls and bears of the New York gold room are engaged in a fierce fight; they have had more than [illegible] millions of gold sold and delivered, and the price is much more believed to be involved—has been staked in the game. Four brokers are daily borrowing twelve millions of gold. A powerful clique in opposition is trying to corner the shorts, and have already secured fifteen millions. A grand crash is expected within the next twelve months.

Mysterious movements are supposed for Cuba—are reported from various points on the Georgia and Florida coast.

The New Iowa Legislature have resolved that they will "cut loose from Sheridan O'Brien and his thieves," they recommend the judges and supreme court of the State of Iowa be impeached.

O'Brien swears that he will not hang the real murderer of the policeman Sindral, but will suffer imprisonment for life, and be compelled to his constituents.

A tooth-some debate took place in the House of Representatives on Tuesday evening between Eldridge, of Wisconsin, and Schenck of Ohio, in which Eldridge declared, by intimated that the Chairman of the House Committee of Ways and Means belonged to a swindling society.

Robinson, of New York, said in the House on Tuesday evening that all the retrenchment and reform preached at the last session of Congress so far consisted in cutting off reporters and stationery supplies.

The House has refused, further debate, the proposition for the annexation of San Domingo.

OTTAWA (ONTARIO), Feb. 11th.—Whelan was hanged to-day at 11.15. He made a statement last night that he was present when McGee was murdered, but did not fire the shot. Mrs. McGee has written a letter to Whelan, and freely forgives him. Whelan died firmly; exclaiming with his last words: "God save Ireland! God save my soul!"

NEW YORK, Feb. 16th.—The Pneumatic Dispatch Company has been engaged tunnelling under Broadway for about three weeks. Their progress is very slow, not over two inches being made daily.

Louis Cornell has probably succeed Frank Soule as Collector of Internal Revenue for San Francisco. B. F. White, recommended by Mr. Sargent, will probably be Surveyor of Office, though Colonel Coey's claims are urged. The Senate will probably confirm the recommended Mr. Buckbee, of Plumas, but their power has been destroyed by a recent resolution of the Senate for a position to be the Cabinet. B. C. Whiting wants to be Mint Superintendent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15th.—In the Supreme Court to-day, Chief Justice Chase decided that gold contracts must be satisfied with coin. Seven Republican Senators are mentioned legal tenders are lawful. Justice Davis and Sawyer gave a qualified assent to the opinion, but Justice Miller dissented.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16th.—It is said in a debate in the Senate Committee on Foreign affairs, to-day, on the Alabama treaty, not a single man was in favor of its ratification.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 16th.—A special says the remains of Wilkes Booth were not interred there yesterday, but will be to-day. The skeleton has been put in a metallic coffin. Hundreds of people viewed the remains yesterday. Nothing but bones are left. There is a disposition to get up a demonstration, but the family bitterly oppose it. The remains will be buried alongside his father.

LOUISVILLE, February 17th.—Aaron Jones, the pugilist, died yesterday.

James Hawks, S. A. Griffin, Charles Hendle, James McCraig, Daniel R. Hamblin, and T. H. Ward, have been appointed Assistant Assessors of the Fourth District Internal Revenue of California.

Harvey Brown is here and waits the Attorneyship. Talley is shead and will.

EUROPEAN.

DUBLIN, February 13th.—Over one hundred thousand signatures were on the Mayor's petition for a [illegible]

MADRID, February 11th.—Carnicas are active in the House of Deputies.

France is assessing the frontier closely, and yesterday arrested twenty-eight Carlists attempting to cross. They were sent to Havanna.

LONDON, February 10th.—The Conservatives are making preparations to carry on a vigorous opposition in Parliament. Lord Cairns will replace Earl Malmesbury as leader in the House of Lords.

PARIS, February 10th.—Walewski has left Athens on his return to this city. He is bearer of a satisfactory reply from the Greek Government on all points to the proposals of the Paris Conference.

Pacific Coast Summary.

California.

DR. B. D. HART, of Tuolumne City, committed suicide on the 8th inst.

THE festival for the benefit of the Catholic Church in Placerville on the 8th and 9th inst., netted over $100.

SEVENTY-FIVE thousand dollars have already been subscribed for the purpose of building a railroad between Santa Cruz and Salinas Valley.

CROPS, ETC.—We have advices from different parts of the county stating that the wheat crop is generally looking well for this season of the year. So far it seems to have withstood the winter with but little injury, and should it meet with no mishaps there is a very fair prospect for an abundant yield.—Santa Cruz Sentinel.

AMADOR.—The Ledger of Feb. 13th says: On Saturday last, Thomas Guirk, residing at Iron Hill, in this county, was instantly killed by being caved on while at work in his claim. Deceased was an industrious miner, much respected by those who knew him, and leaves a wife and family in his native country, Ireland.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—About six p. m. yesterday, a shooting affray occurred in the Lafayette Hotel, between Chas. V. Howard, a prominent lawyer, and Daniel H. Nesbet, which resulted in the death of Mr. Howard, and the serious, if not fatal, wounding of Nesbet. [From Hon. F. B. Chapman, direct from Prescott, we learn that the command of Captain Young was attacked on the 27th of January, between the Willows and Prescott, by Indians. The command consisted of one hundred and forty men. The attack was made in the night, by three hundred Indians, who succeeded in running off the pack-train belonging to the command.

THE MOUNTAIN COUNTIES.—Some of the journals of these counties, once so prosperous, complain that they see now signs of decay. It is not, however, because their resources have become exhausted, that this condition of affairs is produced. There is not one of those counties, once so prolific in gold produced from the surface diggings, but has still untold wealth in and beneath the surface. The causes which have produced the lethargy for those interested. It is true the surface diggings are exhausted in many and many of the hydraulic mines; but of the latter there still remain many thousands of acres that can be worked for gold with profit, and when capitalists will be induced to invest in the business, as they will, there will

Have Courage to say No.

You're starting in day on life's journey,
Alone on the high way of life;
You'll meet with a thousand temptations;
Each one with evil is rife.
This world is a stage of excitement;
There's danger wherever you go;
But if you are tempted to say wrong,
Have courage, my boy, to say No.

The syren's sweet song may allure you;
Beware of her cunning and art;
Whatever you see her approaching,
Be guarded and haste to depart.
The billiard saloon are inviting,
Do not set in their insel and show;
You may be invited to enter;
Have courage, my boy, to say No.

The bright ruby wine may be offered—
No matter how tempting it be,
From poison that stings like an adder,
My boy, have the courage to flee.
The gambling halls are before you,
Their lights now they dance to and fro,
If you should be tempted to enter,
Think twice, stop, retrace, we pray go.

In courage alone lies your safety
When you the long journey begin,
And truth is a Heavenly Father
Who will keep you unspotted from sin.
Temptations will go on increasing
As streams from a rivulet flow,
But if you are true to your manhood,
Have courage, my boy, to say No.

Something about "Common Schools."

For there is much more to be said on this subject. Heart and soul, and on principle—and perhaps, at times with bitterness—we oppose the common school system.

In a country of infidels, it would be a proper system. Among a people indifferent to all particular forms of Christianity, it would be an admirable system. But here, and nothing in our midst, we denounce the system as unjust, no matter what or how many so called laws may be urged in its defense; as immoral in its tendencies, no matter what sophisms, misnamed arguments, may be advanced in its favor; as irreligious in its character and consequences, no matter how loudly its advocates may boast of its apparent benefits; as injurious to the well being of society, no matter how it may be lauded as the main means of social progress, as one of the supreme landmarks of the day, which, because it is a humong, has taken such deep hold on shallow people.

At first, it is an unjust system. All are taxed for educational purposes; to all, directly or indirectly, in greater degree or in less, should flow the benefits of the tax. The tax is general; in the enforcing of it there is no religious discrimination made. But in the acting of the tax there is religious discrimination. And that discrimination is not accidental—it is intentional. The text-books used, the rules and regulations, the details of the system, are anti Catholic. Thus the Catholics of the country are forced to pay school-taxes, the only benefit from which accrues to others. Not only this, they have a double tax to pay, in fact, for in maintaining, in order that their children may be insulted with calumnies against their Church—which calumnies they must learn day by day—these calumnies being an essential element in the common school education. That is, a Catholic is obliged to pay taxes in order to advance anti-Catholic education. Where is the justice of such taxation? Catholics paying taxes for the benefit of Protestantism!—the money of Catholics expended for the purchase of books bitterly hostile to their faith! If that be justice the word must have changed its meaning. The system may be in accordance with law, so called, but it is certainly at variance with "the law which is written in the heart." Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

That system is immoral in its tendencies; for the simple reason that, just when the young minds need most of religion to mould their thoughts, they receive as little of religion as possible, and that little itself is sectarian. The system boasts of being liberal to all forms of religion. Liberality to all is indifference to each; indifference to each begets a strong family resemblance to infidelity. They look like brothers. The system rejects religious influence; or, at least, employs such influence as sparingly as a miser does his money. And yet the system pretends to educate—to educate the whole man—and, at the same time, banishes just what man needs the most, the most essential element of true education—Religion. It fills the head with smatterings of this, that and the other thing, but it leaves the heart void of religion. A heart void of Religion will soon be filled—we need not say with what.—Banner of the South.

WONDERFUL NATURAL PROVISION.—In the struggle for life which is going on perpetually throughout the whole of the animal kingdom, it is interesting to observe the wonderful provisions which Nature makes for the preservation of the weaker and more helpless animals. In many cases the color of the creature is so adapted in a wonderful way to its mode of living and place of concealment, and contributes very materially to its safety. Why, says the Herald of Wonders, know how difficult it is to distinguish the grasshopper from the leaf or blade where he is resting, till he betrays himself by moving. The birds that sing in the hedgerows have feathers on their backs which harmonize with the color of the leaves about which they flit, while the feathers on their breast borrow the white hue of the clouds above them. The partridge can hardly be distinguished from the stubble where it makes its nest, while in the northern countries the winter dress of the hare and ptarmigan is white, like the snow among which they are seen. The same is the case with the inhabitants of the water. The frogs which live in the pools and muddy ditches are known to vary their color according to the nature of the sand or mud among which they live. The tree-frog, on the other hand, is green, and thus is with difficulty distinguished from the trees to which it adheres. Fish, especially those which inhabit fresh water, are so like in color to the weeds and stones among which they lie, that it is often very difficult to detect their presence.

Sunday all the Week.

Our Catholic brethren have set us at least one good example; their churches are not as silent as the tomb on week days. Their worshippers do not do up all their religion on Sunday, eh! may be only for a few moments that they step in through that open church door on a week day, to kneel and lay down a burden too heavy else to be borne. I like the custom. I should rather say, I like the reminder, and the opportunity thus afforded them; and I heartily wish that all our Protestant churches could thus be opened. If rich Christians object to the promiscuous use of their velvet cushions and gilded prayer books, at least let the aisles and the altar be free for those who need God on the week days—for the poor, the tried, the tempted—for those who shrink in their shabby habiliments from the Sunday exhibition of fine toilettes and superfine Christianity. Were I a minister, and obliged to preach to paniers and diamonds, and satins, on Sunday, I think I should have to ease my heart in some such way as this to make my pastoral life endurable, else my office would seem to me the most hollow of all mockeries. "The rich and the poor meet together, and the Lord is the Maker of them all!" should be inscribed outside my church door, had I one. I would not preach to those passions and their owners. My tongue would be paralyzed at the sight of those kneeling distortions of womanhood, bearing such a resemblance to organ grinders' monkeys. I am not sure that I should not grow hysterical over it, and laugh and cry in the same breath, instead of preaching. I can never tell what vent my disgust would take, but I am sure that it must have some escape valve. You may say that such worshippers (Heaven save the mark!) need preaching to; I tell you that women, so given over to the devil and all his works, are past praying for—"having eyes they see not, having ears they hear not." They are ossified—monstrous: they are D-ad Sea apples, full of ashes. There, now I feel better.

Having alluded to our Roman Catholic friends, we cannot forbear to ask leave of them to have the cross surmounting all our Protestant churches unless they have taken out a patent for the right to use it. I envy me, this symbol, as I pass along our streets. It rests my heart to look at it amid the turmoil, and din, and hurry, and bustle, and cares, and sorrowful faces, and, worse than all, the empty faces that I meet. I say to myself—there is truth there, I am a Protestant minister, the dear cross shall be on my church, and nobody shall stay away from it because they are too ragged or poor, or because the cushions are too nice. Oh, I like Catholicism for that. They are nearer Heaven than Protestants on this point.—FANNY FERN.

Carew, the Irish Sculptor.

There lately died in London at the patriarchal age of eighty-six, an Irishman of remarkable genius, who deserves only acquired fame in his country which he chose as the field of his labors. We refer to John Edward Carew, a native of Tramore, county Waterford, who, as a sculptor, added much to the national honors which Irish talent has won for the "old land." Several of Carew's productions adorn public buildings in England. Among these we may specially name the fine statue of Grattan in St. Stephen's Hall, the main approach to the houses of Parliament. The relievo representing the death of Nelson, on the Nelson Column, in Trafalgar Square, was modelled by Carew in less than six weeks. Among the other works of this gifted artist, we may enumerate the alto relievo, "Virgin and Child," in the Column of Old Hall; the "Prometheus and Pandora," the "Aesthisa," and other statues in the Petworth Gallery; the colossal "Whittington," at the Royal Exchange, the monuments to Mrs. Fitzherbert and the Rev. Mr. Cullen, at the Catholic Church, Brighton; fine altar-pieces in the Catholic churches of Brighton and of Warwick street, London, and many other productions of great merit. Carew exhibited on several occasions, at the Royal Academy, works which were very much admired; his last being busts of Lady O. Fane and Orn. Sale. He enjoyed the friendship of the leading artists of his time, and also of many eminent statesmen, including Wellington and Peel. He spent a great many years in early life in Wexford, where his amiable qualities won him many friends, and although he was obliged, for professional reasons, to fix his residence in England, he always showed an affectionate regard for his native land. He was a self-taught genius, and the correct harmony of his features of an astonished his medical friends. He could not bear to be tied down strictly to rules, and (like Angelo) he often, when chiseling the marble, made alterations from the plaster model. Carew was, by religion, a Catholic. He possessed qualities which will long endear his memory to those who had the pleasure to possess his friendship.—Dublin Freeman.

P. J. CAREW. PETER W. HAVE.

CASEY & WADE,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,

Graining,

MARBLING AND ORNAMENTAL PAINTING

No. 715 MARKET STREET,

Paints, Oil, Varnishes, Glass, Gold Leaf, Brushes, Glue & Kind Paints.

Special Attention paid to Country Orders.

EDUCATIONAL.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,

SAN JOSE, CAL.

TERMS.

Entrance, to be paid but once ..... $10 00
Board and Tuition, per quarter ..... 60 00
Washing, per quarter ..... 12 00
Physician's fee, if required to be preferred to pay the Bill in case of sickness, per quarter ..... 2 50
Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges, but there is no extra charge for the French, Spanish or German Languages, nor for plain sewing and fancy needle work.
Payments are required to be made half a session in advance. Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session. 1728 tf

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers.

COURSE OF STUDIES.

Commercial

Penmanship, Orthography, Composition, Epistolary Correspondence, Bookkeeping, Mercantile Calculations, Arithmetic, Mensuration, Book-keeping, Commercial Law and Modern Languages.

Scientific

English Literature, Rhetoric, Political Economy, Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Chemical Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Botany, Physiology, Mineralogy, Civil Engineering, Surveying, Mechanical Philosophy, Mechanical Drawing, Architectural Drawing, Moral Philosophy, Logic, Metaphysics, Natural Theology, Evidences of Christianity, Ecclesiastical History, Canon Law and Liturgy.

Classical.

The Classical course embraces the ordinary studies pursued in our best Colleges and Universities.

For the benefit of those who may not have the time to go through the full course of Classical Literature, short but complete Business Courses have been established.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR, Payable half yearly in advance.

Board, Tuition, Washing, per session ..... $250 00
Bed and Bedding, per session ..... 10 00
Physician's Fee, if required ..... 10 00
Day Students ..... 60 00
Washing and Mending, per month ..... 2 00
Music and Drawing, $5 per Month. ..... 1727 1f

CONVENT,

SONOMA, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS of St. Dominic and is situated in the most delightful and healthy locality in Sonoma county.

The system of education pursued in this Academy is the same as that pursued in the Mother House of the Order in San Francisco, comprising ten months and a half session on the 20th of August, and ends the first week in July. No deduction will be made if the pupil is with drawn during the session except in case of sickness. Pupils will be received at any time, from the first of entrance.

The accommodations for females, in Winter, will be blank at yarn, white cotton, calls, black silk apron, white straw bonnet, trimmed with white, green veil, and black lisle gloves. For the Summer uniform, subject to be changed at the Institution.

TERMS PER ANNUM—Payable half yearly in advance.

Board and Tuition ..... $150 00
Washing, per month ..... 1 50
Washing ..... 40 00
Physician's fee, if required ..... 10 00
Bed and Bedding, if required to be furnished by the Institution, to be repaid half yearly ..... 10 00
Stationery, to be paid for when required ..... 5 00
Music, including use of Instrument ..... 20 00
Drawing and Painting ..... 10 00
Use of Instrument ..... 5 00
Parents will pay for additional attendance and supply their children with clothing, etc. No extra charge.
For further particulars apply to
B. FREEMAN, O.P., President. 1727 tf

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE, Cal.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS ACADEMY commences on the first Monday in August. The Course of Studies will be the same as by a variety of Active who, in Europe and the Atlantic States, have given to the Institution a high rank among kinds of youth a solid and lasting education, and the most judicious training. Particular attention will be given to the formation of character, habits of order and neatness, as the future ornaments of society; in a word, to whatever can form the hearts of the pupils to the practice of the primary object of the Sisters of Notre Dame. The health of children is the most lively part of Mary Ann. The building is large, commodious and well ventilated.

The physical welfare of the pupils constantly receives the maternal attention of the Sisters. The air is pure and the climate mild. The greatest attention is paid to the cleanliness and health of the children. They are treated with the same care as a mother. Bathing in the river is not allowed, except when the weather is extremely hot, and is always adapted to the age and capacity of the pupils. Also every precaution is taken to prevent contagious and all diseases.

The course of studies is English, but the French, German and Spanish languages being spoken by many of the teachers, the pupils have every facility to perfect those natives in those languages.

TERMS

PER QUARTER, IN ADVANCE.

Board, Tuition, Washing, per session ..... $175 00

EXTRA CHARGES.

Piano with use of instrument, per quarter ..... $15 00
Violin ..... 15 00
Vocal Music, per quarter ..... 10 00
Drawing and Painting, per quarter ..... 10
For further information apply to the Sister Superior, Academy of Notre Dame, Marysville, Cal.

MUSIC FOR PIANO FORTE.

Senior Class, per month ..... $0 50
Junior and Second Elementary, per month, each ..... 0 40
Primary ..... 0 30
Use of Instrument ..... 0 50
Extra charges in proportion as above. The fees should be paid in advance, at the commencement of the month. 1727 tf

ST. IGNATIUS' COLLEGE, S. J.,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THIS LITERARY INSTITUTION, CONFECTED BY the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, after having successfully passed through the ordeal of public trials, it was inaugurated, and now is in the full tide of success. The Faculty of the College is empowered to confer degrees in the Arts, Letters and Sciences.

The design of the Institution is to give a thorough Classical, Mathematical and Philosophical Education.

The course of study embraces the Greek, Latin and English languages, History, Rhetoric, Poetry, Natural Geography, Arithmetic, Book keeping, Mathematics, Surveying, Navigation, Mechanical Philosophy, Astronomy, Chemistry, Moral Philosophy, Logic, Metaphysics, Natural Theology, Evidences of Christianity, Ecclesiastical History, Canon Law and Liturgy.

The French Language is not obligatory.

The Commercial Department, however, there is a Preparatory Department, in which pupils are carefully taught Spelling, Reading, Writing, and the elements of the grammar and Arithmetic.

The Classical Academic classes are at present open for pupils of all denominations.

The Academic year commences on the first Monday in AUGUST, and ends on the last Thursday in JUNE.

TERMS PER MONTH, IN ADVANCE:

Tuition in Grammar Department ..... $5 00
Higher Department ..... 8 00
Use of Bed and Bedding ..... 1 00
1727 1f

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

THE SECOND SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, conducted by the Franciscan Fathers, will commence on the 15th of August, 1868.

The object of the last institution is to give a good English Mathematical, Classical and Commercial education, and this is not a question confined to small long felt in California and Spanish speaking people within the limits of its influence.

TERMS—PAYABLE INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

Entrance fee (to be paid but once) ..... $ 5 00
Tuition, Board and Washing, per month ..... 20 00
Payable with one half for additional attendance and supply their children with clothing, etc. No extra charge.
For further particulars apply to
B. FREEMAN, O.S.F., President. 1727 tf

Prospectus

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THE PUBLIC GENERALLY AND RESPECTFULLY informed that the magnificent NEW COLLEGE is completed, and now ready for the reception of students.

The Institution is conducted by the Fathers of the Congregation of the Mission, founded by St. Vincent de Paul; a full and competent staff of Rev. Professors are in charge of the same, whose unwearied zeal and calling to promote the health, happiness, moral and intellectual advancement of the students are guaranteed to their care.

The superior qualities of the building—solid, spacious and well ventilated; the grounds extensive, airy and healthy, combining the cool and comfortable retreat; a full GYMNASTIC APPARATUS which will afford the students ample means for healthful recreation; the proverbial salubrity of the climate—cannot fail to recommend this College as the most eligible educational establishment on the Pacific Coast.

The College is open to all students who come respectably recommended, provided they comply with the rules and discipline of the Institution, which, though strict, are nevertheless mild and parental.

STUDIES.

The curriculum of studies embraces a full course of English and Classical literature, comprising English Grammar, Rhetoric, Poetry, Composition, Elocution, Geography, History, Arithmetic, Algebra, Geometry, Book-keeping; Ancient Languages—Latin and Greek; Modern—Spanish, French and German; Commercial Department, to prepare young men for every branch of business, will receive special care.

TERMS:

For Board, Lodging and Tuition, for scholastic year or ten months ..... $250 00
Washing, and mending of linen ..... 20 00
To be paid half yearly, invariably in advance.
Physician's fee, if required ..... 10 00
Deduction made for absence, except in cases of sickness or dismissal.
Clothing, Books, Stationery, etc., are supplied by the students themselves.
The scholastic year begins the first Monday in September, and ends the last week in June.
A charge of $30 will be required of those who spend the vacations in the College. For further information apply to
REV. JAMES McGILL, C. M., 1727 1f President.

Special Notice.

W. R. HIGGINS,

NUMBER 942 THIRD STREET,

(West side) Between Howard and Folsom Streets

W. R. HIGGINS having been for the last seven years employed as Machinist in the well known firm of Wheeler & Wilson's Sewing Machine establishment, corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, is thereby has gone against his own story, and guarantees to give entire satisfaction to his patrons in every branch of Purchasing, Repairing and Cleaning all descriptions of Sewing Machines, on the most economical terms and shortest notice. 1727 1f ☞ Machines always on hand, for sale or for hire by the month.

DRS.

R. H. McDONALD,

SECOND STREET, BET. MINA AND FREMONT STREETS.

Office hours—From 8 to 10 A. M., 1 to 3 and 7 to 8 P. M.

MATTHEW McMAHILL, Proprietor.

SECOND STREET EXCHANGE,

No. 128 Second st., cor. Minna,

San Francisco.

JOHN SCULLY HAS CONSTANTLY ON HAND and for sale, Old Tom, Jamaica Rum, Brandies, Wines, Sherries, and all the choicest brands of Champagne, Alsyle Jack, Ports, Absent, Cordials, Liquors, etc.

☞ Oysters in every Style. 1728 6m

DICKEY,

PIONEER APOTHECARY,

Junction Market, Ellis, Stockton and Fourth Streets.

Specialty—Reliability and Moderate Prices in Prescriptions in English, French or German, carefully compounded. 3012

E. F. Smith,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

316 Bush street, San Francisco.

BUYS AND SELLS REAL ESTATE. NEGOTIATES Loans, Insures Houses and Vessels, Collects Rents, Pays Taxes, Attends to Sales at Auction, Examines Titles, Procures Deeds, Mortgages, Leases, Bonds, Powers of Attorney, Agreements, Partnerships, Bills of Sale, Receipts, Releases, Notices, Etc., Etc. Has Blanks for sale. Has Plans and Specifications of Buildings prepared. Has Houses and Lots in the Southern Addition and Mission Homestead Association. Has Lands in the Southern Pacific Railroad Grant. Has Lots in the Central Pacific Railroad Grant. Has Lots in the Pacific Land Association. Has Lots in the Mission Land Association. Has Lots in the Mission Land Association. Has Lots in the Mission

Ceed Mille Failthe.

(The Hundred Thousand Welcome.)

BY ELIZABETH O. SMITH.

'Twas in the failing days of old that bless'd the limerald Isle,
When peace and sunshine circled round the borders with a smile!
When soft through Tara's ancient halls stole music's sweetest strain,
And the lovely Isle of Innisfail gave back the sweet refrain,
'Twas the cheer of a nation that echoed long and loud,
The "hundred thousand welcomes," a joyous burst of song.

The "hundred thousand welcomes"—oh! they were tuned of part,
Above the castle's portals proud, and o'er its shielding moat;
And not alone an empty form to grace the cottage wall,
It was spoken by the hearthstone and in the castle hall;
'Twas a right warm, Irish greeting, of truth and love a part!
For the "hundred thousand welcomes" came gushing from the heart.

The harp that once thro' Tara's halls" made melody, is still;
A mournful silence hath come down on vale, and lake, and hill;
Its hearthstones are now desolate, its glory pass'd away,
And the children of its happiest days hath torn'd to twilight gray.
Yet joy! for living hearts still live within the dark'ned Isle!
And the "hundred thousand welcomes" are still a smile.

And the warm Irish heart will beep, altho thro' Those words, the speaker, in fe depths, to warm and cheer it still;
The warm out-gushings of a soul within a loving breast,
Of greeting breathed in every tongue, the dearest and the best.
How strong in the exile's heart, to hear with joy once more,
The "hundred thousand welcomes," upon a foreign shore!

And not in Ireland's hearts alone—one spirit pervades,
Thro' the world, down to, and being, and gone,
Speaking in its broad and fervent tone, to Mingling with every land,
And [illegible]
Fo[illegible]
Fo[illegible]
And, [illegible]
How [illegible]
[illegible]
Fo[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Coal Hill Faiths.

(Tom Hudson's Thousand Welcome.)

BY BENJAMIN W. BARER.

'Twas in the pallid days of old that blest the Emerald isle,
When praise and shamrock circled round to be borders with a smile;
When 'mid Quebec Tara's ancient halls stole Moore's resistless strain,
And the lovely isle of Innisfail gave back the echoed lays again.

'Twas the welcome of a nation that echoed loud and long,
The "hundred thousand welcomes," a joyous burst of song.

The "hundred thousand welcomes"—and they are ours to-day,
Above the restless portals proud, and o'er the cottage gray;
And not alone on empty form to grace the solemn rite
It was spoken by the heartbeats and in the smile of light.

'Twas a welcome, Irish greeting, of truth and love
For the land that gave the welcomers—dear land of Jove,

"The harp that once thro' Tara's halls" made answer to the call
Of a people, whose fond faith came down on vale, and on hill;
In famine, nor war desolate, its glory pass'd away,
And the welcome of the happiest days hath tuned to-day.

Yet let "the harp that once" again will live within the soul
And the "hundred thousand welcomes" ne'er be forgot.

And the green Irish heart will beep, while there
Those fond memories enshrine, in its depths, to warm
And cheer the wanderer's lonely lot, in the land of the stranger,
Of generous hospitality's deep tongue, the dear
Old Irish welcome.

Then pray tell us why every lack'ld of gallantry is not cultivated? Why are we always at loggerheads with culinary vexation? Why will not the cream foliage from the plough of the [illegible] have his counterpart in the [illegible] I hear his mother's voice, and I must slumber.

[illegible] Kirk Henry.

Wholesale Market Rates.

Monroe Office, San Francisco, Saturday, Feb. 20, 1869.

FLOUR—The [illegible] of outside and Oregon is [illegible] prices the market, and [illegible] 6c. for [illegible] grades of Wheat. We quote Or[illegible] side grades of extra at $[illegible]

BARLEY—Notwithstanding the decline in the Liverpool market, [illegible] are still buoyant, as there is a considerable [illegible] having been paid in one or two exceptional cases for [illegible] choice lots. There prices, however, could [illegible] one per cent. of the present stock of grain known as "[illegible] Shipping," which was quoted at 97½@[illegible] cents per cental, and [illegible] last few days have been light purchasers, [illegible] to-day and yesterday for choice lots, and fixed the market at $1 75@$1 80 for good to choice bakers' extra.

BARLEY—Quotable at $2 20@$2 25 for good brewing qualities from short or fine feeds; jobbing at $2 35@$2 90 from store or to [illegible] Feed descriptions range from $2 05@$2 15 for [illegible] to very choice. Cost [illegible] having been sold to-day at $2 13½.

OATS—We quote Oregon at $2 20@$2 22½ for choice, from wharf or first hands; jobbing at $2 25@$2 28. California oats quotable at $2@$2 15, although an extra choice lot might bring an advance on above figures.

POTATOES—Humboldts at $1 75@$2 00; do. choice, at $2@$2 25; the latter rate only obtainable for strictly No. 1. Petalumas and Bodegas are quotable at 70@75c. The market is closer firm, and prices show an advance in late rates.

HAY—Quotations for strictly choice [illegible] have advanced to $1 per ton since yesterday; quotable at $17@19 per ton.

BRAN—Quotable at $20@22, a lot from [illegible] selling here offered for [illegible] to-day.

MIDDLINGS—Quotable at $28@30 per ton for [illegible] and $35 50@38 for fine descriptions.

OATMEAL—Unchanged at $2 85@[illegible].

CORN—Last sales of choice white were reported at $1 37½@1 [illegible]. We quote choice [illegible] at $1 40@1 42½.

RYE—Quotable at $3 50@4.

CORN MEAL—Quotable at $3@3½, to [illegible] for [illegible].

GROUND MEAL—We continue our previous quotations, viz: [illegible]

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at 1½@1¾ for California. We quote grain [illegible] at 3¼@3½.

TALLOW—Sales since our last weekly report amount to 29,000 lbs beef and [illegible] at 7½@7¾c.

WOOL—Quotable at 27@31c for clean lots of Fall fleece, according to [illegible] the choice [illegible] of course, [illegible]

HONEY—Sale of 220 bbls Benicia at $6 50.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE.

[illegible] @ 9c for [illegible] pressed; [illegible] at 8@8½c; [illegible] kinds, 11@12½.

BACON—California at 18¾@14c ₽ lb, and Oregon at 14c.

LARD—At 13½@13¾c ₽ lb for California and Oregon in cases; Oregon in [illegible]

[illegible] Meats—The Market shows an [illegible] The following [illegible]

[illegible] Hams, [illegible] pressed [illegible] at 16@17c ₽ lb; [illegible] Bacon—California at 18¾@14c ₽ lb for California and Oregon in cases; Oregon in [illegible]

Lard—At 13½@13¾c ₽ lb for California and Oregon in cases; Oregon in [illegible]

[illegible] Meats—The Market shows an [illegible] The following [illegible]

[illegible] Hams, [illegible] pressed [illegible] at 16@17c ₽ lb; [illegible] Bacon—California at 18¾@14c ₽ lb for California and Oregon in cases; Oregon in [illegible]

Lard—At 13½@13¾c ₽ lb for California and Oregon in cases; Oregon in [illegible]

POULTRY.

Prices, with at date of our last weekly report, have advanced, have again declined [illegible] and [illegible] comparatively [illegible] and [illegible] at 60@65c ₽ dozen for [illegible] supplies of old plucked [illegible]

[illegible] Turkeys—The [illegible] quotable at 20@22½c ₽ lb for [illegible] Gobblers—The [illegible]

[illegible] Ducks—Quotable at 17½@18c ₽ lb for [illegible] Geese—Quotable at 15@17½c ₽ lb for [illegible]

[illegible] Quail—Quotable at 75@87½c ₽ dozen for [illegible] Pigeons—Quotable at 75@87½c ₽ dozen for [illegible]

[illegible] Rabbits—Quotable at 50@62½c ₽ dozen for [illegible]

[illegible] Deer—Quotable at 10@12½c ₽ lb for saddles and [illegible]

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—Sale of 220 bbls Benicia at $6 50.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE.

[illegible] @ 9c for [illegible] pressed; [illegible] at 8@8½c; [illegible] kinds, 11@12½.

BACON—California at 18¾@14c ₽ lb, and Oregon at 14c.

LARD

LIFE OF POPE PIUS IX.

Translated for The Universe from the French of D'Ariès Dermont, and other authentic sources.

CHAPTER VI.

Mastai Ferretti, Provincial Pope—The Amnesty—The Rejoicings—Liberality to the Jews—Pius IX. the Leader of Liberty.

Tuesday, the 16th of June, 1846, was a gala day throughout Rome. The people, in holiday attire, crowded the great thoroughfares; every palace, every dwelling, was hung with garlands; the basilicas put on all their glory; the bells of the Eternal City rang joy peals; the thunder of the cannon of St. Angelo denoted a triumph.

From the balcony of the Quirinal proclamation had been made that Mastai Ferretti, Cardinal Archbishop of Imola, had been exalted to the Pontifical throne, with the title of Pius IX.

Not only Rome, but the whole of Italy, except the Austrian faction, was transported with joy at the tidings.

Naples remembered with gratitude how, when Apostolic Nuncio, he had served in the hospitals and house of the sick during the frightful ravages of the cholera; how he had then sold his plate, furniture and carriage, to relieve the general distress.

"When the poor of Christ die in the streets," he said, "ought His ministers to ride in carriages?"

To this very day the name of Pius IX. is idolised by the poor in betrayed Naples, and in the revolutionized Romagna.

As the news of his election spread throughout Europe, it was received everywhere with the greatest satisfaction, which was soon after to grow into a perfect enthusiasm.

The new Pontiff commenced his reign with an act which, whatever may be thought of its policy, was, at all events, gracious. A general amnesty for past offences was granted. Political delinquents were set at liberty, the refugees were recalled, on condition of their giving a solemn pledge for their future conduct. The reader will, perhaps, be interested if we give the words of the preamble to this act of noble-hearted policy:

"In those days when our heart is moved to see public joy manifested at being raised to the Pontificate, we cannot refrain from a feeling of grief in thinking that a certain number of families are unable to participate in the common joy, because they bear the pain of some offences committed by one of their members against the sacred rights of the legitimate prince. We therefore, etc. Pius IX."

The words of the oath taken by the beloved sovereign to pardoned revolutionists were as follows: "I pledge myself, on my word of honor, not to abuse in any way, or at any time, this act of sovereign clemency."

Many of them added, of their own free will, to swear to obey the laws and to be loyal subjects for the future.

Crowds waited upon his carriage, and surrounded him when on foot. At his return on one occasion from Albanum forty thousand persons were assembled to meet him, and to receive his blessing. Ovations by the people in his honor were of weekly occurrence. When it was known which way he would pass the horses would be seen garlanded as if by magic.

Such was the feeling and conduct of the Romans towards their glorious prince in the year 1846.

Others, also, besides his own subjects, were enthusiastic in his praise. In the United States a deputation was appointed to go and pay homage in the name of all Christian men to the "Apostle of Christ and of liberty."

The admiration for the new Pontiff and his enlightened measures passed the Bosphorus.

At Antioch, where St. Paul declared Christ, in the city of St. John, "the golden mouthed"—on the hill where St. Barnabas the Apostle discoursed—in the Times city, a

Such a spectacle had not been witnessed in the first Christian city for seven hundred years, the date of the departure of the last stragglers of the army of the Crusades.

But nowhere out of Italy was the enthusiasm greater than in England. Men in this country who were suffering under great political disabilities, quoted, in this free land, the liberality of the head of the Catholic Church, as another reason that ought to influence their own less generous Protestant rulers. The Government also itself would not be deaf to the demand of Parliament the repeal of that article of the Constitution which forbids all relations with Rome, and the authorization of an accredited ambassador at the Papal Court.

In a word, the name of Pio Nono was received in every English assembly with shouts of applause. His picture was in every print shop; his bust on every Italian image stand.

Exeter Hall was afraid to groan, and for a time the essential bigots lost their vocation.

Yes, it is now a part of undeniable history, handed down for posterity to learn, that he whose name has been the watchword for freedom, whom the world for years recognized as the reformer of abuses, as the friend of enlightenment and progress, as the one animated by the most generous natural sentiments, as the true Italian patriot, was no other than the present illustrious head of the Catholic Church.

And yet the faith of the two hundred millions of national creatures who obey his teaching is still sometimes stigmatized, as inimical to the happiness and liberty of the human race.

Heedless of the selfish opinions that came to him from Paris, Vienna, and St. Petersburg, Pius IX. persevered in the liberal course with which he had begun his reign, and judging mankind only by the standard of his own generous nature, labored at the benign work of making his people virtuous, happyand free.

One of the earliest acts of his Pontificate was to alleviate the condition of the Jews of Rome. These unfortunate people, the descendants of the captives brought in triumph by Titus after his conquest of Jerusalem, had hitherto been subjected to most oppressive legislation. They were compelled to reside in one quarter of the city (the Ghetto), the gates of which were closed upon them every night. The yearly inundation of the Tiber of this part of Rome caused the greatest misery to these wretched outcasts of the population. In addition to annual tribute was exacted from them, and in many other ways they were oppressed vexatiously.

By one act of its power Pius IX. reformed all this. Permission was given them to reside in any part of Rome they pleased; the imposts upon them were removed; they were admitted to the common rights of citizens. Such liberality occasioned, as might have been expected, great discontent among the lowest of the Christian population; but the large-minded Pontiff was not to be put aside from his just benevolence.

"I do not separate from my heart any of God's creatures," was his reply to such as complained against his wise measures.

On the 9th of November, 1846, by an Encyclical Letter, Pius IX. published to the world the programme of his Pontificate. In it, whilst he refuted the calumny of those who accused him of despising all political tradition, he at the same time crushed the hopes of others who looked forward to a revolution in the Church. "Religion," said he, "is not a philosophical invention, to be perfected by human means. All I desire is that my government may be the model. I hope my example may be followed by every prince in Italy."

This language was followed up by corresponding acts that left every tyrant trembling into despair. Step by step the diplomacy of the crafty Metternich was obliged to yield to the firmness of Pius IX.

Austria had already to confess a great moral defeat.

Each day saw a victory gained by new ideas over the worn-out resources of absoluteism. The Pontiff's voice woke all Italy. Inaction and routine were terrified out of their slumber of many years. It was the "Jubilee Five" and the most popular of their creators. In the meantime, having engaged in behalf of M. Vacherot, against whom a criminal prosecution was entered for his work on Liberty, he was condemned (December 30, 1859) an interdiction of three months, on account of the sentiments expressed in the first sentence of his pleadings for the defence. The Bar, through their council, appealed, vainly, against the judgment.

In 1863, M. Emile Ollivier was re-elected for the same district, by 18,531 out of 29,088 votes, having M. Varin, a Government candidate, as his opponent. In the first session of the Legislature he was remarkable above all for his reports on the coalition laws, and showed a moderation in his intercourse with the Government which created some coldness between him and his old political friends, which was increased by his course in the session of 1865, when, in spite of and amid violent Government measures. In 1865, he was charged with the French legal interests of the Duke of Aosta. Financial difficulties enabled him to furnish a report thereon. The Emperor based his decison upon the conclusions arrived at in that document. M. Ollivier was since been rejected in favor of a Radical candidate, in the circumscription he represented, but was elected for one of the country districts.

Auto-Mortem Obituaries.

The enterprise of journalists recently, in preparing obituaries, has found-bed in them for no small gain in some quarters, and has been the cause of many grave anecdotes. It is related of one editor that he had an elaborate sketch of General Wool prepared several years since, but, having mislaid it in the meantime, while the old hero existed, could not find it when it was necessary, and a serious amount of labor and research was entailed in preparing another article. It is also said that the English journalists have exceeded our own in this matter. Indeed, it is likely that the fate of a British obituarist may in the event, and twelve years before his own death, that of Lord Brougham occurred, another land took down the yellowed manuscrip from its dusty pigeon-hole and completed it. What morals were drawn from this! But, in the case of Lord Derby, a better fate is held in the office of the London Daily Star, a biography of the deceased nobleman had been in type for sixteen or seventeen months. The paper first issued after the death of the Earl, "A gay and festive" former attache of the New York Herald, who was a graduate of Union College, wrote, in 1861, a long and elaborate sketch of the Rev. Dr. Nott, the venerable President of that institution, for which the managing editor of that enterprising journal paid him a hundred dollars down, and contracted to give him another hundred when the subject of the ante-mortem article should depart this life. Dr. Nott did not die until January 29, 1866. During this interval of five years between the writing of his eulogistic obituary by his former pupil and the Doctor's death, the writer, like most reporters, became quite "hard up," and was wont to remark that old Nott clung to life with fearful tenacity. He told me when he gave me the facts contained in my sketch of his life and character that he could not live five years, but he is the only lie I ever knew him to tell; but such is my luck, you know!"

Late Irish News.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT IN LIMERICK.—Limerick, Dec 30.—An old house collapsed in John street about six o'clock this morning, during the prevalence of a heavy storm. Five persons were killed and seven severely wounded, some of whom are not expected to recover. The names of the killed are Mary, Michael and Ellen Leary, and Thos. and Ellen Harold.

FUNERAL DEMONSTRATION AT CARRICK-ON-SUIR.—The funeral of J. Coogan took place on Sunday. He was imprisoned in Kilmainham in 1866 for his supposed connection with the Fenian movement. The hearse was followed to the grave by a body of young men and women, marching in procession four abreast. The national color was displayed abundantly in the shape of neck-ties, ribbons, etc. The deceased was generally respected.

FENIAN COLLECTIONS.—The Weekly Register, in a leading paragraph, makes the following startling statement. The writer says he knows all about it: "It is said, on good authority, that in the counties of Kilkenny, Kerry, Hertford, and Meath, there are 100,000 Irishmen or women who each contribute one shilling a week towards the funds of the Fenian cause, making a total of £5,000 raised every seven days for the purpose of this agitation."

POLICEMEN SHOT IN LIMERICK.—On the night of December 30, Sub-Constables Doyle and Sullivan, who, in the absence of Head, or persons unknown, in the little village of Askeaton, near Rathkeale, county Limerick, were shot at and severely wounded. Fourteen shots were fired at them, some of which entered the police barrack. The latter succeeded in reaching the barrack, although severely wounded. The affair is supposed to have originated in the offering of a reward for or in preventing a demonstration in favor of Rossa a few days previously.

AT a meeting of the Irish Church Tenant League on Dec. 30, a resolution was adopted on the motion of Mr. Butt, recommending the formation of provincial associations for the purpose of expressing the combined opinions of the tenant farmers on the land question, previous to the production of the Government land bill. Mr. Butt emphatically declared that nothing short of fixity of tenure at a valuation, could be accepted as a solution to this question.—Cork Examiner, Dec. 31.

The special commissioner of the Times, in his twenty-sixth, and last letter, gives a sad picture of the whole system of landed tenure in Ireland and its results. He pronounces the country to have made considerable progress during the last few years, but believes the progress has taken place in despite of the land laws, which he considers have been mainly palsied, if not mitigated by circumstances, to prevent improvement of all description, and to produce discontent and distrust, and promote the agrarian feeling which has shown itself in fatal outrages in several counties in Ireland.

GLADSTONE AND O'DONOVAN ROSSA.—The following letter has been received in reply to a memorial to the Premier for the release of O'Donovan Rossa from Mr. Ottwyer: "10 Downing street, December 31, 1869. Sir—Mr. Gladstone desires me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th inst., and to assure you that he does not in any way question your title to address him in the matter to which it relate. Mr. Gladstone is, however, ready to assume the responsibility of declining to declare the release which you desire, and is, your obedient servant,

"H. GLADSTONE."

DISTURBING THE POLITICAL PRISONERS.—Mr. Jas. Sheppard, of Millbank, died suddenly, and deliberately done to death. Mr. Sheppard was one of the warders on New Year's morn may not shine. Some of them are dying under the indignities and tortures administered to them. Calvaloons, hardy Rick Burke has been the victim of threats, and persecutions. Lady Gardiner and Mrs. Underwood (O'Connell's) life is worn out by the malignant mental torture to which he has been subjected. Mr. Pigott, one of the most resolute and iron-trained of all the prisoners, is, we fear, in imminent peril. John Devoy must be rescued from the torturer if he is to live. Even the Member for Tipperary (O'Donovan Rossa, is being made to feel the vengeance of the jailors, who have been frenzied by the honor conferred on him by the Irish nation.

THE CLERGY IN FAVOR OF AMNESTY.—Dean O'Brien, in a letter to the Limerick Reporter, states that: "In five days the declaration has received one thousand signatures, and hundreds of them are those of the names of men venerable for their age and experience. Many of them add to their signature their wonderful dignity." The following extracts from hundreds of letters of clergymen who, in the course of a few days have in a few days signed the declaration in favor of amnesty, may be instructive. The Vicar-General of Dublin says: "I am grateful to the Freeman against continuing the prosecution, which, I am sure, is only resulting pain. This morning he has sent back those which he received, as the remedy, has been arrested. He has a recipe procured from a butcher's old country.

THE King of Persia recently addressed a letter to the Grand Duke Frederick Charles, of Prussia, in which he urged urging him to put an end to his scandalous domestic life, and, above all things, to cease to flaunt his young wife in the grand-ducal reprobate, it is said, has been seduced by every young female employed at his palace in Schwerin, and when a young consort kindly remonstrated with him on his evil doings, he soundly whipped her brutally. The poor duchess has been in exile for more than two weeks, in order to hide her black eye from the public.

THE heart of King Richard the First, of England, enclosed in an urn, has, until recently, been preserved in the treasury chamber of the Cathedral at Rouen, but now been placed in a tomb erected to receive the remains of that monarch, in the church of Charlus. The last will of Richard Cœur de Leon, who died in 1199 of a wound received from a cross-bow arrow at the siege of the Castle of Chalus, ordered his heart placed in the choir of the Cathedral; and this wish, after 770 years has just been complied with. The urn bears a leaden plate, with the inscription, "Hic jacet Richardi, regis Anglorum."

SENSIBLE.—Non-paying subscribers are often talked of by a Western editor, who expresses our sentiments fully: "We cannot run without wheels, boats cannot run without steam, buildings cannot stand without legs, or a newspaper be carried everlastingly without money, no more than a dog can wag his tail when he has got no tail. Printers are all good, but what good does a man's goodness do when it don't pay any good? We have no doubt that any one thinks that all have paid except himself, and we are a clever fellow,' and set account is a little matter, it makes difference."

The Bishop of Orleans on Infallibility.

NUMBER V.

IT IS VERY easy to say that in our time the question is settled; but true and earnest theologians are well aware that it is nothing of the kind, and that, if it is the intention of the Council to propound any dogma on the matter, it will be only five more Sees of Orleans, and five more Bossuets, to make it so.

Will not—into lengthy and delicate inquiries. In a word, it is not only the future, but the past, that would be found by the definition of the personal infallibility of the Pope; for if he is infallible, he has always been so. The proclamation of this dogma would stamp as such with the seal of infallibility all the decisions of the Popes for fifteen centuries, assuming that they have really those decisions under the conditions laid down in the form which the Council has fixed. In the exercise of the Papal infallibility, to say that they could not be a more grave or more keenly questioned subject could be recalled to you just now two historical facts. Pope Honorius's dispute with Sergius, and Pope Honorius's dispute with Monothelism. Well, if it is proved that Pope Honorius was not personally infallible, in a manner to bind, then the whole edifice of the whole Papal infallibility is shaken to its foundations. Now, if, when tested by the simple laws of evidence, ninety-nine out of a hundred of such stories will not hold water. Persons who are not theologians will think therefore fairly that they are no more infallible than they are immortal; but their very office is always a presumption in favor of their being good.

Now, I ask, is there, at this moment, any thing in the Church of God which is there any other) to the contrary. Jesuits, nor Dominicans are infallible, and I have said in my famous letter to Cardinal Antonelli, that not a single Jesuit, not a single Dominican, not a single Father of the Church can show a cleaner record, then, and to this day, will be time to give ear to their accusers. When their adversaries shall have proved against them, and to their judges, that they have not the habit of shutting their eyes to what is before them. I venture to say the Ultramontanes are liked almost unanimously, the Jesuits at Clongowes, and the Redemptorists by old Limerick walls. Cause—they have helped to put down Gallicanism, but one way of getting out of it, which is to declare the Pope infallible, unconditional, and universal infallibility of the Pope, and nothing else, it only a conditional infallibility—that ex cathedra—as it has been for ages, and as proved in a manifest peril: "Ecclesia ardenti periculo exponeretur." And this they prove, not by a few facts, but by a host of facts, which, if true, would appear to be disputed and, if the Pope proves obstinate, confusion will be created in the minds of the faithful. Now, I ask, what Pope can plead the dogmatic definition of infallibility? If, in future times, Pope Honorius arised, who, I don't say has not been, but who, by means of dogmatic letters addressed to great Churches, himself, or he will not be hindered by the decree of the Infallibility. Just imagine Churches and consciences all troubled; of course, theologians will have also deliberate definitions, and will that such letters do not exactly to a definition; but how will the many, who are not theologians, be able to distinguish that the Pope, who was infallible in one act no longer so in another? How will they be made to understand that he can possibly have erred, and may yet foment heresy by great pontifical acts? The public will not go beyond the general idea of infallibility; being the consciousness of men will be disputed, and they will be always thinking themselves obliged to be making acts of faith, while the enemies of the Church will take occasion to declare that every Catholic doctrine is but a dogma that which would not be dogma. Without any wish, I am sure, to go to the bottom of the question, we don't help one reflection, looking at the matter from the point of view of men of the world. Does not the personal infallibility of the Pope [illegible] also entail universal, unconditional, universal infallibility, of which—I speak just now when I quoted certain theologians, but the infallibility of the Pope, in the Church, is the definition of the personal infallibility of the Pope; for if he is infallible, he has always been so. The proclamation of this dogma would stamp as such with the seal of infallibility all the decisions of the Popes for fifteen centuries, assuming that they have really those decisions under the conditions laid down in the form which the Council has fixed. In the exercise of the Papal infallibility, to say that they could not be a more grave or more keenly questioned subject could be recalled to you just now two historical facts. Pope Honorius's dispute with Sergius, and Pope Honorius's dispute with Monothelism. Well, if it is proved that Pope Honorius was not personally infallible, in a manner to bind, then the whole edifice of the whole Papal infallibility is shaken to its foundations. Now, if, when tested by the simple laws of evidence, ninety-nine out of a hundred of such stories will not hold water. Persons who are not theologians will think therefore fairly that they are no more infallible than they are immortal; but their very office is always a presumption in favor of their being good.

Now, I ask, is there, at this moment, any thing in the Church of God which is there any other) to the contrary. Jesuits, nor Dominicans are infallible, and I have said in my famous letter to Cardinal Antonelli, that not a single Jesuit, not a single Dominican, not a single Father of the Church can show a cleaner record, then, and to this day, will be time to give ear to their accusers. When their adversaries shall have proved against them, and to their judges, that they have not the habit of shutting their eyes to what is before them. I venture to say the Ultramontanes are liked almost unanimously, the Jesuits at Clongowes, and the Redemptorists by old Limerick walls. Cause—they have helped to put down Gallicanism, but one way of getting out of it, which is to declare the Pope infallible, unconditional, and universal infallibility of the Pope, and nothing else, it only a conditional infallibility—that ex cathedra—as it has been for ages, and as proved in a manifest peril: "Ecclesia ardenti periculo exponeretur." And this they prove, not by a few facts, but by a host of facts, which, if true, would appear to be disputed and, if the Pope proves obstinate, confusion will be created in the minds of the faithful. Now, I ask, what Pope can plead the dogmatic definition of infallibility? If, in future times, Pope Honorius arised, who, I don't say has not been, but who, by means of dogmatic letters addressed to great Churches, himself, or he will not be hindered by the decree of the Infallibility. Just imagine Churches and consciences all troubled; of course, theologians will have also deliberate definitions, and will that such letters do not exactly to a definition; but how will the

DeLong in Japan.

The Los Angeles Star has been graciously permitted to make some extracts from a letter received from his Excellency Charles E. DeLong, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of his Most August Majesty the Child of the Sun and Emperor of Japan, familiarly known in this plain, republican land of ours by the more dignified appellation of Tycoon. Charley is the Minister, not the Emperor. After expressing his delight at the abundance of "blue oysters, clams and fish," the Minister turns to the figure the different nations make:

"The English here are the leading foreign power. Their Minister, a Lord of their realm, lives here, and is provided for like a Lord; whilst our Government pursues here, as usual, its narrow, contracted, foreign policy. We have no fort, gunoffice, hospital, or prison on the islands; no troops but eight or ten marines, and two or three little inferior ships of war; whilst the English have the splendid Fenth Regiment and a battalion of the Royal Artillery on shore, with a fine regimental band parading and relieving every day; also, a large ship of war in every port, with over a thousand marines. It is in this kind of an unfair race that I am pitted against the representatives of all the other great nations, all of whom have Ministers in princely style."

We tender his Excellency our hearth-felt commiserations. It is, indeed, entirely too bad that the tried DeLong, who has been sent to leave the "lobby" of California jay birds think without doors, by his friends and the benefactors and sharers in the fruits of this daily paper will be regaled, on the first Monday in each month, with a quarter of beef, a sack of flour, a side of the main sister. Subscriptions may be sent to the undersigned or the editor of this paper, and no turkeys will receive receipts by mail.

LEWIS B. KING, O. S. B.,
Prior of St. Benedict, Atchison, Kansas.

I hereby heartily approve of the above plans for the relief of my friend and brother, Father King, and I request all the friends of the Faith who desire to secure its blessings to contribute liberally to the support of the daily offering of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass.
BONIFACE WIMMER, Abbot of St. Vincent. or 8-tf

BUSINESS CARDS.

JOHN M. BURNETT,
Attorney at Law.
EXCHANGE BUILDING—ROOMS 25 & 26.
Northeast corner Montgomery and Washington sts.
SAN FRANCISCO.

THOMAS P. RYAN,
Attorney at Law,
(Office of Hoare & Lloyd)
630 CLAY STREET.....SAN FRANCISCO

DR. W. M. JONES,
(Late of Memphis, Tennessee.)
Has Removed his Office to
NO. 11 O'FARRELL STREET, Near Market.....San Francisco.
oct8-tf

Dr. T. D. Johnson,
No 708 Jones.
SPECIALTY—
WOMAN AND HER DISEASES
Offices—On Sacramento street, between Kearny and Dupont.
oct8-tf

FRANCIS BUCKLEY,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER.
Shop, West side of Powell st. (No. 11)
Near Bush.....San Francisco.

All kinds of Carpenter and Jobbing Work done at the shortest notice.
oct8-tf

F. BUCKLEY, Jr. M. J. EGAN.

BUCKLEY & EGAN,
CARPENTERS AND BUILDERS,
SHOP—NORTH SIDE OF ELLIS STREET,
Near Cadwallader Nursery Entrance.

Cemetery Railings constantly on hand, or made to order.
S. P.—Jobbing promptly attended to. jan15

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers in
Foreign and American Dry Goods and CLOTHING,
Sansome street, corner of Sacramento,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WM. GUTTRIDGE & CO.,
Dealers in
Flour, Grain, Potatoes, Onions, and PRODUCE GENERALLY,
126 Clay street, between Davis and Drum,
SAN FRANCISCO
Consignments solicited. oct8-tf

I. KELLY. D. PENNEY.
KELLY & PENNESSY,
Livery Stable,
121 Kearny st., bet. Post and Sutter,
SAN FRANCISCO. oct15

Granite Sills and CURBSTONES
Furnished to Order and Always on Hand, at the Yards of Nash Work Bone, on BRYANT & DAWSON,
Foot of Third Street.

N. SWEENY,
Merchant Tailor
HEGS LEAVE TO INFORM HIS FRIENDS and Patrons, and the general public, that he has removed to his splendid new store
No. 111 SECOND STREET,
(Between Mission and Minna,
Where he will have increased facilities for executing all such orders as may be intrusted to him, on the most reasonable terms, and guaranteed for style, fit and workmanship by any in his line of trade.
He has constantly on hand a choice selection of Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings of the latest styles and importation. jy16

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. EGAN,)
Wholesale and Retail
Confectioners,
107 MONTGOMERY ST.,
Between Bush and Sutter.....San Francisco

N. B.—All Candies sold by them warranted to be manufactured from STEWART'S DOUBLE REFINED SUGAR, and to equal in any respect those imported in the trade.
Country merchants are solicited to examine our stock and prices.
Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

THE IRISH COLONY IN ALGERIA.—As already stated, the French Government, acting on the representation of Marshal MacMahon, the Governor-General of Algeria, is endeavoring to divert a portion of the stream of Irish emigrants to that province. The capabilities of Algeria as a field for European emigrants have been hitherto almost ignored by all except the Spaniards, even the French abstaining from settling except under the direct action of the Government. The climate is generally healthy and bracing, and though fever is not uncommon in some districts, consumption and diseases of debility are almost unknown. The country is underpopulated. In the days of the Roman Empire it exported corn in its enormous surplus, after feeding a population of 17,000,000. Now its population is only 2,400,000, and its exports of corn are almost nil. To remply this state of affairs the French Government proposes to introduce an agricultural population from Ireland, or anywhere else, and offers very favorable conditions to the settlers. The first of the Irish colonists have already landed.

A BILL was introduced in the House of Representatives on the 11th inst. by Mr. Ward of the Cincinnati delegates, prohibiting the reading of the Bible and singing of hymns in the Public Schools.

Daily Offering of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, in St. Benedict's Church, Atchison, Kansas. With the approbation of the Most Rev. Archbishop of St. Louis, Missouri, we have founded a Daily Mass for the Benefactors of the Monastery of St. Benedict, Atchison, Kansas, and for those in charge of the Benedictine Fathers. As every Priest who celebrates Mass participates in the Indulgences and Graces of the Mass, and in the Prayers and Good Works of the whole Benedictine Order, we invite all the Faithful to join with us in the recital of our prayers. The Holy Sacrifice of the Mass is offered up DAILY in favor and for the benefit of the Benefactors of our brothers in the Faith whom this appeal may reach, to assist in the erection of our new church

Weekly Calendar.

Sunday, 30—St. Martina, Virgin and Martyr.
Monday, 31—St. Peter Nolasco. Martyr
Tuesday, Feb. 1—St. Ignatius, Bishop, Martyr.
Wednesday, 2—Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary.
Thursday, 3—St. Blase, Bishop, Martyr.
Friday, 4—St. Andrew Corsini, and Martyr.
Saturday, 5—St. Agatha, Virgin and Martyr.

A CRITICAL SENATOR.—Among our representatives of the Legislature there are a resentative host of literary attainments varied few to count. Chief among these is Senator Rice, commonly called "General"—this title, we believe, had its origin in the fact that its wearer was at one time employed in purchasing mules for the Quartermaster's Department, and has ever since flourished a semi-military cloak and hat with a due amount of brass buttons). It was the Senator's privilege to introduce a bill for the establishment of a Morgue in this city and county. The Clerk, as is customary, read the title of the bill, and gave the word its ordinary pronunciation morg. The gallant Senator, however, knew better; and with the air of a man who feels he own importance, his arm gracefully outstretched, he gave the Clerk a gratuitous lesson in philology, telling him, among other things, that Mor-gé was the correct pronunciation of morgue! A libel smile could be detected in the Senator's honor at his colleagues.

NOW is time in the month of December, our readers may recollect that the telegraph, in giving a synopsis of a Papal Allocution, used the words "the Church is stronger than heaven." This was generally regarded as a blasphemous blunder even by well-read clergymen and newspapers, the Baltimore Catholic Mirror remarking that the words were "blasphemous." The text of the Allocution has since arrived, and it seems that the words were actually used, and are quoted from St. Chrysostom. Here are the Holy Father's words, as we find them in Pope Pius' Romish Journal:

"But nothing is more powerful than the Church"—they are the words of St. Chrysostom—"Church is stronger than heaven itself. Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away." What words! Whom are those, and upon this rock I will build my Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Romish Journal, Rome Ecclesiastical, Dec. 1.

A CORRESPONDENT writes that Mr. James Stephens, ex-Head Centre, is very poor in Paris. He obtains a precarious subsistence by giving lessons in French to such as require his services. This is really sad; for, no matter how we may censure Mr. Stephens' obstinacy and inordinate self-conceit, no honest discriminating man doubts his loyalty to the cause of which he was the chief architect, and for which he has suffered much. We are pleased to see some Eastern Fenians taking steps to relieve his necessities.

A NEW YORK telegram of Thursday says. "The Tablet says that the majority of the Ecumenical Council favoring Infallibility (that is, the Infallibility of the Pope) is 783." This is a fast in mathematics which very few men are capable of accomplishing. The Council consists of 766 members, 37 more than the majority according to the telegram, for Infallibility. The Tablet is a well-informed paper, and scarcely made such a blunder.

SENATOR CASSERLY, on the 11th inst., introduced a bill restoring to the public domain all the lands selected for the purpose of aiding the Central and Southern Pacific Railroads, and reserving such lands for the benefit of actual settlers only. This is a wise measure, and if adopted will be of great benefit to the industrious poor of the country.

A HIBERNIAN BENEVOLENT SOCIETY is about being organized in Sacramento. A preliminary meeting was held last Sunday, and a constitution adopted. Next Sunday a meeting will be held to make a permanent organization. Benefits of $5, $8 and $12 per week are to be given to persons of twenty-five, thirty and fifty years of age.

REV. FATHER KELLY, of Austin, Nevada, has been granted a license in the District Court to perform the marriage ceremony in that State.

THIS is the first time we know the laws of Nevada required a Catholic priest, or any other clergyman, to take out a license in order to perform one of the functions of his sacred office.

THE last proceeds of the Dolan Poverty Bill, lard match in aid of the Catholic and Protestant Orphan Asylums, were $629—which have been divided equally between the Boys' Orphan Asylum at San Rafael and the Protestant Orphan Asylum of this city, each getting $314.50.

SALMAVE SHOT.—A Charleston dispatch of January 27th states that Salmave was shot on the 26th instant. Hooster subject name not given was captured in the woods near Salt River, in the South, and taken to Port au Prince, where he was heavily ironed and thrown into prison.

MR. JOHN MORTIMER MURPHY is lecturing on Irish topics through the interior. He lectured to quite a large audience in St. Joseph's Hall, Marysville, on Tuesday last. Subject: "Relics of the Wild Geese."

THE Public School Department of Sacramento have provided for the instruction of such pupils as may desire in the German language.

Messrs. J. W. Coffroth, John R. McConnell, John W. Armstrong and J. C. Goods have been elected by the Legislature, Trustees of the State Library.

A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives on the 24th inst., giving soldiers who served in the late war 160 acres of land.

MR. J. MORTIMER MURPHY—Morphine—is the somewhat severe for THE MONITOR. Persons in arrears to the upper counties will please pay Mr. Murphy what they owe us. Mr. Murphy will better us Irish topics through the Counties of Yuba, Sierra and Nevada. We hope our friends through his lecturer will give him a round subscription.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish or Catholic Journal on the Pacific Coast

SATURDAY ..... JANUARY 29, 1870

Patrick's Day.

Ireland's national anniversary is drawing nigh. No steps have yet been taken in this city as to how the day shall be celebrated. We avail ourselves of this circumstance to offer a few words of friendly advice. A public parade, with all its attendant pomp, will cost several hundreds, it not thousands of dollars; the benefits to be derived are confined to the momentary gratification of a foolish vanity. The poor of our Fatherland are in a miserable plight. Owing to the abortive, although well-intentioned attempt at insurrection in the year 1866, hundreds of families, many of them of respectable social position, have been deprived of their natural protectors and sole support; the women and children have been thrown upon the cold charity of the world, to beg or starve as circumstances might dictate. Therefore, instead of making useless parades, suppose the civic and military bodies in this State would contribute the amount such idle shows would cost towards the alleviation of the distressed families of the transported patriots, whose only crime was putting in practice that love of country which many of us here have such a penchant to counterfeit. This would be a substantial way of manifesting regard for the dear old land that bore us, and the brave men who suffered that we might have a country. What cares the poor mother, with wan cheek and hunger-stricken eye, mourning her premature widowhood, for your eloquent platitudes on the rights of nations and the God-given boon of liberty; a brief and formal check for the price of a bone of beef and bag of meal would be far more potent in securing her attention. Your shrill fife and soul-stirring drum won't destroy the gnawing pangs of hunger in yonder child, nor will your flaunting banner protect his person from the shrill March wind. We like "the pomp and circumstance of glorious" peace as well as anybody, and none exceed us in respect for our gorgeous Sunday-suit day; but there are other things which, as Irishmen and Catholics, we like still better. The necessities of the deserving poor touch our hearts more poignantly, and until they are provided with the substantials of life, we would deny ourselves the pleasure of the usual unsubstantial effluminary."

This is the course that, all the circumstances considered, we think most appropriate on the approaching anniversary. But if the delegates who are soon to meet in council to settle upon the programme of the day, should not in their wisdom agree with us, we shall be quite reconciled. In that event we have another suggestion to make. For the past couple of years we have had the disedifying spectacle of two distinct celebrations. Surely our numbers are not so great as to make more than one necessary. It is true one celebration would not afford as good an opportunity as two for certain valuable(?) popinjay figures (?) and political ambitions; but, notwithstanding the great deprivation that would result to these in consequence of such a curtailment, we emphatically protest against any unseemly division on the approaching 17th of March. The delegates should insist on one procession and one oration. Should there chance to be any wrangling in the Convention, on account of the programme arranged to suit themselves, we determined to have a special one after their own hearts, we would advise the majority to ostracise them there and then. Of late years unprincipled demagogues—silly tricksters of the most dangerous stamp, who have not one real sympathy in common with Ireland or Irishmen, who are all things to all men, and would shench the stiletto in your body while smilingly squeezing your hand and asseverating the warmest friendship—have impudently assumed a leading part in our celebrations, and this has been the chief cause of whatever inharmony her existed. We warn the delegates that may be chosen to the approaching Convention, to beware of such knaves; they like only to betray. On the strength of their falsely assumed influence with us, they manage to secure place and position for themselves, which they could never possibly obtain if we properly repudiated their pretensions.

Undoing the English Reformation.

The proportions which the "Ritualistic" movement in the Anglican Church has lately assumed, have begun to excite the serious attention of the Protestant public in England in a manner different from any in which it has been hitherto regarded. It is not that the revival of Catholic practices and doctrines in the Church of England which was commenced in Oxford more than thirty years ago has escaped the public notice; on the contrary, none of the schools into which that body is divided have received a larger share of abuse, and its leaders, if not the most popular, are certainly the best known members of her communion, but hitherto it has been considered as neither having, nor ever likely to have, any widespread influence among the people. The numbers and ability of the Ritualistic party among the Protestant clergy, has been long admitted, and it has even been conceded that it counts a large number of adherents among the aristocracy, but the anti-Catholic portion of the Establishment consoled itself with the reflection that still it was numerically too insignificant to last. It believed that the great trust of Protestantism was far too thick to be ever penetrated by "Popish Ideas," even when presented under the name of the "Church of England" doctrines. Recent events, however, show that their expectations in this respect have been doomed to disappointment, and that the reaction towards Catholic ideas and practices is spreading as widely among the poor as it has already done among the educated classes. It is curious to hear of Mass, Missions, Benediction, Confession and Absolution among the descendants of those very Londoners who, a little over three-quarters of a century ago, were driven into such frenzy at the idea of "Popish Idols," being tolerated among them, that they threatened the destruction of their city in their furious zeal; but so it is. In spite of the ridicule and abuse heaped upon them by the press, and the more serious opposition that they have had to encounter from their own bishops, the Ritualists are steadily giving, one after another, Catholic practice a footing among the London populace, and increasing the number of their adherents at a rate which, in a few years more, will make them one of the most powerful sections of the so-called English Church. A recent Mission given under their auspices to the London working classes, has surpassed the most sanguine expectations, and it is evident that ritualism has taken a strong hold upon a large portion of them, and is daily extending its influence. Several of the London papers which lately were the harshest in their censure of the Romeward tendencies of Ritualism, have commenced to speak of it and its advocates in respectful terms, and while the growing dislike and indifference of the people to the ordinary Protestant Churches is daily attracting more and more comment, it is observed that the churches where an imitation of Catholic practices has been introduced are usually thronged with worshippers. It really looks as if the movement were becoming a popular one, and that the return to certainly only a large portion of the edifices of Queen Elizabeth's Reformation may be looked for at an early date. That such a return will be the ultimate result of the "ritualistic" movement, in spite of the attempts of some of its leaders to remain apart from the communion of the Catholic world, its past history leaves little room to doubt, and it is more than probable that the nineteenth century will yet witness the final collapse of the work of schism and heresy in the sixteenth.

Local Catholic Items.

ST. FRANCIS' CHURCH.—Hereafter Mass will be celebrated at this church on Sundays and holidays of obligation as follows: At 6½, 8, 9, and 10½ o'clock a. m. The nine o'clock Mass is for the special accommodation of the Spanish and Italian parishioners. Immediately before this Mass, a sermon will be preached in Italian, and a similar one from our esteemed pastor will be preached in English.

The Chapel of the Presentation Convent of the Holy Cross, corner of Taylor and Ellis streets, will be formally dedicated at 3 p. m. to-morrow (Sunday). Very Rev. Father Prendergast will preach a suitable discourse on the occasion. The good Sisters will be highly pleased to have all their friends present on the occasion. Admission one dollar. The Chapel is one of the neatest in the State.

IMPRISONMENT for debt has been abolished in England. The law went into effect on the 1st January.

"Fashionable" Christianity.

Sensational preaching in New York, if not peculiarly profitable to the souls of its hearers, must be decidedly beneficial to the pockets of its speakers. The hero of the late Astor House scandal, Henry Ward Beecher, in virtue, not improbably, of the notoriety he had thereby obtained, has, we are informed, just had his yearly salary increased by the handsome addition of seven thousand five hundred dollars, thus giving him a clear salary of twenty thousand dollars a year. Twenty thousand a year for a sermon or two on each Sunday, with due allowance made for summer vacation and the other indispensables of the fashionable "religion made easy" of New York Protestantism, is probably about the best pay for preaching recorded in history, especially as the preacher is not expected to devote his whole attention to his clerical duties. Lectures, novel writing and newspaper editing fill up the intervals between the days when his congregation deem it right to devote a couple of hours to his instructions, and may easily double his income. The Gospel which he preaches is essentially an affair of fashionable afternoons, and, except on such occasions, his fashionable auditors neither expect nor desire to be troubled with it. He has no dark cellars to visit, no fever-stricken beside to attend, no long hours to pass in the confessional, no churches to build or schools to organize—for his princely salary he has simply to tickle the ears of his audience once a week with an elaborate homily, and the more fantastic the ideas he then puts forth, the better his hearers like it. Taking into account what is expected in return for the salaries paid, no religious teachers in the world have ever been paid like the class of American fashionable ministers of which Beecher is a type. Even the enormous revenues of the English Protestant Bishops, saddled, as they are, with expensive duties, and the necessity of keeping up a position in the State, cannot be counted equal, all things considered, to the prices paid for fashionable preaching on American soil. Not only are the duties lighter, but the ten, or twelve, or twenty thousand dollars a year which stimulate the energy of the Gospellers are solely and simply for their own benefit, and not, as in England, while in England, in spite of the woful degeneracy from Catholic traditions that has prevailed since the Reformation, there is not at least a feeling that the Church revenues have other applications, as well as the private benefit of the holders. Verily, Protestant Christianity in American fashionable churches is a paying concern for this life, even if there is a little vagueness and uncertainty about its promises for the life to come. The Apostles, who went "without scrip or staff" to convert the world could hardly recognize a successor in the unctuous and well-paid preaching of Plymouth Church; and even the most devoted members of his congregation, if they ever think on the matter at all, cannot but admit that, did Christianity require such premiums from its founders, the world would be still under the empire of heathenism. The fact is, that Protestantism in America, regarding the administration of religion as a species of business affair, to be carried out by the help of pew-auctions and popular preachers, has gradually worked the residue of Christianity it originally possessed in its church organization, into a something whose contrast with the religion of Christ would be almost ludicrous, if it were not too serious a subject to laugh over. The reproach made to Anglicanism long ago, that it was "a most comfortable church for the wealthy and respectable," applies with even more force to modern American fashionable Christianity; and the contrast between the adherents of both and the class to whom Christianity was first preached by its divine founder, is too striking for the most careless eye to overlook. In the midst of the sharp business management and excellent financial administration which form such important elements in modern Protestant Church administration, the spirit of Christianity itself has been accidentally, but completely, forgotten. Modern fashionable Protestant worship may be a very comfortable affair for its well-satisfied listeners, but it cannot be considered to bear any resemblance to the religion of self-denial and mortification, whose most prominent landmarks are the Stable of Bethlehem and the Hill of Calvary.

The Red River Insurrection.

The insurgent half-breeds of Winnipeg, or whatever other name the late colony of the Hudson Bay Company is to be called by for the future, are getting matters all their own way. The Canadian Government has committed to think twice before employing force, and has dispatched a commissioner to Fort Garry to try what can be done to coax the malcontents to terms. Considering the threats so feebly put forth by the Canadian journals at the commencement of the revolt, and the contemptuous language employed toward the half-breeds, it is certainly a remarkable change to find the Dominion authorities reduced to act the part of suppliants; and, what is more, the insurgent chiefs appear to fully appreciate the circumstances which brought it about. They seem fully determined to govern their country after their own fashion; and, while listening to the promises held out by the envoys, they manifest no disposition to abandon the freedom they have secured. As far as can be gleaned from the meagre accounts transmitted to us, they are willing to treat with Canada on terms of equality; but, at the same time, they have not, by any means, made up their minds on the subject of remaining in any way connected with the British Empire. The newspaper organ which has been started at Fort Garry boldly advocates annexation to the United States as the best thing for the country; and, indeed, it is a step should think of taking it will, no doubt, of considerable use in bringing the Canadians to reason. Indeed, the Government at present appears willing to make almost any concession if the insurgents will only consent to become a part of the Confederation, and, as far as the first cause of the rebellion was concerned, all their complaints would be immediately removed; but, naturally enough, the latter, having now tasted the sweets of self-government, are not at all in a hurry to abandon it. The whole affair is an admirable example of what even a handful of men can effect when properly united; and whatever be their ultimate fate, the French half-breeds of the Red River have shown themselves to be the right stuff to form a nation from, by the admirable manner in which they have conducted their present struggle for independence.

Answers to Correspondents.

H. O'Reilly, Sonora St., Rochester.—Your letter is a universal and just practice in all well-regulated newspaper offices to publish no communications without the name of the writer being attached; not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith. Correspondents should bear this in mind.

J. O'B.—We submitted your queries to the Rector of the Archdiocese (from whom there can be no more profound) these columns. His answer is, substantially, that the Church has never held that the reception of the Holy Eucharist is necessary to the salvation of children dying after Baptism and before arriving at the age of responsibility. Moreover, the Council of Trent formally proclaimed this dogma. Consequently, the contrary belief is heretical.

J. MACKIN, Ireland.—The Cambridge Epochs of the late Governor Moreno, is in Lower California, and about 40 years of age. Consequently, he was born in Mexico. The soil is reported to be generally very rich; there are no inhabitants except Moreno's family and his dependents; there are no Indians, except those employed about the hacienda, and they are as docile as possible. There is plenty of wood in close proximity; Juarez is the name of the nearest seaport, and is about 17 miles distant, whence the produce could be shipped to San Francisco or elsewhere. Our belief is that there is no market in that country for B. A man can have his pick of the land for $25 an acre—the first half in two years from the date of agreement, and the other half two years thereafter. Considering that Lower California is under the Mexican Government, and that fine and eligibly situated land can be had at such a cheap rate, we think Governor Moreno asks, we deem $25 an acre exorbitant. If you carefully read Father Ubach's advertisement of the Guadalupe Church, published in THE MONITOR of December 18, 1869, you will learn something about Lower California that you know.

EX-MAYOR MCCOPPIN ASSAULTED SENATOR BERGE.—San Francisco, Jan. 27.—Shortly after 12 o'clock, Mr. McCoppin met Senator Berge in the refreshment room of the Capitol—after the remarks by Mr. Berge in the Senate on Mr. McCoppin's card—and after asking him if he had called him "a liar," struck him lightly in the face. Friends of the parties interfered to prevent further difficulty. [Mr. McCoppin published a card on Tuesday in relation to a bill introduced by Mr. Berge in the Senate a few days previous. Berge rose to a question of privilege on Thursday, and said the charges contained in McCoppin's card were false. This is the cause of the "little unpleasantness," which is not likely to end here.]

Saturday, Jan. 29, 1870.

(FROM THE MONITOR.)

Presentation of Our Lord in the Temple.

Mary to the Temple came
With her lord's newest and light,
The Child of Heaven in mortal name,
The God of angels infant.
And the virgin Mother knew her place
Among the poor and lowly;
Of all who in the temple came
To offer up their holy,
What Mary held the most sweet gift,
Yet, as all man to the Temple came
And in their children's stead,
Simeon—the Scripture tells his name—
He knew that gift his God was he.
He asked the Virgin to give him that child.
To the priest in his temple dreamed
He should see the Saviour's face;
He dreamed that he might now depart,
That the eyes had seen the promised light,
Upon whose rest could not molder pass,
And the cared not here to stay.
But longed for the world, where all is bright
And for ever and ever is day.
Anna, the Prophetess, she, too, was there,
In the temple she ever was found,
She knew the Messiah in that fair child
And she spoke of him to all present.
Two little doves, by Joseph given,
Mary on her floral table,
Were his sacrifice and his ransom
Years for her infant boy.
But the Mother bowed with love and grace
As sorrow on her heart was nestled,
"Those eyes shall close, that shall pierce,"
"That out of mine shall come many to re-
Yet remember hearts are ever
Where the Saviour's footsteps are.
Remember thee not our Mother, sent
Is no relief.

FEBRUARY 2.
SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 27, 1870.

The Unsexed Convention.

A large meeting of masculine women and feminine men was held at Dashaway Hall Wednesday evening. Mrs. Rev. C. G. Ames, Mrs. Snow and Mrs. Laura De Force Gordon, were elected Presidents, one chair-woman; a sweet faced blossom of two-and-forty, named Miss Atkinson, was made secretary. There was, as might be expected, a great deal of talk, in which some hundred impromptu orators took part. Mr. Rodgers, a benevolent-looking old lady, whose motherly countenance would lead us safer that the nursery was her peculiar sphere, was elected Chairman, or chairwo

Reflections

[FROM ADDRESSING A COPY OF MY FIRST POEM PUBLISHED IN THE NEWSPAPER.]

Ah! here it is! I'm famous now—
An author and a poet!
It really is in print! 'Ye gods!'
How proud I'll be to show it!
And gentle Annie! What a thrill
Will animate her breast,
To read those ardent lines and know
To whom they are addressed.

Why, bless my soul! here's something
What can the paper mean, [strange,
By talking of the graceful brook,
That gander o'er the green?!
And here's a t instead of r,
Which makes it "dippling rill;"
"We'll seek the "that" instead of
And "hell" instead of "hill." [pshade,

"They look so!"—what! I recollect,
"Twas "grecel," and then 'twas "kind!"
And now to think the stupid fool,
For "bland" has printed "blind,"
Was ever such a provoking work—
The curious, by the by,
Has anything been rendered blind
By giving it an eye.

"Host thou ——
Host thou no enemy," that's left out,
"I hope that thou art dead" is put
"I hope that thou art dead."
"As ever say in such a sense,
So many blunders crammed?
"Those gentle eyes be bedimmed" is spelt
"Those gentle eyes be bedammned."

"The color of the rose" is "nonse,"
"Affection" is "affletion:"
I wonder if the Hebrew holds
In hot as well as boiled:
"They set a flood," the r is gone!
"Was ever world have deemed
Such such a trifling thing could change
A friend!" into a "fiend?!"

"There's are the sun" is rendered "lame,"
It really is too bad!
And here because an i is out,
My "lovely maid!" is "made,"
They drove her blind by poking in
All eyes to process new!
And now they've gouged it out again,
And made her crazy too.

"Where are the muses fled, that thou Should'st live so long unsung?"
Changed my version—here it is—
"Should'st live so long unhung."
"The fate of woman's love is thine,"
An h commences false.
How small a circumstance will turn,
A woman's love to base.

I'll read no more! What shall I do?
I'll never dare to send it!
The paper's scattered air and wide,
The poor lost lines to mend it.
O Fame! thou chest of human bliss!
Why did I ever write?
I wish my poem had been burnt
Before it saw the light.

Let's dog and hospitalize!
The gentleman her eyes don't's plain—
I've said her she's a lunatic,
And blind, and deaf, and lame,
My paper such a horrid host
Of poetry or prose!
I'll add that she was a fiend, and praised
The color of her nose.

I wish I had that editor
Alone in half a minute,
I'd bang him 'till his heart's content,
And with an h begin it;
I'd jam his body, eyes and bones,
And spell it with a d,
And send him to that hill of his—
He spells it with an e.

Christianity in Persia.

Last week, says the Western Watchman of Jan. 15, we had the pleasure of a visit of a syrochaldaic priest, one who spoke the language and represented by his martyred ancestry the faith of our Blessed Lord. Seeing him so far in the West and mingling among the children of the common faith, it seemed as if the promise of human life were completed, and Alpha and Omega proved identical. He is now collecting in our city for his persecuted church. Not being able to speak English he has had the following address translated:

* * * My native country, Persia, covers an area of 482,000 square miles. It is bounded on the north by Asiatic Russia and the Caspian Sea; on the south by the Persian Gulf; on the east by Afghanistan and Beloochistan, and on the west by Asiatic Turkey. It is situated not far from the garden of Eden, where our first parent Adam was created, and close by Mount Ararat, where the Ark of Noah rested. It is also situated in the vicinity of the land of our fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

THE CLIMATE

of Persia is very warm—we have very little cold weather—our country is not very mountainous, nor are there many deserts; but it abounds in rivers, the vapors of which rise in great volumes and descend again like dew to moisten the earth. The soil is fertile but poorly cultivated, yet, notwithstanding this fact, it is very productive. Fruits of all kinds abounds, such as apricots, prunes, apples, peaches, pears, grapes, cherries, figs, oranges and dates; while nuts, such as almonds, hazelnuts, etc., are in great profusion. The grapes are of the very first quality, and a very good article of wine is manufactured from them. The husbandman gathers here his crop of wheat, barley, rice and cotton.

THE GOVERNMENT of Persia is an absolute and unrestrained despotism. The Sovereign is assisted by a grand Vizier, the Amur, who commands the army during the Sovereign's absence, and the Imaba, a superintendent of the Ravenue Department. The government is Mahommedan and strongly opposed to Christianity. The population is estimated at 12,000,000, of which 10,000,000 are Mahommedan, and the remaining 2,000,000 are Christians. The entire wealth of the country is monopolized by the Mahommedans, whilst the Christians are kept in a miserable condition. They can never hope to rise out of this misery so long as the present laws are in existence.

No Christian is permitted to engage in mechantile pursuits, neither can he enter the ranks of the artizan or mechanic. The only means of obtaining a livelihood allowed them by the fanaticism of Musulmen, is the cultivation of the soil; but, even here, the Government becomes the party most benefitted; for as soon as the harvest is ready, the unfortunate husbandman must give two-thirds of the fruit of his labor to the Government. Thus the poor Christian realizes but little for his life of toil. In point of civilization and religion, the Persia of ancient times was far advanced, but in these days things are much changed. Ignorance, fanaticism and corruption have done their work.

RELIGIONS.

There are three kinds of religion in Persia. The Mahommetan predominates next, in point of numbers, is the Nestorian, and the third is the Catholic. Mahommetanism here reigns free and unbridled, and truly exhibits the demoniac spirit of its founder. Every crime—injustice, robbery, assassination, and corruption in a word, every species of abomination—is tolerated to the followers of the Prophet, especially in their dealings with the Christians. The Nestorians are Christians, after a fashion, but they are far from practicing the true religion of Christ, for they do not avail themselves of the sacraments which He established. They have no Confession, no Confirmation, no Extreme Unction, and so that they leave the world very much like the beasts of the field, without the rites of the Church. Besides this, these heretics have no veneration for the Blessed Virgin. The number of Catholics has been very limited, but we have had the consolation and joy of seeing their number greatly augmented by numerous Nestorian conversions.

THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS

of the Persians are altogether different from those of this country. In the first place, we have no railroads, nor carriages, nor public highways; we have only narrow paths for horses and mules, camels or asses. The houses are nearly all built of brick, generally but one, and seldom more than two stories high. The roofs are flat, for, during eight months in the year, the inhabitants sleep upon them, in consequence of the insufferable heat within doors. The Persians have no wooden or iron bedsteads, they lie on the floor; neither do they use chairs nor sofas as you do here; they sit on the floor. The use of the fork is also unknown—they make use of their hands for conveying food to the mouth. Their food consists principally of vegetables or fruits, and large quantities of rice. In some parts of the country the inhabitants eat no bread, but subsist almost entirely on rice. For liquor they use wine, but there is nothing but cold Water, for the law of Mahomet, their Prophet, positively forbids the use of wine. The Christians sometime drink wine, but very seldom. The many kinds of liquors used in Europe and America are unknown among us.

THE PERSIAN COSTUME

is generally made of cotton stuffs, but very light. The women, especially those of the Mahommetans, are not permitted to travel. They are nearly altogether secluded from the public eye and closely veiled. The masses of the people are very ignorant; there are no schools, so that among the followers of the Prophet there is hardly one hundred thousand who can either read or write. The Nestorian schismatics are in nearly the same condition. The Christians are in a very deplorable condition; looked upon with distrust by their rulers, who treat them harshly, they oblige them to pay heavy taxes and often condemn them to pay unjust fines. * * *

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

H. Committo & Co.
(Successor to P. Rossi)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS,
378 and No. 380 Front Street,
JOHN PLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Dealers in Fine Brandies, Wines, Cigars, etc.
Fire-proof Stone, Brick and Iron Warehouse, Corner of Washington and Sansome Streets, San Francisco.
Kelly & Egan
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 604 Battery Street,
Near Jackson, SAN FRANCISCO.
P. H. CAMPION
IMPORTER OF WINES, BRANDIES,
XYO., ETC.
N.W. COR. CALIFORNIA AND FRONT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.
City Hall Saloon,
631 MERCHANT STREET,
Opposite Dunbar Alley, San Francisco.
GEORGE DOUGHERTY, Prop't.
ap29-1f
EDWARD KELLY,
(Formerly doing business at 625 Sansome street,)
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Liquor Dealer,
BUSH STREET,
In the Building of the Bronze Horse,
Opposite the Lick House.
Families supplied with the choicest brands of Liquors, in any part of the city, free of charge. Orders solicited. ap29 1f
P. J. TANNIN,
N. W. cor. Third and Stevenson sts.,
Keeps constantly on hand the finest
WINES, LIQUORS &
CIGARS.
OLD BOURBON WHISKY, CLARET, SAUTERNE AND RHINE WINES, PURE APPLE BRANDY, VIRGINIA HOLLANDS GIN AND SCHIEDAM SCHNAPPS.
WM. F. DOLAN,
104 THIRD STREET,
Importer and Dealer in FRENCH WINES AND
Irish Whiskies,
Hennessy's Pale Brandy, Martell's Three Star Brandy, Otard, Dupuy & Co.'s Brandy, Gin, Port and Sherry Wines, Champagne, Claret, Sauterne, Rhine Wine, Cognac Brandies, Scotch Whiskies, Jamaica Rum, Cordials, Bitters, Ale, Porter, Cider, Lemon Syrup, Cherry Brandy, Maraschino, Curacoa, Absinthe, Anisette, Vermouth, Kirschwasser, Etc., Etc.
Hennessy's Pale Brandy, Martell's Three Star Brandy, Otard, Dupuy & Co.'s Brandy, Gin, Port and Sherry Wines, Champagne, Claret, Sauterne, Rhine Wine, Cognac Brandies, Scotch Whiskies, Jamaica Rum, Cordials, Bitters, Ale, Porter, Cider, Lemon Syrup, Cherry Brandy, Maraschino, Curacoa, Absinthe, Anisette, Vermouth, Kirschwasser, Etc., Etc.
Orders from the country promptly executed. Goods packed with care. Terms cash. ap29-1f

EDUCATIONAL.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Academy commences on the first Monday in September. It is conducted by a society of ladies who, in Europe and the Atlantic States, are devoted to education. To instil into the minds of youth a noble and laudable emulation; to form their hearts to virtue; to furnish their minds with useful knowledge, and to lay the foundation of the well being of society, by giving to the rising generation a good, solid and religious education, such is the primary object of the Sisters of Notre Dame. The Academy is situated in the most healthy part of Marysville. The building is large, commodious and well ventilated.

The physical welfare of the pupils constantly received the maternal care of the Sisters. The diet is wholesome and abundant. The greatest attention is paid to the comfort and health of the pupils, and in case of sickness they experience the care of a mother. Parents may rest assured that their children will be subjected to no other influence than such as is calculated to develop the faculties, and improve the moral capacity of the pupils intrusted to their care, such as the cultivation of gentleness of disposition, politeness and refinement of manners.

The course of studies is English, but the French, German and Spanish languages are taught by natives of the teachers, the pupils have every facility to perfect themselves in these languages.

TERMS—PER QUARTER IN ADVANCE:

Board, Tuition and Washing, per session..... $25 00

EXTRA CHARGES:

Piano, with use of instrument, per quarter..... $ 8 00
Use of Harp, " " ..... 6 00
Vocal Music, " " ..... 6 00
Drawing and Painting, " " ..... 6 00

For further particulars inquire of the Sister Superior, Academy of Notre Dame, Marysville, Cal.

TERMS FOR DAY SCHOLARS:

Senior Class, per month..... $ 6 00
Third and Second Elementary, per month, each.. 5 00
First Class, " " ..... 4 00
Small children, " " ..... 3 00

Extra charges in proportion as above. The Schools conducted by the Sisters are open 1st Sept.

ORPHAN ASYLUM
OF THE
IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY
PAJARO VALLEY, CAL.

THIS ESTABLISHMENT WAS OPENED ON the 1st of November last. All orphans under the age of fourteen years, without any distinction of creed or sect, are entitled to be admitted.

THE DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL

Attached to it was opened at the same time, under the direction of the Sisters of Mercy.

For Day Scholars, according to their level:
Higher per month..... $2 and $3
Boarders, Tuition and Board included, per..... $25
Also invariably in advance per month..... $15

The system of education will be suitable to the needs of both orphans and children whose parents cannot afford to send them elsewhere.

For further particulars apply to
REV. A. ROUSSELL, no22-1f Director.

The American Surgery and Dispensary.

The American Surgery and Dispensary, No. 625 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's, has been established for years, on the European plan, by physicians and surgeons of the highest repute in the profession—graduates respectively of London, Dublin and New York city, whose practice in the hospitals of the above cities, and the extensive practice in every quarter of the globe, entitles them to the full confidence of all placing themselves under their treatment. Also, a consulting physician and surgeon from the American Surgery and Dispensary, Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's, late of the most eminent physicians on the Pacific coast, can be consulted daily, from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M.

The most modest and consulting surgeon, for the treatment of Private Diseases, Seminal Weakness and Impotency, as the result of Self-Abuse, as practiced by the Royal Oriental Hygienic Institute of Paris, can be consulted at the above address, at your own during which time he has tolled many thousands of cases. Figure not on visiting or consultations with the following eminent physicians, viz: Dr. Wm. Hammond, Surgeon-General U. S. Army, Dr. Hammond, Surgeon-General U. S. Army, Dr. Simmons, Surgeon-General U. S. Army, Dr. Simmons, Surgeon-General U. S. Army, Dr. Simmons

The Chamber of Horrors.

Read the following extract, from the letter of a correspondent to the Cincinnati Commercial, dated at Canton, China. It is enough to turn the blood of one's veins to ice. And yet the dominant party, through its Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment, would welcome these sanguinary and cruel barbarians to full and immediate citizenship in the United States:

"Passing on between the grim warders of this 'Temple of Horrors,' and ascending they duty grass-grown moat, I found, a'ter ve of chambers ranged on three sides of the quadrilateral court, the fourth side being occupied by the arched gateway and a kind of market place, cheap and nasty. Within these chambers are exhibited scenes and images repre senting the modes of judicial punishment inflicted upon offenders against the peace and dignity of the Empire. These are the 'Chambers of Horrors.' Let us look at some of them, taking care, meanwhile, that the thievish boy, which follow do not steal the watch from my fob.

"Those chambers are grated, and the objects within are seen through the gratings from without. There is room for the condemned, confined by firm bands and lashings between the planks, standing upright, and two men, executioners, with a broad, heavy sword, swing him down, lopping off from the crown of his head, from the middle of his body. The sword, with its thick end chamfered, and ground, of course, seated in his official chair and robes, to witness the execution. When I saw them the sword had cut both through the skull and the face, the head, neck and body all showing, by a gory line, the course of the saw as it passed through flanks and all. The torture expressed on the cadaverous features of the poor wretch was frightful. Meanwhile Li Mandarin smoked and the executioners plied with their swords on the next victim.

"In another chamber a criminal is kneeling, his hands bound to his shoulders, and eccentric executioner, in the act of beheading him. In the next chamber is laid at full length, face and breast down, his body with bamboo. The executioner is beating him to death with a bamboo. The executioner is beating him to death with a heavy cane, the blows falling on the spot. The cadaverous features of the victim seems to be terrible. In another chamber, the condemned are suffering mutilation, the executioner, with a pair of pincers, tearing off the nose, ears, and so on

The Chamber of Horrors.

Read the following extract, from the letter of a correspondent to the Cincinnati Commercial, dated at Canton, China. It is enough to turn the blood of one's veins to ice. And yet the dominant party, through its Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment, would welcome these sanguinary and cruel barbarians to full and immediate citizenship in the United States!

"Passing on between the grim warders of this 'Temple of Horrors,' and ascending the dirty grass-grown court, 2nd round, abaries of chambers ranged on three sides of the quadrilateral court, the fourth side being occupied by the arched gateway and a kind of market place, cheap and nasty. Within these chambers are exhibited scenes and images representing the modes of judicial punishment inflicted upon offenders against the peace and dignity of the Empire. These are the 'Chambers of Horrors.' Let us look at some of them, taking care, meanwhile, that the thievish man which follow do not steal the boots from my shoes.

"These chambers are grated, and the objects within are seen through the gratings from without. There is a criminal in the convict is confined by firm bands and lashings between the planks, standing upright, and two men are sawing him down, longitudinally, from the crown of his head, through the middle of his body. The executioners, with his clerk and constables, was present, of course, seated in his official chair and robes, to witness the execution. When I saw them the sawyers had got well down to the private parts, the head, neck and body all showing, by a gory line, the course of the saw as it progressed through flesh and all. The torture expressed on the carved features of the poor wretch was frightful. Meanwhile the Mandarin smoked and the executioners piled on the energy in a horrible vocation.

"In another chamber, a criminal is kneeling, his hands bound behind him, and a gigantic executioner, with flowing sword, is in the act of beheading him. In the next, the culprit is laid at full length, face upon his face, and one of the stalwart executioner constable is beating his bared body with a bamboo. The flesh seems fairly jellied by the blows administered, and some minutes before my arrival at the spot. The sufferings of the convict seems to be terrible. In another chamber, the condemned are suffering mutilation, having their hands cut off in succession, section by section. Again, and I see the executioner holding a convict down, and pouring hot lead into his ears. In the next, I see the condemned is being boiled in oil. The body is seen placed in a huge caldron of boiling oil, and placed on a rude furnace, with ruddy flames beneath. Only the face is above the surface of the boiling oil, and here the expression of unspeakable agony in still another, I see the convict is condemned to be ground to a pumice between two ponderous mill-stones, which are turned round and round. The resulted logees, the streaming blood, the mangled limbs and body, all attest the thoroughness of the grinding process while the head and face, the latter frightfully expressive of agony and horror, still remain to be 'milled,' as the next grist in this 'mill of the gods,' which is forever to grind slowly, but to always grind."

And these wretches the Mongrel party of this country are willing to take into their political brotherhood!

AN ELOPEMENT.—A Tuam correspondent of the Cork Herald writes: "An extraordinary occurrence of a romantic, but unfortunately criminal character, has been brought to light before the Tuam magistracy. A few days since a gentleman of near Castleisland, the daughter of a very respectable father, who during his lifetime had been very well known and deservedly respected, eloped with a young Scotch gamekeeper, named Donald Cameron. They had, it appears, been for a long time previously very much attached to one another, and though he was a frequent visitor at the house, where he had been on terms of intimacy with her family, he never attempted to make any serious proposal of matrimony, or dit, bargain inside the coverlet, as the Irish peasantry were not acquainted to her guardians, who, unaccompanied by a well-filled purse-the lady-love, however, they proceeded to a fortune, it is said, of £500, was not a moneyary, and preferring a penniless young fellow with a good face and intelligent address to a fellow-eated peasant with a balance in the bank, she consented to adopt the bold course of running away with her gallant. . . ." After two or three days the gallant swain was arrested, and locked in jail on a charge of forgery. The young lady is at present with her friends.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SIX PRACTICE,
THURSDAY, Jan. 27, 1870.

FLOUR—During the past week there have been no fresh arrivals for export. There is a fair demand for extra for local consumption. We quote local brands as follows: Phœ. $7 75@8 25; Superfine, $7 50@7 75; Shipping Extra, $7 25@7 50; choice Family and Bakers' Extra, $7 75@8 00; Oregon, $7 50@8 00.

WHEAT—The market during the past week has been entirely inactive, and the receipts have been very light. We quote the range of the market at $1 80@1 90, for ordinary good to choice shipping and milling.

BARLEY—We hear of no fresh orders for export. The requirements for the country and feed purposes are very limited. We quote Chevalier at $1 70@1 75, and Bay Brewing at $1 60@1 65.

OATS—The market is nominal. We hear of no sales and no export. We quote good to choice at $1 90@2 05, and Gray at $1 80@1 90.

CHICKEN—The receipts have been large since our last weekly review but prices are unchanged. We quote Hinckelin at 87½@90c, and Bellegar, at 75@80c.

HAY—Quotable at $19@21 for ordinary and to choice wheat.

STRAW—Large bulwave $9 00.

BEANS—Bea at 3½@3½c; Bayou, 2½@2½c; White, 2½@2½c; Pinkeye, 2½@2½c; Pinks, 2½@2½c; Reds, 2½@2½c.

CORN—Quotable at $1 15@1 20.

POTATOES—Are dull. We quote at $1 @1 25 per sack.

ONIONS—Are still. We quote at $1 @1 25 per sack.

BUTTER—Is in fair demand. We quote at 22½@25c for fresh and 20@22½c for fine.

BUCKWHEAT—Meets a limited supply at $1 @1 25 per lb for choice.

HONEY—The supply is large and the market is quite steady. Quotable at 12½@15c per lb.

BEESWAX—We quote at 20@22½c per lb.

HIDES—Are quiet. We quote at 12½@13½c for Spanish and 10@11c for California.

TALLOW—Is in fair demand at 6½@7½c per lb.

WOOL—Is in fair demand at 30@35c for fine and 25@28c for coarse.

HOPS—New crop California, range as follows: 9@10c for choice, 8@8½c for prime, 7@7½c for fair, and 6@6½c for ordinary. Old crop California, quotable at 3@5c per lb.

CALIFORNIA HONEY—Is in fair demand at 12½@15c per lb.

WOOL—Market continues quiet, with little change to report. Fine Spring Merino, 30@32½c; Middle, slightly better, 32½@35c; Long Staple, 35@37½c; Pine Combing, 40@42½c.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Receipts of this description have been light and prices have been firm and generally tending upward. We quote as follows: Choice Fresh Roll, 25@27½c; Choice Fresh Roll, in Firkins, 22½@25c; Inferior to Fair, 20@22½c; Pickled, 15@17½c; Pickled Firkins, 12½@15c; Cheese, 12½@15c; Eggs, Ranch, 30@32½c; Eggs, Quotable at 25@27½c.

CANNED FRUIT.

Canned Fruits are in fair demand. We quote as follows: Apricots, at 16@18c; Peaches, at 16@18c; Pears, at 16@18c; Plums, at 16@18c; Cherries, at 16@18c; Blackberries, at 16@18c; Raspberries, at 16@18c; Strawberries, at 16@18c; Gooseberries, at 16@18c; Quinces, at 16@18c.

FRESH MEATS.

Market is quiet and unchanged. We quote as follows: Beef, 10@12½c; Mutton, 12½@15c; Spring Lamb, 15@17½c; Veal, 12½@15c; Pork, 12½@15c.

POULTRY AND GAME.

The market is well supplied with the following: Live Turkeys, 25@27½c; Dressed, 27½@30c; Young Chickens, 25@27½c; Old Roosters, 20@22½c; Ducks, $5 00@6 00; Geese, $1 50@2 00; Quail, $1 00@1 25 per dozen; Rabbits, $1 00@1 25 per dozen; Hares, $1 00@1 25 per dozen; Venison, 12½@15c per lb; Grouse, $1 00@1 25 per dozen; Quail, $1 00@1 25 per dozen.

A MASTER OF ALL TRADES.—A Western paper contains the following advertisement: "Wants a situation, a practical printer, who is competent to take charge of any department in a printing and publishing house. Would accept a professorship in any of the academies. He has no objection to teach ornamental painting and penmanship, geometry, trigonometry, and many other sciences. Is particularly qualified to teach a class in a small evangelical church, or as a local preacher. He would have no objection to form a small but select class of interesting young ladies in the higher branches. To a dentist or chiropodist he would be invaluable, as he can do almost anything. Would unexceptionally accept position as a base or tenor singer in a choir."

A NEW MODE OF COURTSHIP.—The Revolution, the Woman's Rights journal, published in New York city, proposes a novel system of courtship as a means of placing men and women on an equality. The marriageable youth of both sexes, according to this plan, would assemble at stated intervals. Each one would write on a slip of paper the name of the person he or she would like to marry; the papers would then be submitted to two sworn individuals, and if any two were found to have declared a mutual regard, the fact would be announced, and the marriage would follow. The remaining papers would be immediately destroyed.

WARMTH OF THE SNOW BLANKET.—Much controversy existed as to the warmth imparted to the earth by a covering of snow, until M. Boussingault, during the winter of 1867-'68, found that a thermometer plunged in snow to the depth of adozenette about four inches, sometimes marks nine degrees of heat greater than at the surface.

DISEASES IN THE PACIFIC STATES.—Now here is a matter of great importance to the people of this more especially, or married with more distressing emphasis. Dr. Hall, the physician, private, strong that the healing in the states, particularly private, strong that the healing and the effects of the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, which has completely restored their hair to its original color, and given it additional vigor and beauty. Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is recommended. It is not to be rated a secret, but is composed of the most healthful and invigorating ingredients, and is perfectly harmless in its effects upon the hair or the scalp. It neither operates for ever to the hair, nor does it stain the skin. Those who have used it have found it to be all that is claimed for it, and as a guarantee that you will not be deceived in the use of it, you will find the name of R. P. Hall & Co., Nashua, N. H., blown in the bottle. Sold by druggists everywhere.

Catholic Churches—Hours of Service.

ST. MARY'S PARISH.

BOUNDARIES—Commencing at the Bay shore, Dupont street by Broadway street to Montgomery, Montgomery to Jackson, Jackson to Dupont, Dupont to Broadway, Broadway to Larkin, Larkin to Bay, Bay to the place of beginning. Pastor—Rev. Father Prendergast. Residence—Broadway, between Dupont and Stockton streets.

ST. MARY'S CATHEDRAL—Northeast corner of California and Dupont streets. Rev. Father Prendergast, Archbishop Alemany, Archbishop Varsy, Rev. Father Brandon, Rev. Father Gallagher, Rev. Father Shanahan, Rev. Father Ryan, Rev. Father Bacon, Rev. Father Scott, Rev. Father Ellis, Rev. Father Hayes, Rev. Father Hayes, Rev. Father Hayes

LIFE OF POPE PIUS IX.

Translated for The Universe from the French of L'Abbe Gaume, L'Abbe Domenech, and other Authors of reputation.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Pope at Gaeta—His letter to the King of Naples—Noble conduct of the latter—The patrimony can belong to the Pope alone—Pius IX. at Gaeta receiving the homages of the Christian world—His proclamation to his subjects—The Revolutionists re Rome not recognized by Europe.

On the morning of the 25th of November, 1848, Pius IX. entered the small Neapolitan town which was to afford him a safe retreat for many months. His first care was to communicate to the King of Naples, to whom he sent the following dignified letter:

"Sire,—The enemies of the Holy See and of religion triumph at Rome. In order to avoid compromising his person and character, and lest his presence should appear to give a sanction to the excesses they are committing, the chief of the Catholic Church has found himself compelled to abandon his capital. I do not know to what part of the globe the Divine will, to which I submit, may conduct my steps. In the meanwhile, I have taken refuge in your majesty's kingdom, attended by a few faithful adherents. I do not know what your sentiments may be in my regard; I assume I think it right to inform you, through the Count de Spaure, the Bavarian ambassador to the Holy See, that I am ready to quit the Neapolitan territory, should my presence be a cause of political trouble to your majesty."

The reply of Ferdinand was a princely one: "The masters of the palace received orders to prepare instantly those royal wardrobes everything that it seemed probable the illustrious exile might need. The gold and silver plate of the King's table were sent down to the port for embarkation; the steam frigates, the Robert and the Tancred, with one regiment of Grenadiers and a battalion of the line, were ready for sea in a few hours. "We will be the bearer of our own answer, court," said the good monarch. And, in truth, before the amazement of the "inhabitants of Gaeta (who were ignorant of the presence of the Pope in their town), towards noon of the 26th King Ferdinand, accompanied by his Queen, the Count Aquila, the "infant" Don Sebastian, and a numerous suite, landed. He (and proceeded to the royal secure hotel in which the Pontiff had concealed himself since his arrival.

And there, kneeling at the feet of the Vicar of Christ, did this Christian king give thanks to Heaven, that had chosen him to shelter and defend the own annointed servant.

When the first Napoleon was in the midst of his wonderful successes, and forgot that all power comes from God in the words nearly the whole of Europe was indeed "at his feet." And seized with the spirit that ruined Haman, with the world at his feet, he yet could not endure that there should be found one single man not acknowledging the divineness of his right to everything. So he wrote the words, "Rome must be mine, as well as all the rest."

What was the answer he received from the head of the Catholic Church? "You mistake; there is to be no emperor in Rome." It was the protest of right against brute force. And when by violence Napoleon had succeeded in placing the tricolor on St. Angelo, and issued that famous decree which declared the Roman States to be part of universal France, there came another protest in answer from the same dauntless voice—the public excommunication of the emperor of the world!

In this noble document we find words very applicable to the present state of Italian policy. "The temporal power is not ours to dispose of; we only administer it." These events occurred in the years 1805–1809.

Only six years later, upon the rock of St. Helena, without power, and a captive for life, might be seen the former conqueror of Italy and Spain, of Germany and Egypt. And his story must be told in one sentence. In the intoxication of his ambition he had impiously laid his hand upon the Ark of God—it had fallen upon and crushed him.

Why do we go so far back? To make this assertion more forcibly evident—that heresy nearly always forgets the lessons of history.

The news of the flight of Pius IX. from his capital was the signal throughout Protestant countries for the greatest rejoicing. In England the one cry was, "The Papacy at length has come to an end!"

"Why to an end?" asked many a sad-hearted but loyal Catholic.

"Because the Pope has fled; he has left Rome; he has lost his throne, his people have cast him off," was the newer.

"Did such a catastrophe never happen in Christendom before? and if so, did it put an end to the Church of God, or did it destroy even the temporal power of God's vicar?"

"Alas, not we can't say that it did."

Admirable and daring logicians, who prove an assertion by a fact that has nothing in the world to do with it!

In the case of Pius IX. we know exactly what happened in spite of the expectations of infidel and heretic. His flight to Naples gave occasion for the exhibition to the whole world of how mightily is the power wielded by the successor of St. Peter. In every tongue spoken under heaven there came to him words of sympathy and loving offers of assistance. The letter addressed to him by the French Republic in this hour of his distress, proved that France, whatever may be her Government, is always heart and soul Catholic France, "The eldest daughter of the Church." She offered hospitality worthy of herself and of him.

Louis Napoleon, then a candidate for the Presidentship, wrote thus to the Nuncio: "The temporal sovereignty of the spiritual chief of the Church is bound up with Catholicity as with the safety of Italy."

Every Catholic people sent a deputation to express at once their fidelity, and their detestation of the act of his enemies. From one end of Christendom to the other there was heard the loud expression of grief for the sufferings of the head of the Church, mingled with significant denunciations.

And soon the flags of all nations were seen waving in the port of Gaeta, and the representatives of the old and new world transformed the little fortress town into one of the most brilliant courts of Europe.

"It is a matter of history," said the Times of December, 1849, "that at no period of his life, did Pius IX. is more entirely and essentially Pope and the head of the Church than many hundreds of his predecessors reminded all Rome itself the Saturnian."

Gaeta for the time was Rome, for Rome itself had become a den of thieves.

But to resume our narrative. Two days after his arrival at Gaeta the Sovereign Pontiff issued a proclamation addressed to his rebellious people.

"Pius IX., to his subjects:—The violence offered us in these latter days has compelled us to seek a refuge, for the time, in a foreign place. Amongst the evils that have determined us to this was this most powerful one: that we might be left with the fullest liberty in the exercise of the supreme authority of the Holy See, which the Catholic world, under present circumstances, might well suppose not to be free in our hands; * * * we cannot without treason to our duties abstain from protesting solemnly that we have been compelled by violence, and, therefore, we declare all acts null and void and of no legal force performed by those who have seized our power. * * * Yet, having at heart not to leave Rome without a relief or government in our absence, we nominate a commission of the following: Cardinal Castracane, Monsignore Roberti, Prince Barberini, the Marquis de Bologna, Ricci de Macerata, and Lieutenant-General Zucchi.

"Given P. IX.

"Gaeta, 27th November, 1848."

This proclamation was not known in Rome until the 7th of December. The Revolutionists had used every effort to conceal it, for it was the destruction of the falsehood which they had already circulated throughout the States, that they were appointed the guardians of Rome by the Pope himself. Indeed, it is true to say that so far from having in any way, even the most indirect, sanctioned the tempestuous the Revolution one hour of presumptuous violence. Every public act of government on its part was instantly annulled by a proclamation from Gaeta, while at the same time Europe proclaimed the spiritual chief of the Church in a few months she was going to maintain by force of arms, that the Pope out of Rome is not free, and therefore, she declared, can not and will and of no legal force performed by those who have seized our power. * * * Yet, having at heart not to leave Rome without order or government in our absence, we nominate a commission of the following: Cardinal Castracane, Monsignore Roberti, Prince Barberini, the Marquis de Bologna, Ricci de Macerata, and Lieutenant-General Zucchi.

"Given P. IX.

"Gaeta, 27th November, 1848."

This proclamation was not known in Rome until the 7th of December. The Revolutionists had used every effort to conceal it, for it was the destruction of the falsehood which they had already circulated throughout the States, that they were appointed the guardians of Rome by the Pope himself. Indeed, it is true to say that so far from having in any way, even the most indirect, sanctioned the tempestuous the Revolution one hour of presumptuous violence. Every public act of government on its part was instantly annulled by a proclamation from Gaeta, while at the same time Europe proclaimed the spiritual chief of the Church in a few months she was going to maintain by force of arms, that the Pope out of Rome is not free, and therefore, she declared, can not and will and of no legal force performed by those who have seized our power. * * * Yet, having at heart not to leave Rome without order or government in our absence, we nominate a commission of the following: Cardinal Castracane, Monsignore Roberti, Prince Barberini, the Marquis de Bologna, Ricci de Macerata, and Lieutenant-General Zucchi.

"Given P. IX.

"Gaeta, 27th November, 1848."

Infallibility of the Pope.

When from the pulpit, press and platform we are constantly assailed by our Protestant fellow-countrymen, who denounce "Papal Infallibility" as a monstrous invasion of the liberty of mankind, and point to us as most abject slaves if we submit to such a doctrine as, such as time, we say it be some the founden duty of a Catholic Journalist not to controvert these stupidities, but to put plainly before his readers what that doctrine, if promulgated, would actually mean. It simply means that any doctrine of faith, or any decree as to morals, enunciated by the Vicar of Christ, is to be accepted by the Catholic world as the true interpretation of God's revelations to mankind. His right to pronounce judgment on controversies of faith has never yet been doubted. The chief bishop of the Church is naturally the mouthpiece of the Apostles. No decree of any Council could ever be enforced without his sanction, very heart of his fill, this is now entirely and essentially Pope and the head of the Church than many hundreds of his predecessors reminded all sharpened her weapons. It vanished before the chivalry of Christendom as the vapors of corruption before the rays of the sun, and those leaders of the modern Sèides and Orcchi of the deluded wretches whom they left to ruin and death, sunk like lead into the deep of obscurity, and all the deeper for their unnatural elevation.

"Oh Rome, Rome! God is, my witness that each day I raise my heart to prayer that thy scourge may cease."

Thus prayed the Vicar of Christ during the possession of the Eternal City by Garibaldi and his red associates. It was prayer such as this that struck as with a palsy every work of the Roman Revolution. But after prayer came the solemn declaration from the same devout lips: "Simon, son of John, can die, but Peter, the rock, is immortal." It was the assertion of that which we have all witnessed, and which some of ours have perished gloriously in maintaining.

That which is human, under whatever form, sooner or later must die and be forgotten, but the Papacy must live, and in eternal remembrance.

To be Continued.

VALENTINE'S DAY.—The custom about which you inquire is of heathen origin. In honor of their goddess, Februata Juno, the heathens used on the 15th of the month to draw by lot the names of young women. To abolish this several zealous pastors established the practice of drawing the names of saints who were to be the patrons of those who engaged in this pious practice.

O'Donovan Rossa Adjudged Ineligible to Sit in the House of Commons.

In the House of Commons, 10th February, after disposing of some uninteresting business, the reading of the first order of the day, "Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa," was followed by the general shout which usually precedes the introduction of business of importance, and when Mr. Gladstone rose to move the resolution declaring Rossa incapable of being elected or returned as a member of the House," he was listened to in the deepest silence. The right honorable gentleman did not feel it necessary at all to labor the question, and his observations were exceedingly brief. He declined to assent to the inquiry asked by Mr. G. H. Moore, on the ground that the facts of the case were so clear as to admit of no doubt; and that where no doubt existed it was the duty of the House to pronounce its decision at once and without delay. As a felon could not be among the ideast dividuals of a county, his election was no return to the writ, and the House ought immediately to call upon the electors of Tipperary to discharge the duty which had been imposed upon them by that writ, but which they had not fulfilled.

Mr. G. H. Moore said, that on rising to move an amendment, he had no expectation of success, and in case of defeat, as apparently foregone conclusion of setting aside the election of the honorable member for Tipperary, Rossa would be immediately brought back, but Mr. O'Donovan Rossa was member for Tipperary, and would remain so till the electors of that county should think proper to withdraw their confidence from him, which many members would not claim, namely, that he had been returned without having had recourse to the absurd and disgraceful practices. He did not wish to discuss the question, and hoped no one else would discuss it as a party or political question, which concerned the justification of that House. By the Election Act of 1868, the whole power and jurisdiction in matters of election petitions. According to a doctrine of the right honorable gentleman, if a voter lost his vote, and presented a petition against the return of his opponent, he would at that moment be member for Tipperary. It was not known to the country that when he contested the county of Tipperary, he meant to take that course; but after his return to Dublin he publicly announced that he was not going to take his seat. The reminder of the discussion assumed an almost conversational character, and at its close the House affirmed Mr. Gladstone's resolution by a majority of 293—201 to 8.

Memorial Against the Definition.

MGR HOLLY PATHER: A printed letter has reached us containing a petition to be signed by the Fathers of the Council, and in which it is begged of the Ecumenical Synod that the sacred and exalted office of the Supreme, and consequently infallible, authority of the Roman Pope, when in matters of faith and morals he loses speech to the faithful, by virtue of his Apostolic power. It is indeed surprising that the judges of faith are being invited to make a declaration, attested by their signatures, of the decision on a matter before it has been discussed. However, in so serious a matter we felt constrained to address you, Most Holy Father, who have been appointed by God to feed the lambs and the sheep, and who take most loving care of the souls redeemed by the blood of Christ, and who with paternal affection protect them against the perils with which they are threatened. Many have passed in which the right of the Apostolic See were doubted by Catholics. Everybody knows that as a body without a head is mutilated and imperfect, so the Church, which is the mystical body of Christ, would be mutilated and imperfect if the Infallible Head were wanting. Hence the Catholic canon was pleased to Episcopal assembly to the Supreme Pontiff, the Council of Trent, as also by that of Florence, whose decrees on this point, in the whole as well as in particular, must be in those Councils ordinarily preserved, because they were passed by common agreement of the Latin and Greek Church, and because if God in His mercy should deign to cast His eye upon the East, oppressed by so many miseries, they will form the basis for the reunion of the two churches. To this is to be added that in the present time the Church has to sustain a new, since centuries unheard of, conflict against the powers of pagan religion as against a false religion as human, so that it does not appear at all presumptuous to say that the Church militant, after having triumphed over so many heresies, which were compiled by so many devices with more than the fallacies of Proteus, is now engaged in the most terrible struggle against Naturalism, which is the fountain source of all the other errors, since

Weekly Calendar.

Sunday, 13—St. Euphrasia, Virgin.
Monday, 14—St. Matilda, Widow.
Tuesday, 15—St. Longinus, Martyr.
Wednesday, 16—St. Abraham, Hermit.
Thursday, 17—St. Patrick, Bishop and Confessor.
Friday, 18—St. Edward, King of England, Martyr.
Saturday, 19—St. Joseph, Spouse of the B. V. Mary.

Regulations for Lent in 1870.

For the Diocese of San Francisco.

1. All the days of Lent, from Ash Wednesday, till Master Sunday, are fast days of precept, on the usual, with the allowance of a moderate collation.

2. The precept of fasting implies also that of abstinence, that is, of flesh meat. But, by dispensation, the use of flesh meat is allowed in this Diocese, during Lent, except on the following days, to wit: Fridays, Ash Wednesday, the Ember days, and Holy Thursday and Saturday of Holy Week; on which days there is to have to use fish, meat, eggs, or dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they will frequently and earnestly impress on their people to be judged by them. All Saturdays are also days of abstinence, but not of fast.

3. The precautionary days, viz: before and next at Christmas, Easter, Pentecost, and Assumption, are days of abstinence, but not of fast.

4. Some prayers, at present in use, are recommended during Lent, in addition to those days in which death still is observed.

5. In keeping a penitential time, the Pastors are required to lay before the faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and also the gravous obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which may be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly impress on their respective flocks the necessity of hearing, before all other things, the sacrifice of the holy mass, and they will exhort them to the frequent discharge of their religious duties, by the thing that can secure to us the everlasting happiness of heaven. For this purpose they will give religious exercises in their churches on several days, according to what their circumstances may deem expedient.

JAMES ALEMANY, D. D., Administrator.
San Francisco, February 25, 1870.

Diocese of Grass Valley.

1. The Lenten regulations for the fulshtd of the Diocese of Grass Valley, are the same as those enjoined last year.

2. By special dispensation the use of flesh meat is allowed at one meal only, each day, except Wednesdays and Fridays; Wednesday, Friday and Saturday of Ember week and the first of Lent and Ash.

3. The premonitory days are prohibited. However, small fish, such as sardines, are allowed to breakfast.

4. Confessors and Assistants are empowered to grant the usual dispensations to individuals whenever they deem such dispensations necessary or useful for the spiritual welfare of individuals or communities.

T. J. DALTON, V. G.

Services in the Churches During Lent.

St. Mary's Cathedral.—Mass at 8 o'clock, a. m., each day, except Saturday, in the morning after Mass. Instruction on Wednesday evening. Stations of the Cross on Friday evening. Benediction with Blessed Sacrament on Sundays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Inaugural sermon once at 7½ p. m. on Wednesday and Friday.

St. Patrick.—Catechetical instruction every evening at 7 o'clock. All the children of the parish above nine years of age are requested to attend, in order to be prepared for first Communion. Benediction with the Blessed Sacrament and Sermon on Sundays. Benedictions and Stations of the Cross on Fridays at 7½ o'clock.

St. Patrick.—Mass every morning at 7 o'clock, and 8 o'clock, with exceptions. Devotions every evening at 7 o'clock. On Wednesdays instructions with Benediction. On Fridays, Stations of the Cross and Benediction with a spiritual lecture.

St. Ignatius.—Masses at the morning at 7½ and 8 o'clock. Devotions Wednesday evenings at 7½ o'clock, with instructions. On Fridays, Stations of the Cross and Benediction. On Sundays, Vespers and Benediction.

St. Joseph's.—Masses every morning at 7 o'clock, with meditations. Devotions and Benediction. Friday at 7 o'clock with Sermon and Benediction. Vespers at 4 o'clock, a. m., and on Fridays Stations of the Cross at the same hour.

St. Ignatius.—Instructions every evening at 7½ o'clock. Sermon on Sunday.

Church of the Holy Cross.—Masses every morning at 8 o'clock. Rosary, with instructions, every evening at 7 o'clock. Stations of the Cross every evening at 7 o'clock.

Mrs. Camilla Urso will give a concert in Sumner on the evening of the 24th of March for the benefit of the Catholic Church. No doubt the concert will be well attended, and to those persons in that vicinity who have not heard the lady artist before, we would say do not miss this occasion, for you will probably never again have an opportunity of hearing such a musical feast. The cause for which she has volunteered her services is a sacred one, and should receive encouragement.

A Loyal Mayor.—The City of Cork rejoices in the possession of a Mayor who for courtesy loyalty cannot be excelled by the most enthusiastic admirer of Saxon laws. This worthy functionary is boring the people to death by constant and never-ceasing proclamations, on the most trival subjects. The released Australian prisoners being expected to arrive on a certain evening, a large number of persons proceeded by bands of music, marched to the quay at which the the steamer was to land, while bonfires were lighted in several streets in order that the exiles could see that their devotion to Fatherland was appreciated. This demonstration caused the Chief Magistrate of Cork, great uneasiness, and so we find him detailing the "Royal Irish" to follow the crowds about, for the next few days issuing an order after order, prohibiting them from appearing on the street in numbers, for fear that a collision might occur between them and the constabulary. Are the laws of 1688 to be again revived in Ireland? Or is not the Most Worshipful Hegarty, assuming more authority than his position allows him. If he would pay more attention to advancing the welfare of the city and less to triviality, he would add much more to his personal self-respect, and the dignity of his office.

Diamond Cut Diamond.—It turns out that the scrip used by the San Mateo Tannery Grab to bribe legislators, was entirely worthless. Report says that a large number of "Honorables" were caught by the bait, and have voted in opposition to the repeal of the act of last session, only for

Its Mercantile Bombshell. The light of an explosion enabled the gluttonous to depart the chaff, that trapped them, and they beat a hasty retreat. A somewhat Gothic case occurred a few years ago. A portable property was obtained in a large share holder in doing so, it was found necessary to "see" the law makers, so a large amount of stock was issued, and given away with a lavish disregard of consequences. The franchise was obtained, and the legislators adjourned. The happy holders of the stock presented themselves with smiling countenances at the offices of the Company, when, to their huge disgust, they were informed that their paper represented nothing but the fact that its holders were fools. Gentlemen of the Legislature: beware of "scrip." Always go for the yellow metal.

Hetzer Offolt branch of the Fenian Brotherhood will hold their annual ball at Pacific Hall, Bush street, on the evening of the 17th inst.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal on the Pacific Coast
SATURDAY.....MARCH 12, 1870.

Irish Members of Parliament.

During the debate which occurred in the English House of Commons on the expulsion of O'Donovan Rossa from his seat, by whom was his cause defended, and by whom opposed? Where were the ranting, roaring Irish patriots, who, in voices of thunder, appealed to the Betrayed Irish people to send them to Parliament, to protect the interests of Ireland? Where were they when their country was insulted through the person of its representative; where had fled all their grandiloquent promises; where their sense of honor; where the feelings which should ever characterize gentlemen who pledged their words to a trusting constituency? Had those pliant patriots been struck dumb with shame at the insults offered their country, for how else can we account for their cowardly actions when they know they are safe from danger. What apology can these traitors offer their constituents, when they present themselves before them, and will the constituents accept any excuse, no matter how plausible? They should not, there is no palliation for the crime, for the outrage and insult to the Irish nation by her own children they are traitors and should receive the deserts of traitors. O'Donovan Rossa lay in prison; the refined gentleman, the companion of the lowest order of English felons, compelled to submit to all the indignities which brutal, cowardly jailors, backed by a brutal, cowardly Government dare impose upon him. While his right, dignity, and freedom, and through him the right, dignity and freedom of Ireland were assailed and insulted, the persons who should defend him, who should use burning words of eloquence to release the imprisoned scholar and patriot, sneaked off when the vote was taken for his expulsion, for fear of losing the Ministers' pap. Shame on creatures so debased, as to submit so spaniel-like to a muzzle, through their cowardice. If the people ever again return one of these traitors to Parliament, they must expect no other fate than docking, as captives and slaves, the triumphal chariot of England.

Rev. Father Hennessy will open a mission the third Sunday in Lent at Santa Cruz.

Charles Summer, Horace Greely, and B. F. Butler have been elected honorary members of the French "Universal Peace League."

Irish Nationality.

The British Parliament, since the opening of the present session, has devoted the principal portion of its time, thus far, to remedial measures essential for the pacification of Ireland, and by the spirit manifested by the various political parties, whether Liberal, Whig, Tory or Conservative, we may expect Irish affairs to form the principal subjects for legislation during the remainder of the session. That monstrosity—the Irish Church Establishment—has received the fate that should have been meted to it years ago, if ever it had the right to exist, and we shall, now that the veil of religious bigotry and intolerance has been taken from the eyes of British legislators, expect them to treat Ireland and her grievances in a more statesmanlike manner. A Land Bill which recognizes the just claims of the cultivators of the soil; a system of national education, by a community with the principles of the Catholic Church, the principles of the Catholic people, are not sufficient to appease the outraged sense of justice of the Irish people. It is only through a superficial knowledge of Irish affairs that Parliament could think these measures sufficient for the alleviation of all the maladies inflicted on Ireland by British misrule. No, the diseases are too chronic to be more than soothed by the proposed panacea. There is a malady from which Ireland suffers, caused by the maladministration of the Government, one which all parties seem to overlook, and that is the constant suppression of the traditions, aspirations and peculiarities of the Irish people as a nation. England has ever tried to suppress all feelings of nationality; has attempted to coerce the people into the English mode of education and religion, thus trying to establish a uniform system of national feeling among people who differ from each other in almost all mental characteristics. Beyond the borders of Russia no person who has given the subject a moment's consideration believes in uniformity of government for different nationalities, so that any attempt at governing Ireland in the English spirit of nationality is not only unjust, but a blind and unstatesmanlike proceeding, neglected, or else treated in a meddlesom spirit, and with the importance of a parish vestry. It is this manner of scarcely recognizing their existence that has caused Irishmen, with their large approbativeness, to form themselves into Societies for the overthrow of that Government which would not acknowledge their manhood. Had England paid a due regard to the national characteristics of the Irish she would not now find them in arms throughout the world, ready to pounce upon her whenever an opportunity occurs. It is manifest, therefore, that ere she can expect the good will of Ireland, she must encourage to healthful action her aspirations. Parliament, therefore, in legislating for Ireland, must learn that laws suitable for England are not suitable for Ireland. The land act under which work advantageously in England are unfitted for Ireland, on account of the relations between the owners and cultivators of the soil being so abnormal. Modern history cannot refer to a prevelent where land tenure is so insecure as it is to-day in Ireland. This land question must be dealt with in a statesmanlike manner, so that both tenant and landlord may receive justice. No legislative patchwork, no evasions of the duty now plainly indicated to them, can be accepted from the present Government party by the Irish. Parliament must also deal with the question of education, and from an Irish standpoint, which is that of the Catholic Church —the Church of the nation. When England will recognize, in all its bearings, the rights of Irish nationality, the right of the Irish nation to be governed from a Catholic and not from a Protestant standpoint—when this becomes a part of English legislation, and the national aspirations are encouraged to a healthy action, then, and not till then, will the bond of unity be drawn any closer between St. George's Cross and Emerald Sunburst.

The General Out of Red Tape for some time past must be more imaginary than real, for Messrs Tucker & Co. assure the public that the business done by them since the holidays is at least fifty per cent. more this year than it has been for two years past. But it is easy to understand the cause of this increase, when you compare their prices with all the other houses in San Francisco by the same line of business. The immense cash capital at this firm, with which goods are purchased both in Europe and in this country from the largest manufacturers, enables them to sell at retail for less prices than any other establishment in this city can import their goods for.

Lever, the novelist, sleeps eighteen hours out of the twenty-four.

New Publications.

The Catholic World for March has been laid on our table by Mr. Flood. Such an able magazine as the above is always welcome to our editorial sanctum. It abounds with fresh, vigorous, philosophical writing, and a broad, fair analytical criticism of the men, events and literature of the day. The first article, "Civil and Religious Liberty," is an able critique of the work of Mons. d'Aubigne on "Jean Calvin up des Fondateurs des Liberte Modernes." The abbé calls Calvin one of the founders of modern liberty, and he is seconded in his assertions by Mr. Bancroft in his history of the United States. If those writers speak truth then the followers of Luther might, with equal positiveness, claim as much for him, and the Anglican as much for Henry VIII. and the apocryphal Virgin Queen, Elizabeth. If breaking away from established rule and order constitutes liberty, as an ignorant multitude may readily believe, then the diadem of freedom can be placed on the brow of all criminals who do not respect social laws. Protestants claim that it is only in countries where Protestantism as a religion reigns supreme that true freedom exists, and with a subtle and fallacious mode of reasoning, assert that the Reformation legat liberty. They assume the proposition that Protestantism is the religion of reason, that it frees the mind from spiritual thraldom, in contradistinction to Catholicism, which is the religion of despotism and a spiritual slavery. Now, one drop of logical analytical truth will precipitate all this vainglorious buncombe. Had not the Catholic Church ever opposed lawlessness as well as centralization? When a monkish monk preached before Philip II. of Spain that the King was absolute, he was arraigned by the Spanish Inquisition for his false doctrine, and publicly compelled to retract from the same pulpit from which he preached it. Previous to the Reformation feudalism and barbarism undoubtedly existed in Europe, but no absolutism. The Reformation itself was born of despotism and absolutism, and we find the monarchical countries that adopted the nascent religion empowered with unlimited authority, and the histories of Sweeden, Denmark, Saxony and England, will serve as examples. Indeed in its doctrines of absolutism that they attempted to, and did revive. The inhabitants of those countries were reduced to the condition of slaves, for the Church professed to be the theological rebellion had released the rural population or occupiers of the soil from serfdom. When an authority, like Sir Walter Scott, deals such heavy blows as the following, at men, living and deceased, of the Pacific States and Territories, by Oscar T. Rhuck. The book is beautifully illustrated with steel engravings.

The poetical works of Lover have at length been compiled in a neat volume, and published by Sadlier & Co., of New York. The paper and typography are excellent and of a superior order.

The "Sunday Magazine" contains the usual amount of varied reading matter.

Stray Leaves from Notre Dame.

TWO PICTURES.

The last ray of sunlight has fled from that dreary hearthstone; but who is this lingering still amid this scene of squalid misery? She seems an angel lent from above, so bright is her face, which is beaming with holy piety and love; by her side is one who, as she looks wildly around, tells the fearful tale, that the twilight of her existence has arrived, and that the dark shadows of night's sable pall are fast gathering over her dark brow. She speaks! Listen to that faltering voice in accents of soul-wrung supplication! What is she saying? She is crying for mercy for a soul that is a relief for the weak nesses, the errors, the sinful wanderings of her unhappy past, her words have brought to the other occupant of the room! She sinks upon her knees, and with clasped hands, exclaims, "My God, I thank Thee! Then rising, she leans over, and with a tremulous voice, makes known to the suffering one, her true position. "She has prayed long and earnestly that God in his mercy would give to this sinful soul an hour; nay even if it pleased His holy will one moment in which her wandering mind would come to itself in a spirit of true repentance; and now here was that faithful one's reward! this is her joy. She heeded not the dreariness of the room nor the absence of light and food. A soul was to be saved, nor were her fond hopes denied. This was one more act towards the accomplishment of her mission, for before the morning's dawn that soul, had gone forth washed in the blood of Christ in the blessed Sacraments.

Leading back the strayed lamb this has been the Sister of Mercy's sweet occupation for the evening, as Father Hall is absent on parochial duties, and the histories of Sweeden, Denmark, Saxony and England, will serve as examples. Indeed in its doctrines of absolutism that they attempted to, and did revive. The inhabitants of those countries were reduced to the condition of slaves, for the Church professed to be the theological rebellion had released the rural population or occupiers of the soil from serfdom. When an authority, like Sir Walter Scott, deals such heavy blows as the following, at the Catholic World for March has been laid on our table by Mr. Flood. Such an able magazine as the above is always welcome to our editorial sanctum. It abounds with fresh, vigorous, philosophical writing, and a broad, fair analytical criticism of the men, events and literature of the day. The first article, "Civil and Religious Liberty," is an able critique of the work of Mons. d'Aubigne on "Jean Calvin up des Fondateurs des Liberte Modernes." The abbé calls Calvin one of the founders of modern liberty, and he is seconded in his assertions by Mr. Bancroft in his history of the United States. If those writers speak truth then the followers of Luther might, with equal positiveness, claim as much for him, and the Anglican as much for Henry VIII. and the apocryphal Virgin Queen, Elizabeth. If breaking away from established rule and order constitutes liberty, as an ignorant multitude may readily believe, then the diadem of freedom can be placed on the brow of all criminals who do not respect social laws. Protestants claim that it is only in countries where Protestantism as a religion reigns supreme that true freedom exists, and with a subtle and fallacious mode of reasoning, assert that the Reformation legat liberty. They assume the proposition that Protestantism is the religion of reason, that it frees the mind from spiritual thraldom, in contradistinction to Catholicism, which is the religion of despotism and a spiritual slavery. Now, one drop of logical analytical truth will precipitate all this vainglorious buncombe. Had not the Catholic Church ever opposed lawlessness as well as centralization? When a monkish monk preached before Philip II. of Spain that the King was absolute, he was arraigned by the Spanish Inquisition for his false doctrine, and publicly compelled to retract from the same pulpit from which he preached it. Previous to the Reformation feudalism and barbarism undoubtedly existed in Europe, but no absolutism. The Reformation itself was born of despotism and absolutism, and we find the monarchical countries that adopted the nascent religion empowered with unlimited authority, and the histories of Sweeden, Denmark, Saxony and England, will serve as examples. Indeed in its doctrines of absolutism that they attempted to, and did revive. The inhabitants of those countries were reduced to the condition of slaves, for the Church professed to be the theological rebellion had released the rural population or occupiers of the soil from serfdom. When an authority, like Sir Walter Scott, deals such heavy blows as the following, at Homage to Our Holy Father.

[illegible] ye heroes from the sunny West,
[illegible] all ye hearers of Shannon by the hill,
[illegible] all ye sentinels of Heaven's boundary limit,
Come, join with us our joy-song to swell!

[illegible] haste ye warblers, with your sweetest chime,
Raise your glad carol on the gale,
Let every feeling of the heart
Express the feelings of your fellow men!
With all the freedom of your artless glee!

Come every feelings of this rosy eve
And hurry 'round we angel thoughts to bring;
We'll sustain in your hearty modesty weave
Our spirit offerings for our Pontiff King!

Oh! raise your loving voice in his praise,
Who is Christ's Vicar and the Church's hope,
And join us in the humble Universal Prayer
Which we now sing in hope that God Pope!

Oh! let your loving voices gladly meet
In one sweet theme this ever blessed hour,
That they may form a chorus clear and sweet,
Whose sounds may echo in the heart of honor!

That they may whisper joyous words of cheer
Unto the sacred Council gathered there,
And, in their Western cadence tell the story
Pio Nonage is living to 80, Peter's Chair.

Whereon our Pontiff kind is throned in day,
While all his virtues shine in this fair,
And from their source are all his rays,
Pius and clear as the promise far and wide.

And is he not deserving of reward,
Who, through the earth, the gospel seed doth sow,
And whose labors for the world, from land to land,
Are like the Eternal Father's, full of love?

Oh! yes, there is indeed in our Pontiff King,
Who works with all the world's welfare at his heart,
Who is such a lowly greeting sing
As Christ's Vicar on earth should have a part.

Ye sons and children of the West!
On Pius, your immortal, faithful aid to lend,
Let your voices ring, and your hearts be glad,
A greeting, humble though it be, hearty send.

And as a salutation worthy of the earth
Let us address to him the Peter's Pence,
And [illegible] their source is ever brimming forth
Have ordered our diocese to overwhelming forego.

Legislation, your zeal on this bright day—
Let Pius elect receive from the Peter's Pence,
And let your loving hearts and votes, to pray
For Pius Ninth, our Pontiff King, be sent.

So that accept this false world's vile and gaze,
Our Pontiff King for our good Father shall smile
Together with His children in Heaven's rays,
Now Peace, S. J., Feast of the Chair of St. Peter.

The Legislature.

SENATE.

Mr. Burnett introduced a bill granting to Yuba and Sutter counties the right to issue bonds to the amount of $100,000 each.

Mr. Saunders introduced an amendment to the San Francisco Consolidation Act.

Mr. Saunders introduced a bill extending the time allowed the Southern and Western Pacific railroads to complete their terminus lands granted by the act of March 3rd, 1865.

Mr. Kinne introduced a bill allowing San Mateo and Santa Clara to donate certain stock in aid of the construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. Crane

Declaration of Irish Rights.

A conference of prominent landlords, members of Parliament and influential private gentlemen, was held in Dublin the first week in February, to take steps to influence Parliamentit preparing an equitable land code. The speakers were—The O'Donoghue, M. P.; Sir John Gray, M. P.; Mr. J. F. Maguire, M.P.; Mr. D'Arcy, M.P.; Mr. Philip Callan, M. P.; Mr. Geo. Bryan, M. P.; Mr. McMahon, M. P., New Ross; McCarthy Downing, M. P., county Cork; Mr. Isaac Butt, Q. C.; Mr. Randall McDonnell, Q. C.; Mr. Black, county Antrim; the Rev. P. Quade, P. P., O'Callahan's Mills; Mr. William A. Anthony, Chairman Dungarvan Town Commissioners; the Father Tom O'Shea, Rev. Father Keadle, P.P., Aughavas, Queen's county; Rev. Mr. Filmaurice, Protestant Rector, Beddord House, Listowel, county Kerry; Very Rev. Archdeacon Redmond, P. P., Arklow; Mr. Charles Barnewell, J. P.; Very Rev. Dean O'Brien, D. D., Newcastle West, county Limerick; Mr. George Reade, Birchfield, county Kilkenny; Mr. McCarthy, J. P.; Mr. Tighe, Ballinrobe, county Mayo; Trevaran Kennedy, the Right Honorable the Lord Mayor of Dublin; A. M. Sullivan, Nation; Rev. Father Duggan, P. P., Crumlin. The proceedings lasted six hours. The tone of the speeches can be gathered from the following extracts from the address of that champion of Tenant Right, Isaac Butt, Esq., but commenced with a warning:

Hanceforth there was no wavering, no distrust, and, let him add, no disunion in the national ranks, and after that declaration of national opinion, of which no man ought to be more proud than he, what had were done with shams—they were done with delusions—they were done with compensation for improvement—they were done with the sale of right of occupancy—they were done with the landlord's Utopian tenant-right—they were done with everything that could leave a loophole for escape; and flaky utterance with fair rents was now in the rallying cry of Ireland. It was right to call that Conference a parliament. If they were not the Commons in Parliament assembled, they were better—they were the Commons at large. A great Irish statesman, Edmund Burke, had said, "Woe to the country where the Commons in Parliament were not one with the Commons at large. And if the representatives in Parliament were not one with the Commons at large, a means would be found of making them so. He felt proud in proposing the resolution that bound Ireland to a just measure of tenant-right. Four years ago their representative thought it would be a great master if compensation for improvements could be obtained, and there were almost afraid to advocate it in the English Parliament. They remembered Mr. Fortescue's bill and Lord Dufferin's bill, and Mr. Dillon's bill. He ventured at that time, not without misgiving, state and went without reflection, to write upon the question, and to use the expression fairly of tenure, and to declare that nothing else would settle the land question; and he rejoiced that, after a great and full discussion, they would now, without disunion and without distrust, go forward, shoulder to shoulder, in a compact phalanx; and woe to the traitor, whether in or out of Parliament—woe to those in or out of Parliament who should desert them. . . . .

Landlords Awake.

Rightly or wrongly thisquestion has been stirred, and he would ask them to mark his words. . . . . settled to the satisfaction of the people they would have a condition of society in Ireland that would make every landlord in Ireland rue the day that he refused to do justice. He had spoken guardedly. He was speaking in the presence of Catholic clergymen who perfectly understood the condition of the country; he was speaking also in the presence of tenants, and he would ask them whether he was exaggerating? If they failed to settle this question, they might look forward to the day when every man would have to reckon not to resist the anger of an indignant people. It was human nature that no nation ever submitted to be exterminated. If statesmen have this power in their conscience, that, unless this question be settled, we are near evil days in this country. He would rather have no measure than an inefficient measure. An inefficient measure would not command the people. It would only increase their hopelessness, and aggravate their disappointment. It would exaggerate their evil feelings. The matter had gone beyond the refusal of justice. It was injustice he had even been told notice to quit were constantly served. He had been told that there were estates in which the notice to quit was written on the back of each half-year's receipt. He had been pressed to make that statement in public, and he did so on good authority, [Sir John Gray—It is done in Mayo.] He asked was this a state of things that was to be met by any ordinary means? In what civilized land was there such a state of things as this, that eighthousand men should hold in chains the Irish people! Could it be endured? Were they to be told that such a revolutionary state of things—a revolution brought about by the landlords—a revolution that had destroyed the foundations of society, and of social life, should continue? They did not make a revolution by rose-water, and they would not stop a revolution by rose-water. The revolution was on the part of the landlords who held their tenants as their chattels. That was a state of things unheard of. That was the evil which they had now to meet, and it never could be met by any remedy in law, or in the present dependence on the landlords' interest. Talk of compensation for right of occupancy. Why, the landlord thought himself very happy to be able to consolidate the farm at the loss of three tenant rent. If it were true in interfering with the landlord they should do it effectually. Separation of landlord's rights should be driven back to the woods in the idols of old days, but to those idols were never confined so many lives in this island as has been sacrificed to the demon of landlordism, before whom they were called so low down in admiration. He respected the rights of property. He did not wish to interfere with them, but he denied the right of any 9,000 men to hold the Irish nation in serfdom.

THE PEOPLE'S PROGRESS.

The Very Rev. Dean O'Brien spoke with the usual fervor and eloquence. His words convey a warning that may well be kept in memory:

He was there (he said) as a Catholic clergyman, and one intimately acquainted with many parts of Ireland, and, from circumstances which they knew, intimately associated with England and Scotland. If the mighty wave which had risen, and was moved forward, met the rock of opposition, sadly God Almighty knew what might be the result. But let them now, from above petty dissensions about half rights and half wrongs, let them look at the great question with the eyes of statesmen. They was thereof moving and heaving to her very foundations. The augmenting power of democracy had raised her arm in England, France, Germany, and glorious America. He was no sympathizer with revolution, but he could not help admiring the spirit that had produced deeds overreaching prudence. The sacrifice was proof of the honest heart, and while we could not admire the deed he must admire the man. Across the Atlantic were 100,000 armed men. Why conceal it? Why throw the the hood of ignorance over the fact? There was now a bid between revolution and order. If the landlords did not bid at auction, their own be the fate—the folly, and the fate. Bullet them stand together. The arch of Moses was fearfully spreading. In union there was strength, and in strength action. There was no use in glorious phrases without energy; and if they formed one of their members who would not fight for fixity of tenure, let them pronounce him recreant to manhood, a traitor to his country, a criminal deserving execution.

A WORD FOR THE AGRICULTURAL LABORER.

Mr. Callan, M.P., proposed a valuable resolution of which he had previously given notice, and which aimed at improving the position of the agricultural laborer. Mr. Callan said:

Precarious and degraded as admittedly is the position of the tenant farmer, still more precarious and far more degrading is the condition of that "serf of serfs," the Irish agricultural laborer. In almost every county in Ireland we have seen the smiling villages of the plain" levelled to the ground and their humble and industrious occupants driven for shelter into the overcrowded lanes of the adjoining towns. "Rules of the estate," "electoral division rating"—almost every phase of the present system of land tenure—works destructively against the laboring classes; and no settlement of the land question, which, while securing to the tenant farmer "fixity of tenure and fair rents," doesnot, at the same time, secure for the laborer a comfortable home and a fair day's wages for a fair day's work," can or will be deemed satisfactory or final. The local and industrial being fully empowered, will protect all equitable rights in the use and land without let in the case of the willing laborer against injustice from the landlord on the one hand, and from the landlord on the other. At this advanced hour I will not enter into details. The principle once granted, it will be our duty to see to it that the details effectually carry out that principle.

Humboldt and Prince Albert.

Correspondents have several times, in writing to the Irish Citizen, spoken with resentment against the Minister Frondian, as if Humboldt himself were somehow answerable for the Prince Albert, in that individual's insolent and spiteful remarks upon the Irish nation. On the contrary we ought to be grateful to Humboldt, first, for recording that disgraceful saying in his correspondent, and next for the indignation with which he resented it. We may as well state the exact facts as they appear in the correspondence of Alexander Von Humboldt, published in Berlin, in 1860. First here is an extract from a letter of his to Varnhagen von Ense, dated Feb. 21, 1847:

"At the special request of Prince Albert, I left a copy of Kosmos on his desk, in Stolzenfels. He had the civility not to thank me. The 'blackbird' [Prussian order of the Black Eagle] has improved his politeness in the present instance; and probably will not again write such a roaring organ of light," and cultivated terrestrials—[a Coburg version of my text, quite English, from Windsor, at Christmas!] Feb. 21, 1847."

At the special request of Prince Albert, I left a copy of Kosmos on his desk, in Stolzenfels. He had the civility not to thank me. The "blackbird" [Prussian order of the Black Eagle] has improved his politeness in the present instance; and probably will not again write such a roaring organ of light," and cultivated terrestrials—[a Coburg version of my text, quite English, from Windsor, at Christmas!] Feb. 21, 1847."

Next we have the silly and ignorant letter of the Prince, which had called forth this disdainful comment:

"Windsor Castle, Feb. 17.

My Dear Baron:—I have been constantly impressed, while gradually reading the first volume of your "Kosmos," with my desire to thank you for the high intellectual enjoyment its study has afforded me. I am really unable to give you an authoritative judgment upon that excellent work, which I received from your hands, and to atone in some measure for this defect, as well as to give some substantial proof of the gratification of my thanks, I present you the accompanying work on Catharwood's Views in Central America"). It may serve as an Appendix to your own great work on Spanish America, and thus become a part of your literature. I do not dare to express the interest with which I look forward to the appearance of the second volume of 'Kosmos.' May that Heaven whose roving messengers of light and ethereal terraces you have so ably decided, be pleased to preserve you to your country, to the world, and to 'Kosmos' itself, for many years in undisturbed vigor of mind and body. This is the sincere wish of your devoted

ALBERT."

What a graceful admission from a Prince—that he was "roaring" to give an authorative judgement" on the "Kosmos" of the leading of that book. However, it was the kind of "Kosmos" that Humboldt with his friend Humboldt, upon his conspicuous treasure of the "Kosmos" full some nonsense, for in Humboldt's letter to Varnhagen, of date 27th Feb., he said:

"You were pleased to reprimanding me as to my extreme severity against the sage of the sidereal terraces. I am severe only to the mighty ones of the earth, and this man impressed me very uncomfortable at Manchester. . . . . for the great occupation for the Poles under the Russian sceptre, and I am sorry to say the Poles are as little deserving of our sympathy as the Irish." Mihi dixit! and this is the handsome husband of the Queen of England!

No wonder the handsome creature impressed the Baron "unconsciously." At the very moment he was saying those shameful words, the British famine was forcing millions upon the Irish—his wife's so-called subjects—and they were lying down and perishing by myriads for want of food, while the earth with their own hands had sown and reaped upon their own ground. At all events, it is plain that in speaking thus to his illustrious countryman he brought his insolent spirit to the wrong market.

Irish Emigration.

It appears that the Supreme Court of the United States holds that the divorce law of Indiana has full force in other States. It founded this decision on that clause of the Constitution which provides that the acts of one State shall have force and credit in the others. Thus it appears that Indiana may legislate for California, in that it may declare to be divorced persons whom we might insist should live together. But if this divorce law of Indiana is to have force, say in New York, what is to become of that law in New York which says that Indiana divorces shall have no force? Is that State? It would seem that there ought to be some reciprocity in this sort of thing.

Nine inches of snow fell at Richmond (Va.) on Saturday last.

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

B. Commins & Co.
(Successor to P. Riley & Co.)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS.
No. 805 Front street.

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.
Fire proof Store, 621 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Holland Gin, Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser. Also, Agents in native California Wines and Brandies.

M. H. KELLY. JOHN EGAN.
Kelly & Egan,
GROCERIES AND LIQUORS,
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson, SAN FRANCISCO.

P. H. CANAVAN
IMPORTER OF
WINES, BRANDIES,
ETC., ETC.,
N.W. COR. CALIFORNIA & FRONT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.

City Hall Saloon,
631 MERCHANT STREET,
Opposite Dunbar Alley. SAN FRANCISCO

GEORGE DOUGHERTY, Prop'r.
apr9-1f

P. J. TANNIAN,
S. W. cor. Third and Stevenson streets,
Keeps constantly on hand the best quality of WINES, LIQUORS & CIGARS
Also, superior brands of OLD BOURBON WHISKY, OLD MARTEL and CAZERAC BRANDIES, PURE OLD SCOTCH AND IRISH WHISKIES; ALSO, PURE HOLLANDSIN AND JAMAICA RUM.

WM. B. DOLAN,
122 THIRD STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Retail, in
FRENCH WINES AND BRANDIES,
Irish Whisky.
Imported Direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTMENT of California Wines of every brand, which he will sell at the lowest rates, either at wholesale or retail, by the quantity or in single bottles.

All orders left at the store, 122 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge to any part of the city. 1876-1f

PAINTS, OILS, ETC

KELLY, WALSH & CO.,
N. W. cor. Pine & Front strs.,
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS,
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES
101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,
and 110 PINE STREET. tf

A. WASON. P. C. MORRIS.
WASON & MORRIS,
Successors to J. R. KELLY,
PLAIN AND DECORATIVE
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,
GILDING AND GLAZING,
Imitations of Wood and Marble.
Banners, Flags and Military Standards painted to order.
Office, 215 SANSOME ST

PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE, VARNISHES,
BRUSHES, GLASS, Etc.,
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA ST.,
Two doors below Davis street, SAN FRANCISCO.

JAMES R. DEANE,
Importer and Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS,
WINDOW GLASS,
VARNISHES,
BRUSHES,
Constantly in store and receiving all the above articles in assorted from the best manufactories in the East and in Europe.
☞ Horse and Sign Painting promptly attended to.
Orders of Buildings and Contractors are invited to call
No. 316 Clay street, between Battery and Sansome myl Opposite the Railroad House, San Francisco

SWEETT & GADSBY,
House, Sign and Ornamental
PAINTERS,
565 Market street, San Francisco.
Walls Tinted, Decorated, Whitened or Colored in a Superior Manner.
Estimates Given from Plans and Specifications.

STAINED AND CUT GLASS WORKS
MALLON & BOYLE,
No. 502 MISSION STREET.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STAINED, ENAMELED, ENGRAVED and Cut Glass, for Churches, Private Houses, Saloons, Steamboats, Railroad Cars, etc. Metal Sash work of all descriptions. Particular attention paid to Sending Glass.
We invite the Public to examine our new designs.
oct17

EDUCATIONAL.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Academy commences on the first Monday in September. This establishment was founded for the education of ladies who are desirous to receive a solid and finish a useful and fashionable education; to refine their hearts by virtue, thus fortifying them to meet with equanimity the frowns and smiles of the world; to fit them to be the future ornaments of society; in a word, to make them intelligent Christians, good citizens, pious women, the primary object of the sisters of Notre Dame. The system is adapted to the best possible parlor. Marysville has unrivalled healthfulness and well ventilated buildings.

The physical welfare of the pupils constantly receives the maternal care of the sisters, and the most strict attention and attendance. The greatest attention is paid to the comfort and health of the pupils. In case of sickness they receive the care of a medical physician, residing in the establishment in a well-ventilated and retired part of the house. Every facility is given for the improvement of the pupils' minds, a cabinet, containing a collection of philosophical apparatus, and a library, selected with care, are at the disposal of the pupils.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

Board, Tuition and Washing, per annum.....$250 00
Bed and Bedding, per annum..... 50 00

EXTRA CHARGES.

Piano, with use of instrument, per quarter..... $5 00
Guitar..... 2 50
Use of Music, per quarter..... 2 50
Drawing and Painting, per quarter..... 5 00
Use of Library, per quarter..... 1 00
Private Room, per quarter..... 12 50
Entrance, Graduation and Use of Philosophical Apparatus, Academy of Notre Dame, Marysville, Cal.

TERMS FOR DAY SCHOLARS.

Tuition, per month..... $2 00
Primary..... 1 50
Use of Piano, per month..... 1 00
Extra charge in proportion as above. The Fine Arts form no charge in the Academy.

ORPHAN ASYLUM
TO THE
IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY
PAJARO VALLEY, CAL.

THIS ESTABLISHMENT WAS OPENED ON The 15th of November. All orphans under the age of thirteen years, without distinction of country, are received and cared for gratuitously.

THE DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL

Attached to it was opened at the same time, under the following terms:

For Day Scholars, according to the class, per month..... $2 and $3
Boarders, Washing and Board included, pay $15 per month in advance, per month..... $18

The extensive buildings will be suitable to the needs of both orphans and boarders. The grounds are large and well laid out.

For further particulars apply to
REV. A. ROUSSELET, Director.
au27-1f

SCHOOL OF THE HOLY CROSS

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Clara, one mile from the Mission Dolores, and commands from its elevated position a fine view of the Bay of San Francisco and the surrounding country.

TERMS:

Board, Tuition and Use of Bed and Bedding, per month..... $25 00
Class and Use of Instrument, per month..... 5 00
Washing, per month..... 2 50
No extra charge for the Spanish Language, Drawing or Painting.
Terms, invariably payable in advance.
For further particulars address
REV. J. BOTTERO, S. J.,
Director.
SANTA CLARA, CAL.
fe13

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.—In Probate.—In the matter of the estate of Francis X. Machetti, deceased.

You are hereby notified that I will appear in acting the District Court of the above named plaintiff in the city and county of San Francisco, on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1870, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. of said day, and then and there present my petition for the sale of the real estate of said deceased, and for the reasons and upon the grounds therein set forth, and will then and there present my petition for the sale of the real estate of said deceased, and for the reasons and upon the grounds therein set forth, and will then and there ask for an order for the sale of said real estate.

Given under my hand and seal of the Court, this 15th day of February, A. D. 1870.

JOHN HANNA, Clerk.
By J. P. HOWE, Deputy Clerk.
Sharp & Lloyd, Attorneys for Executrix. fe19

SPLENDID
CATHOLIC MUSIC
For the Service of the Church.

CANTATE. In two Books. By Anthony Werner. Book I contains Masses, Vespers, Hymns, etc. Book II—Motets, etc.

HALLELUJAH. A Collection of Masses, Hymns, Motets, etc., for four voices, with Organ accompaniment. By Rev. Thomas Hamma.

CHORAL VESPERS. By Rev. Thomas Hamma. Paper, 12 cents.

CONSOLATIONES IN F. for four voices. By Dr. Louis Preyer. Paper, 75 cents.

CANTICLES FOR VESPERS IN F FLAT. Cloth, $1; Paper, 75 cents.

FARMERS MASS IN B FLAT. Cloth, $1; Paper, 75 cents.

COUNTRY MASS. By Rev. Thomas Hamma. Paper, $1.

LAMBILLOTTE'S MASS, Facsimile in D. $4.

JOSEPH HAYDN'S MASS IN B FLAT. Cloth, $2 50; Boards, $2; Paper, $1 50.

SOUTHERN SHORT MASS IN D. 50 cents.

SOUTHERN SHORT MASS IN G. 50 cents.

MASS IN C. By Rev. Thomas Hamma. Paper, $1.

MOZART'S, HAYDN'S, WEBER'S, and Mozart's Requiem.

Single copies sent post paid on receipt of price.

Published and for sale by
H. L. D. BITTON & CO., New York.

St. Mechael's Academy,
Medical and surgical Institute, Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and surgical Institute, Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and surgical Institute, Wm. K. Doherty's

The "Complaint of the Poor."

And where have ye the poor complaint? the rich man asked of me;
Come, walk abroad with me, I said, and I will answer thee.
'Twas winter, and the frozen streets were cheerless to behold;
And we were wrapt and roasted well, and yet we were cold.
We met an old bare-headed man—his locks were few and white—
I asked him what he did abroad, in that cold winter night?
'Twas bitter keen, indeed, he said—but at home, no fire had he;
And therefore, he had come abroad to suit for charity.
We met a young bare-footed child, and she begged both feet and hold;
I asked her what she did abroad, when the wind blew in mist?
She said her father was at home, and he lay sick abed;
And, therefore, was it she was sent abroad to beg her bread.
We saw a woman sitting down upon a stone to rest,
She had a baby at her back—another at her breast.
I asked her why she loiter'd there, when the wind was on mist?
She turned her head and bade the child that scream'd behind, be still.
She told us that her husband served—a soldier far away;
And, therefore, to her parish she was begging back her way.
We met a girl—her dress was loose—and sunken was her eye—
Who, with the wanton's hollow voice, addressed the passers by.
I asked her what there was in guilt that could her heart allure
To shame, disease and late remorse?—she answered, the way poor.
I turned me to the rich man then, for silently stood he;
You asked me why the poor complain, and these have answered thee.

Late Irish News.

Mr. Michael Sutton, the respected proprietor of the Wexford People, died on the 24th at Chalcorna House, Rosbercon.

The English Government, after having denied that O'Donovan Rossa was ever whipped at last admits the allegation, but Mr. Hardy says no scourging has occurred since 1866. O truthful government.

They are afraid that Fenianism has not taken quietly to grave prepared for it in county Clare. Strange lights are seen signalling each other in remote quarters of the county. The timid alarmed are nervous, for fear that the illuminations may be the spirit of Fenianism, calling for company.

Several landlords in Ireland, or their agents, are receiving threatening letters for their misconduct towards tenants. An ink sketch, of a man receiving the contents of a gun, are inserted in the notes, to more forcibly inform those persons of obtuse imaginations, what kind intentions the tenantry have for them.

The Clonmel Chronicle gives an interesting account of the moving bog of Clonkelly, in Tipperary. Three times within a century it has shifted a considerable distance. On the 13th inst., after an unusually heavy fall of rain, a portion of the bog, upwards of an acre, on which there were some deeply cut turf-banks, became detached, and floated some eight or ten perches over some waste land, when its further progress was staved by the rising ground. The great cavity left by the detached mass may be seen from a public road that traverses Clonkelly bog, which is of very considerable extent.

The Grand Jury of Limerick have passed resolutions against extortion and capricious ejectment, by repudiating all desire to infringe upon the just rights of the landlords. It was also resolved that tenants should be liable to eviction for non-payment of rents on receiving compensation they had previously made, which had inhanced the value of the land.

The Munster News states that in the west of the county Limerick certain landlords have been endeavoring, anticipatory of legislation, on the land question, to obtain the signatures of their tenantry to a document binding them beforehand to the acceptance of certain descriptions of leases containing clauses of an extraordinary character. The tenants have also universally refused to sign.

THE POST OF LIMERICK.—One hundred vessels more have been discharged during the past year in this above port than ever before. This is chiefly, if not altogether, owing to the decreased dues payable by shipping since the introduction of the New Harbor Act.

The Japanese Troupe, have made a very successful tour through Ireland.

The death of Mr. James Hopkins, of Tuam, is announced in late Irish papers. The deceased suffered twelve months imprisonment for his Irish sentiments. A vast concourse of people escorted his remains to the grave bearing national emblems.

A testimonial to J. G. Merriman, Esq., who though an English gentleman, has proved himself a true friend to Ireland is assuming form in Dublin. The proposed testimony, will consist of a carefully selected body of Irish literature, and a book case of Irish oak.

The death of Mr. Martin Flannery, of Ennis, is announced. He was thrown from his carriage into a drainage canal, stunned, and drowned in less than two feet of water. Mr. Flannery suffered a tedious incarceration for loyalty to his country.

Weekly Telegraphic Summary.

Eastern.

NEW YORK, March 1.—General O'Neil, President of the Fenian Brotherhood, has issued an order that the annual Congress will be held in Chicago, April 14, and revoking the call for the meeting of Congress in New York, March 18th and 19th. This action is taken in consequence of the carnage on Meehan, whose condition is pronounced hopeless.

NEW ORLEANS, March 1.—A party of twenty-fifty men surrounded the Sheriff's house at Harrisonburg last Sunday night, and caused the Sheriff and his family to retire, entered the house and killed Colonel Charles Jones and his eldest son. The youngest son escaped by leaping from a window.

CHICAGO, March 2.—Father Swarins, a Jesuit, has retired at the Jesuit society, and one of the most able and influential members of that order in this country, died yesterday of Bright's disease of the kidneys.

A petition is receiving many signatures asking Congress to vote away no more public lands to the advantage of railroad companies, but to save the remaining acres for the benefit of emigrants and settlers.

CHICAGO, March 5.—The Tribune's New York special says the rumor is renewed that the Pacific Mail Company intend to withdraw their California steamers and concentrate their business on the China line. The Henry Chauncy which was to sail yesterday was detained, but the officers say she will start on Monday. The boat, by the Isthmus is very small, and the Panama Railroad Company have refused to reduce their rates to allow the steamers to compete successfully with the Overland route. It is stated that after the California line is withdrawn, the Atlantic steamships will be employed in a new American line to Europe.

NEW, YORK, March 5.—It appears that stormy proceedings occurred in the Senate on the night when Meehan was shot. They had reference to the invasion of Canada, which O'Neil urged and a majority of the organization opposed it, considering such a movement before all the branches of the Brotherhood were united as rash in the extreme.

NEW YORK, March 7.—The reception of Mr. Seward took place in the City Hall this afternoon. He made a brief speech complimentary to the Metropolis as the terminus of the Western Continent.

The trial of McFarland for the murder of Richardson, which is set for the first Monday in April, will come on.

The trial of Chambers for the murder of Voorhies commences on Wednesday.

PORTLAND (Me.), March 7.—Republican mayors were elected to-day at Rockland, Saco and Auburn. A Democratic mayor at Bath; at Lewiston no choice. The Republicans have a plurality.

NEW ORLEANS, March 7.—The Legislature met for a session to-day.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—The House Committee on Foreign Affairs this morning resumed consideration of Banks' joint resolution relative to Cuban affairs, but came to no conclusion on the subject. Much important information from the Department of State has been furnished, some of which cannot now be made public. The Committee will hereafter have two meetings a week.

CHICAGO, March 7.—A Tribune New York special says several politicians have been canvassing the policy of running Wm. H. Seward for Governor of New York, on a ticket uniting Conservative Republicans with the best portion of the Democrats. The proposition appears to be favorably received, though it is strongly opposed by the Tammany-ring," who will nominate Hoffman or Tweed at the next election.

NEW YORK, March 7.—The Captain of the steamer Mountjoy reports having passed a steamer near the Azore Islands, Feb. 20, which resembled the Fenian steamers, and there is some probability that she is the missing steamer City of Boston.

Three thousand dollars of American silver was shipped from Montreal to this city yesterday, on orders from restaurant and saloon keepers, who intend to give silver in exchange.

It is stated that Sir John Young, Governor-General, will proceed in person to Red River, immediately after the close of the present session of Parliament.

COCCORD, N. H., March 8.—The pleasant weather and an active canvass drew out a large vote to-day for the four candidates Governor Stearns, Republican, the present incumbent; Bides, Democrat; Flint, Labor Reform; Barrows, Temperance. The returns from forty-five towns—about one-half of the State—give over half the votes, show a Republican loss of nearly 1,000. The result is doubtful. Seven towns will probably be elected, but his majority will not exceed 500.

LATER—Returns from 147 towns, over two-thirds of the State, indicate that Stearns is probably elected by 1,000 to 1,500 majority.

The Legislature is Republican with a majority exceeding five to one.

PHILADELPHIA, March 8.—A large building on the corner of Seventh and Coates streets, used as a German Theatre, was burned this evening before the assembling of the audience. The loss is heavy.

WHEELING, West Va., March 9.—At Charlestown, Kanawha county, the recently elected Governor of the State, a band of armed men entered the town in open light, March 26, and advanced to the jail, deliberately released the several prisoners, presented cocked revolvers to those who happened to be present, and threatening death if an alarm was given. The organization is said to be indisposed towards the civil authorities, who were powerless. It is said the Governor will call upon the U.S. Government for military aid to suppress lawlessness.

CONCORD, N. H., March 9.—Returns from 202 towns give Stearns 22,967; Bedell, 22,864; Flint, 6,663; Barrows, 1,159. The remaining towns will give about five thousand, leaving Governor Stearns a majority of twelve hundred.

The Republicans will have about fifty majority in the House.

CHICAGO, March 9.—Gov. Austin vetoed the Female Suffrage Bill passed by the Minnesota Legislature, on the ground that the clause submitting to females as well as males is unconstitutional, females not being legal voters. The Governor also objected to the proposition as being premature.

A letter from St. Domingo of February 24th, says the revolution is extending, and becoming more general on the island, and aid is asked from abroad. The resolution-ists declare that a majority of the inhabitants are opposed to annexation to the United States.

Advices from Caracoas of February 25, state that the Venezuela revolutionists are fast multiplying. Monagas' government is considered in a critical condition. Governor Monagas, with 1,000 soldiers, had gone to Coro to fight general Blanco, and disturbances are now admitted throughout the entire Republic.

CHICAGO, March 8.—The Constitutional Convention has voted to take a recess from March 13th to April 12.

NEW YORK, March 9.—Port au Prince dates to Feb. 24th have been received via Havana. Executions and imprisonments of the Salnave (?) continues.

European.

LONDON, March 8.—The Irish members attack the proposed land bill. They think it will prove an injury instead of a benefit to Ireland.

PARIS, March 8.—At a political banquet last night, Mr. Olliver made a remarkable speech in which he urged all political parties to give the Ministry assistance and advice, and not keep aloof from it. Any failure in duty to be committed by the Ministry. His friends and the different parties will not be discouraged because their views are not carried, but would continue to point out improvements. He closed with the prediction that in spite of the difficulties and accidents under-seen, the Ministry would succeed.

PARIS, March 8.—A meeting was held last evening for the purpose of electing a society to be called the Friends of Order. Several hundred people assembled; speeches were made, and resolutions adopted, denouncing the recent rioting and disorder in Paris.

Eight hundred conscripts to-day formed in line, and with a crape tanner at their head marched through the streets to the publication office of the Le Marseillaise, published and sung the "Marseillaise," after which they quietly dispersed. The police made no attempt to interfere with the proceedings.

LONDON, March 8.—In the Mordaunt divorce case Lord Redesdale has consented to the hearing by a full bench, of arguments on the right of Sir Charles to proceed with the case notwithstanding the decision as to Lady Mordaunt's insanity.

The Times denounces the Captain of the Bombay for proceeding after the collision with the Umeria, without positively ascertaining the damage sustained by the latter.

DUBLIN, March 8.—The Irish Times says that the Government will soon issue an order concerning again the operation of the Habeas Corpus in Ireland.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 9.—J. McLeary Brown has been appointed provisional Chief of the Chinese Embassadors, recently arrived.

LONDON, March 9.—John Bright is rusticating in the mountains of Wales. His health has improved.

The German and Austrian Bishops in the Ecumenical Council have agreed upon a proposition of infallibility, as well as the other prelates present, and it is believed that the Pope will not precipitate a collision with the European Powers.

PARIS, March 9.—It is understood that the other Catholic powers will join France in her demands for special guarantees in the Ecumenical Council.

Prince de la Tour Dauvergne Lauragais will probably be appointed one of the representatives.

ROME, March 9.—The Pope temporizes, hoping to obtain a vote on the dogma of infallibility, prior to the arrival of the French Commissioners.

LONDON, March 9.—A strong speculative interest in American securities is developing here and on the Continent.

PARIS, March 9.—The police no longer permit the friends of Rochefort to visit him at the prison.

Another demonstration by the conscripts at Lyons was made yesterday. The disorder was quelled without serious trouble.

It is reported that the anti-pope has broken out among the political prisoners.

LONDON, March 9.—Great fairs, lasting six days, are being made in the north of Ireland for the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The Daily Mail Gazette approves of Gladstone's land bill, but says that to suppress anarchy in Ireland is the first duty of the government.

Dispatches from Rome report that the antagonists of papal infallibility are in council, some of whom have threatened to withdraw, but have now decided to remain, in view of the growing opposition to the dogma.

MADRID, March 7.—In the constituent Cortes, on Saturday, Prim reaffirmed his opposition to Don Montpensier, and declared that the entire Ministry, with the exceptions of Admiral Topete, were attached to Montpensierists. His statement has given the latter gentleman offence, and he has tended his resignation, which has not been accepted. The Unionists are ferocious against Prim, and are doing their utmost to encourage Topete. A ministerial crisis is imminent.

Rome.

The religious organs have advices from Rome which represent that the Pope is resigned to the opposition of a great majority of the Bishops, has distributed among the members of the Council a scheme proposing the definition of the Pope's personal infallibility, with notice that suggestions of the Fathers on the same will be received until the 17th instant.

The Ultramontane journal, Le Monde, states positively that the Pope has repulsed the Ecumenical Council to fix upon the definition of Papal Infallibility within a week.

MARRIED.

In this city, Feb. 27, by the Rev. Father O'Connell, Peter Connolly to Margaret T. Miller.

In this city, March 1, by the Rev. Father Accolti, S. J., Commander S. R. Franklin, U. S. N., to Caroline Lansdale, daughter of Gen. E. D. Keyes.

In this city, Feb. 26, by the Rev. Father Bayley, James Mellon to Julia Ann Reed, both of this city.

DIED.

In this city, March 1, after a long illness, James Landers, aged 51 years and 10 months.

In this city, March 1, Mary Jane, only daughter of Richard and Margaret Ann Sullivan, a native of this city, aged 1 year, 7 months and 6 days.

In this city, March 2, Catharine, wife of James Grady, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., aged 29 years, 7 months and 15 days.

In this city, March 2, Katie A., wife of Frank Taylor, a native of St. John's, Newfoundland, aged 22 years.

In this city, March 4, John Bryant, only son of Martin and Sabina Connolly, aged 10 months and 5 days.

In this city, March 6, Denis Reilly, a native of Boston, Mass., aged 20 years, 7 months and 16 days.

In this city, March 8, Hannah, wife of Timothy McCarthy, a native of Kinsale, county Cork, Ire land, aged 50 years.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ANON QUACKE.—A victim of early imprudence causing nervous debility, premature decay, etc., has discovered a simple means of cure, which he will send free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, 78 Nassau street, New York. feb 26m

Sir Father Mathew Total Abstinence and Benefit Society, meets in Metropolitan Hall, Howard street, near Fourth, every MONDAY EVENING, at 7½ o'clock. Addresses by popular Temperance Lecturers. Vocal and Instrumental Music by lady and gentlemen friends. All are cordially invited to attend. Seats free.

J. F. COLE, President.
JAS. PRATT, Secretary. oct16-tf

Information Wanted.

Of JOHN, or SAMUEL BRADY, formerly of Ironhead, county Antrim, Ireland. Should he see any of his friends read this advertisement, they will confer a favor on the advertiser by addressing a note to JAMES MCELVEY, Rose House Saloon, San Francisco. feb19

Information Wanted.

Of PATRICK MILLET, a native of Nathedod, county Mayo, Ireland, who emigrated from England to America in 1851. Was last heard from (by letter) while he was in Hamilton, Canada West. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother, MICHAEL MILLET, Postmaster, Nathedod, county Mayo, Ireland; or by MICHAEL MILLET, School House Saloon, San Mateo county, Cal. feb5

Information Wanted,

Of JOHN H. CLARK, who formerly kept the Knickerbocker Restaurant, in Grass Valley. He was last heard from at Kern River, but was supposed to be at White Pine, Nevada. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother, JAMES W. CLARK, 101 Folsom street, San Francisco. feb 5m

BROADERICK & KAST.

322 Bush St.

CLOSING OUT SALE!
CLOSING OUT SALE!
CLOSING OUT SALE!
CLOSING OUT SALE!
CLOSING OUT SALE!

Of our entire Stock of Fall and Winter

BOOTS AND SHOES!
BOOTS AND SHOES!
BOOTS AND SHOES!
BOOTS AND SHOES!
BOOTS AND SHOES!

LADIES' WEAR.

| | |
|---|---|
| $2 50 Kid Foxed Balmorals, reduced to | $1 50 |
| 3 00 Leading Congress Gaiters, reduced to | 2 00 |
| 3 00 Leading Congress Gaiters, reduced to | 2 50 |
| 3 00 Fancy Cloth Gaiters, reduced to | 2 50 |
| 3 00 Cashmere Slippers, reduced to | 2 00 |
| 3 00 Fancy Cloth Balmorals, reduced to | 2 50 |
| 3 00 Kid Foxed Balmorals, reduced to | 2 50 |
| 3 00 Extended Congress Gaiters, reduced to | 2 50 |
| 3 00 Kid Foxed Balmorals, reduced to | 2 50 |

MISSES' WEAR.

| | |
|---|---|
| 2 00 Custom made School Shoes, at | 1 50 |
| 2 00 Kid Foxed Balmorals, at | 1 50 |
| 2 00 Buck Kid Button Gaiters, at | 1 50 |
| 2 00 Fancy Cloth Gaiters, at | 1 50 |
| 2 00 House Slippers, at | 1 50 |

MEN'S WEAR.

| | |
|---|---|
| $10 00 Fancy Cassimere Pants, at | $7 00 |
| 5 00 calf Foxed Boots, at | 4 00 |
| 5 00 Calf Foxed Brogans, at | 4 00 |
| 5 00 Double Sole Kip Boots, at | 4 00 |
| 5 00 Kip Foxed Brogans, at | 4 00 |
| 5 00 Extra Quality Oxford Ties, at | 4 00 |
| 5 00 Kip Foxed Balmorals, at | 4 00 |
| 5 00 Kip Foxed Balmorals, at | 4 00 |

Goods delivered free of charge to any part of the city and State of New York. feb 26m

BANKING.

CITY BANK

SAVINGS, LOAN & DISCOUNT

No. 627 Sacramento Street,

Between Kearny and Montgomery, corner Merchant.

OFFICERS

President.....H. A. CLOSE
Cashier.....DANIEL MURPHY

TRUSTEES:

H. A. Close, M. Haley, M. O'Neil, Robert Barry, John Shlueberger, Secretary.....

Daniel Murphy, Robert Patey, P. Johnson, James McNamara, D. E. Murphy, Attorney.....D. W. C. DOUGHERTY

DEPOSITS RECEIVED AT ALL INTEREST.
LOANS made on Real Estate, Personal Property, Approved Notes, Mortgages, Warehouse Receipts, Bills of Lading, etc., etc.
Office Hours—From 9 a. m. to 1 p. m., daily; and on Saturday evenings, from 7 to 9 p. m.
San Francisco, November 27, 1867.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS

AND

LOAN SOCIETY

Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Market streets.

OFFICERS:

President.....M. D. SWEENY
Vice-President.....C. B. POLLARD

TRUSTEES:

M. D. SWEENY, P. McGLYNN, JOHN SULLIVAN, P. DARCY, M. J. O'CONNOR, J. W. BOSWORTH, EDWARD MARTIN, PETER DONAHUE, EDWARD MARTIN.

Treasurer.....WILLIAM HOOPER
Attorney.....RICHARD TOBIN

Remittances from the country may be sent through Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express office, or by any responsible banker, but the Society will not be responsible for losses thereby. Letters of inquiry should accompany the first deposit. A pass-book will be issued to depositors, which must be presented on each occasion of making a deposit or withdrawing money.

Office Hours—From 9 a. m. to 3 p. m.

JOSEPH LEDDY, Secretary. EDWIN HALL, Assistant Secretary.

San Francisco, Dec. 1, 1869.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE KELLY & Co.,

NEW YORK

BANKERS

EXCHANGE ON

NEW YORK, .....LONDON
BANK OF IRELAND.....DUBLIN

Payable at all the Branches,

AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

CENTRAL

AND

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD

Time Schedule, January 19, 1870.

| EASTWARD. | Express Mail & Passenger. | Hourly Passenger. | Mail Freight & Passenger. |
|---|---|---|---|
| San Francisco | 5.00 p. m. | 8.00 a. m. | 4.00 p. m. |
| Oakland | 5.30 " | 8.30 " | 4.30 " |
| Alameda | 5.40 " | 8.40 " | 4.40 " |
| Encinal | 5.50 " | 8.50 " | 4.50 " |
| Newark | 6.05 " | 9.05 " | 5.05 " |
| Centreville | 6.15 " | 9.15 " | 5.15 " |
| Washington | 6.25 " | 9.25 " | 5.25 " |
| Decoto | 6.35 " | 9.35 " | 5.35 " |
| Junction | 6.45 " | 9.45 " | 5.45 " |
| Lathrop | 7.00 " | 10.00 " | 6.00 " |
| Stockton | 7.30 " | 10.30 " | 6.30 " |
| Lodi | 7.50 " | 10.50 " | 6.50 " |
| Galt | 8.05 " | 11.05 " | 7.05 " |
| Latrobe | 8.15 " | 11.15 " | 7.15 " |
| Folsom | 8.45 " | 11.45 " | 7.45 " |
| Placerville | 9.00 " | 12.00 m. | 8.00 " |
| Shingle Springs | 9.15 " | 12.15 p. m. | 8.15 " |
| Clarksville | 9.30 " | 12.30 " | 8.30

The "Compaint of the Poor."

And wherefore do the poor complaint the rich man asked of me?
Come, walk abroad with me, I said, and I will answer thee.
'Twas evening, and the frozen streets were cheerless to behold;
And we were wragg and coated well, and yet we were a-cold.

We met an old bare-headed man—his locks were few and white—
I asked him what he did abroad, in that cold winter night?
'Twas bitter keen, indeed, he said—but at home, no fire had he:
And, therefore, he had come abroad to ask for charity.

We met a young bare-footed child, and she begged for alms and bold:
I asked her what she did abroad, when the wind blew shrill and cold?
She said her father was at home, and he lay sick a-bed;
And, therefore, was it she was sent abroad to beg her bread.

We saw a woman sitting down upon a stone to rest,
She had a baby at her back—another at her breast.
I asked her why she loitered there, when the wind was so chill?
She turned her head and bade the child that cerrain'd behind, be still.

She told us that her husband served—a soldier far away;
And, therefore, to her parish she was begging back her way.
We met a girl—her dress was loose—and sorrow was in her eye!
Who, with the wanton's hollow voice, addressed the passers by.

I asked her what there was in guilt, that could her heart allure,
To shame, distress and late remorse?—she siam-ered, she was poor.
I turned me to the rich man then, for silently stood he;
You asked me why the poor complain, and there have answered thee.

Late Irish News.

Mr. Michael Sutton, the respected proprietor of the Wexford People, died on the 26th at Chelcome House, Rosbercon.

The English Government, after having denied that O'Donovan Rossa was ever whipped at all lasts admits the allegation, but Mr. Hardy says no sensation has occurred since 1868. O truthful government.

They are afraid that Fenianism has not taken quietly to grave prepared for it in county Clare. Strange lights are seen signaling each other in remote quarters of the county. The bull already feels nervous, for fear that the illuminations may be the spirit of Fenianism, calling for company.

Several landlords in Ireland, or their agents, are receiving threatening letters for their impecunious tenants. An ink sketch, of a man receiving the contents of a gun, are inserted in the notes, in more forcibly inform those persons of obtuse imaginations, what kind intentions the tenantry have for them.

The Cosmos Chronicle gives an interesting account of the moving log of Glenkelly, in Tipperary. Three times within a century it has shifted a considerable distance. On the 11th inst., after an unusually heavy fall of rain, a portion of the bog, upwards of an acre, on which there were some people cut turf-banks, became detached, and floated some eight or ten perches over some waste land, when its further progress was stayed by the rising ground. The great cavity left by the detached mass may be seen from a public road that traverses Clonkelly bog, which is of very considerable extent.

REWARDING WELCOME MEN FOR LIFE.—Mr. Walsh Consular Agent for the United States, distributed fifty-five pounds at Fort Rossiter, among four cartoon house officers, for saving from drowning Captain Leach of the United States mail steamer. The action of the American Government were also given to the men for their gallantry.

A petition has been lodged against the election of Captain Greville Nugent for Longford. The petitioners chiefly complain of bribery, undue influence and intimidation by the Catholic clergy and more in the interest of Captain Greville.

TENANT RIGHT DEMONSTRATION.—One of the largest and most enthusiastic tenant right demonstrations that has ever been held in Ulster took, place lately at Fairhill, Tyrone. There were fully ten thousand persons present, and a resolution was passed that no powers of eviction should exist for non-payment of rent. Mr. Bright's plan of peasant proprietorship was recommended to the favorable notice of the meeting. The proceedings passed off without any disturbance.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin has convened an aggregate meeting for the purpose of urging on the Government the necessity of purchasing the Irish railways.

The eight members who voted against the government on Ross's resolution, were—Mr. Dargwell, Clonmel; Mr. Delahunty, Waterford; Colonel French, Roscommon; Mr. Gurney, Southampton; Mr. Johnson, Belfast; Mr. McMahon, New Ross; Mr. Maguire, Cork; Capt. Stacksped, Louth; Messrs. Moore, Mayo; and Mathews, Dungarvan.

REMNANT OF THE PENAL LAWS.—A case has just been decided in the county of Etchegoy in which the Rev. James Maher, P. P., Graigue, Co. Carlow, sought to establish his claim to the guardianship of certain children whose Catholic father, by will duly executed, appointed the Rev. Mr. Maher their guardian. The mother, a Protestant, having married again, and being about to emigrate to America, wish to a Protestant clergyman asking him to look after the children and rear them Protestants. The chief argument relied on, and which is a disgrace to a christian community, was that the inheritance of different religions were not legally married, and that consequently the father had no testamentary power in the case of his illegitimate? children. It was further argued that in a point of law a Romish ecclesiastic cannot be appointed a testamentary guardian in Ireland. The Court decided against the Rev. Mr. Maher's claim.

A GIANT BOY.—There is being exhibited in the city of Cork a young man of gigantic size. He is said to be only nineteen years of age, yet his weight exceeds 37 stone. This remarkable specimen of human nature was born on Irish soil, his parents having lived, at the time of his birth, at Belmullit in the county Mayo. His features are mild, but expressive and good-looking. He is not much taller than ordinary men, but his huge proportions and unwieldly figure stamp him as a being out of the ordinary course of humanity.

A most harmonious tenant-right demonstration was held at Larne, county Antrim. Resolutions were passed demanding for Ulster Irish farmers undisturbed occupancy against extortion and oppression generally by repudiating all desire to infringe upon the just rights of the landlords. It was also resolved, in case of refusal or failure to eviction for non-payment of rents on receiving contiguous they had previously made, which had inhanced the value of the land.

The Munster News states that in the west of the county Limerick certain landlords have been endeavoring, sublepitory or legislation on the land question, to obtain the signatures of their tenantry to a document binding them beforehand to the acceptance of certain descriptions of leases containing clauses of an extraordinary character. The tenants have also universally refused to sign.

THE POET OF LIMERICK.—One hundred vessels more have been discharged during the past year in the above port than ever before. This is chiefly, if not altogether, owing to the decreased dues payable by shipping since the introduction of the New Harbor Act.

The Japanese Troupe, have made a very successful tour through Ireland.

The death of Mr. James Hopkins, of Toam, is announced in late Irish papers. The deceased suffered twelve months imprisonment for his Irish sentiments. A vast concourse of people escorted his remains to the grave bearing national emblems.

A testimonial to J. G. Merriman, Esq., who though an English gentleman, has proved himself a true friend to Ireland is assuming form in Dublin. The proposed testimony will consist of a carefully selected body of Irish literature, and a book case of Irish oak.

The death of Mr. Martin Flannery, of Ennis, is announced. He was thrown from his carriage into a drainage canal, stunned, and drowned in less than two feet of water. Mr. Flannery suffered a tedious incarceration for loyalty to his country.

Weekly Telegraphic Summary.

Eastern.

NEW YORK, March 1.—General, O'Neill, President of the Fenian Brotherhood, has issued an order that the annual Congress will be held in Chicago, on April 14, and revoking the call for the meeting of Congress in New York, March 18th and 19th. This action is taken in consequence of the outrage on Meehan, whose condition is pronounced hopeless.

NEW ORLEANS, March 1.—A party of twenty-five men surrounded the Sheriff's house at Harrisonburg last Sunday night, and caused the Sheriff and his family to flee, entered the house and killed Colonel Charles Jones and his eldest son. The youngest son escaped by leaping from a window.

CHICAGO, March 2.—Father Swarins, a well known priest of the Jesuit Society, and one of the most able and influential members of that order in this country, died yesterday of Bright's disease of the kidneys.

A petition is receiving many signatures asking Congress to vote away no more public lands to the advantage of Railroad companies, but to save the remaining acres for the benefit of emigrants and settlers.

CHICAGO, March 5.—The Tribune's New York special says, the rumor is renewed that the Inman Co. company intend to withdraw their Caledonian steamers and concentrate their business on the China line. The Henry Chauncy which was to sail yesterday was detained, but the officers say she will start on Monday. The loss business by the Isthmus is very small, and the Panama Railroad Company have refused to reduce their present rates to allow the steamers to compete successfully with the overland route. It is stated that after the California line is withdrawn, the Atlantic steamships will be employed in a new American line to Europe.

NEW YORK, March 5.—It appears that stormy proceedings occurred in the Senate on the night when Meehan was slain. He had reference to the invasion of Canada, which, it is said, was defeated by a majority of the organization opposed it, considering such movement before all the branches of the Brotherhood were united as rash in the extreme.

NEW YORK, March 7.—The reception of Mr. Seward took place in the City Hall this afternoon. He made a brief speech complimentary to the city as the metropolis of the Western Continent.

The trial of McFarland for the murder of Richardson is set for the first Monday in April.

The trial of Chambers for the murder of Voorhies commences on Wednesday.

PORTLAND (Me.), March 7.—Republican Mayor was elected to-day in Rockland, Saco and Auburn. A Democratic mayor at Bath, at two-thirds election. The Republicans had a plurality.

NEW ORLEANS, March 7.—The Legislature met in extra session to-day.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—The House Committee on Foreign Affairs this morning resumed consideration of Banks' joint resolution relative to Cuban affairs, but came to no conclusion on the subject. Much important information from the Department of State has been furnished, some of which cannot now be made public. The Committee will hereafter have two meetings a week.

CHICAGO, March 7.—A Tribune New York special says several politicians have been canvassing the policy of running Wm. H. Seward for Governor of New York, on a ticket uniting Conservative Republicans with the best portion of the Democrats. The proposition appears to be favorably received, though it is strongly opposed by the Tammany "Ring," who will nominate Hoffman or Tweed at the next election.

NEW YORK, March 7.—The Captain of the steamer Grey Hound reports having seen a steamer near the Azore Islands, Feb. 26, which resembled the Penna steamer, and there is some probability that she is the missing steamer City of Boston.

Three thousand dollars of American silver was shipped from Montreal to this city yesterday, on orders from restaurant and saloon keepers, who intend to give silver in exchange.

It is stated that Sir John Young, Governor-General, will proceed in person to Red River, immediately after the close of the present session of Parliament.

CONCORD, N. H., March 8.—The pleasant weather and an active canvass drew out a large vote to-day for the four candidates: Governor Stearns, Republican, the present incumbent; Bible, Democrat; Flint, Labor Reform; Barrows, Temperance. The returns from forty-five towns—about one-half of the State, and over half of the votes, show a Republican loss of nearly 1,000. The result in doubtful. Stearns will probably be elected, but his majority will not exceed 500.

Later—Returns from 147 towns, over two-thirds of the State, indicate that Stearns is probably elected by 1,000 to 1,500 majority.

The Legislature is Republican with a majority reduced from last year.

PHILADELPHIA, March 8.—A large building on Sansom street, between 9th and 10th streets, used as a German Theatre, was burned this evening before the assembling of the audience. The loss is heavy.

WILMINGTON, Del., March 9.—At Charlestown, Kenawha county, the County selected capital of the State, a band of armed men entered the town in open light, March 24, and advanced to the jail, drive gately unlocked the door and released the prisoners. The terrified cooked residents those who happened to be present, and threatening death if an alarm was given. The organization is said to be independent towards the civil authorities, who were powerless. It is said the Governor will call upon the U. S. Government for military aid to suppress lawlessness.

TROY (N. Y.), March 9.—Returns from 202 towns give Stearns 82,987, Bobbit 22,861; Flint, 6,699; Barrows, 1,153. The remaining towns will give about five thousand, leaving Governor Stearns a majority of twelve hundred.

The Republicans will have about fifty majority in the House.

CHICAGO, March 9.—New Austin voted the Female Suffrage Bill passed by the Minnesota Legislature, on the ground that the clause submitting to females as well as males is unconstitutional, females not being legal voters. The Governor also objected to the proposition as being premature.

A letter from St. Domingo of February 24th, says the revolution is extending, and becoming more general on the island, and aid is asked from abroad. The revolutionists declare that a majority of the inhabitants are opposed to annexation to the United States.

Advices from Curacoas of February 25, states that the Venezuela revolutionists are fast multiplying. Monagas' government is considered in a critical condition. Governor Monagas, with 1,000 soldiers, had gone to Coro to fight general Blanco, and disturbances are now admitted throughout the entire Republic.

CHICAGO, March 9.—The Constitutional Convention has voted to take a recess from March 13th to April 12.

NEW YORK, March 9.—Port au Prince dates to Feb. 25th have been received via Havana. Executions and imprisonments of the Salnave [illegible]

European.

LONDON, March 8.—The Irish members attack the proposed land bill. They think it will prove an injury instead of a benefit to Ireland.

PARIS, March 8.—At a political banquet last night, Mr. Ollivier made a remarkable speech in which he said the gulf that separates the Government from the Left is closing. Both parties are drawing nearer and nearer every day, and the Left, because errors had been or might be committed by the majority. He hoped the different parties will not be disheartened because Baker had escaped, but would continue to point out improvements. He closed with the prediction that in spite of the Left the Government would succeed.

PARIS, March 8.—A meeting was held last evening for the purpose of organizing a society to be composed of the friends of Jerome David, and which proposes to erect a statue to the deceased Republican statesman. Several hundred persons were present, and after denouncing the recent rioting and disorder in Paris.

LONDON, March 8.—Eight hundred emigrants to day formed in line, and with a carpet-bagger at their head marched through the street to the publication office of the Irish Monthly, halted and sung the "Marseillaise," after which they dispersed. At this time no one made an attempt to interfere with the proceeding.

LONDON, March 8.—In the Maryland discovertee Lord Penzance has consented to the leaving of an appeal bench, of argument on the right of Sir Charles to proceed with the case notwithstanding the decision as to Lady Mordaunt's insanity.

The Times denounces the Captain of the Penzance steamer for his conduct in connection with the Oneida, without positively asserting that Savage executed by the latter.

DUBLIN, March 8.—The Irishman asserts that the Government will soon issue a proclamation declaring the operation of the Habeas Corpus in Ireland.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 9.—J. McLeary Brown has been appointed Secretary and Chief of the Chinese Embassadors, now en route to Europe.

LONDON, March 9.—John Bright is rusticating in the mountains of Wales. His health is improving.

The German and Austrian Bishops in the Ecumenical Council have agreed to the proposed dogmas. It is generally hoped that the Pope will not precipitate a collision with the European Powers.

PARIS, March 9.—It is understood that the other Catholic powers will put France their demands for special representations in the Ecumenical Council.

Prince de la Tour Dauvergne Lorraguais will probably be appointed one of the representatives.

ROME, March 9.—The Pope temporizes and refuses to obtain a vote on the dogma of infallibility, which has arrived at the Council.

Prince Odescalchi, a strong speculative interest in American securities is developing here and on the continent.

PARIS, March 9.—The police no longer permit the friends of Rochefort to visit him at the prison.

Another demonstration by the conscripts at Lyons was made yesterday. The disorder was speedily suppressed upon troops.

It is reported that the small pox has broken out among the political prisoners.

DUBLIN, March 7.—Great excitement and apprehension is felt in the north of Ireland for the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The Pall Mall Gazette approves of Gladstone's land bill, but thinks the development anarchy in Ireland is the first duty of the government.

Dispatches from Rome report that the antagonists of papal infallibility are in earnest, calling for the Council to adjourn, or withdraw, but have now determined to remain, in view of the growing opposition to the dogma.

MADRID, March 7.—In the constituent Cortes, on Saturday, Prim read a manifesto opposition to Duke Montpensier, and declared that the entire Ministry, with the exceptions of Admiral Topete, were also Montpensierists. His statement has given the latter a numerous offence, and he has tended his resignation, but it has not been accepted. The Unionists are ferocious against Prim, and are doing their utmost to encourage Topete. A ministerial crisis is imminent.

Rome.

The religious organs have advices from Rome which represent that the Pope, in response to a memorial from a large majority of the Bishops, has distributed among the members of the Council a written proposing the definition of the dogma of Infallibility, with notice that suggestions of the Fathers on the same will be received until the 6th instant.

The Ultramontane journal, La Monde, states positively that the Pope has decided on the Ecumenical Council to fix upon the dogma of Papal Infallibility within a week.

MARRIED.

In Gravity, Feb. 27, by the Rev. Father O'Connor, Mr. Patrick Rooney to Miss Mary Ann Kelly, both of this city.

In this city, March 1, by the Rev. Father Accolti, S. J., Commander S. H. Franklin, U. S. N., to Miss Jennie C., daughter of Gen. E. D. Keyes.

In this city, March 2, by the Rev. Father Accolti, James Hilton to Julia Ann Jones, both of this city.

DIED.

In this city, March 7 after a long illness, James Ryan, a native of Parish of Kilcolman, County Mayo, Ireland aged 45 years.

In this city, March 7, Catherine, wife of James Kelly, a native of Parish of Kilcolman, County Mayo, Ireland aged 45 years.

In this city, March 7, Catherine, wife of James Kelly, a native of Parish of Kilcolman, County Mayo, Ireland aged 45 years.

In this city

THE MONITOR.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

EUROPEAN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

The report of Mr. Webb has been confirmed by the Queen's Proctor, and the decree nisi has been made absolute. The petitioner, Mr. Webb, is a gentleman of property, and the respondent, Mrs. Webb, is the daughter of Mr. Justice Talfourd. The parties were married in 1858, and have had a family of four children. Mrs. Webb's conduct has been the subject of much comment, and the case has excited a great deal of interest.

The Queen has conferred the honor of knighthood upon Mr. Thomas Graham Jackson, the architect of the new Law Courts.

The Prince of Wales has been elected a member of the Athenæum Club, under the provision which empowers the Committee to elect, without ballot, any person of distinction in literature, science, or the arts, or who has filled a high position in the public service.

The Duke of Edinburgh has been appointed Admiral of the Fleet, in succession to the late Duke of Northumberland.

The Duke of Cambridge has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Forces, in succession to the late Duke of Cambridge.

The Duke of Abercorn has been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in succession to the Earl of Spencer.

The Earl of Kimberley has been appointed Secretary of State for the Colonies, in succession to the Earl Granville.

The Earl of Clarendon has been appointed Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in succession to the Earl Granville.

The Earl of Kimberley has been appointed Lord President of the Council, in succession to the Earl Granville.

The Earl of Clarendon has been appointed Lord Privy Seal, in succession to the Earl Granville.

The Earl of Kimberley has been appointed Lord Privy Seal, in succession to the Earl Granville.

The Earl of Clarendon has been appointed Lord President of the Council

Weekly Calendar.

Sunday, 24—Seventh Sunday after Pentecost.
Monday, 25—St. James, Apostle.
Tuesday, 26—St. Anne, Mother of the Blessed Virgin.
Wednesday, 27—St. Pantaleon, Martyr.
Thursday, 28—St. Nazarius, Celsus and other Martyrs.
Friday, 29—St. Martha, Virgin.
Saturday, 30—St. Abdon and Sennen, Martyrs.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

THE RIVALRY OF RACES.

It is useless to notice now the war or peace, which has been carried on for centuries, either openly or covertly, manifested finally to the last European embryotic. The element of civilization meet only to reek' the two great branches of the human family, viz: the Celtic and the Teutonic. There has been almost an incessant warfare between them, each striving to impress its peculiar civilization on the great mass of humanity, and each endeavoring to gain universal dominancy for itself. The battle has been very changeable in its fortunes. One time it looks as though the Celtic races were destined to rule the world, and at another epoch the Teutonic element appears likely to establish an ascendancy. So the struggle goes on, one party predominating, then over the other. Only a few weeks ago Spain was the centre of observation, and her name was on every tongue; now she is quite forgotten, and very little interest is expressed as to what side she will espouse. France and Prussia monopolize public attention. Round them are gradually grouping the rest of the European powers, according as their sympathy or their interest direct them. With France, as the head of the Celtic races, are, or will shortly be, ranged Spain, Italy and Austria, the majority of whose subjects are Celtic in their origin. With Prussia are, or will be, the leagued England, Russia and most of the minor German States. So readily do the different races of men espouse the cause of their kindred and national traditions for which their blood and national traditions render them sympathetic. While admitting that, so far as the merits of the ostensible causes of the war are concerned, Prussia has the better side—inasmuch as the quarrel has been deliberately forced upon her by France, and by means of a very miserable pretext, moreover—we cannot help thinking that the peace and happiness of mankind could better be served by a speedy triumph on the side of the French nation. We have no means with the information of Prussia, we should be sorry to see her despotic power added to her legitimate territory; but looking to matters superior and preferable to the aggrandizement of either of the combatants—to the triumph of the great majority of mankind and the preservation of peace—we are inclined to think that it would be happier for the world if Napoleon III. came out of the fight victorious. If the end of this struggle be, as we hope and pray it may, the rehabilitation of Poland, and the erection of Ireland into an independent republic, the peace of Europe will be established on a firmer and truer basis than it ever was before, and the supremacy of any one power on the continent will become an impossibility. Nations are nursing awfully nervous about this war in Europe. They are anxious that their country should remain neutral, in order that they may be able to sell cannon and rifles, shot and shell, to all the combatants, and so make money out of the transaction. But their peddling prospects are a little bit clouded, we are happy to say. There is every chance that England will be compelled by force of circumstance to take part in the melee before long. She is much alarmed for the integrity of Belgium, and declares, in a half-hearted and uncertain kind of way, that if France violates the neutrality of its soil, she will protect it with her fleets and armies. It is stated that France has already asked the Belgian Government what policy it intends to pursue during the war, and if a satisfactory answer is not speedily returned the Gallic legions will invade the territory of King Leopold II., notwithstanding the menaces of England. In case they should decide upon taking possession of Belgium, it will trouble Louis Napoleon and his people very little what England may think of the proceeding. As for the latter's ability to successfully cope with them, or expell them from the country, the idea is only provocative of laughter and ridicule. A few days ago the probability of England's having to occupy Belgium was discussed in Parliament, and Mr. Osborne said the Government would not place fifty thousand men in that country. Even if they could, fifty thousand men would be nothing like a match for a single corps d'armee. They would be gobbled up in no time. So long as England contented occupying Belgium, at least not just yet—not until the enterprise looks less dangerous than it does at present. What a change has come over the world within memory of the living generation! Thirty years ago England used to bully the whole world. Not a dispute or falling out could take place between any of the European powers, great or small, but she had something to say about it, and finally dictated terms to both disputants; now, on the contrary, the notion of her interference in continental matters is only received with contemptuous and derisive laughter. The lion's hide has long since been pulled off, and the stupid but audacious donkey exhibited to the world.

THE WAR TELEGRAMS.

Every day henceforward, until peace is again restored to Europe, we shall receive a certain supply of news from the seat of war, and from the capitals of the contending nations. We wish our readers to understand that very little reliance should be placed on these telegrams until they are well authenticated, or corroborated by subsequent information, from correspondents actually on the spot. The gentleman who send on the dispatches to us are simply anxious to earn their money by transmitting so much matter; they care amazingly little whether their news is trustworthy or the reverse. Moreover, they are extremely desirous of creating sensations, and they must, consequently, impart a certain amount of piquancy to their details. We shall be favored with a great many announcements prefaced with "it is said," or "it is rumored," or yes' "it is generally supposed," while all the saying and rumoring and supposing is confined to the newsmongers themselves and some eclique of their own. In addition to this, the telegrams have to come through England, and can be manipulated there, so we may rest assured they will be colored to suit British prejudices. As these are strongly in favor of the Prussians, it may safely be premised that every little repulse or reverse the French may chance to experience will be magnified into a tremendous defeat, while the victories the Emperor may gain will be doubled as long as possible, and then made as insignificant looking as pecuniary-caliber ingenuity can contrive. But we have been made so familiar with the tactique of the cable-men during the sitting of the Ecumenical Council—we have seen so many instances of willful perversion and misstatements of facts emanating from them, that the man must be very easily duped indeed who can be persuaded to place the slightest reliance on anything they send.

THE MONITOR.

THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.

SATURDAY..... JULY 23, 1870.

AMERICAN INGRATITUDE.

We regret very much to see that the sympathies of the people of the United States generally are most unreservedly given to Prussia in the present war. Such conduct is not at all creditable to the people of the country, and convicts it of a basest ingratitude. France was our first friend and the best that the United States ever had. If it would not be bearing too hard upon American gratitude and vanity, we might almost say that the war of Independence was have had a very different termination, were it not for the magnanimous and disinterested support given by the French to the struggling colony. In fact, any impartial man must admit that the United States owe its existence as an independent power to that support. Two things dictated against the Emperor of this march as reasons why he should not give any sympathy from America. Firstly, that he wanted to replace the Confederate States and destroy the Union; secondly, that he aspired to establish a monarchy in Mexico. With regard to the first one, it may be alleged that scarcely ugly foreign power imagined that the North could conquer the South and it was generally thought that the peace of the world would be enhanced by the speedy success the latter. The world was very much mistaken, and Louis Napoleon was mistaken with the rest. Nevertheless, taking it at the very worst, conduct will compare favorably with that of the British Government. And as to the expedition to Mexico, though it was foolish and ill-advised, yet it was done with a good intention and from the most praiseworthy motives. Napoleon had no inkling of his own to serve, he only wished that he could not be accused in fact of annexation territory, and he did not want it. If he could. His only desire was to sustain the Latin race in North America, and give a stable government to Mexico. He failed, to be sure; yet no one can understand a good republican regretting that he did not succeed.

What has Prussia do that she should receive the sympathy and moral support of this country? Her armies figured in our Revolution as the friends of Great Britain as the enemies of the young Republic. We had Hessians here, and it exploits still live in the popular fictions of the people. The United ates owes Prussia nothing. If shame into the court of public opinion, clear hands there might be a fairness for taking her part in the pint quarrel, but she does no such thing. Very far from it. On all occasions she has shown herself arrogant and domineering; she has never evinced the slightest regard for the rights of her weaker neighbors whenever suited her to ignore them. Her action of the treaty of Prague, beneath of faith with the people of Slesw Holstein, her absorption of Hanover, her treachery towards the ath German States, all prove her to be grasping at unlimited power in Europe. Is a German prince, who would not ing better than a pliable instrument the hands of William I., we esta lished on the throne of Spain? Prus would be regularly hemmed in between enemies, and the preponderan in Europe which she has since a the expense of so much bod ad treasure, would be irretrievably lo France is, in reality, promoted to th dominion of this war by the, stinct of self-preservation. se has no choice; she must either put or a dinate her position, and ive prefer fighting. Thus it is that although f only the apparent causes of this quar rel be investigated, right and justic seem to abide with Prussia; yo upon closer examinati, when we take into account the hiden motives which are actuating bh countries, the palm for honor at straigh forward conduct must b awarded to France.

We are very much mild that the preference shown towards the German power is not altogether free from the suspicion of being bad upon religious prejudice. Prussia is great Protestant power, one the famous Anglo-Saxon family, and, therefore, the sympathies of 0 Know-Nothings, the anti-Catlics, and the Philo-British Americns are surrendered to her upon a moment's notice. We are firmly convinced that there is in the breasts of a large proportion of the people of the United States more bitterly feeling towards England, who does on all occasions and in all crises, show in herself the deadly foe of this nation, than towards France, to whom we are under so many weighty obligations. Should England take part in the coming war, an opportunity will be offered for presenting a demand for the settlement of the Alabama claims, in a manner that will admit of no trifling. Will that opportunity be availed of? We venture to confidently predict that it will not. American does not want to embarrass dear England; she will exhibit a forgiving spirit, which would be worthy of the highest admiration, if it could only be traced to the effect of Christian principle. England knows very well that the Washington Government is only "humbugging" about these claims; she knows very well that they will never be pressed; that the whole affair is the most ridiculous of sham-battles; and so, with her mind perfectly easy about the action of the United States, she proposes to inflict a deadly blow on France, while engaged already with a sufficiently powerful adversary. She will serve this country in precisely the same manner some fine day.

THE PRIMARY ELECTIONS.

On Monday next the Democrats of this city and county will take a most important step. They will on that day nominate the convention from which will emanate the ticket for county officers. Those who assemble to appoint that convention have the welfare of the whole party in their hands, and according as they act so shall the whole party fare. If they act wisely, if they select honest, capable and respectable men, Democracy is bound to triumph; if they act unwisely, if they nominate political "hummers," men who trade on the party watchwords and are willing to sell their votes, they will inevitably bring about the ruin of the Democracy, and hand over victory to their opponents.

We hear a great deal of "Independents," "Citizens" and the rotten-ness of party organization, and the necessity of getting rid of it. All this is but to effect, but what gives rise to them? Why, they spring from the repugnance which honorable men feel to submitting themselves upon the dictation of mercenary and corrupt conventionists. "By their fruits ye shall know them." As is the convention, so must ultimately the ticket be. How often has it happened that honesty bribes have been sown broadcast among members of conventions, and that men utterly devoid of any claim upon public confidence, men of no social standing, men without character, men who want office solely because of the facility it affords them to carry out schemes of public robbery, succeed in getting nominated on the ticket in opposition to men who have really done the State some service, to men of good repute, to men who have the desire as well as the ability to fulfil their duties efficiently and creditably?

The only safe, indeed, the only possible, remedy for this deplorable state of affairs is to be found in sending to the convention only men of unquestionable probity and patriotism. With them everything rests. If they do their duty honestly and without favor, the citizens will follow up their action and elect their nominees triumphantly. It is by no means difficult to know whether the conventions have been true to themselves and the people. The names they propose to the public pronounce at once either their condemnation or their panegyric. No candidate can be put forward whose public record for good or ill will not be known by the majority of voters. Should the selection for the convention be unsound, we would recommend the citizens not to follow its dictates unreasonably, but to vote for the best man wherever they see him, no matter by what party he may be nominated.

If this course of conduct were carried out steadily for some time, it would infallibly break up corrupt rings and bring about a purer state of the political atmosphere. Political adventurers and mercenary speculators would cease to intrigue for nomination to conventions if they found that the voters were ready to use their own good judgment, and refused to accept the pronunciamento of the conventions as in any way binding on them. What we want now is a number of honest, respectable men, who will manage the affairs of the city and county like men of business and with a single view to the public advantage. Verily, we are suffering from a plague of politics in this country. Who shall deliver us from it?

ENGLISH TACTICS.

By slow degrees England is revealing the line of policy she intends to pursue during the coming war. Alarmed at the ever-increasing power of France, and jealous of the great strides made by that country in arts and industries, trade and commerce, she has long been anxious to see it humbled and rendered incapable of competing with her. Nothing but a wholesome fear of the results to herself has restrained her from making war upon France long ago. British statesmen are wise in their generation; they know that England would have but a poor chance in an unaided struggle with her great Celtic neighbor, so they had words of kindness on their lips while hate was in their hearts; they stretched forth their right hand for, the grasp of friendship, while they clutched the assassin's dagger in the left. Now, however, the necessity for concealment of their true feelings has altogether disappeared. France has come into collision with a foe fully her match, and England can display her malice with impunity.

Under the pretext of securing the neutrality of Belgium, she shows her intention of striking a death-blow against France. She will take no decided, no irrevocable step, however, for some time; for, as yet, the venture is rather too hazardous. France might be able to dispose of Prussia without exhausting herself in the contest, and then things would look rather blue for Johnny Bull! England's game is to wait, to remain neutral, until France is exhausted—thoroughly exhausted—after a protracted, even if successful, struggle, or until she is overmatched by a coalition of powerful adversaries. Then she will step in, then she will wreak her cowardly vengeance upon her hated rival. She will strike when she can do so with safety, or she will never strike at all.

Her interference in the quarrel is perfectly gratuitous, as her interests are in no way threatened; and the only motive which can prompt her in assuming a hostile attitude is, just what we have hinted, the desire to humble and injure a rival in trade and commerce. The safest course for the interests of the people of Ireland is not confined to empty words of fruitless aspirations. All party or all factions disputes and differences of opinion must be laid aside and forgotten. Let honest men come to the front as leaders, and masses, the rank and file, will follow them to the last extremity. If a thing is to be done at all it must be done quickly, for there is no time to be lost. En avant, Vive la liberte Vive la Republique Irlandaise!

THE UNIVERSAL PEACE HUMBUG.

Not very long ago, when Great Exhibitions, Expositions, etc., were in the rage, it was quite common for brilliant orators to proclaim that the reign of peace had come at last, that the rivalry of nations in arts and industries had rendered war an impossibility, and that thenceforward the sword should be down with the lamb and the juvenile sheep be nothing worse for his companionship. All this was very pleasing, no doubt. There were some people who believed the charming prophecies; there were more who thought that the fight and devil had not been quite exorcised out of poor humanity, and that there would be quarrels and wars in the future just as there had been in the past. We belonged to the latter class, and we flatter ourselves that we were perfectly right. Indeed, so far from the kingdom of peace being inaugurated in this latter half of the nineteenth century, we question much if history shows any corresponding period of time in the previous eighteen centuries half so remarkable for great and devastating wars. It is plain that the sword is not going to be turned into ploughshare just yet.

The art of war progresses in equal ratio with any other branch of human science. The implements for taking away a man's life are improved with even greater rapidity than those which were to make him enjoy his life in comfort. And considerable advancement is also shown in the high art of getting into war. It takes far less cause and far less time to involve one nations in hostilities now than it used in the good old days of lance and arquebus. Formerly, indeed, going to war was a very slow, tedious, cumbersome process. There were over and many preludes and preliminaries, and even when war was declared, the movements of the opposing armies were so snail-like that months frequently passed away before the first clash of battle was experienced. But now this great satisfaction, when they did get into war they kept at for a considerable period. Hostilities lasted for years and years, till the originators of the row dropped off altogether, and the actual combatants hardly knew what the fighting was about. We have changed all that, for the better, let us hope. A days is amply sufficient to develop a given grievance from a simple complaint to a casus belli, and large armies are ready to move at four and eight hours' notice. Steam and rail-ways are the adversaries face to face right willy, two or three murderous engines puts one or other of the armies hors de combat, and so the affair is finished.

NOTICE TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Without wishing to be importunate in our solicitations to call the attention of patrons to the fact that a very large amount of arrears is now due to this office. Quite recently accounts were forwarded to a considerable number of delinquent subscribers, but the response to them has by any means come up to our just expectations. We know well enough that this is more negligence on the part of our friends; and the remainder that because the sum owing is small hardly worth their while to remit. They are mistaken, however, that although each may seem insignificant in itself, their aggregate will be found to be a very large sum indeed. Nobody can miss the few cents of his indebtedness, while the gross total is a consideration for us. It is like undertaking to sustain and keep efficiency a paper like THE MONITOR that can not be done unless our friends and the Globe, etc. pay promptly. We are making arrangements with correspondents in Europe which will render this one of the very best informed on the coast. We are determined to spare no expense in order to make the THE MONITOR worthy of the hearty support of the Catholics of this State. Let us, that this quiet hint will be sufficient, for we shall have no necessity of resorting again to so disagreeable a topic.

ROBERT TO HENRY GEORGE, Esq., OF SACRAMENTO REPORTER.—We regret to inform our readers that Mr. George, editor of the Sacramento Reporter, met with a very severe accident a few days ago, in Sacramento. He was on foot of mounting his horse, a rather fresh and restive animal, and had got his left foot in the stirrup when the horse made a movement and flung him in the air. Unfortunately, Mr. George did not succeed in releasing his foot as he fell, and the frightened beast started off, dragged him along the street for a distance. Although Mr. George suffered very ugly bruises and contusions, we are happy to say he is in no danger and he is already in a fair recovery. We present our warmest salutations to him on his escape, and hope he will soon be able to resume his labors.

BISHOP ALEMANY.—The Very Rev. ... has been good enough to confide to us the fact that he has received the last few days a letter from Archbishop Alemany. That prelate was still in the dale of the setting, but recovering. He glad to hear that the Archbishop's ... in every way satisfactory. He was not definitely made up his mind whether to return to California at once or come back to San Francisco, remain in Rome again in October or November would remain in the Eternal City. The Council had concluded its labors. However the Archbishop may ... one thing we are certain, that his ... will be delighted to see him back ... in sound health, pursuing his ... for the advancement of God's ...

A TO SAN FRANCISCANS.—It affords pleasure to announce that his Holiness Pope Pius IX., has been graciously to confer upon our estimable fellow ... D. J. Oliver, Esq., and D. T. Murphy, the distinguished honor of ... hood in the Order of St. Gregory. Order is held in high esteem by the ... of Europe; and no doubt the Pope ... to mark his approval of the zeal ... tion of the Catholics of California ... seconded so signal a mark of his ... favor these gentlemen. Long may they ... their honors.

ANIAL OF COLONEL WINTERS.—On ... last all that was mortal of the late Winters was conveyed to its last ... place in this world. There was a ... turnout of the various military ... stations, the members of which ... anxious to testify in this manner ... spect for the deceased gentleman. ... funeral cortege was one of the largest ... impressive witnessed in this city ... deplorable time.

... Jewelry Palace is offering daily ... at already immense stock of the most ... daily line every imported to this city. All ... purchased for cash paid on delivery of the ... the largest European and Eastern houses ... in the immense stock of the Jewelry Palace ... by fell, that they are sending persons all ... ding that it is impossible for them to ... How as there do on account of their ... embarrassment, but they never refer to the ... which they have in the immense cash supply ... which they have been a handsome profit ... and less than them at their very low ... Call and examine for yourselves before ... elsewhere.

... OF MANNING, Commission, can be ... A far better to prevent the crust disease ... itself on the system, by the timely use ... Such as Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild ...

THE MONITOR.

Saturday, July 23, 1870. 5

Convent School, Sacramento.

SACRAMENTO, July 19, 1870.

EDITOR MONITOR:—Following is a brief account of the annual examinations and distribution of premiums of the Convent School of the Sisters of Mercy, which took place on the 15th inst. It would seem from the many interesting reports of our Catholic colleges and academies which have invariably appeared in THE MONITOR, that their standard of education aims intellectually (if need not say morally) higher than that of our public schools. Having attended the examinations of public and Catholic schools, I can assert, without fear or prejudice, that the system of the former cannot compare with the latter. The parents and friends of our Convent School enjoyed a rare intellectual treat on Friday last. The study hall was tastefully decorated with American and Irish flags, while around the walls hung pieces of tapestry and embroidery, which reflected credit on the fair hands that worked them. Long before the appointed hour the halls were thronged with friends of the institution, who assembled to testify their appreciation of the progress of the school within the last ten months. Among the pupils present, numbering three hundred, dressed in white, and to the sound of music, marched in pairs to their respective places. Here was a sight worthy of contemplation; the composure, the native dignity of demeanor, the look of maiden innocence which each countenance betokened, all those qualifications which make children objects of endearment were faithfully represented, blended with a look of anxiety as to result of the examination which was to follow. Rev. Father Gibney conducted the examination, assisted by Rev. Fathers Wadhams and Scully; Governor of Folsom; Pelt, of Oroville; and Dalton and Kennedy, of Grass Valley. Following is the programme of exercises:

First Class—Family Economy, Natural Philosophy, Physical and Mathematical Geography, Arithmetic, Astronomy, Use of the Globes, etc.

These were interspersed with the following vocal and instrumental pieces: "The Ocean Wave," a duet, by Misses Mather and L. Griffin, was well rendered; also the song by the school, "Oh, where has the Violets Gone;" "The Last Rose of Summer," by Miss L. Griffin; duet, "I know a Bank," by Misses A. D. Dwyer and K. Day; chorus, "Murmuring Sea;" the "Circassian March," by Misses E. Colmer and E. Dwyer; song, "Charms of the Opera," (Lucia di Lammermoor), Misses L. Griffin and E. Mathers; chorus, "Garland Boys;" chorus, "A Song for Our Banner;" "Wearing of the Green," Misses Johns and Simms; "Glorious Summer shine," sung by several little children; "Scotch Polka," by Misses G. Johnson and J. Holdfelder.

In the First Division, crowns were distributed to the following named pupils for good conduct, the first two also receiving medals: Misses Josephine O. Dwyer, Mary Larkin, Nellie Kirby, Elizabeth Hussey and Lizzie Griffin.

Second Division—Cut for Crown: Misses Emma Mathews, Annie Gerber, Genevra Johns, Annie Brown, Katie King and Virginia Willis. Cut for Medal: Misses Cora Medal—Cut for Medal: Misses Ida Kreutzberger, Katie King, Nellie Bayley, Annie McAllister, Annie Schlotter, Annie Bryte, Julia Holdfelder. Application Crown Medal Cut for Application Medal: Misses Katie Lacy, Nellie Julia Holdfelder, Annie Bryte, Annie McAllister, Nellie Boylan, Elizabeth Kreutzberger, Katie King. Nellie Boylan, Annie Meallister, Emma Lauhotter, Annie Bryte, Julia Holdfelder. Application Crown Medal—Cut for Application Medal: Misses Katie Lacy, Nellie Julia Holdfelder, Annie Bryte, Annie McAllister, Nellie Boylan, Elizabeth Heaney and Emma Lanfkotter. Cut for Arithmetic Medal: Misses Lucy Nellie, Julia Holdfelder, Fannie Kohner, Katie Day, Nellie Kirby, Josephine O. Dwyer, Mary Larkin, Annie Gerber, Annie McAllister, Annie Bryte, Minnie Boardman, Emma Mathers. Cut for Excellence Crown: Misses Josephine O. Dwyer, Nellie Kerby, Mary Larkin.

The "Pleasure Train March," by Misses F. Kohner and L. Griffin followed the above distribution. A medal was awarded to Miss Emma Mathers for excellence in music. For superior tapestry work, a cut for a crown was awarded to Misses Mary Larkin, Josephine O. Dwyer Genevra Johns, Lizzie Dunwand and Charlotte Graves. After the distribution of premiums, the pupils sang "Good Bye," which closed the exercises of the day.

The grammar class stood a severe test, parsing and analyzing blank verse like old grammarians. I never heard better parsing, although I have attended the highest educational establishments in the State. The classes in Geography and all the studies I have mentioned answered remarkably well, and pleasingly manifested the degree of proficiency which the good Sisters bestowed upon them. After the disposal of premiums, Hon. M. F. Horan made some remarks, justly complimenting the Sisters for the proficiency which the children had attained, and recommended all Catholic parents to patronize schools which make their pupils an honor to themselves, their parents, and to the country of their birth. The children, after bidding adieu to their good teachers, returned home, laden with crowns, medals, and books, as trophies of excellence, to spend a happy vacation.

REVIEWS.

"MAUREEN DIRT."—A tale of the Fenian, by Mrs. J. Sadlier. New York: D. & J. Sadlier & Co., 31 Barclay street. Mrs. Sadlier's stories have obtained a wide popularity, and "Maureen Dirt" is one of the best deserving of them. Soundly religious in tone, and unexceptionable in moral tendency, this interesting tale may safely be put into the hands of Catholic children.

"ROBERT MAY, OR Well Known to the Police"—WINIFRED JONES, THE Very Ignorant Girl."—Both these instructive novelettes are published by Sadlier & Co., of New York. We have already called them "instructive," because a great deal can be learned from them by those who are in the disposition to be taught. The first teaches the necessity of perseverance in Faith, and the second shows how we may be very ignorant and stupid in the eyes of the world, and yet may be enlightened in the highest degree in the sight of God and His Saints.

Talk bill to provide a new apportionment of Congressional representation and to fix one day for Congressional elections throughout the Union, failed in Committee of Conference.

WEEKLY TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY

Eastern.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—The President to-day nominated E. E. Frelinghuysen Minister to England. He was confirmed by 40 to 5.

In the Senate, the bill granting a pension of $5,000 to Mrs. Lincoln was passed.

WASHINGTON, July 15.—Mr. Johnson's bill, for the creation of a Land District in California to be called the Shasta District, has passed both Houses.

Mr. Sargent's bill, to give preemption settlers three months after the filing of the plans of survey in the local land office, in which to file declaratory statements, has passed both Houses. This secures preemption claims from forfeiture. Under the new ruling, under the Colorado law, as amended in the Senate, it gives settlers eighteen months after the filing to pay for their claims.

The Australian steamship matter was unfortunately introduced too late for this session, and goes over to the next, when it will undoubtedly pass.

The Texas Pacific Railroad bill, over the thirty-second parallel route, also goes over till the next session.

Charles D. DeLong, now Minister resident, has been confirmed Minister Plenipotentiary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Japan. M. R. Wheeler is confirmed Meiter and Judge of the Court of Alabama Claims.

Senator Cole procured the nomination of E. Shirland as Collector of the Fourth Revenue District in California. The confirmation has been suspended, at the request of Representative Sargent.

Mr. Sargent had nominated M. C. Tilden as Surveyor of Customs, and Mr. Cole prevents the confirmation. If the session closes without confirmation, the nomination is headed, in that case, to Mr. Cole, who will nominate the present incumbent, for whose appointment a voluminous petition has been prepared.

The bill for the relief of Major Hammond, lately objected to in the House, went over, under the rules, till next session.

The California silk American flag was finally presented to the Senate, on Tuesday night, through Vice-President Colfax, the California delegation not being a unit upon even that small matter.

Senator Cole will visit California during the recess.

Quite a number of Congressmen intend taking a trip to the Pacific coast during the present session.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Diplomatic circles here, last evening, were greatly agitated over the advices received yesterday by the British Minister, indicating the severe danger of a rupture between the Queen and England on the question of the occupation of Belgium.

The President is urged to convene Congress at an early date. He is very much disappointed that Congress did not promptly on his message intended to place the commercial marine by one immediate in its foreign condition ten years ago.

NEW YORK, July 14.—The Herald Berlin correspondent says the mission of Benedetti, and the secret treaty between Prussia and Austria, was to secure the cession of Belgium to France.

NEW YORK, July 16.—The excitement over the war news continues. Recruiting offices have been opened in this city. At an agency on Broome street men are being received for an Irish brigade to aid the French. Colonel Jeremiah Haverty, Colonel Billy Wilson, Colonel John W. Byrnes and other noted Irish soldiers are said to be at the head of the movement. On the other hand, a number of Germans are also about to enlist for England.

NEW YORK, July 17.—The German reserves have already held a grand mass meeting to-night. Intense sympathy with Prussia was exhibited. Speeches were made proposing a prize for the bravest of the Prussian regiments. The workingmen alone would offer a thousand dollars, a thousand dollars and a flag to the first regiment that distinguished itself in an engagement.

The funeral of Francis Wood, Jr., Quartermaster, a victim of the New York riot, was attended by an immense crowd. Six hundred police preserved perfect order.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Cooler weather today; but sixteen cases of fatal sunstroke are reported.

CANANDAIGUA, July 14.—The jury last night brought in a verdict of guilty, and today the prisoners were sentenced to State Central Starr, to two years in jail and $10 fine; General Thompson, the same; Major Josephus B. Hayer General Hall, one year in jail and $10 fine. No demonstration.

CHICAGO, July 14.—Governor Solomon, of Washington Territory, recently of Chicago, addressed a meeting of Germans on the advantages of that Territory for emigrants. A party was formed here recently for the purpose of organizing a company for that Territory, and many names are being added to the list daily. A meeting is pending about two hundred and fifty families, will leave for the Pacific coast within the next few days.

CHICAGO, July 16.—Lieutenant-General Sheridan intends to leave for Europe in a few days, accompanied by one or two of his staff, to take observations in the approaching conflict.

CHICAGO, July 20.—A Washington special says the new Minister to England, ex-Senator Frelinghuysen, was yesterday, for the first time, officially notified of his appointment, which he decided to accept. He therefore received his commission, and will in a short time receive his instructions, which, so far as is known, will be unofficial. The Jubilee Minister, regarding the selection of the Executive Committee of the Fenian organization, calls for a General Convention of Fenians, to meet on the 12th of August next, to devise ways and means to take advantage of the present European complications in favor of Ireland.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Provost-Parshal, in the French Minister, committed suicide this morning by shooting himself with a pistol. The circumstances attending the act show that it was premeditated. The following note is the only recorded explanation: "I kill myself. M. Berthenay, come back and stay."

Foreign.

LONDON, July 15.—The French declaration of war is based on the following causes: First—The insult offered to Benedetti, and his approval by the Prussian Government. Second—The refusal of the King to accept the withdrawal of Leopold's name as a candidate for the Spanish throne. Third—The violation of Jena service.

The House of Lords insist on their amendments to the Land bill, and have appointed a Committee to set forth their grievances.

The trial of the Fenian conspirators, Duvet and Wilson has concluded with conviction, and the sentence of Duvett to fifteen years and Wilson to seven years' imprisonment hard labor.

The European news has occasioned commotion among the Fenians, who are said to be making preparations to assist in Ireland.

Gladstone said in the House of Commons that if British government, in connection with European Cabinets, sustained the position of Sir Drummond, that Spain is entitled to the sovereignty but a German for King.

In the House of Commons to-night the subject of a declaration of war by the French and Prussia was called up. Disraeli spoke at length in a

DIED,

In this city, July 14, Colonel John W. Winters, a native of Galway, Ireland, aged 61 years.

GILYEATHER.—In this city, July 12, James Gilyeather, a native of Ireland, aged 70 years.

SCOTT.—In the city, Richard Scott, a native of Westmeath, County Meath, Ireland, aged 67 years.

SHEEHY.—In this city, July 16, Catherine, wife of Michael Sheehy, a native of County Cork, Ireland, aged 35 years.

MCKENNE.—In this city, July 18, Catherine Alice, daughter of Lawrence and Elizabeth McKenne, aged 4 months and 5 days.

MCGRATH.—In this city, July 16, Richard, son of Richard and Catherine Crowly, aged 11 years.

MOORE.—In this city, July 16, Martin Moore, a native of county Roscommon, Ireland, aged 51 years.

MAHEALTH.—In this city, July 11, Mary Agnes, daughter of Joseph E. Elizabeth McGrath, aged 2 years and 6 months.

BRADY.—In this city, July 16, Susan, wife of Robert Brady, a native of Ireland, aged 42 years.

MCPHEE.—In this city, July 17, Mary Ann Murphy, a native of Cork, Ireland, aged 70 years.

BRENAN.—In this city, July 18, William Brenan, a native of Galway, Ireland, aged 36 years.

MCCARTHY.—In this city, July 17, Mary Jane, wife of T. W. Brooks, aged 31 years.

CALLAGHER.—In this city, July 18, Infant son of Mary and the late John P. Callagher, aged 2 hours.

BLAKE.—In this city, July 18, Mary Blake, wife of the late Patrick Blake, a native of county Derry, Ireland, aged 44 years and 4 months.

CALLAGHER.—In this city, July 20, Mary, daughter of Frank and Annie Callagher, aged 10 months and 20 days.

CLARKE.—In this city, July 17, James Clarke, a native of the parish of Lowtagh, County Sligo, aged 29 years.

HELM.—In Brooklyn, Alameda county, July 17, Patrick H. Helme, a native of county Clare, Ireland, aged 52 years.

New Advertisements.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, No. 610 Clay street.—At a meeting of the board of Directors held Friday, July 8th, a dividend of eleven per cent. per annum, on deposits for the term ending June 30th, payable immediately.

CURTIS W. CARMANY, Cashier.

FRENCH SAVINGS BANK.

TWENTY-FIRST SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND.

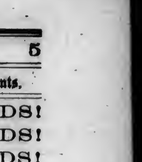
FOR A Dividend of Eleven per cent. per annum, not (11 per cent.) upon the operations of the French Savings Bank, for the six months ending June 30th, 1870, will be payable to the members of the Society, upon demand, at the office of the Bank, on and after Monday, the 15th inst. The dividend will be payable on and after the 15th inst., at the office of the Society, 121 Bush street.

GUSTAVE MAHE,
Director of Savings Bank.

SEVENTH WARD.

For Supervisor,
MICHAEL O'NEIL,
Subject to the Nomination of the Democratic Convention.

NEW BRANCH STORE.



THE UNDERSIGNED take pleasure in informing their friends and the public that they have opened a Branch Store at 140

Montgomery Street,
Occidental Hotel Building.

With the finest stock of

CUTLERY
IN THE CITY.

SHARPENING AND REPAIRING.

SCISSORS ground, and all kinds of Jobbing done.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.

WILL & FINK,
Manufacturing Cutlers, Locksmiths and Bell-Hangers.
128 tf 621 Kearny and 140 Montgomery sts.

NOTICE
To the Owners of Vehicles and Dogs.

THE ANNUAL LICENSES FOR THE YEAR ending July 1, 1871, will become delinquent on the 1st of August, which will subject the owner or driver of Vehicles to fine and imprisonment, with an addition of 25 per cent. per month.

All Dogs found running at large after the 1st of August will be arrested by the Pounds-keeper and Deputies, on and after August 1, 1870.

Peddlers and Hill-Hunters will avoid the heavy penalties by the prompt payment of their Licenses, at office No. 3, City Hall.

R. P. BUCKLEY,
Collector of Licenses.

Dissolution Notice.—WILLIAM SMITH and THISTLETON & SMITH, Pacific Dairies, Marketed fast colors, at 12½ cents. Pacific Prints at 10 cents. Handsome Dress Goods, at 37½—former price, 75c. Handsome Dress Goods, at 50 cts—former price, 00c. Handsome Dress Goods, at 75 cts—former price, 00c. Handsome Check Silks, at $1 25—former price, 00c. Handsome Striped Silks, at $1 50—former price, $1 00. Handsome Check Silks, at $1 75—former price, $1 00. Heavy Black Silks, at $1 50—former price, $1. Extra Heavy Black Silks, at $1—former price, 75c.

MOURNING GOODS
In great variety, at equally low prices.

HOUSE-FURNISHING GOODS.
All the popular brands of Cotton Sheetings and Shirtings,
Linen Damasks,
Damask Napkins and Doyleys,
Towelings of Every Description,
Blankets and Quilts,
Colored and White Flannels,
Table and Piano Covers,
Lace Curtains, etc. etc.

SHAWLS.
A splendid stock of Long, Square, Breshe and Wool Shawls.

CLOAKS AND SUITS.
We call special attention to our Suit and Cloak Manufacturing Department, which is in charge of the most competent person to be found on this coast.

TAAFFE & CO.

WHOLESALE PRICES
AT HASKELL & CO'S
TEA STORE,
605 Market Street,
GRAND HOTEL,
SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW BRANCH STORE.

THE UNDERSIGNED have pleasure in informing their friends and the public that they have opened a Branch Store at 140

Montgomery Street,
Occidental Hotel
Building.

With the finest stock of

CUTLERY
IN THE CITY.

SHARPENING AND REPAIRING.

SCISSORS ground, and all kinds of Jobbing done.

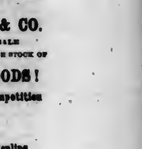
Orders from the country promptly attended to.

WILL & FINK,
Manufacturing Cutlers, Locksmiths and Bell-Hangers.
128 tf 621 Kearny and 140 Montgomery sts.

SEVENTH WARD.

For Supervisor,
MICHAEL O'NEIL,
Subject to the Nomination of the Democratic Convention.

NEW BRANCH STORE.



THE UNDERSIGNED take pleasure in informing their friends and the public that they have opened a Branch Store at 140

Montgomery Street,
Occidental Hotel
Building.

With the finest stock of

CUTLERY
IN THE CITY.

SHARPENING AND REPAIRING.

SCISSORS ground, and all kinds of Jobbing done.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.

WILL & FINK,
Manufacturing Cutlers, Locksmiths and Bell-Hangers.
128 tf 621 Kearny and 140 Montgomery sts.

NOTICE

To the Owners of Vehicles and Dogs.

THE ANNUAL LICENSES FOR THE YEAR ending July 1, 1871, will become delinquent on the 1st of August, which will subject the owner or driver of Vehicles to fine and imprisonment, with an addition of 25 per cent. per month.

All Dogs found running at large after the 1st of August will be arrested by the Pounds-keeper and Deputies, on and after August 1, 1870.

Peddlers and Hill-Hunters will avoid the heavy penalties by the prompt payment of their Licenses, at office No. 3, City Hall.

R. P. BUCKLEY,
Collector of Licenses.

Dissolution Notice.—WILLIAM SMITH and THISTLETON & SMITH, REAL ESTATE BROKERS, 640 KEARNY STREET.....SAN FRANCISCO.

TERMS, STRICTLY CASH.

One Price.

J. P. CAMPBELL & CO.,
124 KEARNY STREET,
Between Sutter and Post, San Francisco.

HALL & WAGNER'S
CALIFORNIA
BLEACHING SOAP,

REMOVES THE DIRT WITHOUT RUBBING, and does not injure the finest cl

THE FINAL CAST.

We gave them the maimed hand ever,
The glory of the maimed hand gleam,
And amidst bugles Gould not observer
Our lovely Rose the butcher's cheer;
And beat we our banner aerey,
Though not despair was but a gasp.

Though at times in our terrible steer,
Our hearts were torn by a wailin',
As down our blood for glory,
We died symbolic story only,
From Spanish sierras hoary;
Vain many an Indian isle.

With bayonets through grim smoke flashing,
With cheers to the battle cries,
With cannon's thunder crashing,
With cannon's every shout loud,
As the brave on the brave were dashing,
Were the wrongest of the years locked!

It was then a harvest splendid—
They sent us a harvest true,
The sheaf of life they shelled,
And the chaff of our kindred flew.
And the rainbow of joy had bloomed,
They climbed with darkest hue.

The land of our fathers given
To beasts—from the starving mob,
The real-true blood of heaven,
On mountain, in valley and down,
And weary of men to war nobly,
We dared them to war noble.

Then the sinews they slowly planted,
And fingered the tree with fervor,
As the prizes our hearts failed to serve,
For the land which they failed to save,
And the trust of the Western wave.

From the breast of the foe a treachery
In the midst of our sorrow sorry,
We have wronged your powers for liberty,
Now we'll give you power for blood;
Ask in peace, ye the wise and good,
Was disobeyed the wise and blood.

Have been to his home the martyr—
You cannot bring back the dead—
For mercy we may not bear
"In peace above," we said;
For we know it breaks the charter
Of those who have fought and bled.

The time we were ever raising
A spring on a wary foe,
In stock in the liberty blazing,
And still in his murderous glare,
What a still and remembering No!
For the likeness that answered Yes!

And yet in the thought, my brother,
If it ever come o'er your soul,
That the foe of the past could smother
Feel tyranny's crueler bowl,
That for love's sole sacrifice
Of countless world on us roll,

Come with us under the silver
Made by the Lord on high,
With a heart that no more will falter,
With the flash of a soldier's eye,
To the foe of the past and altar,
That foeman to defy.

By the breeze, by the ever awaken,
By the wrongs by the ruffian blest,
By each of his life's victims taken,
By the hope he hopes in vain,
This, this is the oath we've taken,
All, this is the final cost.—Irishman.

BRUCE OF BANNOCKBURN AND BRUCE OF IRELAND.

A snub has been administered to England, in the opinion of the English papers, because the Scots have erected a lofty memorial to Robert Bruce, which, from the right point of view. A snub was intended to those whom the Scots call the "cock-paddling southern loons." The English were badly beaten at Bannockburn, but they have had their revenge by artifice. And it becomes them to resent this decided snub. Their comic papers delight in flattering Scotsmen, as much almost as Irishmen. The filthiest outrages we ever have offered to a people in Ireland, are offered by the London papers to Scotsmen—one of them represented two Scotsmen, recently arrived in London, engaged in scratching themselves against a pillar letter-post! And the Daily News, the organ of a child-slaughtering land, calls Scotland "the most profligate country in the world." Scotsmen have, in fact, been very meek to swallow such insults so long. Irishmen never would have borne with them—never will bear to be so insulted without resenting it a very unmistakable manner. But the Scot poets seem to have vanished, from the specimen-verses, wherein the inauguration was celebrated. In Ireland—if we erected a memorial to Bruce's brother—such a ceremony would be decried as "party processions," and a Bill like the Coercion Bill will make all such ceremonies in Ireland impossible—without leave being asked from the head despot. Will the Scots members vote for it? They care as little to injure Ireland as the English do—rather less, we fear.

It was not thus when Irishmen and Scots side by side—when Robert Bruce, of Bannockburn, came here to assist his brother, Edward Bruce, King of Ireland.

It was not thus when Irishmen were required us to drive the Scots out of Ireland, and forbade us to intermarry with them. For our hospitality, as well as for the sake of the two Bruces, whom we both honor, they should cherish more fraternal feelings for Ireland. But Irlanda fara da se!—Irishman.

IRISH POPLIN MANUFACTURE.—There is at least one branch of manufacture in which Dublin can boast that it excels all other places. Irish poplin is famed throughout Europe and America. In Canada and the United States it sells at a higher figure than any other. Almost all the royal families of Europe have been for a long time accustomed to send to Dublin for large quantities of it. Every effort has been made by English and Scotch producers to weave poplin equal to that produced in Dublin by Irish operatives, but in vain. Even the most skilled French weavers have failed to produce poplin equaling that manufactured in Dublin in beauty and finish.— The Empress of the French has had some specially made for herself in Dublin. It is hardly necessary to say that the house most celebrated for its manufactures is that of the Messrs. Pim, Westmoreland street. This firm has been engaged in the trade since the year 1766, and it is principally owing to its exertions that the manufacture has flourished so much. At various periods various at which the goods of the Messrs. Pim have been shown, the first prize has been invariably carried off by the Irish poplin. We are rejoiced to observe that this manufacture shows no signs of decay. on the contrary, it seems that it was never more flourishing than at the present moment. The Messrs. Pim are at present executing the largest orders for American houses that they have done for many years, nearly £7,000 worth of orders being in progress of being dispatched to various parts of Canada and the United States by them. Their establishment in Westmoreland street has just been refitted, and for the beautiful specimens of poplin and tabinet which it contains, as well as for the beauty and elegance of the building itself, it will well repay a visit. We heartily wish the Messrs. Pim all possible success in their patriotic effort to keep alive this important branch of native industry.

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

A CONVERT TO PROTESTANTISM.—The Red River Expedition correspondent of the Toronto (Canada) Globe tells the following amusing story, which we lay before our readers as an instance of the process by which the "Holy Protestant Faith" is propagated amongst the Indians. It matters little whether the proselyting parson be at church or at Thunder Bay or the Lake of Two Mountains; the principle at work is always the same, and the results are the same. Here, as told by the Globe's correspondent, is the process by which the balefspondent, is the process by which the balefspondent, is the process by which the balef

IN MEMORIAM.

THOMAS H. BOARMAN, ESQ.

The following is an affectionate yet truthful tribute, offered to the memory of the wife and children of one who has long been known to the readers of this paper as a man of appreciation of the teachers and pupils of Notre Dame College:

Many and deep were bleeding o'er an untimely bier—
Many hearts were wailing tenderly from afar,
Many eyes were pearly dew'd with unwonted mountain height.

Hence the day like piercing sunbeam quivers down,
O'er the grave beside golden—o'er the pastures brown!
Where the blossomed weeping 'mid the tombstones flowers,
Never birds sing sweeter in our Maytime hours.

Yet, no sweet or wonderful strains of longest-tuned bird
Were, like hopes, whose anthems into young bosoms stirred.

Hopes of golden future now—no near them now—
Dreams of wild-won laurels twining for their brow.

Sweet reward of duties well fulfilled, yet more—
In their hearts the pleasant home had still in store:
Many and fond remains in the days to be,
By the loved Blessed Virgin, the Eastern sea.

But a few short days, and then what joy in stand,
Crowned with love's approval, 'mid the household band.

Brighter than the sunbeam's of summer the smile
Of the hopeful friend, or warm sympathy.

There were in the caressing of an children—prayers
Better than the richest placed on wealthy altars,
Sweeter than an aloeline—hours too bright to last:
Hence a stiff pen wails, anthems of the past.

When their dreams shone brightest to hope's love-fire lives,
Came the message flashing o'er the electric wires:
Death in the message—death in the message—
Death in the message—death in the message—
Of the hearts of young and old, of the household band,
Of the last dimmed beauty of the sunset's shine—
Let us tearfully commend to those anxious eyes.

Mom, at last—but only with crushed hearts to feel
The sad mandate of anguish God alone can heal.
O'er the electric, golden wires, down stretched from God by angel fingers had His warning come.

And a mother's throbbing—stopped—and life gone
Whom she claim death angel sped the message;
Come,
Come, her Father's paradise for His absent one."
God of love and wisdom may He pity with a sigh,
And still whisper memories in your lonely grief,
Let you loved one's joyance in your sorrowing still be.

Many blanks in reaping from the well-filled past,
Rich and luxurious harvests from the seed he cast;
Faithful guidance that'll be ever in your hearts,
Quickening, spring and ripen over life and pleas.

Hours of misery and aged blow have come to day,
Hours that may be freely scattered o'er life way!
And God's wisdom, goodness, love, and Joseph's heaven.
In this simple, love-calmed agony of Convent flowers.

Aye, a pledge and token that our spirits share
With your hearts the kindest, and the truest, and rare:
Whether sweetly with You, our fond prayers will rise
Mingled with your tearful pleadings to the skies.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYVILLE, July 7, 1870.

Address of the Clergy of Limerick.

The following is the translation of the address sent to the Pope by the clergy of every rank in general and the clergy, secular and regular, of the diocese of Limerick, in Ireland, lately expressing with the fast of your holiness to express their love, veneration obedience and devotion towards you, Most Holy Father, and towards the most sacred See of St. Peter.

No one is ignorant that the Irish in every age have been those devoted to the chair of St. Peter, and that they have counted nothing dearer nor more precious than to venerate and magnify the paternity and authority of "Great Rome." Our fathers left nothing undone to celebrate "the almost divine See," as our St. Columbanus calls it, and the number of the faith that has shrunk from no suffering to manifest their love and fidelity to the same chair of Peter.

Being thus illumined by the light of their ancestors, and supported by most evident testimonies of the sacred Scriptures and the Holy Fathers, the Irish of the present day are filled and animated by no less respect, reverence and obedience.

Hence there can be no possible doubt that they would consider it a jewel in the crown of the Holy See and an ornament of the Church of Christ, if, during the reign of that Pontiff, who has endured so many and so great things for the glory of God, the Fathers of the present holy Vatican Council should define as a dogma of the faith the infallibility of the Sovereign Pontiff when teaching ex cathedra on faith and morals.

Wherefore this above named clergy, secular and regular, of the diocese of Limerick, earnestly supplicate the holiness your whole deign to propose to the fathers this cardinal point of doctrine; that, being defined by a solemn judgment and precise formula, it may bring peace and consolation to the hearts of the faithful.

And, indeed, "most Holy Father, it is known to all that the Church, on account of the facility which error enjoys in these times, not only of creeping, but of running, always requires an anchoring to be provided for her by which she may protect her children from the fatal poison of falsehood. Such an authority we recognize in the unreformable judgment of the Holy See; and, therefore, most Holy Father, prostrate as supplicants at the feet of your Holiness, we ardently but humbly and lovingly implore this definition.

Limerick, May 8, 1870.

THE POPE'S REPLY.

VENERABLE BROTHERS, HEALTH AND APOSTOLIC BENEDICTION.—Although we were not ignorant that the reverence and love manifested by the Irish towards the Holy See was received by them from their mother's milk, and therefore the immemorial persistence of their devotion and affection makes their homage to us more precious. We cannot but congratulate you, Venerable Brethren that your clergy have so nobly responded to the sentiments of your own faith, and to ours for the divine prerogatives of this Holy See. We receive, then, with great satisfaction their filial manifestation, rejoicing that in you we are able to embrace them all, and to invoke upon them, present in your persons, every blessing and the abundant treasures of divine grace. Wherefore, as an augury of these, and especially as a pledge of our good will towards you, Venerable Brother, we lovingly impart to each of your clergy, and to your whole diocese, the Apostolic Benediction.

Given at Rome, at St. Peter's the 25th day of May, in the year 1870, and in the twenty-fourth of our Pontificate. PIUS PP. IX.

THE English Government are disposed to give the American Republic, in the person of its representative, more exalted rank than ever was its own grant absolute, as yet aspired to. Hitherto, the United States have been represented at the Court of St. James by a diplomatic agent of the rank of Minister only, but Lord Clarendon intimated lately to the Committee upon the diplomatic service that, if the United States desired it, an Ambassador representing "the most important of modern nations," would be most acceptable in England, but that it was for the United States to take the initiative. He can see no reason why a Republic should not be represented by an Ambassador, as the Republic of Venice enjoyed that distinction.—Irish paper.

The Virginia Circle of the Fenian Brotherhood elected the following officers: John E. Green, Head Centre; Peter Leonard, Secretary; Cornelius Sullivan, Treasurer.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

By the steamer from Japan seven young gentlemen arrived, who came to California for the purpose of attending public school, either in this city or Oakland, to study English and advance themselves in the various branches of learning. They are said to be intelligent-looking fellows.

By one of the late rules of the Board of Health, no physician becomes a health officer, if Health Officer Crowley has issued a prohibition, and no other certificate will be taken in this new duty, and directing his strict enforcement.

The San Rafael ferry boat Contra Costa now makes one trip on Sunday, leaving San Francisco at 9½ A. M., and returning at 4 o'clock.

A large number of San Francisco merchants and lawyers are making a country residence of San Rafael this year.

August Kreamer, who escaped from the custody of a deputy sheriff that had taken him to jail for the purpose of allowing him to visit his wife, was recaptured the next day at Oakland, and returned to the county jail.

There are only fourteen hundred and sixty-seven pairs of baby shoes and larger boots and shoes in San Francisco at present. Twenty or twenty-five hundred pairs were sold within the past few weeks.

The guillotine that fills a space in the basement of the Police Commissioners, and which for some time past has been lying idle, was to-day opened to the gaze of a number of the Commissioners, and the following officers were behooded: Captain Maguire, Wilson, Hayden, J. J. Carpenter, Tom Kiernan and Michael Murray. The following persons have been appointed to fill the vacancies created: Wm. L. Carpentry, Andrew Glover, Joseph Baker, A. Hamilton and Robert Carpenter.

It is rumored that Postmaster Stone will make several changes in the Post Office soon.

The sentence of J. W. Voll, convicted last week of the Fifteenth District Court, of the crime of manslaughter, has been confirmed, at the present session of the Supreme Court.

The San Francisco Benevolent Association during the past year, relieved the sufferings of 2,000 persons, expended by the Association was $9,115, the largest item being for food.

General Angelo Martinez, of this city, who served in the Mexican army against the French, has received a patent for a new saddle. He left on Monday last for Berlin, to offer his services to King Wilhem.

On Monday last the Central Pacific Railroad Company commenced running two daily trains to and from this land.

The patriotism of our French population was manifested on Monday last, at the store of Lazard Freres, on Market street, where an enthusiastic meeting was held. A large fund is being raised for the relief of the families of the soldiers and sailors of France who fall in the present disgraceful war with Prussia.

Andrew Monier, an employé in the grocery house of Bradley & Rulofson, on the corner of Sansome and Commercial streets, was seriously, if not fatally, stabbed on Monday evening last, by a fellow-workman named Hayes, a young man of eighteen years old.

The Board of Supervisors passed a resolution at their last meeting, making it a misdemeanor for any proprietor or tenant of a tenement house to permit more than two persons to each five-hundred cubic feet of air to sleep therein.

THE IRISH FISHERIES.—The fisheries of Ireland have often proved ruinous sources of expenditure, when their energy and good management combined, as they are, so singularly illustrated by the returns just furnished from Kinsale. It is an ascertained fact that out of the Kinsale fishing ground—a quarter of a million pounds worth of fish was taken this season in about ten weeks, of which the whole fleet of fishing had

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

POWDER EXPERIMENTS.—Experiments were recently made in London with Perbinet powder. They were made for the information of Surgeon-major Evatt, and the ware conducted in a shed attached to the yard of Messrs. Winkley and Shaw, horse slaughterers, Blackfriars road. Mr. Adams was present with one of his revolvers, and fired all the shots. A small group of officers and others assembled at two o'clock in the afternoon. As soon as the party were assembled a horse was led into the shed. He had been condemned as irreclaimably vicious. As he faced Mr. Adams he stood quietly enough watching the tiny weapon. The pistol is aimed at the forehead, right between the eyes; there is a tiny report—only one; the effect of the shock is shown to check every vital function in the frame of the animal; he sinks instantly upon his knees, and then comes lumbering down to the ground in a heap. A thin wreath of gray smoke curls from his forehead. Three or four convulsive kicks, and then complete stillness. The whole appears simple enough, and nothing more than would have happened with any bullet sent into the brain. The gray smoke still curls from the wound as skin and muscle are removed from the skull, and then it becomes apparent that the skull is split. On handling it a large piece of bones came easily away. The surface bones are removed, and the brain beneath is found to be utterly destroyed—a mass of gray and white matter, devoid of consistency. Then the loose matter is lifted out, there is a hole like the crater of a mine, reaching long by six broad. Part of the bullet had been driven up to the back of the head. And this result was done by a weapon that a man can carry in his pocket! The second shot was intended for comparison, and this time the pistol was loaded with an ordinary bullet. Another horse was brought in—a poor lame animal; he, too, was vicious, but his eyes had to be bound before he would face the pistol. Another report, but his weapon is fired; again the victim falls on his knees, his head, and then prone to the ground, only the wound was a more frightful one than before. No bone was removed, but the skull was deeply dinted and otherwise broken. It was now determined to abandon the pistol as an explosive bullet fired as a fleshy part of the body—and for this purpose a dead carcase is as good as a living one—because the feet of the animal living one—because the feet of the animal just slain are lifted by ropes thrown over a beam, and the shoulder fairly sapped so to side shot. The gun chosen was clear of the bone. There was a report, a frightful wound but after a moment plenty of the same grey vapor issued from the gash in the chest and body below, showing that the ball had passed through the heart. The third shot was aimed at the forehead, right between the eyes; there is a tiny report—only one; the effect of the shock is shown to check every vital function in the frame of the animal; he sinks instantly upon his knees, and then comes lumbering down to the ground in a heap. A thin wreath of gray smoke curls from his forehead. Three or four convulsive kicks, and then complete stillness. The whole appears simple enough, and nothing more than would have happened with any bullet sent into the brain. The gray smoke still curls from the wound as skin and muscle are removed from the skull, and then it becomes apparent that the skull is split. On handling it a large piece of bones came easily away. The surface bones are removed, and the brain beneath is found to be utterly destroyed—a mass of gray and white matter, devoid of consistency. Then the loose matter is lifted out, there is a hole like the crater of a mine, reaching long by six broad. Part of the bullet had been driven up to the back of the head. And this result was done by a weapon that a man can carry in his pocket! The second shot was intended for comparison, and this time the pistol was loaded with an ordinary bullet. Another horse was brought in—a poor lame animal; he, too, was vicious, but his eyes had to be bound before he would face the pistol. Another report, but his weapon is fired; again the victim falls on his knees, his head, and then prone to the ground, only the wound was a more frightful one than before. No bone was removed, but the skull was deeply dinted and otherwise broken. It was now determined to abandon the pistol as an explosive bullet fired as a fleshy part of the body—and for this purpose a dead carcase is as good as a

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 18 | Sunday | Fifteenth Sunday after Pentecost. |
| 19 | Monday | SS. Cyprian and Justina, Martyrs. |
| 20 | Tuesday | SS. Cosmas and Damian, Martyrs. |
| 21 | Wednesday | St. Wenceslaus, Martyr. |
| 22 | Thursday | St. Michael, the Archangel. |
| 23 | Friday | St. Jerome, Priest and Doctor. |
| Oct. 1 | Saturday | St. Remigius, Bishop of Rheims. |

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

HONOR TO FRANCE.

The war now going on has had, at all events, one result highly creditable to the French people. It was generally believed heretofore that, although they were undoubtedly a brave race, and had performed some of the most glorious exploits recorded in history, they had no genuine vim or stamina in them, and that they were totally unable to bear up against any serious reverses. Indeed all students of history, especially those who derived their notions from English authorities, were wont to believe that a French army once defeated ceased to be formidable, that it was only while flushed with victory that it could assemble, and that the very idea of its disbanding could be completely removed, and its absurd fallacy amply demonstrated by the events of the present campaign. Never has a nation been subjected to more cruel trials, and never did a nation come out of them more triumphantly. The French people went into the war confident of success and believing themselves possessed of an army unequalled in Europe for perfect organization, for completeness of equipment, and for skillful training; and yet they were hardly a fortnight in the field before they were most woefully undeceived. They found out that treachery or incompetency, or both combined, had completely ruined the defensive power of the nation, and that they were entirely unprepared for war. The army they were wont be so proud of was unfit to commence a campaign against a far less formidable foe than the Prussians. There was no such thing as munitions of wars, supplies of all kinds of ammunition were lamentably short, and so little care had been taken about provisioning the men that a week's advance into the enemy's territory would have put them altogether depending upon whatever they could gather in the country. Still, all this might have been remedied—for French armies in a far worse plight had borne away victory after victory, and supplied themselves with everything at the cost of the enemy—if there had been any military talent directing the movements of the men, but such, unfortunately, was not the case. There was incompetency among the chiefs just as well as among the subordinates. The very opening of the campaign was signalized by the terrible disaster of Woerth. The Prussians followed up their advantage and inflicted blow after blow upon their enemies with astonishing fierceness and pertinacity. The French commanders appeared confounded—they appeared destitute of plan of action, and the utmost they could do was to send their men into battle and let them make the best resistance they could. The rank and file at least had not degenerated, for they fought with a recklessness and a bravery never excelled even by their countrymen who had conquered Europe under the great Napoleon. Yet they were unable to make head against the foe, and disaster followed quick upon the heels of disaster, until the crowning calamity of Sedan startled the world. The fall of the Empire came then as a perfectly natural consequence. The position of the French nation was truly deplorable. No government, or central authority of any kind, could be said to exist in the country; one of their armies had been overwhelmed and forced to surrender, another was hemmed in beneath the walls of a fortress and incapable of taking the field; there was no organized force of any description to resist the march of the victorious Germans over the face of the country. We venture to assert that, under similar circumstances, would no other nation on the habitable globe think of continuing its resistance. Yet the French, though momentarily stunned and surprised, were not disheartened. The imperial government collapsed as usual. The imperial adherents dropped the reins of power from their nerveless hands; but a few spirited and patriotic men instantly assumed them and inaugurated a Republic. Their action was warmly approved of throughout the whole country and from all quarters the cry came to the Capital—"On with the war; no peace while a Prussian treads the soil of France!" Measures were speedily taken for the defence of the Capital, and new armies were levied and organized to resist the progress of the invadors. Although the Prussians are now actually investing Paris, our trust in the ultimate triumph of the French people has not yet abandoned us. The gallant fighting shown by the raw recruits is a sufficient proof of the spirit animating the people, and completely refutes the idea that they are anxious for a craven submission. The fact is that, unless the Prussians will accept honorable terms, the French are quite satisfied to carry on the war, and are confident that they will have the best of the fighting when the end comes. At all events they have conclusively established that if in a few mistake to imagine they are really depressed by defeat or that they are formidable only while victorious. There is not a race or people in the known world that can surpass them for game and gallant endurance of disaster, or show greater vitality and recuperative force. All honor to the noble and chivalrous Gauls who will not be beaten, and who look upon victory as their national inheritance!

PROGRESS OF THE WAR.

There is nothing of any importance to report in reference to the progress of the war since our last publication. The German forces are massing around Paris, and will soon have it cut off from all communications with the rest of the world. It is reported that a telegraph wire has been laid under ground, for a considerable distance outside the city, and that we shall be able to get some intelligence as to how things go on by this means; but there is reason to believe that our supply of news from this quarter will be very meagre and not greatly to be relied on. All the accounts we shall get from this forward will come from purely German sources and will therefore be of very doubtful trustworthiness. In fact, it is only the events of great importance which will be reported with any degree of exactness, and as for the minor details we must probably wait until the war is over before we can have any satisfactory account of them. All that we know now is that there has been considerable fighting around Paris during the past week, with alternate successes for both parties. It does not appear, however, that the French are strong enough to prevent a regular investment of the capital, and the whole scope of their operations is to harrass the enemy and retard the completion of his seige works. In this they are succeeding to a great extent; for, as yet, the Germans have no guns in position, and all the fighting which has taken place has been between their advanced troops and the French soldiers outside the walls of the city. Telegrams from Tours, the present seat of the republican government, claim that the French won two important victories and inflicted heavy losses on the enemy near Soissons, and in the neighborhood of Montmedy and Thionville. On the other hand, advises from Munich state that the Bavarians defeated the French some distance outside of Paris, and captured seven guns together with three thousand prisoners. This appears to be a great exaggeration, for English accounts say that no more than two or three hundred prisoners were taken, and that the guns were found in an abandoned fort. The French think that the French are fighting with great gallantry, the raw recruits emulating the coolness and heroism of veterans, and that the Prussians have a much harder job on hands than they imagined in the capture of Paris. The towns of Metz, Toul, Montmedy, Phalsburg and Strasburg, are still holding out gallantly, notwithstanding all the dreadful sufferings to which they are exposed. It is alleged that Strasburg is in a deplorable condition that[s] surrender may be looked upon as perfectly inevitable; but this statement has been put forward so repeatedly only to be strongly contradicted in a day or two afterwards, that it may not be worthy of much consideration. It is certain, at all events, that the Germans have not as yet made open declaration of the conditions upon which they would be willing to end the war; nor have the French as far as we can learn, made any avowal of what they would consent to accept. Jules Favre was to have an interview with Bismarck, at which this matter was to be broached at least indirectly, but there has been no account of the result of that conference, and the general impression seems to be that if it took place at all it was a failure. The condition of France is truly singular. Favre and his associates are anxious for peace and would probably accept any terms short of dishonorable ones to secure it; the people of Paris are by no means so desirous of abandoning hostilities, being firm in their belief that they can yet win the fight; while the citizens of Lyons, where the Red Republican element is uppermost, will have peace on no condition as long as a Prussian treads the soil of France. These latter deny the right of the Parisians to speak for France, and proclaim they will recognise no peace concluded by Favre the terms of which are not equally acceptable to them. They do not seem disposed to yield one foot of French ground, and say openly they would prefer declaring a war of extermination and fighting it out as long as they had a man able to hold a musket. The state of affairs is extremely embarrassing to the Prussians. Public opinion in neutral countries is strongly against the further prosecution of the war, and the danger of disturbances at home, not to mention the threatening attitude of Russia and Austria, is naturally inclining Prussia to peace; but to gratify the people, she wants something to show as the practical result of the war, and the French will never yet willing to concede that. Clearly the establishment of the Republic has unpleasantly complicated affairs for King William, and it would have been much better for him if Napoleon had never been taken Prisoner. To advance or retreat seems equally dangerous to the Prussian despot. He will wish himself well out of his great war before many weeks elapse.

PROMENADE CONCERT FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FRENCH WOUNDED.—On Thursday evening a grand Promenade Concert, for the benefit of the French wounded, was inaugurated at the Pavilion, on Stockton street. It was continued last night and will finally close this evening. It has been, so far, a magnificent success, and reflects much credit on the patriotism and generosity of our French fellow citizens. We hope that the readers of THE MONITOR who have not yet attended the Concert, and contributed their mite to the fund destined to alleviate the sufferings of the gallant soldiers now combatting for the honor of France, will do so this evening, and show that Irish sympathy is not an affair of idle words.

ECCLESIASTICAL ARRIVALS.—On last Sunday evening the Right Rev. Dr. Brouillet, Bishop of the Marquesas Islands, arrived in our city from Rome, where he had been attending the deliberations of the Council. He was accompanied by five young ecclesiastics from France, who had volunteered to share the perils of his distant mission and devote their lives to the conversion of the heathen. The Bishop and his party left for the Marquesas Islands on Tuesday.

Mr. Kelly was elected U. S. senator, on Tuesday, by the Oregon Legislature.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY ——— SEPTEMBER 24, 1870.

OUR BANKING INSTITUTIONS.

The collapse of the California Building and Loan Society should attract some degree of public attention to the very peculiar circumstances under which our Banking Institutions are conducted. When a great public calamity like that to which we are alluding takes place, the plain duty of those who have charge of the public welfare is to take precaution against the occurence of similar accidents. Supposing that such good intentions are cherished by our legislators, and only wait the demand of the people to be carried into action, the question arises what is to be done? Nobody is foolish enough to imagine that swindling can be altogether prevented by statute enactments, but it may be surrounded with such difficulties as will considerably limit its field of operations. It is a common complaint with people of the older communities that they are too much governed; while our grievance is that we are actually governed too little. Here people are expected to look out for themselves and to keep guard on their own interests; consequently, there are many suspected by law in European countries, but in which every individual is left to fight his own battle with us. In no matter of public importance is this fact more forcibly illustrated than with reference to Banking institutions. The establishment of a Bank in Great Britain or on the continent is an affair of considerable difficulty, and can never be undertaken by penniless adventurers. From first to last the government claims the right to see that every thing is carried on properly, and that no trap for unsuspicious people is being prepared. Of course Banking swindles are frequently perpetrated in England, but that arises from either evasion or direct infraction of the law. Were acts of Parliament can compel us to do what is right; they can only punish him for doing what is wrong. Government supervision does not exist when once a Bank is launched into existence. Such precautions are then redoubted and a sharp watch is kept, or is presumed to be kept, after all its transactions. If it issues notes the currency must never exceed a certain proportion to the bullion on hand, so that provision is made against a sudden depression in business or the effect of a "run." Audited accounts, showing balance sheets, liabilities and assets, coin in coffers, and paper in circulation, must be published every quarter, and all business must be transacted fairly and above board. There are even paid Government officials whose duty it is to examine these accounts, to inspect the premises and see that everything is in proper order as decreed by law. How very differently are things managed here! Any man almost may start a Bank, and he may either do business honestly or swindle the people accordling as he feels inclined. The government will interfere at no stage of the proceedings, and all concerned must protect themselves. Once such an establishment is put in operation the depositors must trust to the personal honor of its managers for the safety of their money, for they have little or no means of learning how the business is carried on. All they really can know is that they will get a rate of interest, more or less liberal, as long as things go on smoothly, and that they are pretty certain to lose every cent they have as soon as ever things go wrong. This is nothing better than grouping in the dark, and the sooner a reform is effected the better it will be for the entire community. What is wanted is a Bank Commissioner with full authority to inquire into and personally examine at stated intervals the accounts and method of transacting business in every Bank, Loan Society, or other incorporation receiving large deposits of money from the public, and duly report on the same to the government. If such an official was in existence the California Building and Loan Society would not have been permitted to deal with the people's money in the loose manner that recently became notorious, to the great loss and inconvenience of those who invested their little earnings in it. There can be no reasonable objection on the part of any sound and solvent institution to the appointment of suchan official, because as they have nothing which they would care to conceal they would only be benefitted by authoritative corroboration of their financial success. As for the plea of undue interference with private business which might be urged, all we can say is that it deserves no consideration, because Banking is not a private business in the same sense as ordinary trading, and the expediency of guarding the public against unprincipled swindling should be regarded as superior to merely conventional questions of personal inconvenience. We are much surprised that some of our daily contemporaries have not turned their attention to this most important subject.

THE STATE OF EUROPE.

The aspect of affairs in Europe is really such as to cause serious alarm in the minds of lovers of law and order. We do not mean the supporters of monarchy, or the favorers of despotism, for with them we have no sympathy; but with the men who desire to see Christian society preserved and Christian morality saved from the attacks of infidelity. There is every appearance of the approach of a period of unparalleled bloodshed and confusion, during which the Church and its faithful people will have much to suffer. Of course, relying on God's promise, we have no fear of the final result of the dread crisis through which the world is passing. The Church of God is immortal and cannot be destroyed, much as it may be persecuted and oppressed; yet that fact is scarcely adequate to relieve apprehensions of an ominous future. One of the worst forgetfulties of evil is the great decay of national morality. Now-a-days the highest aim of diplomacy is to deceive, and not the least dependance can be placed on the assertions made by the recognized representatives of the great nations. The sacred obligations of solemnly ratified treaties are utterly disregarded, and no government even pretends to respect them a moment after they cease to be advantageous. International rights are generally looked upon as so many fictions existing only in the minds of visionary theorists; and that no country can think itself safe from attack by its neighbor unless it

[illegible]

A moral principle and acknowledges no law except that imposed by superior force of might. Nor is the condition of the social world anything more hopeful. Large cities have sprung up in every country, and while they serve as centres whence a most artificial civilization emanates, they also serve as propagators of evil and pernicious principles. Religion is totally ignored by governments which only pay heed to the material interests of their people; and the accumulation of wealth and power is publicly avowed as the great mission of humanity. All this is nothing new, for it has happened repeatedly in history. Our civilization—that civilization which denies God any share in the transactions of this world, and which treats purely material interests as though they were the main consideration of human working itself out like the civilization of Greece, of Rome, of the East. It is not prophesy, then, to assert that we are on the eve of terrific political convulsions; for history tells us that whenever circumstances bring about a state of society analogous to that now existing in Europe, great national contests involving the most stupendous changes are certain to take place. There is not a single country free from the machinations of societies of wicked men, who carried away by false ideas of liberty, seek to destroy all religion, all morality and all order. These disturbers are making rapid progress and the time cannot be far distant when they will make a united effort to overturn the existing governments and inaugurate a reign of terror... It is against these perils that the Pope and the pastors of the Catholic Church have been warning the world, and not against the advocates of legitimate progress and rational liberty, as maliciously alleged by so many fools of truth. The Church has always been the true friend of christian civilization and of freedom, but it has likewise been the steady foe of that false civilization which denies God, and of that freedom which knows no moral restraint.

Two tidal waves, about three feet in height, are reported to have occurred last Monday afternoon in the bay.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

PRUSSIAN ATROCITIES.

Notwithstanding the combined attempts of German sympathizers in England and this country to cover up and conceal unpleasant statements, enough is leaking out day after day to prove beyond doubt or question that the Prussians are perpetrating the most horrible outrages upon the defenceless French people. They are systematically behaving in a manner unworthy of pagan savages, not to speak of civilized and Christian men. We do not allude to such comparatively small peccadilloes as neglecting the wounded, robbing and maltreating prisoners, stealing the crops and cattle of the unfortunate peasantry; for any one who has read the history of the wars carried on by the great European nations of Napoleon I. must have a fair knowledge of what these Prussians can do in that way. It is upon record that the English officers, themselves not disposed to be very nice with their foes, were shocked at the wanton barbarities perpetrated by the "heroes" who fled so ingloriously at Ligny, and that no less an authority than the Duke of Wellington declared them to be a disgrace to their uniform. The unexpected success which their enormous numbers enabled them to achieve against the French, seems to have called forth all the brutal instincts of their nature, and they are excelling even the horrors of 1815 in the present campaign. Their sole idea is to take a diabolical and unmanly revenge for the repeated and signal thrashings they received from the gallant armies of France. They are behaving like the footpad who, out of pure brutality, smashes with the heel of his boot the face of an unfortunate wayfarer whom he has successfed in laying prostrate by a sudden and unforeseen assault. The sympathy which the English people feel towards these Prussians is so strongly marked that every man must, a limit they, would be the last in the world to confess anything unfavorable to the Germans as long as it could be denied with any show of decency. Yet even this gross partiality was not sufficient to prevent two British gentlemen, who recently returned from the neighborhood of Metz, from denouncing the rampant ruffianism of reasons of their statements appeared in some of the morning papers of this city, and certainly it was enough to make one's blood run cold with horror. Farm-houses pillaged and burnt, the peasants massacred for daring to defend their homes, the women first outraged by the soldiery and then murdered—such is the picture drawn by Colonel Carleton and the Hon. Mr. Seymour of the way the Prussians have of dealing with an unresisting and unarmed people. The decree of King William condemning to death all Frenchmen not belonging to the regular army, found with muskets in their possession, is absolutely without parallel in military annals. Equally infamous is the plan for enrolling the young men of the country to march along with the Prussian army and aid in destroying the defences of their native land. But the most dreadful outrage of all was recently related in the columns of the Gaulois, and commented upon by some of the English papers. Near Metz, at a place called Olley, is, or rather was, a convent where most of the young female citizens sent their young daughters to school. The brave Prussians came and occupied the place, the schools and convent were destroyed, and the fate of the women and children may be imagined—they were all outraged and murdered, without mercy for either old or young. The ruin and devastation in the track of the invading armies are simply awful, and it will be long before the country can recover from the effects of the war. The Prussians are doing their worst, and they seem to be totally insensible to the fact that they are preparing a terrible day of reckoning for themselves if ever the French succeed in retrieving their misfortunes and transferring the scene of war into Germany. They may do so yet, desperate as their chance looks.

[illegible]

DEPARTURE OF BISHOP MAIGRET.—On Thursday, the Right Rev. Dr. Maigret, Bishop of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, took his departure for the scene of his apostolic labors. He was accompanied by five ecclesiastics and four Sisters of the Sacred Heart. They carried with them the fervent prayers and good wishes of all who had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with them.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

UNION FOR IRELAND.

The patriotic attempts which are being made to effect a union among the Irish nationalists in this country must ultimately prove successful, no matter what difficulties lie in the way. Union is the will of the people and the will of the people must prevail. Crotchetty leaders, who flatter themselves they can make laws for the Irish in America, may oppose a union which would "necessitate" their doing their assumed position; but officials may resist a movement which would compel them to honest toil; and political charlatans may denounce a line of conduct which would forever crush any chance of their making capital out of the "wrongs of Ireland," or using as battle cries for American politics; but when once our people here definitely make up their minds that this much desired union is highly necessary, union shall take place, take place it will in spite of obstacles. The self-styled leaders of only one individual without power or influence except with their followers may choose to glory in their shame that the nationality that Prussia asks would have been hostile to the best interests of England and must be open to both parties.

VIENNA, Sept. 17.—The session of the Reichsrath opened to-day. The Emperor in a speech said: While sanguinary ravages between two great nations, Austria enjoys peace. She should therefore employ herself in the consolidation system. He regretted that Bohemia was unrepresented, but though he was grieved he was not astonished because he addressed his [illegible] auditors in nearly the following words:

Friends: To you, who know me well, it is useless for me to say how glad I am to see you assembled around me here in the city of San Francisco.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Prophecies of Rosa Columba.

The following is an extract from an account deposited in the Episcopal Court of Ventiniglio, of the prediction of Sister Rosa Columba, a Dominican nun, who died in the monastery of St. Catherine at Taggia, on the 6th of June, 1847. We find it in "Prophecies on the Church and Revolution, Antichrist and the Last Times." Edited by Henry D. Laugdon:

"Sister Rosa was of a noble family, and took the veil early in life; she was chiefly remarkable for her great simplicity, her exactness in the fulfilment of her duties, her spirit of prayer, and her mortifications. She foretold the interview between Gregory XVI. and the Emperor of Russia, the efforts of Protestantism in Italy, and that the successor of Gregory XVI. would be a Pope, Pius in youth, character and name. "Sto giovine, pio d'istole, e di nome." She said that the acclamations which saluted Pius IX. would last but a short time, and change into insults. On hearing the cries of joy which greeted the Holy Father, she wept and begged her sisters to pray, saying that the time would come when the Pope would be persecuted, forced to abandon his See, and be despoiled of his Government by his own children. The Holy Father, she added, will lose his throne, but it will be restored to him Napoleon. This prediction of hers is attested on oath by many persons, who heard her speak it frequently, and in particular by the lawyer, Philip Ghiu, of Taggia, procurator of the Monastery, who used to say to Sister Rosa in jest: "Will you write or are to see Napoleon rise again?" "You know nothing about it," she would reply, 'yet you will see the Pope restored to his throne by Napoleon." "How can you see that star?" she would say to the nuns, pointing to the evening star; 'it reminds me of the splendid cross the Pope will give to Napoleon, in token of gratitude, after he has been re-established by him in his rightful dominions." Monsignor M. Alberti, who was then Bishop of Ventiniglio, when his Holiness fled from Rome, wrote to the nuns of Taggia that he would believe Sister Rosa's prophecies if he should see the Pope restored to his throne by Napoleon. This letter is still preserved by the nuns. "Poor Louis Philippe," she often said, "will fly from France and die an exile in England. Many tri-colored flags will appear with the banners of the Pope, and the priests will be forced to bless them. This will be the signal of the war which will afterwards break out. The King of Piedmont, Charles Alberi, will be first to join the conflict; he will be conquered and obliged to fly into exile, and will soon die on the confines of Spain." In him will succeed a childish reign, which will terminate by the dethronement of the King." "Il quarto finirebbe in regno di fanciulli che terminerebbe collo detronizzazione di nuovo Re." Speaking of Napoleon she said: "The reign of Napoleon will not last long, but he will soon lose his throne. "Esso pure soldati dire, che il regno di Napoleone non durerebbe molto tempo, anzi sarebbe presto balzato del trono." In consequence of the dethronement of Napoleon, there will arise a great persecution against the Church, which will be the time of her own children. A persecutor, whom she called 'the Precursor of Antichrist," will arrive. His spoke of him as being like a horse, and said that he will call himself the Redeemer, that many sectaries will join him, that they will persecute the Church both with false doctrines and by violence, and will be so subtle in their malice that they will deceive many with their wiles. At the same time there will be a sanguinary war, she spoke of it with horror—great confusion of nations, noise of drums and arms, ruins accumulated in Italy, she often exclaimed, 'Poor Italy!" Speaking of Taggia itself, she said: "All the religious will not persevere. The nuns, who often heard her speak this prophecy, say that she did not speak of perseverance in the faith, but of perseverance in the monastery, but those who remain will be persecuted upon the Mount—a place within the inclosure of the monastery planted with olives—together with other persons who shall take refuge in the monastery. The confessors of the faith will be consoled in these troubles by pious and learned priests, especially by those of the Order of St. Dominic." Speaking again in general, she said: "A few bishops will fall away from the faith, but the majority will remain firm, and will suffer much for the Church." She frequently predicted, that not only the property of religious, but that of good Catholics would be confiscated, and that there would be a great revolution throughout Europe; that the nobles would be imprisoned, and a spirit of wild democracy prevail; that peace would not be restored until the white flower, the Lily of the descendants of Saint Louis, should be restored to the throne of France. Thus the Russians and the Prussians would bring war into Italy—and turn the churches into stables; that Rome would be lodged in the new church of her monastery. And, because she saw it would serve as a stable for the Muscovite horses, she never would give her vote for its erection. When it was built, she repeated: "Never will I hear Mass in that church, for the Russians will stable their horses there;" and in fact, she died six months before the church was blessed. That the persecution would take place in the lifetime of her sisters; that it would begin with the suppression of the Jesuits, who would rise once more as an agent suppressed, never to rise again: "Apostolici ordini aliter voluerunt, di nuovo distrutti per non risorgere piu." That a fierce tempest would be raised up against the Church at last, and only two religious orders would be left existing, the Dominicans and the Capuchins, together with the Hospitalers, whose office it would be to lodge the pilgrims who would go to visit the tombs of the many martyrs slain during the persecution in Italy. That Austria, Russia and Prussia would league together against the rebels, and that the Prussians would submit to the Church, and England would be converted. That the Russians would be attended by the Sovereign Pontiff and be more humane towards Catholics, in the account of her death, it is said that she related every minute circumstance of it beforehand, and that she often said, weeping, that many sins inundated Italy, and that terrible events hovered over the world, and especially over Italy; and that she told her sisters that if it were given to them to see all that she saw, they would not be able to suppress their grief. It is well known that she constantly said: 'oh the persecutions through the Church, the priests and monks will be massacred without mercy."

A BRIGAND STORY.—The following story is told in a Florence letter: "Four men, captured and held in pawn by the famous brigand Fuoco, have performed a deed of heroism which deserves to be requited by something more solid than mere acknowledgment. Who they were and where they were seized we do not learn; but on the 16th August they were in the cellars of their captors in a well-wooded retreat, about half way up Mount Cavallo, in Terra di Lavoro. The brigands, five in number, had plenty to eat and drink, and when they had appeased their natural cravings became very sociable, consented to loosen their prisoners' hands, and beguiled the evening hours with cards, varied by pitch-and-toss, played not with vile halfpences, but with five franc pieces and five napoleons. The flask all the while circulated without stint, and in a good time the robbers dropped off to sleep, leaving one of their number, armed with a revolver, to keep watch over the prisoners. At the preconcerted signal, each of these had but to get up from the ground and perform it with perfect success. When the word was given, No. 1 darted forward, and, snatching from the hand of the sentinel the revolver, fired instantly at the head of the brigand Fuoco, who fell dead. The sentinel, at the same time, made a rush at the brigand next to him, and had kept in view all the evening, and dexterously clove the skull of a second sleeper; No. 3, armed with a wooden mallet, devoted his whole attention to another. The sentinel seems to have keep a bad lookout, for we learn that he was dispatched by a shot from a gun belonging to one of his slain companions; and the fifth of the batch, returning to consciousness in time to see the fables turned upon him, found safety in flight, but, however, without receiving a broad hint to be off, in the shap of a random stroke from the axe above mentioned. Our four heroes thus remained masters of the field, and after collecting the spoils, consisting of three rifles, a dagger, a cake of soap, and a steam-tinted romance (from the French), and not forgetting, probably, the five franc pieces and the napoleons with which their captors had improved their last remaining hours here below, made the best of their way down to the village of Picinisco, where they brought the joyful but unexpected tidings that the redoubted Fuoco's earthly career was at an end. Fuoco, after having been for years the terror of the neighborhood, fled retired to Rome upon a decent competence, bit bad speculations and drink subsequently undermined his resolution, and last spring he took to business again, returning to the scene of his former exploits and managing to set the law at defiance, until in an evil hour he formed the acquaintance of our clever friends."

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—We commend the case of John Owen, 'the Denham murderer, to the consideration of those who advocate the total abolition of capital punishment; and we invite them, after carefully reading the accounts given in the newspapers of his last hours, to say what punishment it would be possible to substitute in the case of criminals like this. In theory—that is, in the theory of those whose attention was never attracted to crime—every man is capable of being reformed, and the end of all punishment is reformation. Looked at, however, as a hard practical matter, and in the light of common experience, does any one believe that John Owen was capable of reformation? Every act of his life, from the hideous and unparalleled crime for which he will be shown to all the minor details of his conduct, his brutal jesting about the hangman, his fierce repulsion of the chaplain, the ghastly flippancy of his feigning to forget his victim's name on the scaffold—every act of his life showed that he was and would ever be a mere wild beast, from whom society would never be safe till he was rendered powerless to harm. In the presence of such cases as this all theoretic theories disapper, and mankind is brought face to face with the supreme law of self-preservation which justifies us in abolishing John Owen as we would abolish a dangerous beast or reptile.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Archdeacon Gould on Irusia and Fraster

Archdeacon Gould, of Bathoe, a dignitary of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who has heretofore declared himself for an independent Legislature for Ireland, has written the following letter concerning the violent persecution manifested in that country for Prussia on the one hand, and for France on the other; which, indeed, is nothing else than a pretext for perpetuating the animosities of Protestant and Catholic:

To the Editor of the New Tr'land—Sir: I venture to address you as one who exercises a great and wide-felt influence on the Irish popular mind. The subject on which I include you have already commented on in your leading issue, but still I consider the question needs further and more searching description. I refer to the silly, insane, but criminal conduct of exulting factions in this unhappy island in evoking their mutual and baneful loathings on one another under cover of partisan espousal of one or other of the two great Powers now engaged in a deadly warfare. In thus acting they not only discard all patriotic aspirations, but they exhibit to a startling extent the ignorance of their most well-established facts when refused much to their shame.

Through sheer strange infatuation Prussia is supposed to be by those across the way sensitive of success in the present contest, whilst France is regarded as the champion of Ultramontan Catholicism. Now, the Prussians are the most intelligent master might serve to convince our pugnacious countrymen that they are each alike in the wrong. Why, sir, among its most earnest and determined opponents of the French at the present moment are the Irish Catholic inhabitants of Bavaria, while, on the other hand, a Roman Catholic, the Prince of Hohenzollern, was scornfully rejected for the Crown of Spain by Roman Catholic France, whose "Gallican liberties" Prussia is so bitterly and persistently denounced by Cardinal Cullen, and whose devotion to the Sovereign Pontiff is exhibited by the withdrawal of her heretofore armed protection of his sacred person.

It would be well for our countrymen if all honest journalists would endeavor, by these plain facts, "line upon line, precept upon precept." It often seems to me how Irishmen, naturally so logical, and who would be well supplied with news and common sense, can so errantly ignorant of facts material to the comprehension of the issue involved. I sometimes seem to loose all heart and hope for my country when I find that she is not merely wise as to but a lifeless corpse, where "deaths head is advanced," or even Prussian Pickelhaube, so far as Protestant and anti-papal, why should I embroil myself in the fallacious cry of "the cause of the Pope of France. As a Protestant, I am never longer the disgraceful and unchristian cry of the "Tenton Bully" towards that Protestant country, gallant Denmark, and I am sure that many other more or less Prussia will smart and writhe under the lah of reproach and contempt which the shameless injustifiable raid on and confiscation of the dominion of a feebler power.

As to France, allow me to say that all my personal sympathies are in favor of France now as they were in the days of Napoleon, and never while life lasts might but countenance the Prussian invasion. And I witness more hilarious opinion than among educated gentlemen at all classes and creeds; but as a Christian I cannot forget the conduct of Louis XV. and the French people to my grandmother, Lyman Count Lally, and her cruel treatment that led to the dissolving of the glorious Irish Brigade. I refer to Mrs. O'Callahan's newly-published and deeply-interesting "History of the Irish Brigade." Even how largely this noble order was sacrificed by Louis at the instant of a rancorous and unmanly siege, backed by the then Premier, the Duc de Choiseul, and the same history records the dastardly and appalling fact that, among the vociferous crowd drawn together to witness the barbarous execution, his ruthless order to shoot the united unbelled to exhibit their vile exultation by loudly clapping their hands when they beheld the noble Lally's head pitched, gagged in such a manner as not only prevented his speaking, but also partially disfiguring his naturally noble countenance, and this, he exclaimed at the last, "was the reward of his previous patriotic and faithful services." Sir, I record this disgraceful sample of "putrefying French humanity" not to engender hatred against the race—far from it—but to warn my impulsive countrymen against the danger of their becoming tools in foreign princes or foreign people.

Last want of manly self-reliance is the curse and besetting sin of Ireland. Like the Jews of old, they are always looking to Egypt, and not to God, and are always ready to betake themselves to the strength of Pharaoh and to trust in the shadow of Egypt, and consequently their faces are blackened as that of the Jews, "the strength of Pharaoh proves their shame, and their trust in the shadow of Egypt their confusion."

Sir, there is one point on which I would venture to differ from you. I do not see any reason for the recalling of much in the men and measures of rebellion to England. As Protestants it manifestly will be gaining and guarding our rights by calm, quiet, legal, moral and constitutional action. The right to Home Government and legislative independence is already within our grasp it will, I think, finally be conceded peacefully and gracefully, and will put an end to one another in a spirit of self-reliance, forbearance and charity, not always practised in charity, I ween, as smiles complacently upon the knave, and grasps cordially the hand of the fool, the rogue and traitor, but such a genius charity as sympathizes with the sorrowful and sinful, admires and rewards the honest and true, and welcomes all those who, irrespectived class, state or creed, are laboring for the peace, welfare and prosperity and peace.

Sir, I know no higher channel through which to convey my sentiments to my countrymen than in your honest and able columns. With all humility, then, I would say, brethren, ye who are not the abject slaves of party spite or base sectarian bigotry, who, under our plow-burning parties at the Ultramontane Wily school, are not yet petrified and fatten on those fearful and direful diseases that sap the strength of Ireland," remember at this crisis, the words of one who loved Ireland in his heart, spoken with an intensity rarely to be found in these degenerate days!

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Barbara, a short distance from Gilroy, in the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and convenient.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish is also taught.

TERMS:

Invariably half-yearly in advance.

Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, etc., per annum ..... $200 00
Instruction of instrument, per month, $1 00 to 2 00
Guitar, per month ..... 2 50

No extra charge for Piano-forte, Fancy Needle Work, etc.

The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences August 16th, and terminates on the last Thursday in June.

For further particulars apply to

SISTERS OF CHARITY,
1y30 Santa Barbara, Cal.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA, ..... CALIFORNIA.

THE FOURTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, conducted by the Fathers of the order of St. Francis, will commence on August 16th, 1870.

The object of the Institution is to give a good English, Classical, Philosophical and Theological education, at the lowest possible cost—a want long felt in this country, and one of advantages within the reach of all.

TERMS:

Entrance Fee not to be paid once ..... $10 00
Board and Washing, per session of ten months ..... 150 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 20 00

EXTRAS.

Piano and use of instrument per month half session ..... 4 00
Violin ..... 2 00
Guitar ..... 2 00
Vocal Music (no class) ..... 5 00
Drawing, Painting, Embroidery, Wax Flowers, Wool Work and Needle Work, each ..... 5 00
Use of Library, Plain Instrumental Music, etc., etc. ..... Free.

Board and Tuition payable half-yearly, in advance.

Washing ..... per month.
Physician's Fees ..... per session.
Medicine ..... per session.

Parents will pay for medical attendance, and for any loss or injury they may do to the College property.

The College will be advanced by the College. In the purchase of its many articles, a sufficient sum must be deposited with the Rector.

For further particulars apply to

REV. FATHER GUARDIAN,
1y30 Or KEEFE O. S. F.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Academy commences on the first Monday in September, 1870. The establishment is the finest in the valley of the Sacramento and the Atlantic States, are provided with every convenience for the health, comfort and comfort of the pupils, and is worth a noble and laudable emulation to form their minds to virtue. Here, then, will they be free from all unpleasant influences and pollies of the world; in the bosom of their future educational, in a word, to educate the minds and the hearts of the future ladies of the country, and to form them to the model of Notre Dame. The Academy is situated in the most healthy part of the city of Marysville. The building is large, commodious and well ventilated.

The physical welfare of the pupils constantly receives the maternal care of the Sisters. The diet is wholesome and abundant. The greatest attention is paid to the cleanliness of the pupils, and in case of sickness they experience the care of a mother. Belonging to the establishment is a large garden and tastefully selected library, adapted to the age and capacity of the pupils, a cabinet, containing a collection of specimens of conchology and Mineralogy, a Philosophical Apparatus, and Globes. Classes in German and Spanish languages are formed when a sufficient number of pupils apply. It is the object of the Sisters to render it a facility to perfect themselves in these languages.

TERMS IN ADVANCE:

Board, Tuition and Washing, per session ..... $225 00
Use of Bed and Bedding ..... 20 00
Piano, with use of instrument, per quarter ..... 16 00
Vocal Music, per quarter ..... 8 00
Drawing and Painting, per quarter ..... 8 00

For further particulars inquire of the Sister Superioress, Academy of Notre Dame, Marysville, Cal.

TERMS FOR DAY SCHOLARS:

Senior Class, per month ..... $4 00
Preparatory and Elementary, per month, each ..... 3 00
Primary ..... 2 00
Music Lessons ..... 8 00

Extra charges in proportion as above. The Sisters conducted by the Sisters are open 1st Sept.

ORPHAN ASYLUM

OF THE

IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY

PAJARO VALLEY, CAL.

THIS ESTABLISHMENT WAS OPENED ON The 1st of November last. All orphans under the age of twelve years, and destitute of either parent or sect, are entitled to be admitted.

THE DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL

Attached to it was opened at the same time, under the following terms:

For Day Scholars, according to their proficiency ..... $1 and $2 per month.
Boarders, Tuition and Board included, per month ..... 15
Bed and bedding, if required ..... 2

The system of education will be suitable to the needs of such orphans and children whose parents cannot afford to send them elsewhere.

For further particulars apply to

REV. A. BOUCHELLE,
1y37 If Director.

HOTELS.

BROOKLYN HOUSE.

117 Broadway st., near Battery, San Francisco.

THIS HOUSE IS CENTRALLY LOCATED, BE ing but a few blocks from the Post Office and two blocks from the Steamboat Landing and Railroad Depot. The BROOKLYN HOUSE has been lately renovated and fitted in every style of elegance and comfort, and thus, as he exclaimed at the first, "was the reward of his previous patriotic and faithful services." Sir, I record this disgraceful sample of "putrefying French humanity" not to engender hatred against the race—far from it—but to warn my impulsive countrymen against the danger of their becoming tools in foreign princes or foreign people.

BOARD AND LODGING per week ..... $7 00
BOARD WITHOUT LODGING ..... 5 00
SINGLE MEALS ..... 50
LODGING ..... 50

There is a fine good sale in the House for rooms and other valuables, which will be at the risk of the proprietor.

Parties settling for their friends to the States, or who expect any, will please call and see the terms of the House, and be sure to leave their address, that letters and forward them to the proper address.

Every attention will be paid to the comfort of guests, and the reasonable charges will be paid to the satisfaction of this House.

MICHAEL FARRELL, Proprietor.
1y37 tf

SECOND STREET HOUSE,

(Late Branch Hotel, Sutter st.,)

Nos. 227 & 229 Second Street, Between Howard & Folsom.

BOARD (per week) ..... $4 00
BOARD AND LODGING ..... $5 and $6 00
SINGLE ROOMS ..... 50
SINGLE MEALS ..... 50

Good Accommodations for Families.
1y30 O'NEIL Proprietor.

CO-OPERATIVE

SADDLERY COMPANY.

Saddle and Harness Manufacturers

SADDLES, COLLARS

HARNESS, AND BRIDLES,

WHIPS,

OF ALL STYLES AND QUALITIES,

CONSTANTLY ON HAND.

Southeast cor. Fourth and Mission streets, SAN FRANCISCO.

For Repairing carefully done at moderate rates. Orders from the country promptly attended to. None but first class material used. 1y37

SALMON.

SALMON IN BARREL AND SILVER.

New Smoked Salmon and Herrings.
Herrings in Barrels and Halves.
And all kinds of Pickled and Smoked Fish.
For sale by J. GRIFFITH,
No. 12 Washington street, below Davis

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. BONIFACE ASYLUM,

Corner of Gough and Fulton Streets, HAYES' VALLEY.

WILL BE OPENED ON THE 15th APRIL. The English, German and French languages will be taught by competent Professors.

CATHERINE GIBBS,
Principal of the Asylum.

San Francisco, April 1, 1870. ap1-tf

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,

CONDUCTED BY

THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC,

BENICIA, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION AFFORDS EVERY FACility for the acquisition of a refined and solid education. The Academy was founded in 1856, and now ranks among the most successful Literary Institutions in the State.

The course of Instruction embraces the English, French, Spanish and Latin Languages, Mathematics, Philosophy, History, Natural Sciences, Rhetoric, Mythology, Astronomy, Geography, Book-keeping, Writing, Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and in Oil, Embroidery, Tapestry, Wax Flowers, Wool Work, Netting, Knitting, Lace Work, Crochet Work and Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Needle Work, etc., etc.

TERMS:

Board and Tuition payable half-yearly, in advance ..... $150 00
Washing ..... 30 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 20 00
Physician's Fees ..... per session.
Medicine ..... per session.

EXTRAS.

Piano and use of instrument per month half session ..... $4 00
Violin ..... 2 00
Guitar ..... 2 00
Vocal Music (no class) ..... 5 00
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors ..... 5 00
Painting in Oil ..... 5 00
Board during Vacation ..... 20 00

Each young lady is required to be provided with a bed, bedding, towels, napkins, silver fork and spoon, and a gold ring. Clothing must be distinctly marked with initials. Pocket money should be deposited with the Lady Superior, and not given to the pupils, except by permission of parents or guardians.

Visits from parents or guardians are encouraged, but should not be frequent during the session.

Parents desiring to withdraw their children before the close of the session will please give notice one month in advance, otherwise one month's tuition will be charged.

Parents must be satisfied that every attention, consistent with the spirit of a true and solid government, will be paid to the comfort of the young ladies placed at this institution.

The correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Superioress. Letters of inquiry may be addressed to

SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED ACCORDing to the laws of the State of California and empowered to confer academical honors, is situated in Los Angeles, proverbial for the salubrity of its climate. The course of studies in this College is composed of the FATHERS OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, the debates of which are published in the Annals of the Society of the Propagation of the Faith.

The College is open to all over the age of ten years, who possess the requisite moral qualifications. Those who come with respectable recommendations, provided they conform to the discipline of the institution, which, though strict, are nevertheless mild and parental.

STUDIES.

The course of studies embraces a full course of English and Classical literature, the various branches of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, and also, a Commercial Department, to prepare young men for the counting house.

TERMS:

Per Session of Ten Months.

Boarding and Tuition ..... $200 00
Washing, per bo lunder Year ..... 20 00
Use of Bed and Bedding, per Session of Ten Months ..... 20 00
Violin, Guitar, Flute, etc., each, per Month ..... 4 00
Use of Piano, per Month ..... 4 00

Those who learn to play on any of the above named instruments will be charged extra for the use of the instrument free of charge, otherwise the rule is invariably adhered to.

REMARKS:

Payments are to be made quarterly half yearly in advance. No deduction will be received for less time than half a term. No deduction will be allowed except in case of protracted illness or dismissal.

Each pupil will be furnished with a certificate stating for the term, etc., the institution will not furnish clothing, nor furnish at the Private request of parents or guardians, and a sufficient sum be deposited with the Treasurer.

Doctor's fees and medicines will be paid by the parents.

The Scholastic Year is divided into two sessions of five months each, commencing respectively on the 16th of August and the 16th of January, and terminating on the last Thursday in June.

For further information apply to

Rev. JAMES MARTIN, C. M.,
President.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers.

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, a better Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A.B.; the Scientific, B.S.; the Commercial Master of Accounts.

The following premiums have been established for the encouragement of those who study:

While proper care is bestowed on young children, special attention is given to the more advanced pupils, and particular attention is paid to their health, comfort and moral training.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

Board, Tuition and Washing ..... $200 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 20 00
Physician's Fees ..... 10 00
Medicine ..... 10 00
Use of Library ..... 2 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.

Students will be examined on the 31st of August, and the 31st of January.

For further particulars apply to

BROTHER PATRICK,
President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORated with the Legislature of the State and empowered to confer academical honors, will commence its Twentieth Academic Year on the 16th of August, 1870. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS:

Entrance, to be paid but once ..... $5 00
Board and Tuition, per month ..... 25 00
Piano Forte, per month ..... 4 00
Use of Music, Drawing and Painting forms extra charges, but the use of Instruments, Globes, Reading and Text Books, Classical Languages, are free.

Parents and guardians are required to provide each pupil with a mattress, two pairs of blankets, counterpane, pillows and pillow cases, six towels, six napkins, silver fork and spoon, and a gold ring.

Each pupil is required to furnish a certificate of health and vaccination from her physician.

For further particulars apply to

MOTHER SUPERIOR.

SCHOOL OF THE HOLY CROSS

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Clara, one of the most beautiful and healthy cities of the State. The grounds are extensive; the buildings large and well ventilated. The Academic Year commences on the first Monday in August, and terminates on the last Thursday in June.

TERMS:

Board, Tuition and Washing, per Annum ..... $200 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 20 00
Vocal Music ..... 20 00

No extra charge for the Spanish Language, Plain Sewing or Fancy Needle Work.

Terms invariably half-yearly in advance.

For further particulars address

SISTERS OF CHARITY,
Santa Clara, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

W. W. DAMES, S. H.
DAMES & WILLIAMS,

PHOTOGRAPHIC ST

24, 26 and 28 Montgomery st.

Opposite Lick House. Sep 3

SAUL & CO.,

CARRIAGE MANUFACT

POWELL STREET,

Near Market and Eddy ..... SA

MAKE TO ORDER ALL kinds of Carriages and Buggy Work, Also, A general Assortment of New and Second Hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

J. B. OVERTON & C
Successors to
W. A. BATEMAN,
Nos. 61 and 63 California st
Wholesale Dealers in BUTTER, CHEESE, E
AND ALL
Dairy Produ
Are A large assortment of JELLY
FISH, SALTED HERRING, PI
AND FAMILY GROCERIES.
Orders promptly filled in this department.

JOHN LEDDY,
MANUFACTURER AND DEALE
Boots and Sh
120 FOURTH STREET, Corne

DR. JOHN R. RICE,
Physician, Surgeon, and Acc
To the Ancient Order of Hibernians and
No. 730 HOWARD st. ..... By
Office Hours: Then 9 A. M., 12 M., and 6
Members are requested to leave their orde
A. M. and 1 P. M.

N. F. HOPKIN
LIVERY and SALE ST
619 AND 621 MARKET ST
SAN FRANCISCO
JOHN MOLLOY,
PRODUCE COMMISSION ME
No. 24 Clay st., bet. Drumm, and GROCERIES AND PROVI
24 Clay st., bet. Drumm, and

DR. WM. T. GARWO
Late Resident Physician at the Cleme
HAS RESUMED PRIVATE PRA
Office and Residence, 540 Kearn
Allocuys and Counsellors
FRANK M. PIERCE, HARRIS
PIERCE & HARRIS
Attorneys and Counsellors
Opposite U. S. Mint, SAN FRANCISCO,

CHARLES H. MEUR
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL CAN
FACTURER, No. 418 Kearny street,
Sacramento and California, and 10 Front st
Between Merced and Nevada, San Jose, Cal.
Orders promptly attended to. Cottage Fruit of the above manufacture for sale at the lowest Factory. Please send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

DR. LETTERMA
HAS REMOVED HIS OFFICE AN
Office hours until 9 A. M., and from 2 to

CROCKER
CHINA and GLASSW
Retailed at Wholesale P

P. DOUGLAS & C
131 KEARNY STREET,
HAVE THE BEST ASSORTMENT
FRENCH CHINA,
GLASSWARE,
CROC
SILVER-PLATED WARE & C
To be found in the city, all of which they Low Price
Families can visit and select at their leisure you want at a great saving of time and mo
DOUGLAS &
131 Kearny street, bet. Post and

FLORENCE
Sewing Mac
AGENCY REMOVE
To 19 Montgomery Street,
GRAND HOTEL BUI
JOHN MCCORMICK
AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICU
IRON AND WIRE W
111 Fourth Street East

All kinds of Plain and Ornamental Iron and Wire Work executed to order, with despatch and in a workmanlike manner. Also, a fine assortment of Wire Screens, Summer Safes and Refrigerators.

Removal.
DR. WEEKS
HAS REMOVED HIS OFFICE AND To 624 MISSION STRE
Near New Montgo
Office Hours: From 11 to 4 and 6 to 8.

HURRA
PRICES DOWN AT
YOU CAN BUY SEWING MACHINES
No. 30, Third Central Market, Market street, near Fifth, at the prices, from FIVE to TEN DOLLARS pound. Come one call!

MEDICAL, ETC.

PAIN KILLER
PERRY DAVIS' FAMILY MEDICINE
1840 1870
THE "PAIN-KILLER,"
Thirty Years' trial, is still receiving unqualified testimonials to its virtues, from all the highest character and responsibility, of the first respectability recommend it as not only the best remedy ever known for Pain, Sores, etc., but for Dysentery or Diarrhea, of bowel complaint, it is a remedy for efficiency and rapidity of action. In Cholera Infantum, Cholera Morbus, or Cholera, it has never failed. Medicine, Liver Complaint, Bilious Fever, Dysentery, Sick Headache, Colds, Coughs, and Rheumatic difficulty, it has proved by the most abundant and convincing to be an invaluable medicine.
Be sure you get the genuine. Price 25 cents, and $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

WARRANT'S
ELTZER
APERIENT
Buy all your Groceries
AT WHOLESALE PRICES
AT HASKELL & CO'S
TEA STORE,
605 Market Street,
GRAND HOTEL,
SAN FRANCISCO.
These Words.—All who suffer from sick-ness disorders, nervous affections, or acute maladies of any description, should read the following facts, namely: That the original WARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT APERIENT, in all such cases, is proven having the power that other medicines do not possess, that analytical chemists pronounce it; that analytical chemists pronounce it; that analytical chemists pronounce it; wor.—Napoleon lands as a captive at St. Helena on the 16th of October, 1815. It is over with the sons of the sun. He died in that island on the 5th of May, 1821.——Louis XVIII, the old blood, returns on the 8th of July, 1815.

(Continued from First Page.)

We may now lay before our readers the fragment of the prophecy which has yet to be accomplished, premising only that "the sons of Brutus" are the revolutionists.

CONTINUATION OF THE PROPHECY.

How! ye sons of Brutus, call unto your the beasts who will devour you. Great God! what a din of arms! A full number of moons is not yet accomplished, and behold many warriors come. It is done! The mountain of God, desolate, has cried to God; the sons of Judah have cried to God, from a foreign land, and behold God is no longer deaf.

What fire accompanies his arrow! Ten times ten moons and not yet again six times ten moons have nourished his anger. The anger of God is not an agitation and a troubling of the mind, but a judgment by which he punishes sin. St. Augustine, De civitate Dei, lib. xv. c. 25). *Woe to the great army! Behold Kings crowned by the Lord, the satyr! Behold Kings crowned by the Lord, the satyr! Behold Kings arrested there with the ground already fire hath terrified them with the ground already fire hath terrified them with the ground already fire hath terrified them

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

ENGLISH SYMPATHY WITH THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.—A crowded meeting was held at St. James's Hall on Saturday evening to urge the Government to recognize the French Republic, and to protest against the continuance of the war. Mr. Cosgreve was in the chair, and the principal speakers were Colonel Jackson, Mr. Bradlaugh, Professor Beesley, Sir Henry Hoare, M. P., and Mr. Odger. Mr. H. Richard, Mr. C. Gilpin, Sir Charles Dilke, Professor Fawcett, Mr. P. A. Taylor, Sir Henry Hoare, and Mr. John Stuart Mill had all, it was stated, been asked to attend, but Sir Henry Hoare was the only one who had accepted the invitation. Mr. Taylor had excused himself on the ground of illness, and the others had not answered. Professor Beesley said that his interpretation of the extraordinary silence of the Government at the present time was that we had a Government who time was that we had a Government who did not know their own minds. The Government, on this and all other questions, had neither principle or policy of their own, but lived in a "stand to windward" sort of way, their only anxiety being to get through one session of Parliament after another as soon as possible, and when they were questioned as to their policy they looked to a number of anonymous journalists to tell them. The Government, Mr. Beesley went on to say, had not moved because no opinions had been offered, and he pointed out that Mr. Mill, Professor Fawcett, and the metropolitan members who usually gave opinions were silent now too, and remained away from platforms. As public man had, he said, abandoned from giving the people their advice, the people should give their public men their advice. An address to Mr. Gladstone was adopted, calling upon the Government to recognize the French Republic, and to "take the initiative with that body of free men in the office of mediators between the conquerors and defeated, so that no stipulation detrimental to the people of France may impede the signature of an honorable armistice." A resolution protesting against the territorial spoliation of France, and a congratulatory address to the French people on the position taken by Jules Favre in his second circular were also adopted. "It is difficult to understand," said the Duke of Cleveland, "what practical object is to be realized by continued demonstrations in favor of a French Republic." Nothing more easy. The 'practical object' to which this sympathy with a Republican form of Government points is simply the establishment of a Republic in England."

In the same journal appears the following: "A Morning Advertiser correspondent has been issued for a Cabinet Council to be held at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury, in Downing street, on Friday next, the 30th inst., at two o'clock." His Lordship can see Mr. Bruce.

ENGLISH STUPIDITY.—The English are the most stupidly egotistical people on the face of the earth. They see the mote in the foreigner's eye, but never perceive the beam in their own. Savage and brutal as the mass of the population are, by native suppression, they are still the most conceited, and proclaim their civilization with a fervor that is ludicrous extraordinary. When a solitary outrage is committed in Ireland, the whole of England and Scotland is at the entire season, apparently oblivious of its own bloody fangs. Here is a dish of Germany which John Bull swallows calmly while he is maligning Ireland. The Standard coolly informs us, "While any assembly of any nature or name can be perpetrated at Harrow-on-the-Hill, Loughborough, on Monday night. Two are quarrels in a low house, and a Pole, named Knight, let go his knife, and struck his other with his thumb, and he bled to death. Charles Perkins, followed him, knocked him down, and so kicked him about the head that he died in five minutes. Perkins is in custody. Again we are told.—An inquest was held on Monday on the body of Mrs. Tansemy, who, it will be remembered, was killed by her husband, a stringmaker, of Greenwich. De ceased was complaining of the ill-behavior of one of her sons, when the unhappy father threw a knife at the boy, which, however, struck the mother, and, penetrating her back, caused her death in an hour and a half." Tansemy, who had absconded with the avowed intention of committing suicide, gave himself up to the police yesterday, stating that he had been to the Surbey, and meeting but not heart enough to cut his throat, he had determined to give himself in charge. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter!"

SPOLIATION OF THE POPE.—At High Mass last Sunday, at our Lady Help of Christians, Kensington, the Rev. James Connelly, having announced that, by order of the Archbishop, the "Salve Regina" would be said at the end of each service for the protection of the Holy Father, proceeded to speak of the late reverses of affairs been more favorable than now. Continental Europe was in a flame, and no one could say that he could not even reach these countries. Not only one of the long line of Popes (lamented be them) living and affectionate reverence of all Catholics than Pius IX. Were it only for the persecutions which he had endured he be sought to hold dear, and he would be no true Catholic who would refuse to pray earnestly for the safety of the Holy Father during his long protracted. Its bad, as all knew, done great things for the Church. His voice was heard over the world to these malefactors. Now, however, wicked men were robbing him of the few cities he still held, and they exulted God's core as the wicked of old assailed Naboth's vineyard. Let all pray that these latter should be humbled, and that the new persecuted Pope might live and reign higher than ever in God's own time. The preacher then proceeded to expound the gospel of the day.

BAPTIST MALEDICTIT.—Why Englishmen glied over the defeat of France, and why they long to witness her final fall, are problems which may appear simple on a child's mind to casualty, but which some few may have some difficulty in solving. For the benefit of the latter we are pleased to rejoice over the frankness displayed by the Home Secretary last week in Glasgow, when addressing an audience of Scotchmen on the clearing of the war. It is clearly the interest of England, he observed (mean, that France should be weakened and humiliated—and already the country had gained enormously by the defeat of the French arms. How? Because an Englishman need no longer be in a hurry to increase their armaments, as he felt itself defended! Why? Mr. Bruce answers that query also. Because, he says, of the increase of English commerce (by sea the increase of English commerce (by sea and years back has been made through fear of France, and of France alone. No need to be unaware now; thanks to the thermian, it will be years before France becomes formidable again as a military power. Is it not clear as the sun at noon-day? It is not written so that we may read as we run? But Rule England's non-interference is of course dictated by the most creditable feelings, for "benevolent neutrality" is inspired by no wish to see the nation which, in distress and hates so much still further weakened without any one arm. Needles and thread were attached to the right arm, so that the garment might be put together.

HOW TO PREVENT DESERTION.—The correspondent of the Echo in a letter of September 27th, which left Paris in a balloon, says: "General Ducrot has determined to make an example of deserters. About a score who were caught by the enemy making a reconnoissance, and threw away their arms to escape quicker, were marched in batches of four yesterday with their hands chained behind, their uniform turned inside out, and a large placard on their breast, with their name at the top. The placard ran thus: 'This is ——, a miserable coward, who deserted his post in the face of the enemy. Let every citizen spit in his face.' They were followed by a large crowd yelling and shouting for their instant death. They will, no doubt, be tried by court-martial to-day, and shot to-morrow morning in public on the Champ de Mars. Mollet, Measty and Mignard, two of the prettiest actresses on French boards, have enlisted in the National Guard as cantiniers. Most of our celebrated actors and singers are now performing on the ramparts before the enemy." The Baron Haussmann, also, has become a cantinier. Nearly all Paris papers have dwindled down to half sheets. Eating and drinking is becoming more expensive every day, but provisions are still plentiful."

SPAIN.

La Noreidades of Madrid, in speaking of the Carlists, says it is unsatisfactory to know that they have suffered a misfortune in the field, but others have been as bad, and it is, therefore, a satisfaction for one to know that the Carlists have suffered a defeat. The Independencia Espanola insists that the only sure and solid foundation of justice and liberty is the raising to the Throne of the Duke of Victoria.—La Persas says that, in defending the liberal principles of the Gyrefi, the entire conduct of the editors of four recent Paris journals resembles the fawning of King Louis Philippe's time, while they are silent for the people in pointing out the sad situation of the country. Those attacks have especially aroused Castelar and Emperors that they can do without them. Then cry out, 'Long live our country!'

PRIM AND PACHECA.—A Spanish Ministerial journal states that General Prim has very lately had a conference with the Prussian Ambassador at Paris. The visit a telegram was dispatched to Count Bismarck to know if King William thought it opportune, on the assembly of the Cortes, to present anew the candidature of Prince Hohenzollern, or if he would prefer to be absent for another, that of Prince Frederick Charles.

ITALY.

THE CAPTURE OF ROME.—Rome, Sept. 23.—Rome has at last fallen into the hands of Victor Emmanuel. The troops of the Royal bandit crossed the frontier on the morning of the 12th instant, and by the evening of the following day, or on the 20th. Eight days have sufficed to perpetrate a deed which will cause the accomplices of its profanity and shameless hypocrisy, sacrilegious crime which has yet been chronicled in the annals of the world. The last official report produced by the emissaries of Victor Emmanuel, and of the nation which pretends to be Catholic, up to the last few days, owned the mild sway of the Pontiff King, has been possessor of the Eternal City

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| November. | 3 Sun. | Twenty-second Sunday after Pentecost. |
| | 3 Mon. | St. Hubert, Bishop. |
| | 4 Tues. | Octave of All Saints. |
| | 5 Wed. | Dedication of the Lateran Church. |
| | 6 Thur. | St. Leonard, Confessor. |
| | 7 Fri. | St. Martin, Bishop of Tours, Confessor. |
| | 8 Sat. | St. Martin, Pope and Martyr. |

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

Garibaldi in France.

The French Republic has not gained much by the accession of Mr. Giuseppe Garibaldi to the ranks of its defenders. Indeed we think that every patriotic Frenchman will upon mature consideration heartily wish that he had stopped at home in Caprera and never minded the desperate situation of the Tours Government. The Germans must have had a tolerably correct estimate of the military capacity of the hero of Aspromonte. They are extremely sensitive about any foreign help coming to their beaten foes, yet they have made no complaint whatever about Garibaldi. They took his championship of the Republic with the utmost indifference, because they knew very well that he would turn out more a source of weakness than of Strength. If they argued in this manner, the course of events since the Italian filibuster was appointed to the command of the army operating in the Vosges mountains has proved them to be undoubtedly correct. The redoubtable Joseph cannot realize the fact that he is leading French soldiers against the invaders of their country, and he is acting just as if he were at his old work of making war upon monks and priests at the head of a chosen band of the Carbonari. The telegraph informs us that he ejected the Jesuits from the town of Dole in spite of the protests of the inhabitants. The reverend Fathers were conducting a college and educating the youth of the town, and it does not appear that they were in any way unpopular. It was, therefore, rather presumptuous on the part of an adventurer like Mr. Garibaldi to drive these learned ecclesiastics from their homes as if they were malefactors. The Franc-tireurs of the Vosges refuse to serve under him, and declare they will cut short his career of usefulness (?) with a bullet upon the first favourable opportunity. This does not augur well for Joseph's chance of expelling the Prussians from the fields of France, and if the Republic had to trust to him for its salvation it is evident that the complete triumph of King William could not be long deferred. There appears some probability of his getting disgusted with his command and returning to Italy. Every sincere friend of France will pray that he stand not upon the order of going, but go at once. His presence will only be a danger to the cause of freedom. As he cannot keep his irreligious and anti-cleric proclivities under control, he had better betake himself where their indulgence can be restricted by the Government and rendered incapable of doing serious harm. Nothing can be more certain than that the man under his orders have lost all respect for him, and that their proper organization will be a matter of impossibility should he continue in his present important position. France, we know, suffers from want of skilled military leaders, but she must be badly off, indeed, if she finds any difficulty in replacing Garibaldi by a more capable of leading the soldiers to victory and less objectionable on the score of anti-Catholic prejudice.

The Capture of Rome.

Details of the capture of Rome by the troops of Victor Emmanuel make it evident that there was considerable tumult and disorder inside the city for some time after the entry of the besiegers. The faithful soldiers of the Pope could have prolonged their resistance, and were anxious to do so, but the Holy Father saw that ultimately the city must surrender to the overwhelming force brought against it, and that consequently it was only wasting human life to keep up the defence. For these reasons he gave orders to cease firing, and to accept terms of capitulation. The usual rule is that while the conditions of surrender are being arranged both armies retain their actual position; but General Cadorna seemed to be bound by the usages of honorable warfare, and marched his troops into the city before the capitulation was drawn up at all. With the Italian army entered a large number of roughs and bad characters of the very worst kind. These at once betook themselves to the perpetration of every conceivable outrage. They robbed, they plundered, they pillaged in the open day without any hindrance or the fear of it. The Papal police knew very well that treatment to expect from these fellows, and they prudently disappeared at once; while General Cadorna and his subordinates either could not or would not restore order. The villainous malice of these ruffians was especially directed against the Zouaves. Not contented with treating them with insult and them and flung their bodies into the Tiber. They even went so far as to assault the Vatican, and they would undoubtedly have assassinated the Pope had it not been for the heroic stand made by about thirty of his Holiness' guards, who poured volley after volley into the midst of them, and held them in check until they were dispersed by a charge of Italian troops. The Pope had to ask General Cadorna for protection from the attacks of these savage desperadoes. The anti-Catholic papers, ever on the watch out for a chance of misrepresenting the august head of the Church, describe this proceeding as though it were asking Cadorna for protection against the Roman people, his own subjects. Such was not the case. The disturbers and the assassins had entered the city with the Italian troops, and General Cadorna was responsible for their presence and for their behavior. And, inasmuch as the Papal organization for the maintainance of public order had been destroyed by the invaders, it was only fair that the new masters of Rome should look after the security of its citizens. There appears to be no certainty about the movements of the Holy Father. Being a thorough Italian, and a patriotic one, too, he would naturally dislike to quit his native country; but should any attempt be made to restrict the free exercise of his ecclesiastical functions, he will undoubtedly leave without any delay. Rome would be only a poor place without the Pope, and for that reason the inhabitants are most anxious that he should remain.

The Irish at the Front.

We are highly pleased at being able to give a satisfactory report from the small body of Irishmen who are now fighting under the flag of France. They have taken part in some of the severest battles and given good proof that there is no degeneracy in their branch of the Celtic race. After its formation at Cherbourg, the little regiment, some three or four hundred strong, joined the army of the Loire and was sent on in the direction of Orleans. The men participated in the successful fight with the Prussians which took place to the south of that town. An American correspondent of the New York Sun, who describes the affair, admits that they fought with the most fearless gallantry and swept everything before them in their charge. The Republican authorities specially thanked them for their brilliant success They were commanded by a Colonel Lawler who had fought on the Confederate side during the war of the rebellion. Before leading his men into the fight he addressed them at some length. He told them that these terrible Germans were not so much to be dreaded after all, since they were made of precisely the same stuff as the fellows who made such a contemptible figure on the American battlefields. Wherever a reverse overtook the Federal arms they were invariably the first to indulge in a stampede and take to their heels. The Colonel may have been a little hard on the Germans, but beyond question he uttered no more than the simple truth. The German regiments raised for the North never distinguished themselves for their fighting powers; on the contrary, indeed, they were rather despised by the leaders of both the Federal and Confederate armies. It may be that in America they fought only as mercenaries, and therefore fought badly; while now in Europe they are fighting as patriots, and fight well. Still, making all allowances, they are anything rather than the invincible heroes which they are now represented to be, at least by themselves. Their victories over the French cannot be accounted for by any hypothesis which admits the latter to be even ordinary good fighters. There must have been a wonderful revolution wrought by some means or another in the characters of the two nations to make the events of the last three months a possibility. The Frenchmen of to-day cannot be worthy representatives of the Frenchmen who lived seventy or eighty years ago if they were, five hundred thousand Germans could never humiliate the country as they have done. They never could have swept over the land without encountering a thousand-fold the opposition which they have met, if the sons of France had not degenerated from the heroism and self-sacrifice of their sires. In the time of the first Republic, or of the first Empire, petty squads of Uhlans could not have terrified whole towns and levied oppressive contributions with perfect impunity. But, alas! times are changed in France, and she is no longer the great leader of the Latin races. Who shall assume that proud position now? Will Republican France, by heroic sacrifices, by desperate resistance and reckless valor win back that honorable leadership; or will it fall to the lot of Spain, or Italy, or Ireland?

Lectures on Intemperance.

Rev. Father Bixio, S. J., concluded his lectures on Intemperance, in the church of St. Ignatius, Market street, on last Sunday evening. As on the occasion of the previous discourse, the sacred edifice was thronged in every part by a congregation that seemed deeply impressed with the words of the reverend lecturer. Father Bixio devoted his observations specially to the pernicious effects of the drinking customs which are, unfortunately, engrafted upon society. These prepare the way for intoxication, and render it almost impossible for the weak of will to avoid excess. The usual way to greet a friend or new acquaintance, according to popular notions here, is to ask him to have a drink, and the ratification of a bargain invariably concludes with a drink. We show our joy by drinking, and we drown our sorrow by drinking. Almost every important act of our daily lives is upon some pretext or another made the occasion of consumption of intoxicating liquors. It is almost impossible to overrate the mischief done in this way. Father Bixio and the other Jesuit Fathers have declared war against this soul-destroying vice, and they have determined to spare no pains to eradicate it from among the flock committed to their pious care. Hence these lectures, which attracted so much attention and resulted in so much good. Hence their anxiety to prevail upon erring members of their fold to repent, to resort to the sacraments and to make a serious endeavor, to amend their lives. The Fathers administer the temperance pledge in their presbytery, and do their utmost to encourage and sustain those who respond to the call of the grace of God and seek to avoid the paths of sin and vice. There are many heads of families in San Francisco to-day whom a visit to the Jesuit Fathers might save from ruin, both temporal and eternal.

Mission at the Mission San Jose.

On to-morrow (Sunday) a mission will be commenced for the spiritual benefit of the inhabitants of Mission San José, by the following clergymen: Rev. Father Prendergast; Rev. Father Scanlon, of Sacramento city; Rev. Father Scanlon, of St. Patrick's, San Francisco; Rev. Father Harrington and Rev. Father Kling. These gentlemen will officiate by-turns, and we have no doubt that their exhortations in the pulpit and their labors in the confessional will be attended with the happiest results. A mission has just concluded at San Pablo, which was eminently successful. The pastor assures us that he does not believe there were a score of individuals in the entire district who did not approach the sacraments. We trust that the religious exercises at Mission San José will prove equally fortunate in their results.

---

A VETERAN SUBSCRIBER. The Montreal True Witness gives the following brief but eloquent sketch of a veteran subscriber. We envy our Canadian contemporary the honor of having the name of such a grand old patriot in its books, and we wish to gracious that all our friends would imitate him promptness in "paying up!"

Daniel Healy, of Asphodel, county of Peterborough, Ontario, aged one hundred and seven years, walked three miles last week to pay to our agent the sum of two dollars. Such is the noble old man's appreciation of duty towards a Catholic journal! Will not others who are younger, and many of them richer, be touched by it? We learn that Mr. Healy was at the battle of Vinegar Hill, fifty-of the age of thirty-five. The piety brave and patriotic are almost necessarily honorable in all things.

---

WATCHES.—The depot of gold and silver watches of the different makers is at J. W. Tucker & Co.'s, 610 Montgomery street. Also, for gold chains, diamonds, jewelry, silverware, &c. Watches repaired with care, and made as good as new.

---

Have you a cough, cold, pain the chest, influenza, oldge? In fact, have you the premonitory symptoms of the insidious enemy? consumption? Know that relief is at hand in Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.

---

DR. ADAMS has returned to the rooms, 21 Kearny street, where he can be consulted till the 1st of March, 1871.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish or Catholic Journal in California.

SATURDAY ..... NOVEMBER 5, 1870.

THE BIG LOTTERY.

The drawing of the prizes in the great lottery for the benefit of the Mercantile Library took place on last Monday. Those who saw the aspect of San Francisco on that eventful day will not readily forget it. The whole city was in a fever of excitement, business was completely abandoned, and the streets were thronged with immense crowds, who sauntered idly to and fro or congregated in front of the bulletin boards. The big prizes and the numbers drawing them monopolized all conversation. Few indeed had the gravity or the common sense to resist the prevailing insanity and attend to their usual avocations. In a word, San Francisco was, for the nonce, given over to the revelry of gambling, and expected the fame of Homburg or Baden-Baden. The Pavillon, where the drawing took place, was crowded to suffocation with a panting, perspiring audience, who cheered and shouted and whistled like bedlamites whenever a "lucky number" was taken from the wheel. The winners, or those who were for the moment supposed to be such, were hailed with rapturous applause, and received as hearty an ovation as though they had just performed some heroic deed. In some instances it was almost painful to watch the countenances of the hundreds who gazed at the blackboard in the pavilion, or clustered round the bulletin boards in front of the newspaper offices. There was an anxiously-expectant look, a careworn appearance about them that betokened how intense and absorbing was the interest they felt. As number after number was displayed it was easy enough to distinguish between the losers and the winners. The latter rushed from the crowd with an exultant exclamation, and generally made for the nearest saloon, no doubt for the highly moral and laudable purpose of "treating" all their congratulating friends. The former remained silent, moody and stern, hoping against hope, trusting that the next number telegraphed would correspond with that on their ticket, or coupons. The only parties who really seemed to enjoy themselves, to enter with zest into the excitements of the day, were those who had prudently refrained from taking any chance in the huge gamble, and therefore had their minds perfectly free from preoccupation. These amused themselves pretty literally at the expense of winners and losers alike. The result of the experiences of the entire day must have been to convince any intelligent man that the spirit of gambling is one of unmixed evil, and that lotteries are an exceedingly mischievous nuisance. They appeal to the very worst passions in the human breast. They arouse cupidity, making people mordidly anxious for the possession of large sums of money. They unsettle people's minds, and make persevering industry distasteful, by hanging out the tempting bait of a large fortune gained in a moment without toil or trouble. They create an unhealthy state of excitement by the fluctuations between hope and despair which they cause in the bosoms of so many members of the community. They do no good whatever. It is not a good thing that any person should be made rich in an instant through no merits of his own—through no labor of friends or relatives—but simply because he happens to purchase a ticket with a certain number upon it. Again, the profit of the lucky individual must of necessity be made up from the direct losses of hundreds of his fellow citizens. That great fundamental maxim of society is that the interest of the individual shall be always subordinate to the interest of the community at large; but the law of lotteries completely reverses this benighted rule and declares that hundreds must suffer detriment in order that one may reap an immense profit. It is notorious that even the individuals who draw the large prizes but rarely gain any permanent advantage from them. There is a kind of fatal convenience about wealth gained in such a manner, that it hardly ever ceases out of twenty does it remain with its acquirer. If the winner be rich already, then the prize brings but comparatively little additional comfort; while, if he be poor, the chances are that his suddenly gained wealth totally upsets his brain, induces a career of dissipation, and ends by leaving him poorer than ever. On the assumption that no person gained more than a single prize it may be asserted that six hundred and twenty-eight people are something the richer on account of the lottery; but the same computation will show that one hundred and ninety-nine thousand three hundred and seventy-two had to bear up against loss and disappointment. The prizes really worth any great anxiety did not number much more than a dozen, so the amount of individual happiness derivable from the lottery scheme cannot be very large under any circumstances. There is only one pleasurable feature in the whole transaction. The Mercantile Library, which is certainly an admirable institution, worthy of all support, has been relieved from considerable pecuniary embarrassments, and has now every prospect of extending its sphere of usefulness. Still, as we do not believe that evil may be done to bring about good, we cannot commend the lottery even for that. The evil it has wrought immeasurably overweighs the public Benefit which may yet be derived from it. The lottery scheme was a public curse of great magnitude and we firmly trust it will never be repeated.

THE CONDITION OF IRELAND.

The news that we have lately been receiving from Ireland is not altogether unsatisfactory. Quietly and steadily, without either empty display or pompous braggadocio, the organization of the national forces is carried on, and every preparation possible in the actual condition of the country is being made for the inevitable and approaching struggle. The people are in good spirits, confident in their strength, and firmly resolved to have no more failures. From time to time the newspapers contain accounts of the seizure of arms and ammunition by the police, and these are the only apparent indications of the extent of the military preparations. The probability of England's becoming involved in a struggle with Russia some time in the course of next year warrants the assumption that the long wished for opportunity will present itself before another twelve month passes away. If our countrymen are not ready to take advantage of it, or if, taking advantage of it, they do not show themselves equal to the occasion and make a determined and resolute attempt to recover their liberty, they must be content to remain in bondage for at least the life time of another generation. Desperate as the game is, and dreadful though the havoc be which civil war would occasion throughout the land, national independence and republican government are worth all the sacrifices that a people can make. What the Irish, then, have to consider is—whether the evil consequences of English domination, and the national degradation implied in having their country subject to a foreign Government, are so intolerable as to induce them, acting like prudent and sensible men, to prefer the chances of success in a revolutionary movement. We have no doubt whatever that their natural pride will prompt them to take the latter alternative. But, if they are wise as well as patriotic, they will prepare unostentatiously-as-I-continuously, patiently bearing all the checks and disappointments which the vigilance of the British authorities may put upon them, and making no visible sign of their intention, until a chance of success that would be accepted by rational men presents itself and then, calling upon the Republicans of the world for sympathy and support, strike boldly and bravely for national independence. Once begun, that struggle for freedom should be fought out to the bitter end and to the very last extremity. If British barbarity should make it a war of extermination—let that issue be frankly accepted and war to the knife!" be the popular declaration. Loss of life, destruction of property, want and misery, there must inevitably be in abundance; but if the people do not wish to face these things, it is very easy for them to stay quiet and submit to English rule worshipped by irreconcilable fate. Liberty, as the London Times once said, is a thing to be fought out with muskets and knives and hatchets, and a national Revolution means the spilling of a puddler fluid than rose water. The English Ministers have just given a most instructive proof that they are true to the traditional policy of their predecessors. They are alarmed at the portents of the storm in the East, and they are endeavoring to disarm Irish resentment by petty concessions to popular wishes. A great and l weakness in the character of countrymen is a tendency to limi gratitude. There is no race the world that has such a strange titude for being thankful for mercies as the Irish. They can duped away from enterprises of highest pith and moment by the tiest show of kindness. Natur good at heart, they are totally una to resist the blandishments of a sm and treacherous foe. Mr. Gladst and his comrades in office are now deavoring to avail themselves of t amiable failing in the Irish charac At a Cabinet meeting lately held London, it was resolved to rele O'Donovan Rossa and some other the political prisoners. This is a sop thrown to Cerberus. Soon shall find all the government pri in the United Kingdom going le ostracles of delight over the clemen and magnanimity of "the great a eral premier," Gladstone. Irishm will be called upon to acknowl his favors with the liveliest tra ports of gratitude. Fenianism ma disappear, republicanism be forgotte and all hopes of national independe be utterly forgotten, because a sm or so of patriots have been, one day be, restored to liberty, and freed fr the tortures they have suffered du the long five long years. A few though less, or semi-Britonized Irishme may, perhaps, read a recantation of a nationalist opinions, but the gre bulk of the people will remain just a disaffected and just as rebellious before. They will not forget th O'Donovan Rossa and his companio would sooner endure the rigors of t thousand imprisonments rather th that the sacred cause of Irish freedo should suffer the smallest detriment. And even if they would not, the n generation of the land of our fore fathers is a higher consideration th the welfare of any individuals, how ever great their merits. By way contrast with this rather unexpecte liberality of Mr. Gladstone, we notic the "Crowlar Brigade" is still ke hard at work overthrowing the hom of the people and turning the inhabi tants out upon the world without ro food or shelter from the inclem cy of the weather. Very lately in the county of Wicklow, no less than hundred and forty-seven people, mal and female, old and young, were erested in this heartless manner. Another example of the blessings of English rule is to be found in the st of several young men in a cou try town, for the heinous offence being out of doors after nightfall! Many of these unfortunate persons there was no imputation of any kind on their characters, yet they were thrust into prison because they ver tured to take a quiet stroll on a fine evening. It is to be remarked that they were charged with nothing but the crime of being in the streets, and that even the police did not as much as hint at the culpability of their being guilty of anything else.

PROGRESS OF THE WAR AND THE FUTURE OF FRANCE.

Scarcely had the last number of The MONITOR been issued to our subscribers when news reached the city that another disaster, surpassing in its magnitude and severity that at Sedan, had befallen the French cause. Bazaine capitulated with a force exceeding one hundred and seventy thousand men and surrendered the impregnable fortress of Metz into the hands of its enemies. This is not what the world expected from the Marshal. The gallant defence he had made, the audacity and success of his sorties, shed a lustre upon the fast fading glories of the French standard, and a surrender to an almost equal number of Germans was a disgrace to his fame that few indeed could have predicted. The reason alleged for the capitulation is scarcity of provisions, but if the victors are to be believed it is not a truthful one. It has been asserted that there was enough in the stores to last the garrison until the beginning of spring. Even if Bazaine's story be true, it is unaccountable how less than two hundred thousand Prussians could open in and starve one hundred and seventy thousand men who were willing and able to fight. It might be that the French, being deficient in cavalry and artillery, could not keep the open field for any length of time, but surely they should have been able to capture some supplies of provisions. The Republican Government and the majority of the people do not hesitate to accuse the Marshal of treachery, and charge him with laying down his arms for the express purpose of securing the overthrow of the Republic and the restoration of the Imperial dynasty. As long as he held out, and kept gently a quarter of a million of Prussians in check, there was some prospect that France could recover herself and prosecute the war to a glorious termination; but his treachery has set a huge army at liberty to overrun the whole face of the country and utterly destroy any attempt at the organization of new defensive forces. The traitorous General has hitherto shirked from considerable pecuniary embarrassments, and has now every prospect of extending its sphere of usefulness. Still, as we do not believe that evil may be done to bring about good, we cannot commend the lottery even for that. The evil it has wrought immeasurably overweighs the public Benefit which may yet be derived from it. "The lottery scheme was a public curse of great magnitude and we firmly trust it will never be repeated.

---

people, taken the strength from out their arms, the courage from out their hearts, and the judgment from out their brains. Recovery from the abyss into which they have sunk there is none, until they return to the God whom they have abandoned. Anarchy and chaos must prevail until some man like Napoleon the Great, without his sinful ambition, shall arise, and, by the sheer strength of his master-mind, collect their scattered forces and draw them back again into the path of religion and morality.

The Real Estate Market.

It would seem as though the bottom of depression in real estate must now have been almost reached. During the month of October three hundred and eighty-one sales were made, having a value of only $925,130, or an average of $2,428 to each sale. Carter's Circular says that the most of the transactions were made through private parties. The payment of taxes, the lottery and the run on the Hibernia Bank, all had their influence in restricting land sales.

The Circular advises those who have surplus funds to withdraw them from the banks to invest them in real estate. It says:

There is a certain class of of people whose foolish fears no amount of responsible assurance can remove—timorous folk. Many such persons took their money out of the savings banks, and are now running the risk of losing or wasting it. Such people should lose no time in investing their savings in real estate; in productive property, which will generally command a purchaser, but still better if they have not, let them buy vacant lots as near the center of the city as their funds will allow them to go. They should weigh the bills, for lots on them do not advance in value as they do on level ground, and they should also regard the question which is not graded, macadamized and sidewalked. By doing so they will avoid the payment of exorbitant street contractors' bills. Real estate is now as cheap as it is likely to be, and investments in any direction south or west—respect being had to the restrictions named—are absolutely certain to pay well. Either take your money back to the savings banks or invest it immediately in real estate.

The following item from The Carbuncle communicates intelligence which will be very acceptable to real estate owners and workingmen:

We are in a position to state that work on the Southern Pacific Railroad is about to commence, and that it will be extended southward as rapidly as possible. We do not derive the information from idle rumor, but from one of the chief officers of the road, and it may therefore be relied upon. The Southern Pacific road is of far more importance to San Francisco than any other line on the coast. The building of it will create a great deal of work for men, horses and mechanics, and cannot help proving a great benefit to the city in these dull times. There is quite a dark and dreary, dull dullness in real estate, and, as usual, rub their hands with melancholy satisfaction over the gloomy belief that we are going to the dogs. It will be seen from the annexed items, however, which we take from the New York Tribune and World, that real estate is as dull in New York as it is here, and that there are plenty of stores and dwellings to let there. The Tribune says:

"While in real estate matters, generally, has for many months been declining, some localities have not shared this tendency. Fifth avenue for instance would furnish such excitements as that of 1856—66 carry the property beyond the bounds of prudence, and the prices they pay are in advance of the then value of the property purchased. In only exceptional localities have prices of eighteen months ago be realized." The World says: "That real estate is unmarketably high is known in several ways. The universal complaint of high rents, the unusual number of vacant offices, stores, and dwellings, and the annually swelling heaps by suburban districts, form one class of striking proofs of the fact. Another is found in the asking prices of real estate and the estimates on loan tide books by assessors. The rise of suburban property is effectively characterized by the humorous assertion of a leading real estate dealer, that enough farms have been laid out in building lots within the last three years to give each every New York family with a country residence and to have some left over." Nothing in magnificent dwelling houses and high prices of real estate in New York city and the rest of the country, if they cannot be induced to purchase a house and lot, but if they have not, let them buy vacant lots as near the center of the city as their funds will allow them to go. They should weigh the bills, for lots on them do not advance in value as they do on level ground, and they should also regard the question which is not graded, macadamized and sidewalked. By doing so they will avoid the payment of exorbitant street contractors' bills. Real estate is now as cheap as it is likely to be, and investments in any direction south or west—respect being had to the restrictions named—are absolutely certain to pay well. Either take your money back to the savings banks or invest it immediately in real estate.

---

Mortgages to the number of two hundred and five were given in October, having a value of $935,462; one hundred and twenty-nine releases of mortgages were recorded, amounting to $520,487. The deficit in favour of the former, therefore, only reached $414,975, number and amount.

We quote market prices of lumber as follows. By the cargo, dressed redwood, $22@27 per thousand, rough, $13; Puget Sound pine flooring and stepping, $22@24; planks, for street work, $12@16; assorted scantling and other building material, $11 @13; timber, $10@18; fencing, $12@16. At retail, dressed redwood sells for $28@30; rough, $18@20; Puget Sound pine flooring, $26@30; street planks, $16; assorted scantling and other building material, $17; fencing, $18. Laths are selling at $5 by the quantity, and $7 50 at retail; shingles at $2 25@2 50 for large lots, and $2 75 at retail.

---

New Church in San Bernardino.

EDITOR MONITOR: The ceremony of laying the first stone of the Catholic church here in San Bernardino, commenced at four P. M. on Sunday, October 23. There were present for the occasion the Very Rev. Francis Mora, Vicar-General of the Diocese, with the Rev. Thomas O'Hanlon, pastor of San Bernardino, and Rev. Peter Verdaguer, pastor of San Gabriel, and the Rev. Charles Flanagan, assistant pastor at the Cathedral, Los Angeles. Although we were threatened with rain in the early part of the afternoon, the wind blowing from the southwest, and heavy black clouds darkening the horizon, we enjoyed a beautiful evening; and as each bell was tolled in concert with his Imperial master, he can devise disgraceful schemes for the rehabilitation of the fallen dynasty. According to all the signs and tokens that are yet perceptible, the plan of action is to be of this nature—Paris will be taken, probably before the end of this month—immediately after its fall the Empress will return to France and, as regent of the Empire, conclude a treaty of peace—the captive sovereign will be liberated and placed at the head of the three hundred thousand soldiers now prisoners in Germany and return to claim his dishonored throne—should he not be able to overcome the resistance of the people. Prussian laymen will aid him in the task and send him upon his mission as master in the Tuileries. This is surely a dreadful fate for France, inasmuch as in addition to the disgrace of having a ruler forced upon her by foreign enemies, it exposes her to all the horrors of revolution and civil war at no very distant period. It is out of the question to expect that the people will cheerfully submit to the reimposition of Imperial rule, and, though force of arms may compel them to remain quiescent for a while, they will seize the first favorable opportunity of rising in rebellion and resisting the terrible scenes of 1793. It is scarcely conceivable that the Emperor can be mean-spirited enough to accept his throne from the hands of King William; but it is more than probable that he may consent to the elevation of his young son to the throne. As we said before, this is a hard fate for France; and yet, if we look at the other alternative, the future is quite as dark and dreary. Granted that King William compels the Republic and comes to terms of peace with it, will security and good order be restored to the suffering country? There is no likelihood that they would or could. Legitimists would plot and intrigue; so would the Orleanists; so would also the Bonapartists. Society would be honeycombed, as it were, with the underhillings of these—or four irreconcilable factions. Suspicion and distrust of the future, so completely destructive to progress and prosperity, would take possession of the population, and render the establishment of any firm government a matter of impossibility. It is doubtful whether the Republicans form a fair majority of the people; but, even if they do not, they cannot act as a united body, since they are split into antagonistic cliques. The "Reds," those deadly foes to true and Christian society, would give allegiance to no authority that did not accept their wild and atheistic views to political dogmas. Their idea of liberty is liberty for themselves, and persecution, even to the guillotine, for everybody else. They would exterminate all the religious orders, abolish marriage, legislate against the rights of property, and reduce the whole nation to a state of pagan barbarism. Any government that dared to oppose them would have to meet them as armed rebels and put them down by main force. We have been treated to a taste of their quality at Marseilles, where, it is said, they intended dismembering France, by creating a Republic of sixteen southern departments, having Lyons or Marseilles as its capital. We can readily judge what kind of a government that would be, when we reflect upon the fact that its leaders are anxious to erect the guillotine and commence the sad of victims with a Catholic Bishop! Among such ideas genuine patriotism seem to exist. The Republicans, it is stated, were not averse to the annihilation of their country, because it upset the throne of Napoleon. While the imperialists are nowaya opposed to the disgrace of their country provided it will result in the destruction of the Republic, and the restoration of the Bonaparte dynasty. The Republicans, on the other hand, are not to be blind, indeed, who can see in all these things the hand of Almighty God punishing France for so many sins. Irreligion, luxury, corruption, immorality had eaten their way into the very vitals of the

---

The following are the Directors of the Irish Ambulance Corps in France:

CARE, NOBLANCO, September 27, 1870.

France has done more for the cause of human liberty than any other nation in the world, and yet at this supreme moment the free nations of the world leave her to her fate. She feed Italy from the foreign yoke of the Hapsburgs, and Italy now deserts her. She saved Vienna, in 1866, from the fate which threatens Paris in 1870; and Austria remains a passive spectator. England, whose armies France saved in the Crimea, maintains a cold-blooded and treacherous neutrality. And America—America, forgetful of Rochambeau and Lafayette—has only her barren sympathy to offer to France of the Revolution, France of 1793? Greece and Belgium owe their independence to France; Denmark, Sweden and Holland exist as sovereign states under the aegis of France—and yet it is this grand and magnanimous nation that now struggles between the walls of its capital for very life. Civilization closes its eyes; humanity sneers at her—while France, to whom the civilization of the nineteenth century owes all that it has of noblesse, and the humanity of the world its grandest inspirations, is being foully murdered. England by every deliberate act seems to prevent the resurrection of the Sister Canal: the work completed, Europe and America hailed it as the proudest triumph of modern civilization; and now Europe and America abandon that France, to whose persevering all nations are indebted for that new and wonderful pathway to the East. But what do we say? Does not France suffer for France? Alone, can she not crush the invasion? Ah! heaven—it is quite clear that no meagre hand impels Prussia on her bloody career? Is it quite clear that there are no secret treaties, no secret help? A million Prussians are now on the soil of France—would they have dared to come here had Russia made her arrangements with other powers, especially one other power that it is unnecessary to name? We do not believe it. Let others, as she values her honor, take care not to shade of suspicion shall attach to her.

What are the facts? After the battle of Sadowa, Prussia, well knowing that she would one day be called to account for that transaction, threw into France an army of 300,000 men, to have remained here from that day to this. The army of spies was followed in due time by the army of Hausenstein Hunns—that now invest Paris, and spread dismay throughout the fairest provinces of this glorious land. The spies found a simple, unsuspecting people, and reported accordingly. The Huns found a chastened people, and hence their glorious triumphs. But the end is not yet. France is fighting gallantly. Paris will do its duty—and, blessed be God!—Ireland is true to friendship, to gratitude, and the memories of the past. Ireland is doing her duty in this tremendous hour. But Ireland means the Irish race; and yet she is to ask again and again, what have the Irish in America done? Oh! what are the Irish in America doing? Oh! there has been organizing and organizing until a brave race seems to have been organized into policy—but no manhood, no courage, no common sense. Is there any Irishmen so stupid as not to see (looking at the matter in the cold light of policy, merely) that it is necessary for the nationalities of the world—above all Ireland—that France should maintain her position as the greatest power in Europe? Then, again, (purely, France is now Ireland than Canada is ever likely to be. You have arms among you; not many and them or long them? Is it manly, honorable, or wise to look coldly on (as if you were Englishmen or Yankees) while the Prince of Hoche and Henry Jay, of Sarsfield, Lamoricière, is being done to death by the crowned conspirators of Europe? To this course—and, mark us, a noble deed for France now will bear fruit for Ireland at no distant day. France saved, Ireland is freed.

The above is addressed to their countrymen in America by two Irishmen, who hope it will not be too late to save their race from the accusation of indifference and ingratitude.

P. J. SMITH.

---

The Irish Auxiliaries in the Field.

LONDON, October 20.—A special correspondent at Boulogne sends word from Tours that during the actions before Orleans which have been fought during the last week, and which have resulted in the abandonment by the Germans of their attempt to advance on Tours, the new Irish legion in the service of the Republic distinguished itself particularly. It is commanded by Colonel Lawler, who served during the American civil war with Gen. Sheaf, and Johnson, and it is composed of young men of good blood and of the purest nationality from the vicinity of Dublin. Colonel Lawler made a speech to his men before leading them into battle, in which he told them that the Germans whom they were to attack were no better troops than the foreigmans who had invariably fled from the field during the American war at the onset of the Confederate troops. The charges of the Irish legion carried all before them, and the legion has been publicly thanked by the authorities for its valor and success.

The New York Star says: "The sympathies of the Irish people in France alone, can she not crush the invasion? Ah! heaven—it is quite clear that no meagre hand impels Prussia on her bloody career? Is it quite clear that there are no secret treaties, no secret help? A million Prussians are now on the soil of France—would they have dared to come here had Russia made her arrangements with other powers, especially one other power that it is unnecessary to name? We do not believe it. Let others, as she values her honor, take care not to shade of suspicion shall attach to her.

What are the facts? After the battle of Sadowa, Prussia, well knowing that she would one day be called to account for that transaction, threw into France an army of 300,000 men, to have remained here from that day to this. The army of spies was followed in due time by the army of Hausenstein Hunns—that now invest Paris, and spread dismay throughout the fairest provinces of this glorious land. The spies found a simple, unsuspecting people, and reported accordingly. The Huns found a chastened people, and hence their glorious triumphs. But the end is not yet. France is fighting gallantly. Paris will do its duty—and, blessed be God!—Ireland is true to friendship, to gratitude, and the memories of the past. Ireland is doing her duty in this tremendous hour. But Ireland means the Irish race; and yet she is to ask again and again, what have the Irish in America done? Oh! what are the Irish in America doing? Oh! there has been organizing and organizing until a brave race seems to have been organized into policy—but no manhood, no courage, no common sense. Is there any Irishmen so stupid as not to see (looking at the matter in the cold light of policy, merely) that it is necessary for the nationalities of the world—above all Ireland—that France should maintain her position as the greatest power in Europe? Then, again, (purely, France is now Ireland than Canada is ever likely to be. You have arms among you; not many and them or long them? Is it manly, honorable, or wise to look coldly on (as if you were Englishmen or Yankees) while the Prince of Hoche and Henry Jay, of Sarsfield, Lamoricière, is being done to death by the crowned conspirators of Europe? To this course—and, mark us, a noble deed for France now will bear fruit for Ireland at no distant day. France saved, Ireland is freed.

The above is addressed to their countrymen in America by two Irishmen, who hope it will not be too late to save their race from the accusation of indifference and ingratitude.

P. J. SMITH.

---

The Irish Auxiliaries in the Field.

LONDON, October 20.—A special correspondent at Boulogne sends word from Tours that during the actions before Orleans which have been fought during the last week, and which have resulted in the abandonment by the Germans of their attempt to advance on Tours, the new Irish legion in the service of the Republic distinguished itself particularly. It is commanded by Colonel Lawler, who served during the American civil war with Gen. Sheaf, and Johnson, and it is composed of young men of good blood and of the purest nationality from the vicinity of Dublin. Colonel Lawler made a speech to his men before leading them into battle, in which he told them that the Germans whom they were to attack were no better troops than the foreigmans who had invariably fled from the field during the American war at the onset of the Confederate troops. The charges of the Irish legion carried all before them, and the legion has been publicly thanked by the authorities for its valor and success.

The New York Star says: "The sympathies of the Irish people in France alone, can she not crush the invasion? Ah! heaven—it is quite clear that no meagre hand impels Prussia on her bloody career? Is it quite clear that there are no secret treaties, no secret help? A million Prussians are now on the soil of France—would they have dared to come here had Russia made her arrangements with other powers, especially one other power that it is unnecessary to name? We do not believe it. Let others, as she values her honor, take care not to shade of suspicion shall attach to her.

What are the facts? After the battle of Sadowa, Prussia, well knowing that she would one day be called to account for that transaction, threw into France an army of 300,000 men, to have remained here from that day to this. The army of spies was followed in due time by the army of Hausenstein Hunns—that now invest Paris, and spread dismay throughout the fairest provinces of this glorious land. The spies found a simple, unsuspecting people, and reported accordingly. The Huns found a chastened people, and hence their glorious triumphs. But the end is not yet. France is fighting gallantly. Paris will do its duty—and, blessed be God!—Ireland is true to friendship, to gratitude, and the memories of the past. Ireland is doing her duty in this tremendous hour. But Ireland means the Irish race; and yet she is to ask again and again, what have the Irish in America done? Oh! what are the Irish in America doing? Oh! there has been organizing and organizing until a brave race seems to have been organized into policy—but no manhood, no courage, no common sense. Is there any Irishmen so stupid as not to see (looking at the matter in the cold light of policy, merely) that it is necessary for the nationalities of the world—above all Ireland—that France should maintain her position as the greatest power in Europe? Then, again, (purely, France is now Ireland than Canada is ever likely to be. You have arms among you; not many and them or long them? Is it manly, honorable, or wise to look coldly on (as if you were Englishmen or Yankees) while the Prince of Hoche and Henry Jay, of Sarsfield, Lamoricière, is being done to death by the crowned conspirators of Europe? To this course—and, mark us, a noble deed for France now will bear fruit for Ireland at no distant day. France saved, Ireland is freed.

---

Address to the Irish in America.

The following is from the Directors of the Irish Ambulance Corps in France:

CARE, NOBLANCO, September 27, 1870.

France has done more for the cause of human liberty than any other nation in the world, and yet at this supreme moment the free nations of the world leave her to her fate. She feed Italy from the foreign yoke of the Hapsburgs, and Italy now deserts her. She saved Vienna, in 1866, from the fate which threatens Paris in 1870; and Austria remains a passive spectator. England, wh

WORK TO WIN.

Work to win, boys, work to win
For our sainted island mother;
Labor is the best and din—
Labor true to one another.
In the quarrel fathers thought
Freedom with their blood when bought
Was not bought too dearly, brother.
Then work to win, oh, work to win
For our sainted island mother.

We have passed through flies of dead,
Over ages rode our banner;
Passed with firm, unfaltering tread—
'Tis the work that gains the honor.
Silent as a citadel,
Standing on a leaguered hill,
We have waited true, my brother,
Work and wait, then, work and wait,
For our sainted island mother.

Fairer lands there are than ours—
None so glorious under heaven—
Where the mountain proudly towers,
Where the valleys watch for even.
All is beautiful and grand,
True and generous in our land—
True as we must be, my brother,
As we work and wait, to win
Freedom for our island mother.

Bright eyes wait our work to bless
At the dawning of the promise;
When the true hearts seek redress,
Nought can keep its glory from us.
But the life and the vain
Help us little now to gain [brother—
What we want from heaven, my Work alone can place the crown
On our sainted island mother.

War Items.

The chiffonniers, or rag and bone finders of Paris, and the ban-de-la-riffs, are creating special corps. A juvenile corps, two thousand strong, of lads between the ages of twelve and fifteen, has also been raised.

A packet of letters addressed to Prussian officers and soldiers lately fell into the hands of the French, and was sent to the government at Tours. M. Crapiaux sent the parcel to M. Bismarck without opening it.

The wife of a carpenter at Berlin has for the third time within eight years been made a widow by the fortune of war. She married for the first time in 1861, and in 1864 her husband fell at Duppel; in 1866 she again married a carpenter, who was killed at Koniginrain in 1866; the third time she espoused a carpenter, who met his death at Resonville.

One of the French prisoners now in Berlin has performed an involuntary aeronautic journey. In the battle in which he was captured. He was sitting on an ammunition wagon, the shells in which exploded, and hurled the man a considerable distance through the air. In his aerial ride he lost both his arms, but is in a fair way of recovery.

A Parisian hotel has just issued a prospectus to Messieurs l'Anglais desirous of being present at the siege of Paris: —Confortable apartments, completely sheltered from bombs, a special service of carriages for promenades to the fortifications always on hand. Note—The exceptional situation of this establishment puts it out of the reach of all projectiles. Rooms prepared in the cellars for nervous persons."

Mother Marie Josephine, who left London with a sister of her community, the servants of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, has arrived at Versailles where she has been installed to render assistance to the sick and wounded. Twenty-six of the sisters of the same community are occupied they are night in rendering their services to the poor sufferers in the Chateau of Versailles.

A few days ago, a very pretty, elegantly-dressed lady came to a Commissary of Police in Paris, to complain that she had been imprisoned because she wore man's clothes. She had, she said, joined the artillery as a gunner, and intended to fight on the walls. Her ordinary clothes would be burthensome to an artillerist; she therefore begged for permission to dress herself like a man. The Commissary promised to do his best to have her request complied with.

More arms were probably thrown away at the battle of Sedan than in any battle of modern times. The unemployed workmen have been gleaning Chassepots and sword-bayonets, which they sell to outsiders. The glut in the market was such that a Chassepot in perfect order could be got for about a franc and a half, and sword-bayonets were quoted at from four sous to fifty centimes. These tempting prices seemed to have excited speculation, for numbers of excursionists returned to Brussels with cases under the size of coffins filled with Chassepots.

The chemists have been set to work for the defence of Paris. One of them states that with a recently discovered preparation—fulminate of picrate of potassa, which is ten times worse than picrate of potassa in its simple form—he can blow the Prussian army off the face of the earth. He has another preparation, which at once asphyxiates and burns any living creature upon which it is projected; and in addition to that, he declares that he possesses the means of decomposing water itself, and turning it into consuming flame. This gentleman is in the employ of the government, and has already prepared a most diabolical reception for the Prussians. They have, indeed, already experienced the awful effects of his skill in the explosion of two torpedoes, which are said to have killed seven hundred men, and the exposed points of the defence are thickly sown with like engines of destruction.

There are dangers even to balloon mails, it appears. A correspondent says: "I went down to the post-office at six o'clock this morning to send off a letter by the balloon which was to have been started. Its departure is, however, postponed till to-morrow, but meantime, various private individuals have resolved to try their fortune through the air. I shall send my letters whenever an opportunity offers, and to increase the probability of their arrival I have had them printed, so as to be able to send off several copies, on the chance of one at least arriving safely. The mail balloon promises to be a regular institution, but it appears that even that is not quite safe, for we are told that the Prussians sent a balloon of their own in pursuit of that which started yesterday morning."

The Electeur Libre relates the following episode of the review passed on Tuesday by General Trochu: "On the Place de la Concorde Admiral Cailliez, passing a preparatory inspection of the twenty-first battalion, stopped before a national guard of his company who wore on his breast the star in brilliants of the Legion of Honor, namely, M. Durny, ex-Minister of Public Instruction. 'Your place should be at the head of a battalion,' said the Admiral. 'My post,' said the other, 'is in the ranks of the defenders of the country. Regular soldiers are more fitted for command.' 'We shall meet again on the ramparts,' added the Admiral. 'That is our duty,' rejoined M. Duruy, 'we shall perform it with courage, firmness and success.' These last words, spoken with much energy, became the signal of loud acclamations and cheers from those who witnessed the scene."

Treatment of French Prisoners at Sedan.

Mr. Thomas Weldon Trench, one of those who ministered to the sore need of the wounded at Sedan, in an interesting letter dated September 11, makes the following statement, strongly corroborative of the accounts heretofore published relating to the treatment of French prisoners at Sedan:

I heard that a portion of the French army which had surrendered itself was to pass through Sedan this morning, and I hastened there to see dying of hunger. Colonel Dalton told me that he had seen them shut up on an island, with a great standing army on the bridge which held to the main land, and they were starving. They only had about one biscuit (and that a small one) to each man for eight days of the prisoners told me themselves to-day), and horse flesh, can I do, Monsieur? I am a prisoner myself; but if the Commandant de la Fortresse gives me an order, I shall be delighted." I went to him, but he positively refused to help me. "We have little enough for our own army," he said. "I can do nothing; at all events, they are all going away to-morrow." So, with a heavy heart, I turned back to get out my supplies, and go off to Font de Gronne.

Fearful Alpine Accident.

The Journal de Geneve gives the following account of a terrible accident upon Mont Blanc:

Three travelers, an Irishman and two Americans, with three guides and five porters, left Chamounix on Monday morning, intending to arrive that day and sleep at the Grands-Mulets. The weather was fine, but next morning there was so violent a storm that the inhabitants of Chamounix naturally supposed the travelers would not have quitted the Grands-Mulets. There was, therefore, no disquiet respecting them in the valley. Next day, however, it was known that from the Croix de Flegere and from Brevent they had been seen starting for Mont Blanc in spite of the tempest, and that they had arrived upon the Dromedary's Hump, an hour's march distant from the summit. That they had been seen suddenly to collect together and to hold fast one to another, and then to disappear in the snow wreaths raised by the wind. In spite of this, however, people persisted in believing that they must have sheltered themselves against the wind in some nook or crevice of the ice, and therefore there was no great occasion to fear for the result. Next day the proprietor of the Pavilion de la Pierre Pointue arrived, expressing his astonishment that no one had redescended, when the people began to have serious apprehensions regarding the fate of the travelers. On the day was too far advanced to render it possible to make any immediate search, but on the following morning thirty-two young men of the valley went off in search of them. Unfortunately, the shocking weather which prevailed prevented them from passing the Pavilion of Pierre Pointue, situated at two hours journey from Chamounix. They were obliged to retrace their steps without being able to do anything. On the following day a new attempt was made by twelve courageous young men, but again the rain and the wind would not permit them to ascend the mountain. At the hour of writing there remains no hope that those unfortunate people have escaped death. It is probable that the excitement when they were seen for the last time grouped together on the top of the Bosses du Dromedaire, after a new making a supreme effort to withstand the tempest, so terrible on those heights—that their efforts were of no avail, and they were precipitated together upon the Glacier du Miage, which spreads out on the side of the Allee Blanch. Two of the guides, Jean Blanick and Joseph Breton, were well known on account of their numerous ascensions. One of the porters was a young Garde Mobile who, on account of being the support of his family, was exessed from service and sent home a few days previously. His father was killed some years ago on the Grande Mulets, by the falling of a stone detached from a rock. This terrible drama, the only witness to which was the waste of snow, has produced at Chamounix an emotion which we shall not attempt to describe. The whole of the valley is literally in mourning.

A Kind-Hearted Wife.

The following incident is reported to have recently happened at Flessingue, in Holland:

A wife, exasperated by the continual drunkenness of her husband, threatened him with death. Some days ago she attempted to put her threat into execution. There was but an attic above the sitting-room. To this she passed a rope through it, one end of which fell into the room below, while the other remained fastened in the attic. She then descended, made a slip-knot in the rope, and awaited her husband's return. He at last arrived, and was much surprised to see no reproaches on his bad conduct. There is something underhand, thought he; I must see. We must premise that this scene took place in complete darkness. The husband, whose suspicions were aroused, put himself full into a chair, and appeared to sleep profoundly. After some snoring, he felt a rope passed round his neck. He then understood the little trick that was to be played upon him, but he did not move. His wife went up to the attic, and taking advantage of this moment's respite, the drunkard relieved himself of his rope, and fastened it to the feet of the stove, which soon went up to the ceiling with a frightful noise, caused by the falling of some crockery which was standing upon it. The wife, thinking the noise was caused by the fruitless struggles of her husband, ran to the police office to denounce that she had found her husband hung. The police arrived in hot haste, and a candle was lighted, when all started back at the spectacle which presented itself. The stove was swinging gracefully in space, and the husband sat gravely smoking his pipe. Instead of a suicide, an attempt to murder was established against his wife, who was arrested.

Russian Designs.

Russia continues her war preparations, and the doom of Turkey may be read in the accounts of military movements which now reach us almost daily from the city of the Czars. The last of the subject comes through the Berlin correspondent of the Times, who telegraphs that the Russian War Office has been ordered to draw up new regulations intended to accelerate the embodiment of retired soldiers and those on unlimited leave when called in. A strong Cossack force has been sent from the Don to the western provinces, and active military preparations are being made in Trans-Caucasia. The Daily News' correspondent, writing from St. Petersburg, also scents danger in the air. Every day, he says, regiments go past my window, evidently either arriving or departing, for they are without arms or knapsacks, their luggage being probably sent to the trains in vans. Cannon, too, are being taken past, usually at night, and are probably intended for Cronstadt. It is reported from Moscow that from to-morrow there will be only one passenger train south until further orders, as fourteen trains of soldiers must be taken daily. The Eastern question, and the necessity of the abrogation of the Treaty of Paris. The same tale is in every one's mouth. Some of the most experienced diplomatists say that they have no doubt that Prince Gurtschakoff has made up his mind to be rid of that treaty, and very soon. The writer, after all, is of the opinion that there will be no war; but he bases his belief entirely on the conviction that no one will attempt to cross the path of the northern giant. France is crippled, he says, and England is in no position to fight. We should rather think not. Meanwhile poor Turkey flutters her wings and perpares for resistance, but her resistance cannot possibly be otherwise than futile and unavailing.

Every morning and evening, too, women are to be seen among the National Guards on the Boulevard de la Villette, practising the use of the Chassepot. It is said that they show great aptitude for the work.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Barbara, a short distance from the sea, in the midst of a healthy and picturesque locality. The grounds are extensive, the buildings large and commodious, and the building is large and well ventilated.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish is also taught.

TERMS:

Boarding, Lodging and Tuition, per Scholar ..... $300 00
Bed and use of Instrument, per Month ..... $ 50
Washing, per Quarter ..... $ 12 50
Tuition at the College ..... $ 40 00

No extra charge for Plain Sewing, Fancy Needle-Work, etc.

The scholastic year is of ten months and a half each, commencing on the first Monday in August and the 16th of January, and ending about the 15th of June. For further particulars apply to

REV. J. KREEFE, O. S. F. F.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Academy commences on the first Monday in September, 1870. Pupils are prepared for the Universities of Europe and the Atlantic States, are thoroughly taught Vocal and Instrumental Music, French & public and laudable accomplishes; in terms their progress in Christian Doctrine, Useful and Ornamental Needle-work, Drawing, Painting in Water Colors ..... 20
Painting in Oil ..... 30
Use of Piano ..... 20
Washing (Vacation ..... 20

Each young lady is required to be provided with four dresses, two of the uniform (which is a black merino trimmed with crimson), for winter and for summer, with sun-bonnets, gloves, shoes, and the usual clothing, two morning-dresses, dressing-case, four sheets, two pillow-cases, silver spoon, silver goblet, and napkin, four towels, four table-napkins & knife, silver fork, spoon, knife and napkin-ring, two white shawls, one trimmed with white, the silver with green; two pairs of white cord, and a supply of basepaper, envelopes and postage stamps.

Pupils will be received at any time, two equal terms, the first commencing August 16th, the second January 16th.

Parents may rest satisfied that every attention, care and vigilance, on the part of a firm but kind government, will be paid to the conduct of the young ladies placed at this institution.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Superioress. Letters of parents may be addressed to the

SISTER SUPERIOR

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED ACCORDing to the laws of the State of California, and empowered to confer degrees, is situated in the City of Los Angeles, pleasantly but the modesty of the climate, and the healthiness of the locality. The faculty is composed of the FATHERS OF THE CONGREGATION OF THE MISSION, and the SISTERS OF CHARITY. The former themselves to promote the health and comfort of the pupils, and the latter will have the entire management of the sick-room. The institution is open to students of all creeds over the age of ten years, who are required to conform to its discipline and regulations, and to furnish satisfactory testimonials of good conduct. Parents who wish their children to receive a solid education, with respectable recommendations, pro-

TERMS:

Board, Tuition and Washing per Annum ..... $200 00
Bed and Bedding, each ..... $ 10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines ..... $ 10 00
Use of Library ..... $ 2 00
Day Students ..... $ 40 00

Clothing, dresses, linen and drawing from extra charges.

Pupils will be received on the 1st of August.

REV. R. JIMETA, President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORated according to the laws of the State and empowered to confer degrees, will open its doors for the Twentieth Annual Session on TUESDAY, August 16th, 1870. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS:

Entrance, to be paid but once ..... $15 00
Board, Tuition, and quarter ..... $ 50 00
Washing, per quarter ..... $ 12 50
Physician's fees, unless it may be preferred to pay the bill in case of sickness, per quarter ..... $ 2 50
Piano, Violin, Guitar, and Painting form extra charges, but there is no extra charge for the French, Spanish, or German languages, or for the Reading and Fancy Needle-work.

Payments are required to be made half a session in advance. Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

For further particulars address

SISTER SUPERIOR.

SCHOOL OF THE HOLY CROSS

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Clara, one mile from the railway depot, and is under the direction of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus. The grounds are extensive, the buildings large and commodious, and the location unsurpassed for healthy.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thoroughly English education.

TERMS:

Board, Tuition and Washing per Annum ..... $200 00
Piano, and Use of Instrument ..... $ 40 00
Vocal Music ..... $ 20 00

French and German languages at moderate charges.

No extra charges for the Spanish Language, Plain and Fancy Needle Work.

Terms, invariably half yearly in advance.

For further particulars address

SISTERS OF CHARITY,
Santa Clara, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BROCHE SHAWLS!

CHEAPER THAN EVER!

BROCHE SHAWLS ..... Worth $100 for $65
BROCHE SHAWLS ..... Worth 100 for 75
BROCHE SHAWLS ..... Worth 125 for 95
BROCHE SHAWLS ..... Worth 150 for 95
BROCHE SHAWLS ..... Worth 150 for 125
BROCHE SHAWLS ..... Worth 175 for 125
BROCHE SHAWLS ..... Worth 200 for 150
BROCHE SHAWLS ..... Worth 250 for 175

Sullivan & Co.,

CLOAK AND SHAWL HOUSE,

No. 14

Montgomery St.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

OPENING DAY.

MRS. M. J. BUTLER,

NO. 131 KEARNY STREET,

Will open a SPLENDID ASSORTMENT of FRENCH MILLINERY GOODS on MONDAY, 26th, which she has imported direct from France, and will sell twenty-five per cent. cheaper than any milliner store in the city.

Removal.

FRANK KENNEDY,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Has removed his office to the northeast corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets.

DR. J. A. McLAUGHLIN,

(Formerly of Boston, Mass.)

HAS OPENED AN OFFICE AT 324 FOLSOM STREET.

N. P. HOPKINS,

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE,

479 AND 481 MARKET STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO

JOHN MOLLOY,

PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANT

AND DEALER IN

GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS

56 City st., bet. Drumm. and East, Cor. Front.

DR. WM. T. GARWOOD,

(Late Resident Physician at the County Hospital)

HAS REMOVED PRIVATE PRACTICE.

Office and Residence, 320 Kearny street.

CHARLES H. MERCER,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL CANDY MANufacturer, No. 418 Kearny street, between Sacramento and Clay streets, and 127 Second street, between Minna and Natoma, San Francisco. All orders promptly attended to. Refugio Pen to fill pens of the city—half-gross carpeted.

FLORENCE

Sewing Machine

AGENCY

REMOVED

TO

19 Montgomery Street, South,

GRAND HOTEL BUILDING.

JOHN McCORMICK,

HORTICULTURAL AND FLORICULTURAL

IRON AND WIRE WORKER,

103 Fourth Street (East side.)

All kinds of Plain and Ornamental Wirework for Gardens, Conservatories, etc., made promptly and at reasonable rates.

Removal.

DR. WEEKS

HAS REMOVED HIS OFFICE AND RESIDENCE

TO 630 MISSION STREET,

Near New Montgomery street.

Office Hours—From 11 to 1 and 6 to 7 P. M.

JOHN L. LOVE,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Office—No. 12 Exchange Building,

Corner of Montgomery and Pacific streets.

GO TO

J. O'CONNOR'S,

Stall No. 1 Grand Central Market,

IF YOU WANT THE BEST BEEF, MUTTON, &c., in the market, and at the lowest prices.

FINE AND

WATCHES JEWELRY

best Watches promptly and properly repaired, & warranted. Charges reasonable.

W. S. DOUGLASS

J. C. COMBES,

Dealer in Fine Wines and Liquors

—TERRAPIN LUNCH.—

Corner Second and Tehama streets ... San Francisco

Terrapin constantly on hand. Oysters in every style. Private rooms for ladies.

Distinguished Artists in the World—for their appreciation have awarded full marks with all competitors at the Paris Exposition of 1867, and are now following the progress of our city to build their grand new property. We think we can safely recommend them to the public as the best Pianos in the market, and to any lady purchaser at the very rapid selling prices. Their Pianos, Upright and Square Grand Forte, are all with fine tone and perfect in tune as any Piano in the world. The Action is the Patent Repeating Action, and the Sounding Board and Frame are made entirely of the best seasoned material, and are warranted for five years. Their Upright Grand Piano is the most beautiful and perfect Piano ever made. Their Square Grand Piano is the most beautiful and perfect Piano ever made. Their Square Grand Piano is the most beautiful and perfect Piano ever made. Their Square Grand Piano is the most beautiful and perfect Piano ever made.

Every Piano is warranted for five years

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

LONDON, October 27.—A special correspondent at Osteand telegraphs a statement received from Mercy Le Haut, to the effect that upon receiving a formal declaration signed by the Empress that she was unwilling to sign a treaty involving a cession of French territory, or to be a party to any scheme involving a probable outbreak of civil war in France, Bazaine exclaimed he would take the necessary responsibility himself.

Bazaine immediately sent a messenger through his lines to Prince Frederick Charles, at Pont-a-Mousson. The Prince came up during the night in Chateau du Frenay, where stipulations were signed for the surrender of the forces of Bazaine and the fortresses of Metz.

The report adds that Gen. De Coffinier, the commandant of the garrison of Metz, entered a written protest against the surrender, declaring he was able to protract the defence into winter; that recent defeats of the Germans had made it impossible for them to imperil the position of Paris, and that provisions were in abundance both for the army and people.

The total loss of the army of Prince Frederick Charles, from the beginning of the siege, is estimated at forty-five thousand men, by battle and disease.

The number of Bazaine, it is stated, has been made upon a full understanding with the Prussian Government that the occupation of Metz and Strasbourg shall be accepted as an adequate basis for withdrawing the Prussian army from France and concluding a peace.

Republicans in London loudly declare the Marshal a traitor; that he concluded his action with Prince Napoleon, the Empress and King William, and the Orleanists at Paris and Tours will repudiate any peace prepared or signed by him.

TOURS, October 31.—Information from Orleans says all the shops and stores are closed, and the city deserted by the inhabitants. The women almost universally appear in mourning. Prussian officers endeavor to dispel the gloom, but ineffectually.

LONDON, Oct. 27.—The following are the terms of peace which were said to have been proposed by England, Russia and Austria: "No cession of territory. Alsace—The fortifications of Metz and Strasbourg to be razed. Third—France to pay 200,000,000 indemnity. Fourth—Neutrals to guarantee peace.

A telegram from Basle announces that the Prussians have suffered a defeat between Montbeliard and Besancon. They fled in disorder, losing with them fifty-three wagons filled with wounded and leaving 1,200 killed on the field.

Advices from Bouillon, of the 27th, state that the capitulation of Bazaine is in conformity with an understanding arrived at with the King of Prussia, and a speedy peace is contemplated.

TOURS, Oct. 30.—Owing to the rumor of Bazaine's capitulation, Minister Gambetta has issued a circular to Prefects, saying:

"I have received from all sides grave reports, the veracity of which, in spite of all efforts, I cannot establish officially. It is said that Metz has capitulated. If so, it is not you should have the opinion of the Government in the matter. Such an event could not but be the result of a crime, the authors of which should be unshrined. Be convinced, whatever may arise, nothing can save our courage in this epoch of morality and patriotism. There exists one thing that neither can nor will capitulate, and that is the French Republic."

LONDON, Oct. 31.—A Cologne dispatch, dated yesterday, says Prussia and the North German Confederation have furnished 740,000 troops for the present war, and the loss of Bavaria, 16,000; of Wurtemburg, 8,000; of Hesse, 4,000; nearly all are now on French soil. They are expected to complete the conquest of France in a short winter campaign.

TOURS, Oct. 30.—Garibaldi has summarily expelled from Dijon the Jesuit Fathers in charge of the school of Notre Dame de Monte Sacre, on the ground that they were French indigntion. The "Fres Compagnions" of Alsace refuse to serve under him, and threaten to desert him.

BERLIN, October 31.—A report is current here that an attempt was made to assassinate Versailles on the life of King William. The King was unhurt, but General Roon, who stood near, was wounded.

The tiermans will open the bombardment of Paris with 250 siege guns.

LONDON, November 1.—Bagaine arrived at Wilhelmshohe, (Cassel), on Sunday. In the afternoon she visited the Emperor with Bazaine.

LONDON, November 1.—The Independance Belge, from Brussels, has information that escaped from Metz, and from the Moselle Independance—published at Thionville—that the fall of the city of German troops—the fact that the French leaders in the fact deceived the army by promises to get out. The promises were solemnly repeated—even while negotiations for the surrender were pending. Bazaine was unquestionably right in charging Bazaine with treason.

THE SURRENDER OF STRASBOURG.—A correspondent of the London Daily News telegraphs as follows, September 30th: "I entered Strasbourg on Thursday at an early hour by the Porte de Saverne. On all sides the destruction was far greater than I even imagined. Fifty streets were a mass of ruins. The cathedral was less injured than I had anticipated. The roof of the nave is destroyed and the windows are pierced with shot, yet the interior is almost entire. The astronomical clock is uninjured. A shell has passed through the window immediately above it. The spire was struck in several places. The fortifications were the largest tenable. It is generally admitted that the place could have been stormed; two breaches were quite practicable. The sufferings of the inhabitants have been frightful. The minimum of wounded civilians was three to three thousand, a large proportion being women and children. The feeling against the tiermans is very bitter. It is regarded as a matter of course that Strasbourg will be restored. The upper classes, who are chiefly Catholic, are more averse to annexation than the richer, who are Protestant. Eighty thousand soldiers constitute the garrison. General Mertens, military governor, is very stringent in the rules laid down. All persons must remain indoors after nine, the military excepted."

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—All the members of the Cabinet attended the meeting of the Cabinet this forenoon. The time was principally occupied in considering the question of the enforcement of the election law, and particularly as in New York. The general sentiment was that it should be strictly enforced, without detriment to the rights of any voters, but in the interest of all.

President Grant called at the Internal Revenue office and had a long interview with Commissioner Delano this morning. It is understood that Secretary Cox retires next week, when Delano will assume the charge of the Interior Department.

The President has appointed John S. Follansbee to be Register of the Land Office for Shasta Land District, in California, and Charles McDonald, of California, Receiver of Public Moneys for the same District.

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF REV. FATHER MICHAEL WALSH.—The fell destroyer in our midst has already stricken down one earnest laborer in the Lord's vineyard. Rev. Father Michael Walsh was called from the midst of his labors to his eternal reward last Tuesday, having been attacked by yellow fever the preceding Friday. He had been in this city only about two weeks, his previous field of labor having been in Iowa. He was obliged by an attack of lung disease to leave that State for a warm climate, and had already commenced to improve when attacked by the fever. Father Walsh was a native of Limerick, Ireland, and a graduate of Maynooth, having his arduous labors in Iowa he had succeeded in building a church under the invocation of St. Michael, when, as we have said, ill health forced him to seek a milder climate. He died at the age of forty-five.—N. O. Morning Star.

ORDINATION.—On Tuesday, October 18th, Rev. Mr. McKntee, who had been previously promoted to deaconship, was ordained priest by His Grace the Archbishop, in St. Michael's Cathedral. His Grace was attended by Rev. Father Lambert and Father Cann. Rev. Father Harris assisted the newly ordained priest. Rev. Father Harrison officiated as Master of Ceremonies. There were a great many present, and after Mass they hastened forward to receive the ordinal blessing of Rev. Father McKntee. We wish the reverend gentleman every success in the new sphere which has opened out before him, and we hope that his sacerdotal labors may be crowned with the blessing of heaven.—Canadian Freeman.

BROOKLYN.—At the recent reception the ladies received into this convent were Miss Celia Berry, of Baltimore, and Miss Annie McDonnell. Miss Bitter received the name of Sister M. Philomene, and the former Sister Mary Thomas. The ceremony was witnessed by several persons, among those present were the Right Rev. Dr. Loughlin, Bishop of Brooklyn, and several clergymen from different parts of the diocese. The details of the ceremony were conducted with close attention to the ceremonial rule, and the music, which was choice, gave it excellent effect.—Catholic Mirror.

DEDICATION.—On the 5th October, the new church of St. John the Baptist, at Northfield, Vt., was dedicated by the Right Rev. Bishop de Goesbriand, who, on the same occasion, blessed a fine bell weighing sixteen hundred pounds. The dedication sermon was preached before a large and highly appreciative audience by the Very Rev. Thomas Lynch, D.D., and the St. Alban's Choir, under the direction of Dr. A. S. Smith, was in attendance.—Boston Pilot.

His Grace Archbishop Gibbons has appointed Rev. Father Gabriel, Rev. P. C. O'Hara, pastor, was recently dedicated to Almighty God, by Rt Rev. Wm. O'Hara, Bishop of Scranton. Rt Rev. Dr. Shanahan, of the Diocese of Harrisburg, sang Pontifical Mass, with Rev. Michael Flan as Assistant Priest; Rev. N. McMenamy, Rev. M. J. Flynn and Rev. Deacons of Honor; Rev. Thomas Marron as Deacon of the Mass; Rev. Michael Ryan as Sub-deacon, and Rev. Thomas F. Mullen as Master of Ceremonies. Bishop O'Hara delivered a very able discourse, which we regret we have not room to publish. There were also present the Right Rev. Bishop Shanahan, of Harrisburg, Pa., Rev. Father Farrelly, lately at Rome, succeeding Rev. Father Gallagher at St. Joseph's, Staten Island; Rev. Father Keogh, of St. Mary's is removed to Cornwall, and Rev. Father Jackson to Jockey Hill and Stony Hollow. Further changes, it is said, are contemplated by the Archbishop, but as yet none others are announced.—Boston Pilot.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—Judge Tappan, of Kings County Supreme Court, to-day decided, in a case involving one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, that marriage in unopposed and perfectly legal if parties promise in the presence of a clergyman to wife; and that a child born before marriage ceremony is performed is legitimate.

Four hundred persons have formed a military organization called the "Washington Continental Guard."

RAMMING A KISS into the largest and best paying medicine in the world. Those who are now making the best ladies and gents' books and shoes and gaiters to measure. They report only the best and most reliable. Those who are now selling the best and most reliable Sewing Machine. The likes them and at Mount 474 Bush street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets. Prospectus Atlantic Monthly.

A SORE AND MIND DISEASE.—Such is dyspepsia. The sufferer is sad and sore. Every thing around him or her is out of joint. Without the other, so that dyspepsia and despondency are inseparable. It may be called, too, inseparable from dyspepsia, and is universally accompanied by irritation of the temper and by severe pain in the stomach and region of the pit. Nature's bitters is most powerfully her-lopod in cases of indigestion. The first effect of this extensive tonic is comforting and encouraging. A mild glow pervades the system, the chronic uneasiness in the region of the stomach is relieved, and a general refreshment which characterizes the disease is abated. This improvement is not transient. It is soon succeeded by the return of the old symptoms with superadded force, as it always is when the constitutional stimulants are given for the complaint. Each dose seems to impart a permanent increase of the healthful function. But this is not all. The appetite and all bilious symptoms disappear, and the digestive organs acquire a regularity of action which is never brought within reach of this the sufferer is soon brought within reach of the only means of cure. The general nervous system is toned and regulated. The effect upon the digestive organs is equally salutary, and in cases of constipation the cathartic action is just sufficient to relieve the costive bowels without producing pain. The bitters also promote healthy evaporation from the skin, which is particularly desirable at this season, when sudden spells of fair weather are followed by chills. The kidneys are regulated and profuse congestion, coughs and colds. The best safeguard against all diseases is tonic bitters, and this the great Vegetable Restorative essentially promises to be.

Subscriptions Received.

San Buenaventura—Rafael A. Hornbeck ..... $1 50
Gilroy—Mrs. Duffey ..... 5 00
San Jose—James Lewis 2; Judge Hayes ..... 5 00
Ross Carberry, Ireland—Rev. Father Mahaney ..... 5 00
San Andreas, Augustus Flacio, Edward Fitz ..... 15 00
Healdsburg—Rev. Father Neri, Michael Ryan ..... 5 00
Rev. Father McAllen, Michael Thos. Silvey, P. Masterson, Michael O'Connell, each ..... 5 00
San Jose—A. Waddelsdiff ..... 5 00
Petaluma—Rev. Father Fillmer, 10; A. A. Hopkins ..... 15 00
Austin, Nev.—L. Toomey ..... 5 00
Irongold City—Edward Murphy ..... 10 00
San Jose—Thomas McMahon ..... 5 00
Downieville—George O Donnell ..... 5 00
Shasta—Andrew Cusick ..... 10 00

FARM TESTIMONY.—The almost universal adoption of Redington's Essence of Jamaica Ginger in a household remedy for indigestion, debility, sickness at the stomach, colic, flatulency, and all painful and sudden affections of the bowels, is the best warranty of its usefulness in emergencies. Ladies find it a "present help in time of trouble," and the family testimony is in favor of all the most positive and complete character.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONEY OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO,
THURSDAY, Nov. 3, 1870.

FLOUR—In consequence of the high price of wheat our local millers have been compelled to still further advance their prices, and Oregon brands have also been advanced. We quote standard brands of Oregon at $6 75@7 50, and local brands as follows: Superfine at $5 75@6 50, and extra at $6 87½@6 50, in sacks $ 196 lbs.

WHEAT—The demand during duru the past week has been light. We quote fair to choice at $1 90@2 00 per ctl.

BARLEY—Has been in good demand since our last report. We quote $1 15@1 25 @ 100 lbs for fair to choice.

OATS—The market has been quite active during the week, at prices ranging from $1 30@1 45 @ 100 lbs.

HAY—With light receiving prices rule firm at $16@ 18 @ ton for ordinary Wild hay to choice Wheat.

POTATOES—Demand fair. We quote varieties at 75@90c, and other kinds at $1@1 50 @ 100 lbs.

STRAW—We quote range from at $12@ 18 @ ton.

BRANS—We quote Bran at $17 50@18 @ ton; Middlings at $21 50@22 50; small White, Red and Pink, $1 @100 lbs.

CORN—We quote Yellow at $1 12½@1 20 @ 100 lbs. Chicken Wheat at $1 75@1 80 @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—We quote choice at $1 25 @ 100 lbs from store.

RICE—The mill quote at 6½@6c.

MIDDLINGS—The following are the mill quotations: Fine, $20; Coarse, $19 @ ton from store.

BUTTER—Sales at $1 75 @ 100 lbs.

HIDES—We quote Fine at 24c, and Cheap at 22c; Kips at 20c; Calf at 30c.

WOOL—We quote Fine at 35@37½c, all at 1 year; Medium at 32½@35c; Coarse at 27½@30c; Heavy Coarse at 25@27½c; Burry at 20@22½c.

TALLOW—Sales at 6@6½c.

HONEY—Los Angeles, 1-gall cans, $15@16, and Butter, 2-lb cans, at $1 @ dozen.

BEESWAX—Sales at 30@32½c for dry.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 15½@ 16 at ₱ lb; Oregon, 16½ @17c.

BACON—California, at 13½@14c ₱ lb; Oregon, 15½ @16c.

DRIED BEEF—California, 16@18½c ₱ lb; Oregon, 18 @20c.

LARD—California, in tins, 13½@14c ₱ lb; Oregon, 15½ @16½@18c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 3 @ 3½c ₱ lb; second quality, 2½@3c; third do, 2@2½c.

VEAL—At 5@6c ₱ lb.

MUTTON—At 5@6c ₱ lb.

LAMB—At 5@6 ₱ lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 8c; no fat, grain-fed, 6½ @7c ₱ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

GEESE—Sales at $1 50@1 75 @ pair.

TURKEYS—Gobblers, 25@30c ₱ lb; Hens, large, at $1 50@2 50; young Chickens at $1 50@2 50; Hens at $1 50@2 50 @ dozen.

DUCKS—Tame at $4@5 @ dozen; wild, $1 25@3 50.

CHICKENS—Sales at $3@4 @ dozen.

TURKEYS—Alive, 16@18c.

CALVES—$7 50 @ dozen.

RETAIL PRICES OF POULTRY AND GAME.

Hens—Large, at 25@30 each.
Chickens—Large at 25@30 each.
Ducks—Tame, at 75@$1 each.
Geese—Tame, at $1 50@2 each.
Turkeys—Alive, 16@18c.
Geese—Tame, at $1 50@2 each.
Venison—17½@20c ₱ lb.
Quail—$1 @ dozen.
Rabbits—Wild, 37½@$1 ₱ pair.

REASON OF 1870-71.

Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs

IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENTS,
PATENTED JUNE 21 AND AUGUST 23, 1870.

REDUCTION OF PRICES.

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY have the pleasure of announcing IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENTS in their Cabinet Organs, for which patents have been secured, dated as above, and first issued. These are not merely inventions attachments, but enhance the substantial excellence of the instruments.

They are also enabled, by increased facilities for manufacture, to make, from this date, a FURTHER REDUCTION of their prices, as follows, viz:

Having completed and added to their former facilities a LARGE AND SUBSTANTIAL ADDITION, they hope hereafter to supply all orders promptly.

The Cabinet Organs made by this Company are of such universal reputation, not only throughout America, but also in Europe, that few will need assurance of their superiority. For years the Company have been constantly engaged in perfecting instruments to meet the best musical requirements of the class. This extraordinary demand is evidenced by the fact that more than TWENTY THOUSAND have been sold; and that a child born before marriage ceremony is performed is legitimate.

Four hundred persons have formed a military organization called the "Washington Continental Guard."

RAMMING A KISS into the largest and best paying medicine in the world. Those who are now making the best ladies and gents' books and shoes and gaiters to measure. They report only the best and most reliable. Those who are now selling the best and most reliable Sewing Machine. The likes them and at Mount 474 Bush street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets. Prospectus Atlantic Monthly.

A SORE AND MIND DISEASE.—Such is dyspepsia. The sufferer is sad and sore. Every thing around him or her is out of joint. Without the other, so that dyspepsia and despondency are inseparable. It may be called, too, inseparable from dyspepsia, and is universally accompanied by irritation of the temper and by severe pain in the stomach and region of the pit. Nature's bitters is most powerfully her-lopod in cases of indigestion. The first effect of this extensive tonic is comforting and encouraging. A mild glow pervades the system, the chronic uneasiness in the region of the stomach is relieved, and a general refreshment which characterizes the disease is abated. This improvement is not transient. It is soon succeeded by the return of the old symptoms with superadded force, as it always is when the constitutional stimulants are given for the complaint. Each dose seems to impart a permanent increase of the healthful function. But this is not all. The appetite and all bilious symptoms disappear, and the digestive organs acquire a regularity of action which is never brought within reach of this the sufferer is soon brought within the only means of cure. The general nervous system is toned and regulated. The effect upon the digestive organs is equally salutary, and in cases of constipation the cathartic action is just sufficient to relieve the costive bowels without producing pain. The bitters also promote healthy evaporation from the skin, which is particularly desirable at this season, when sudden spells of fair weather are followed by chills. The kidneys are regulated and profuse congestion, coughs and colds. The best safeguard against all diseases is tonic bitters, and this the great Vegetable Restorative essentially promises to be.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest cor. Pine and Front sts.,
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS,
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
103, 105 and 108 FRONT STREET,
110 PINE STREET.

J. WASON. C. C. MORSE.
WASON & MORRIS,
Successors to J. B. KELLY,
PLAIN AND DECORATIVE
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,
GILDING AND GLAZING.
Imitations of Wood and Marble.
Banners, Flags and Military Standards painted to order.
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE, VARNISHES,
BRUSHES, GLASS, Etc.,
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA ST.,
Two doors below Davis street, SAN FRANCISCO.

JAMES R. DEANE.
Importer and Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS,
WINDOW GLASS,
VARNISHES,
BRUSHES,
Constantly in store and receiving all the above articles selected from the best manufactories in the East and in Europe.
☞Home and Ship Painting promptly attended to. Owners of Buildings and Contractors are invited to call No. 310 Clay street, between Battery and Front, ap 5 Opposite the Railroad House San Francisco

STAINED AND CUT
GLASS WORKS,
MALLON & BOYLE,
No. 308 MISSION STREET.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STAINED, ENAMELED, EMBOSSED and Cut Glass, for Churches, Private Houses, Saloons, Steamboats, Railroad Cars, etc. Metal Sash work of all descriptions. Particular attention paid to Beading Glass.
We invite the Public to examine our new designs. se5-1y

PACIFIC MAIL S.S. COMPANY.
NEW YORK, VIA PANAMA.
WILL LEAVE WHARF, CORNER OF SPEAR and First streets, at 12 o'clock M., on the 2d and 17th of each month, (except when other date falls on Sunday, then on Saturday preceding), for YOKOHAMA, connecting with Pacific Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamships from PORTLAND, OREGON, touching at HONGKONG.
Rates, $—Steamer COLORADO, connecting with ARIZONA.
All steamers touch at Acapulco. The steamer of the 2d navigates to and from SAN JOSE DE GUATEMALA. The steamer of the 17th touches at MANZANILLO.
Through tickets sold to and from Liverpool, Queenstown, Southampton, Bremen, Havre and Hayre.
JAPAN AND CHINA.
Steamers leave on the 1st of every month, at noon, precisely, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG, connecting at Yokohama with the Company's Branch Line for NAGASAKI, touching at KANAGAWA.
November 1—Steamship AMERICA, Capt. Dollar.
For freight or passage apply at the Company's Office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.
au26 ELDRIDGE & IRWIN, Agents.

BILLIARDS!
MESSRS. PHELAN & COLLENDER,

THE WELL KNOWN BILLIARD TABLE MANufacturers, of New York, have established an AGENCY
311 Market Street, San Francisco,
An extensive branch of their business, where they propose to keep constantly on hand the LARGEST and BEST ASSORTMENT of Billiard Tables, Cloths, Cues, etc.,
ON THIS COAST.
THE TABLES are of the latest styles and size required in the principal saloons, and furnished with all the improvements patented by the firm.
All goods sold on the Pacific Coast will be warranted to be equal in every respect to those sold by them in New York. The best of their businesses had enormous centers of sale in Montgomery and St. Louis, and propose to practice reasons them to supply various machinery, and a variety of other goods at the lowest possible remunerative prices. They are thus enabled to make a saving to the purchaser of from twenty to thirty per cent from the prices commonly demanded for inferior articles, and they will be found ready to deal liberally with all who favor them with a call.
They now offer FOUR-STATE CABINET ORGANS, in solid plain cases, but equal, according to their capacity, in anything the market, for $100 each. The SAME, DOUBLE REED, FIVE OCTAVE, DOUBLE REED ORGANS, FIVE STOPS, with knee-swell in French walnut, in elegant case, with several of the Mason & Hamlin improvements, $125 each. The same, with new Vox Humana, Automatic Swell, etc., $150. THE SAME, RESONANT CASE, with new improvements, $200. FIVE OCTAVES, THREE SETS REEDS, SEVEN STOPS, with ELEPHANT CASE, $275. TWO-MANUAL PIANO-ORGANS, SEVEN OCTAVES, THREE SETS REEDS, NINE STOPS, $375. THE SAME, RESONANT CASE, with the new improvements, the best instrument of the class made, $425. Many other styles and prices.
A NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, with full information, and ordered prices, is now ready, and will be sent free, with TESTIMONIAL CIRCULARS, containing a great number of testimonials to the purity of these instruments, to any one sending his address to the MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 34 Tremont street, Boston, or 596 Broadway, New York.
se22-3y

MUSIC.
WANTED—A SITUATION AS ORGANIST. TO a Choir in a Catholic Church, by a competent Lady. Unexceptionable testimonials. Best of references given. Address, by letter,
THOMAS W. MOORE,
No. 624 Folsom street.
oc29-2t

NOTICE!!
DENNIS CULLINAN
BEGS LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE TO HIS friends and the public that he has removed to
No. 1 LIVERY STABLE,
Corner of Stockton and Sutter streets, where, in future he will be pleased to see them.
A large and varied assortment of Clothing and Furnishing Goods
Always on hand, at prices that defy competition.
se24

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL STYLE HATS
Now Ready
SEPTEMBER 8d.
—AT—LAMOTTE'S
Hat Emporium
se10

PIEDMONT AND ARLINGTON
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF VIRGINIA.
HOME OFFICE, RICHMOND. CHARTERED in 1857. Assets, $2,000,000. BALE & AYRES, General Agents for the Pacific Coast 310 Clay street, between Battery and Sansome.
MEDICAL EXAMINERS.—R. Hollaud, M. D., H. H. Holland, M. D., U. Lacey, M. D., Hoff, M. D.
SAN FRANCISCO BOARD OF REFERENCE.—Dunphie, Kelly & Co., T. J. White, Palmer Co., D. A. Koppenberg, Isaiah Freese, Dibney & Wise, Tallant & Co., R. H. Stetson, Tallant, Bell & Co., Rosenfeld & Co., Martin, Tyler Curtis & Co., Russell & Erwin, Manufacturing Company; Bates & Wise; C. L. T. H. Heil, H. F. Wood, R. W. Heath, John C. Maynard, A. C. Peachy, Fire and Marine Insurance Company, Greenbaum, Sons & Co., Winterbotham & Co., Wilson, Hale & Co., Fisher & Co., Lansdale & Co., Macdonald, Smith & Co., Macdonald, John C. Maynard, John H. Wise, John D. Ayres.
THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS is composed of gentlemen first in wealth, influence and commercial standing in the city of Richmond.
All Premiums are invested in California securities. Thirty Thousand Dollars have been deposited with the Insurance Commissioner as security to Policyholders. Policies are issued in lieu of Currency, on favorable rates, and at most reasonable rates. Rights of Policyholders are clearly defined on the face of the policy, and the contract, and no restriction is placed on travel or residence. Policies incontestable, as evidenced by amount of business done.
It is cautious in selection of risks, as comparative mortality proves.
Its expenditures have been small and the Company must economically managed, as its large past dividends evidence. Losses paid promptly.
Liberal inducements offered to GENERAL AGENTS, SPECIAL and CANVASSING AGENTS—Wanted everywhere. au13-3m

$6.00 $6.00
$6.00 $6.00
PERFECT FITTING PANTS
MADE TO ORDER FOR $6, AT
MICHAEL SHORT'S,
387 COMMERCIAL STREET,
Below Montgomery.
You can take your choice from FIFTY PATTERNS.
BUSINESS SUITS to order, $25—and all other kinds in proportion. BOYS' CLOTHING made to order. We will guarantee all our suits to give perfect satisfaction.
☞ DON'T FORGET—The corner of Commercial and Leidesdorff.

FURNITURE
BEDDING.

W. J. HENEY & CO.
Have Removed from their old Stand, No. 751 Market Street,
—TO THE—
LARGE AND COMMODIOUS
No. 725, Bancroft's New Block
With increased facilities, we shall keep as large an assortment of
FURNITURE AND BEDDING,
BOTH RICH AND PLAIN,
As any House on the Pacific Coast. With our small expenses, we can sell
AT THE LOWEST PRICES.
BOOTS. SHOES.
BOOTS. SHOES.
BOOTS. SHOES.
875,000
WORTH OF BOOTS AND SHOES TO BE SOLD at a great sacrifice in Sixty Days. The above mark, then drawn at our late fire proof store, 751 Market street, will be removed to the large and commodious establishment of Quentin Customers owning bills can, as heretofore, call and get them paid in CASH for their Boots and Shoes. Read the Price List and Terms, and remember that no goods will be sold by sample to NOLAN'S for your Boots and Shoes:

| | Worth. | Sold for |
|---|---|---|
| Ladies' Kid Button High cut Balmorals | $ 4 75 | $ 2 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Balmorals | 4 00 | 2 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Balmorals, Opera toe | 4 00 | 2 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Balmorals | 3 00 | 1 50 |
| Ladies' Kid and Goat Shoes, only | 2 50 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Buttoned Boots, reduced to | 2 50 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Slippers, only | 2 50 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Slippers, 50c.; fine Kid | 1 00 | 50 |
| Ladies' Kid Slippers, only | 2 00 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Slippers, Opera toe | 2 50 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Slippers, Opera toe | 3 00 | 1 50 |
| Ladies' Kid Slippers, Opera toe | 4 00 | 2 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Slippers, Opera toe | 4 75 | 2 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Slippers, Congress toe | 2 00 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Heavy Shoes, 50; and Balmorals | 2 50 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Copper Toed Shoes, only | 2 50 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 2 50 | 1 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 3 00 | 1 50 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 4 00 | 2 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 4 75 | 2 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 5 00 | 2 50 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 6 00 | 3 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 7 00 | 3 50 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 8 00 | 4 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 9 00 | 4 50 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 10 00 | 5 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 12 00 | 6 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 14 00 | 7 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 16 00 | 8 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 18 00 | 9 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 20 00 | 10 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 22 00 | 11 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 24 00 | 12 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 26 00 | 13 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 28 00 | 14 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 30 00 | 15 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 32 00 | 16 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 34 00 | 17 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 36 00 | 18 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 38 00 | 19 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 40 00 | 20 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 42 00 | 21 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 44 00 | 22 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 46 00 | 23 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 48 00 | 24 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 50 00 | 25 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 52 00 | 26 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 54 00 | 27 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 56 00 | 28 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 58 00 | 29 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 60 00 | 30 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 62 00 | 31 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 64 00 | 32 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 66 00 | 33 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 68 00 | 34 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 70 00 | 35 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 72 00 | 36 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 74 00 | 37 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 76 00 | 38 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 78 00 | 39 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 80 00 | 40 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 82 00 | 41 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 84 00 | 42 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 86 00 | 43 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 88 00 | 44 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 90 00 | 45 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 92 00 | 46 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 94 00 | 47 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 96 00 | 48 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 98 00 | 49 00 |
| Ladies' Kid Button Boots, only | 100 00 | 50 00 |

☞ Our Ladies' and Gents' Boots and Shoes made to order at reduced prices.
NOLAN'S, 23 THIRD STREET.
NOLAN'S, 23 THIRD STREET.
NOLAN'S, 23 THIRD STREET.
REMOVAL
Brand New Store from the Market Street,
☞ Don't forget the place. Look for the Big Boot on top of the Store.
CHILD TO DOPT.
A NY couple wishing to adopt a child, will apply to accept a little girl of 3 months, can be seen at No. 27 Natoma street, between Third and Fourth, San Francisco.
Information Wanted.
OF HUGH HANDY, who left Ireland for he was in Rose City, Nevada. Any information of him will be thankfully received by DANIEL Handy, 1 Bellevue House, 23 and 25 Jacobs street, Sand Francisco.
Information Wanted,
OF MICHAEL SULLIVAN, native of Dingle and about 30 years of age. When last heard of was in Virginia City, Nevada. Any person giving information regarding him addressed to Thos. Sullivan, Office of the Monitor, will be thankfully received by his friend in San Francisco.
Information Wanted,
OF THOMAS MCCARTHY, of Limerick, formerly of Ireland. When last heard from he was in California. Any information will be thankfully received by his sister Mary, now MARY COLLINS at the office of the "Freeman's Journal," Sydney, N. S. W.

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS
—AND—
LOAN SOCIETY
Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Market streets.
OFFICERS:
President..... M. D. SWEENY
Vice President..... C. D. O'SULLIVAN
TRUSTEES:
M. D. SWEENY, M. J. O'CONNOR,
C. D. O'SULLIVAN, P. MARAN,
JOHN SULLIVAN, GUSTAVE TOUCHARD,
R. J. TOBIN, JOS. A. DONAHUE,
PETER DONAHUE.
Treasurer..... EDWARD MARTIN
Attorney..... RICHARD TOBIN
Remittances from the country may be sent through Wells, Fargo & Co's Express office, or any reliable banking house; but the Society will not be responsible for their safe delivery. The signature of the depositor should accompany his first deposit, in proper person. Book will be delivered to the agent by whom the deposit is made.
Deposits received from $1 upwards.
Office Hours—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.
JOSEPA DONOHOE, Cashier. | STEPHEN KELLY, Book Keeper.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE KELLY & CO.,
NEW YORK
BANKERS
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, ..... LONDON
AND
BANK OF IRELAND..... DUBLIN
Payable at all the Branches,
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS
P. H. CANAVAN
IMPORTER OF
WINES, BRANDIES
ETC., ETC., ETC.
N.W. COR. CALIFORNIA & FRONT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.
P. O. Box 1,712.

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.
Fine proof Spirits, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington,
San Francisco.
Foreign Liquors in bond. Free Deposits. Refined Sugar, Syrups, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser. Orders promptly filled. Agents for Schlitz's Milwaukee Wisconsin Beer.
se5-1y

W. H. ERLY, Jons Scar.
Kelly & Egan
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 604 Battery street,
Post Office.
SAN FRANCISCO.

WM. B. DOLAN,
115 THIRD STREET, ..... SAN FRANCISCO.
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN FRENCH WINES AND BRANDIES
—AND—
Irish Whisky,
Imported direct from Ireland.
HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTment of California Wines of every description, which he offers to the trade at the lowest possible rates.
Orders left at the store, 115 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge.

CO-OPERATIVE
SADDLERY COMPANY
Saddle and Harness Manufacturers
SADDLES, COLLARS,
HARNESS, AND WHIPS, BRIDLES,
OF ALL STYLES AND QUALITIES
CONSTANTLY ON HAND.
Southeast corner Sansome and Bush streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
☞ Repairing carefully done at moderate rates.
Orders from the country promptly attended to. Name this first class material used. my29

Southern Dispatch Line of Packets
—FOR—
SAN PEDRO & WILMINGTON
Consisting of the new clipper Brig
N. S. TWINING, ..... Captain Wm. H. Ray
CURLEW, ..... Captain Wm. Gray
Sailing every ten days
For Freight or Passage apply on board the vessels, at Pier No. 2

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

LONDON, October 27.—A special correspondent at Ozoud telegraphs a statement received from Marcy Le Haut, to the effect that upon receiving a formal declaration signed by the Empress that she was unwilling to sign a treaty involving a cession of French territory, or to be a party to any scheme involving a probable outbreak of civil war in France, Bazaine exclaimed he would take the necessary responsibility himself.

Bazaine immediately sent a messenger through his lines to Prince Frederick Charles, at Pont-a-Mousson. The Prince came up during the night to Chateau du Frenaly, where stipulations were signed for the surrender of the forces of Bazaine and the fortresses of Metz.

The report adds that Gen. De Coffinier, 2d commandant of the garrison of Metz, entered a written protest against the surrender, declaring he was able to protract the defence into winter; that recent defeats of the Germans had made it impossible for them to imperil the position of Paris, and that the provisions were in abundance both for the army and people.

The total loss of the army of Prince Frederick Charles, from the beginning of the siege, is estimated at forty-five thousand men, by battle and disease.

The surrender of Bazaine, it is stated, has been made upon a full understanding with the Prussian Government that the occupation of Metz and Strasbourg shall be accepted as an adequate basis for withdrawing the German army from France and concluding a peace.

Republicans in London loudly declare the Marshal a traitor; that he concluded to surrender in Prince Frederick Charles' name and King William, and the Government at Paris and Tours will repudiate any terms personally signed by him.

TOURS, October 27.—Information from Orleans says all the forces of Metz are released, and the streets deserted by the inhabitants. The women almost universally weep in mourning. Prussian officers are clever to dispel the gloom, but ineffectually.

LONDON, Oct. 27.—The following are the terms of peace which were said to have been agreed upon by England, Russia and Austria: First—No cession of territory. Second—The possessions of Metz and Strasbourg to be razed. Third—France to pay $20,000,000 francs indemnity. The journals hail the probable peace.

A telegram from Basle announces that the Prussians have suffered a defeat between Montbeliard and Besancon. They fled in disorder, taking with them fifty-three wagons filled with wounded and leaving 1,200 killed on the field.

Advices from Bouillon, of the 27th, state that the capitulation of Sedan is in conformity with an understanding arrived at with the King of Prussia, and a speedy peace is contemplated.

TOURS, Oct. 29.—Owing to the rumor of wounded armistice, Minister Gambetta has issued a circular to Prefects, saying:

"I have received from all sides grave reports, the truthfulness of which, in spite of all efforts, I cannot establish officially. It is said that Metz has capitulated. If so, it is well you should have the opinion of the Government in the matter. Such an event would not be the result of a treaty, but the conduct of which should be outlawed. Be warned, whatever may arise, nothing can alter our purpose in this epoch of raucally explosion. There exists one thing that the country never will capitulate, and that is the French Republic."

LONDON, Oct. 31.—A Cologne dispatch says that the Prussian Government has furnished 160,000 troops for the present war, and the North German Confederation have furnished 70,000 more for the present war, and the States of South Germany 116,000. Of this grand total of 856,000 nearly all are now on the spot, and the force will be complete the conquest of France in a short winter campaign.

TOURS, Oct. 30.—Garibaldi has summarily expelled from Dole the Jesuit Pathers and the bishop of Notre Dame de Grace, of Mount Rolland. The proceeding excited much indignation. The Prefect Compagnon-Vernier refuses to serve under him, and threaten to shoot him.

BERLIN, October 31.—A report is current here that an attempt was made yesterday at Versailles on the life of King William. The King was unhurt, but General Stein, who stood near, was wounded.

The Germans will open the bombardment of Paris with 300 siege guns.

BERLIN, November 1.—Bismarck arrived at Versailles, Sunday, on Sunday. In the afternoon she visited the Emperor with Bismarck.

LONDON, November 1.—The Independance Belge, at Brussels, learns from an officer that sampled from Marshal Bazaine from the Month of correspondence—published at Metz at the time of the entry of the German troops—the fact that the Prussian leaders to the last declared the army by promises to get out. These promises were solemnly repeated—and while negotiations for the surrender were pending. Gambetta was unquestionably right in charging Bazaine with treason.

THE SURRENDER OF STRASBURG.—A correspondent of the London Daily News sketches the following, September 30th: "I entered Strasbourg on Thursday at an early hour by Porte Saverne. On all sides the destruction was far greater than I even imagined. Entire streets were a mass of ruins. The cathedral was less injured than I had anticipated. The roof of the nave is burned, and the windows are pierced with shot, yet the interior is almost entire. The old-fashioned clock is untouched; a shell had passed through the window immediately above it. The spire was struck in several places. The fortifications were no longer tenable. It is generally admitted that the place could have been stormed; two breaches were quite practicable. The suffering of the inhabitants has been frightful. The minimum of wounded civilians amounts to three thousand, a large proportion being women and children. The feeling against the Germans is very bitter. It is regarded as a matter of course that the Strasbourg will be retained. The poorer classes, who are chiefly Catholic, are more severe in their denunciations than those who are Protestant. Eighty thousand soldiers constitute the garrison. General Uhrich, military governor, is very contrite. His services laid down. All persons must remain indoors after nine, the military excepted."

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—All the members of the Cabinet attended the meeting to-day, which continued three hours. The time was principally occupied in considering the question of the enforcement of its election law, and particularly as to New York. The general sentiment was that it would be strictly enforced without detriment to the rights of any voters, but in the interest of all.

President Grant called at the Internal Revenue Office and had a long interview with Commissioner Ireland this morning. It is understood that Secretary Cox retires next week, when Delano will assume the charge of the Interior Department.

The President has appointed John S. Pollard to be Register of the Land Office for Shasta Land District, in California, and Charles McDonald, of California, Receiver of Public Moneys for the same District.

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF REV. FATHER MICHAEL WALSH.—The fell destroyer in our midst has already stricken down one earnest laborer in the Lord's vineyard. Rev. Father Michael Walsh was called from the midst of his labors to the eternal reward last Tuesday, having been attacked by yellow fever the preceding Friday. He had been in this city only about two weeks, his previous field of labor having been in Iowa. He was obliged by an attack of lung disease to leave that State for a warm climate, and had already commenced to improve when attacked by the fever. Father Walsh was a native of Limerick, Ireland, and a graduate of Maynooth. During his arduous labors in Iowa he had succeeded in building a church under the invocation of St. Michael's Cathedral. His grace was attended by Rev. Fathers Laurent and McCann. Rev. Father Harris assisted the newly ordained priest. Rev. Father Barringer acted as Master of Ceremonies. Rev. Father Quinlan presided, and after Mass they hastened forward to receive the final blessing of Rev. Father Maldrian. We wish the reverend gentleman every success in his new sphere which has opened out before him, and we feel assured that his sacerdotal labors may be ever crowned with the blessing of heaven.—Canadian Freeman.

CONFIRMATION.—At the recent reception the ladies received into this convent were Miss Celia Barry, of Baltimore, and Miss McDonell. The latter took in religion the name of Sister St. Philomena, and the former Sister Mary Thomas. The ceremony was witnessed by several persons. Among those present were the Right Rev. Dr. Loughlin, Bishop of Brooklyn, and several clergymen of different parts of the diocese. The details of the ceremony were conducted with close attention to the customary rules, and the music, which was good, gave it excellent effect.—Catholic Mirror.

DEDICATION.—On the 5th October, the new church of St. John the Baptist, in Northfield, Vt., was dedicated by the Right Rev. Bishop de Goesbriand, who, on the same occasion, blessed a bell of the weight of sixteen hundred pounds. The dedication sermon was preached before a large and highly attentive audience by the Very Rev. Thomas Lynch, V. G., and the St. Aloysius Choir, under the direction of Dr. A. S. Smith, was in attendance.—Burlington Free Press.

HARLETON, PA.—The new church of St. Gabriel, Rev. P. C. O'Hara, pastor, was recently dedicated to Almighty God, by Rt Rev. Wm. Quigley, Bishop of Scranton. Rt. Rev. Dr. Shanahan, of the Diocese of Harrisburg, sang Pontifical Mass, with Rev. Michael Flick as deacon, Rev. Father Jos. J. McManus and Rev. M. J. Fallihee be Deacons of Honor; Rev. Thomas Marron Deacon of the Mass; Rev. Michael Ryan as Sub-deacon, and Rev. Thomas F. Mullen as Master of Ceremonies. Bishop O'Hara preached. Six hundred children and adults received Holy Communion, and in the afternoon 200 children received the sacrament of Confirmation. Bishop O'Hara imparted the Papal Benediction in the evening.—Standard.

REMOVALS OF ROMAN CATHOLIC CLERGYMEN IN NEW YORK.—Archbishop McCloskey, since his return from Europe, has made the following changes in the Archdiocese: Rev. James Quinn, four years assistant pastor to Rev. Dr. Starrs, of Suffern, Rockland county; Rev. Alberetine Caro to Poughkeepsie; Rev. Dr. Brau to assistant pastorship; Rev. Henry Callaghan to Poughkeepsie; Rev. Father F. Early, late of St. Bridget's, Jersey City; Rev. Father Farrelly, lately at Rome, succeeds Rev. Father Callaghan at St. Joseph's, Staten Island; Father Keogh, of St. Anne's is removed to Cornwall, and Rev. Father Jackson to Jockey Hill and Stony Hollow. Further changes, it is said, are contemplated by the Archbishop, but as yet none others are announced.—Boston Pilot.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—Judge Tappan, of Kings County Supreme Court, to-day decided, in a case involving one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, that marriage is understood and perfectly legal if parties promise to live together as husband and wife, and that it is not necessary that the marriage ceremony is performed is legitimate.

Four hundred Orangemen have formed a lodge in Philadelphia, called the "Washington Continental Guard."

RODGERS & KAVANAGH are the largest and best selected stock of Books and Stone in the city. They are now making the best binding and gentle terms. They import only the most material and employ only the best workmen. 113 and 115 Fifth street, between Howard and Mission, and 120 and 122 Fifth street, between Montgomery and Kearny opposite Alhambra theater.

A BODY AND MIND PARER.—Such is dyspepsia. The stomach and the brain are too intimately allied for the one to suffer without the other, as the 35,000 annual victims of dyspepsia can testify. It is asked, too, that irritation of the stomach is alone responsible for nervousness. That impure only. The invigorating and tranquilizing operation of Hostetter's Bitters is most powerfully duly taxed to cases of indigestion. The first effect of this agreeable tonic is comforting and encouraging. A mild glow pervades the system, the thinner constituents in the region of the stomach become active, and the nervousness which clouds the mind is dispelled as by a magic touch. This improvement is not incidental, but is accompanied by a gradual restoration of the old symptoms is superadded force, as it always the case when immediately stimulation is followed by reaction. Each new dose tends to impart a permanent accession of healthful invigoration. But this is not all. The digestive and assimilative properties of the preparation are scarcely second to its tonic influence. There is no form of bile which the new of this medicine does not speedily subdue. It is tested and regulated. The effect upon the digestive organs is prompt and decisive, and the final consumption the cathartic action is best sufficient to produce the desired result, but not to weaken the system. The Bitters are therefore healthy evacuations, and in cases where a particularly desirable at every time. Dyspepsia, biliousness, nervousness, weathery are apt to check the natural perspiration and produce engorgement of the lungs and colds. The best safeguard against all diseases is healthy vigor, and this the great Vegetable Restorative essentially promotes.

Subscriptions Received.

San Buenaventura—Person & Hornbeck.....$2 50
Gilroy—Mrs. Dafferty.....2 00
San Diego—Patrick Smith, $1; Judge Hayes.....2 00
Knox Carberry, Ireland—Rev. Father Mahaffey 1 00
San Juan—Rev. Augustin Vignier, Church collection.....
Each $2 50; Michael Carey, Michael Gillen, Patrick Mcallen, Michael Carey, Thos. Silver, P. Masterson, Michael O'Donnell, each.....
San José—A. Waldapfel.....1 00
Sacramento—Rev. Father Gibney, $5; A. S. Hopkins.....2 50
Austin—Rev. I. Toomey.....5 00
Cornwall City—Edward Murphy.....2 00
San Juan—Thomas McMahon.....2 00
Brownsville—Congress O Donnell.....1 00
Ithaca—Andrew Cusick.....1 00

FAMILY MEDICINE.—The almost universal adoption of Redington's Essence of Jamaica Ginger as a household remedy for indigestion, debility, sickness at the stomach, colic, flatulency, and all painful and sudden affections of the bowels, is the best warrant of its usefulness in strengthening. Ladies find it a "present help in time of trouble," and the family tonic may be in favor it of the most positive and remarkable character.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTHLY OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, Nov. 3, 1870.

FLOUR—In consequence of the high price of wheat our local millers have been compelled to still further advance their prices, and Oregon brands have also been advanced. We quote star and brands of Oregon at $5 25@5 50, and local brs ads as f'shwe: Superfine at $5 25@5 50, and extra at $6 37 ½@6 50, in sacks to 196 lbs.

WHEAT—Has declined during the past week has been light. We quote fair to choice at $1 87½@1 90 p ctl.

BARLEY—Has been in good demand during the last report. We quote $1 15@1 25 @ 100 lbs for fair to choice.

OATS—The market has been quite active during the week, at prices ranging from $1 20@1 35 @ 100 lbs.

HAY—With light receipts prices rule firm at $18@19 in for ordinary. With choice to choice Wheat.

POTATOES—Demand fair. We quote Uncolns at 1@1½c, and other kinds at $1 @ 1 50 @ 100 lbs.

STRAW—We quote cargo lots at $7@8 @ ton.

BEANS—We quote Butter and Bayo at $3@3 25; Pea, $3 37½@3; small White, Red and Pink, $3 @3 50; Lima, $7 @ 7 50 @ 100 lbs.

CORN—We quote Yellow at $1 @1 05; 30 @ 100 lbs.

CORN MEAL—The mill rates are $1@ 1 05 @ 100 lbs.

BRAN—We quote choice at $21 @ 22 @ ton.

BRAN—The mill price is firm at $28 @ ton.

MIDDLINGS—We quote Fine at $30@32 @ ton.

Feed, $26, and Fine Feed $28 @ ton.

HAY—We quote at $1 75 @ 2 00 @ ton.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 @ 100 lbs.

BEANS—We quote Flat at $3 @3 25; Lima, January at 7c; California Mustard, 6@6 ½ @.

HONEY—We quote at 10@12c; old, at 6@8c @ lb.

OIL CAKE MEAL—Quotable at $28 @ ton from store.

HONEY—Los Angeles, 5-gall cans, $15@16, and Sacramento, 5-gall cans, $15 @ can.

WOOL—We quote good shipping grades, 18@19c; choice, 19c; burry and 10@12c; cured off, 8@10c.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California, ordinary to choice Brits, 32½ @35c; Fresh Pickled Roll, 30@32½c; Firkin, 27½@30c; Eastern, 30@32½c; Eastern Dairy, 25@27½c.

CHEESE—We quote California dry at 14¼@ 15c, and Eastern at 15@16c @ lb.

EGGS—We quote at 30@32½c @ doz.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 13@ 13½ p ℔; Oregon, 14¾ @15c.

BACON—California, at 11¾@12c ℔ ℔; Oregon, 12¾ @13c.

LARD—California, 11@11¾c ℔ ℔; Oregon, in kegs, 13½@13¾c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 9 @ 10c ℔ ℔; second quality, 7@8c ℔ ℔.

MUTTON—At 8@9c ℔ ℔.

LAMB—At 8@9c ℔ ℔.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 8c; on foot, grain-fed, 6@7c ℔ ℔.

POULTRY AND GAME.

FOWLS—Hens, large, at $5@6 37 ½; young Chickens at $4@5 per dozen; Roosters, $3 @ 3 50.

DUCKS—Tame at $4@5 @ dozen; wild, $1@1 50.

TURKEYS—Gobblers, 14@16c.

GEESE—At 50 @ dozen.

QUAIL—At 75c@$1 @ dozen.

RABBITS—Cottontail, $1@1 25 @ dozen; Jackass, $1@1 50 @ dozen.

RABBITS—Wild, $1@1 @ pair.

SEASON OF 1870-71.

Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs.

IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENTS,

PATENTED JUNE 21 AND AUGUST 23, 1870.

REDUCTION OF PRICES.

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY have the pleasure of announcing IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENTS in their instruments, by which patents were granted them in June and August last. These are not merely improvements in detail, but involve the substantial excellence of the instruments.

They are also enabled, by increased facilities for manufacture, to make, from this date, a FURTHER REDUCTION OF PRICES on several leading styles, thus more completely placing within the reach of moderate means a LARGE NEW MANUFACTORY, they hope hereafter to supply all orders promptly.

The Cabinet Organs made by this Company are of such universal reputation, not only throughout America, but also in Europe, that it will be needless assurance of their superiority. For years the Company have been unable to supply the constantly increasing demand for their instruments, being crowded with orders behind orders, though producing about twice the amount of work if any other maker of instruments of the class. The universal commendation they have received in carrying into effect has rather stimulated than lessened their efforts to perfect rigidity, so that they may be said to be principles of their business. Those are:

First—Great power, in proportion to their work, and only the best; availing themselves of the best results of invention, they have every desirable variety of the method, and every facility which highest skill, ample experience and liberal use of unrestricted means can afford.

Second—Tone all always at the lowest possible prices, reserving to themselves the best commercially possible, and which, for the quality of tone, cannot be had elsewhere at any price. They offer, therefore, instruments which are therefore subject, to no discount. They sell only to their agents and consign no member of their establishment, who may have occasion to purchase. Circulars, containing various descriptions, and a division of labor which would not be possible in a smaller business. They are also enabled to meet the present reduction in prices, and to sell their work at even less than the prices recently demanded for inferior instruments, and less than the cost of production without such extraordinary facilities.

They now offer FOUR OCTAVE CABINET ORGANS, in quite plain cases, but equal, according to their capacity, to anything they make, for $56 each. The SAME, DOUBLE REED, $65. FIVE-OCTAVE DOUBLE REED ORGANS, FIVE STOPS, with Knee-swell and Tremulant, in elegant case, with several of the improvements, $125. The same, with new Vox Humana, automatic Swell, etc., $186. THE SAME, SEXDANT CASE, with new improvements, $200. FIVE OCTAVES, THREE SETS REEDS, SEVEN STOPS, with EUPHONE, a splendid instrument, $275. TWO-MANUAL CABINET ORGANS, FOUR FULL SETS OF REEDS, NINE STOPS, $375. THE SAME, RICHLY CARVED, $400. These are the most powerful instrument of the class made, $425. Many other styles are proposed.

A NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, with full particulars, containing testimonials from eminent musicians, will be sent free, with TESTIMONIAL CIRCULAR, to parties desiring them. Purchasers may rely with confidence upon the representations of the Company, and on sending his address to the MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 154 Tremont street, Boston, or 596 Broadway, New York.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest cor. Pine and Front sts.,
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS,
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES
121, 123 and 125 FRONT STREET,
and 110 PINE STREET. tf

A. WANDT. P. J. KIRBY.
WASON & KIRBY,
Successors to I. E. KELLY,
PLAIN AND DECORATIVE
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,
GILDING AND GLAZING.
Imitations of Wood and Marble.
Bazaars, Flags and Military Standards painted to order.
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE, VARNISHES,
BRUSHES, GLASS, Etc.,
NO. 28 CALIFORNIA ST.,
Two doors below Davis street, SAN FRANCISCO.

JAMES R. DEANE,
Importer and Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS AND
WINDOW GLASS,
VARNISHES,
BRUSHES,
Constantly in store and receiving all the above articles selected from the best manufactories in the East and in Europe.
☞ House and Sign Painting promptly attended to.
Grangers of Buildings and Contractors are invited to call. No. 313 Clay street, between Battery and Front.
1078 Opposite the National House San Francisco

STAINED AND CUT
GLASS WORKS,
MALLON & BOYLE,
NO. 308 MISSION STREET.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STAINED, EMBOSSED and Cut Glass, for Churches, Private Houses, Saloons, Steamboats, Railroad Cars, etc. Metal Sash work of all descriptions. Particular attention paid to Beading Glass.

We invite the Public to examine our new designs. oct5-1y

PACIFIC MAIL S. S. COMPANY,
NEW YORK, VIA PANAMA.
The Steamers of this Company leave
PIER NO. 42, NORTH RIVER, foot of Canal street, as follows:
Cabin.....$100 | Second Class.....$50
LEAVE WHARF, CORNER OF
First and Brannan streets, at 11 o'clock A. M. on the 5th and 20th of each month, or on the following day when either date falls on Sunday, then on Saturday
CHINA.....Saturday, November 5, at 11 o'clock A. M.
ARIZONA.....Tuesday, November 15, at 11 o'clock A. M.
CITY OF PEKIN.....Thursday, December 1, at 11 o'clock A. M.
And every subsequent steamer on the 5th and 20th of each month.
For freight or passage, apply to
H. H. MELVILLE, Agent,
No. 202 California street.
Through tickets sold to and from Liverpool, Queenstown, Southampton, Bremen, Rotterdam, Havre, Paris, London, Edinburgh, Dublin, Belfast, Glasgow, Londonderry, Hamburg, Berlin, Antwerp, Brussels, Basle, Zurich, Geneva, Milan, Turin, Florence, Rome, Naples, Vienna, Trieste, Venice, Constantinople, Alexandria, Cairo, Suez, Aden, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon, Singapore, Hong Kong, Shanghai, Yokohama, Nagasaki, Amoy, Foochow, Manila, Sydney, Melbourne, Auckland, Honolulu, Panama, Aspinwall, Havana, Mexico, Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo, Valparaiso, Lima, and all other principal points in the world.
Apply at the Company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.
oct8 DAVIDSON & IRWIN, Agents.

BILLIARDS!
MESSRS. PHELAN & COLLENDER,
THE WELL KNOWN BILLIARD TABLE MANufacturers, of the Original establishment,
511 Market street, San Francisco,
An extensive branch of their business, where they will be pleased to receive orders for the best, and most complete assortment of Billiard Tables, Cues, etc.,
ON THIS COAST.
THE TABLES are of the latest styles and are recently adopted in the Eastern States; are manufactured from the best seasoned materials, and by PHELAN'S RECENTLY IMPROVED CUSHIONS, will be of perfect playing qualities, and the prices fully as low as any other buyer in the business. Warerooms and Factory, 511 Market street, San Francisco.
Warerooms and Factory, 511 Market street, San Francisco.
P. B.—The public are notified that no other parties are in any way connected with Phelan & Collender.

SEWING MACHINES.
WM. B. HIGGINS,
NO. 143 THIRD STREET, (WEST SIDE)
Bet. Howard & Folsom, San Francisco,
WHO HAS HAD THE ADVANTAGE OF SEVeral years' experience as a Machinist in the first-class Sewing Machine establishments in the United States, and in this city, having machines in all of which he has given universal satisfaction, and who may favor him with their patronage. Repairing of Sewing Machines on the most reasonable terms, at lowest prices.
SINGER & WILSON'S Machines adjusted and warranted for one year. Other Machines in proportion. Agent for Howe of Bradley Sandpaper.
☞ If there is any one machine that I am not the finest instrument of the class made, $425. Many other styles are proposed.

A NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, with full particulars, containing testimonials from eminent musicians, will be sent free, with TESTIMONIAL CIRCULAR, to parties desiring them. Purchasers may rely with confidence upon the representations of the Company, and on sending his address to the MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 154 Tremont street, Boston, or 596 Broadway, New York.

MUSIC.
WANTED—A SITUATION AS ORGANIST, TO form a Choir in a Catholic Church, by a competent person. Address, for one week, Box 1, No. 824 Folsom street.

NOTICE!
DENNIS CULLINAN
HAS LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE TO HIS friends and the public that he has RESUMED the CLOTHING BUSINESS,
At No. 90 Third street, corner of Stevenson, where in future he will be pleased to see them.
A large and varied assortment of Clothing and Furnishing Goods
Always on hand, at prices that defy competition.
oct29

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL STYLE HATS
Now Ready
(SEPTEMBER 24)
AT LAMOTTE'S
Hat Emporium
sep10

PIEDMONT AND ARLINGTON
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF VIRGINIA.
HOME OFFICE, RICHMOND. CHARTERED in 1857. ASSETS, $2 000,000. BALL & AYRES, Gen'l Agents for the Pacific Coast. Office—No. 315 California street, San Francisco.
MEDICAL EXAMINERS—G. Bullard, M. D., H. H. Hubbard, M. D., C. Laue, M. D., G. Hoff, M. D.
SAN FRANCISCO BANKS OF REFERENCE—Donohoe, Kelly & Co., D. J. Wills, Sather Co., O. Klumpenberg, Lazard Freres, Chrisman & Wise, Tallant & Co., B. H. Sinclair, Falkirk, Bell & Co., Rountree & McMullin, Tyler Ostrin & Co., Russell, Erwin & Co., Pacific Insurance Company, Butts & Wise, Col. T. H. Hunt, R. S. Smith, R. W. Heath, John C. Maynard, A. C. Peachy, G. W. MacDermot, President People's Insurance Company, Richmond Bates, G. P. Fisher.
FINANCE COMMITTEE—C. F. Mac Dermott, John C. Maynard, John D. Wise, Col. T. H. Hunt.
In BOARD OF DIRECTORS is composed of gentlemen first in wealth, influence and commercial standing in the "Old Dominion."
All Properties are invested in California Securities.
Thirty Thousand Dollars have been deposited with the Insurance Commissioner as security to Policyholders. Policies are issued in Gold or Currency, on every plan, and at lowest rates. Rights of Policyholders are clearly defined on the policy as part of the contract, and no restriction is placed on residence or travel. In consequence, no evidence of death is required.
The expenditures have been small, and the Company most economically managed, as is large part directly from the Home Office, and not generally.
Liberal inducements offered to GENERAL, SPECIAL and CANVASSING AGENTS—Wanted everywhere. sep15-1m

$6.00 $6.00
$6.00 $6.00
PERFECT FITTING PANTS
MADE TO ORDER FOR $6, AT
MICHAEL SHORT'S,
127 COMMERCIAL STREET,
Below Montgomery.
You can take your choice from FIFTY PATTERNS
BUSINESS SUITS, $20 and all other Suits in proportion. BOY'S CLOTHING made to order. We will guarantee all our work to give entire satisfaction.
☞ DON'T FORGET—The corner of Commercial and Leidesdorff.

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING.
Market Street
W. J. HENEY & CO.
Have Removed from their old Stand, No. 751 Market Street,
TO LARGE AND COMMODIOUS STORE,
No. 725, Bancroft's New Block
With increased facilities we shall keep as large an assortment of
FURNITURE AND BEDDING,
BOTH RICH AND PLAIN,
As any House on the Pacific Coast. With our small profits and
AT THE LOWEST PRICES.
BOOTS. SHOES.
BOOTS. SHOES.
BOOTS. SHOES.
$75,000
WORTH OF BOOTS AND SHOES TO BE SOLD AT A great sacrifice, in order to close out the entire stock of the late firm, and to do so I will sell at Wholesale as well as Retail. I call the attention of Dealers to this stock, as they will find it to their advantage to purchase from me, as I can sell them goods cheaper than they can buy from Eastern manufacturers. I would respectfully request all those indebted to the late firm to call and settle their accounts, as I am determined to collect all outstanding accounts. Remember the number and location of the store.
No. 11 California street, San Francisco.
Southern Dispatch Line of Packets
FOR
SAN PEDRO & WILMINGTON
Consisting of the new clipper Sch
PERRING.....Captain Wm. H.
And the new clipper Sch
CURLEW.....Capt
Sailing every ten days
For Freight or Passage apply on board at Jackson street wharf, or to N. PIERCE, northern Pacific Transportation Co., 202 Jackson, Capitol Building, San Francisco.
Tempora Praterritum Nunquam Revertuntur.
Time Past Never Returns.
IF YOU WANT TO HAVE YOUR CLOCKS and Watches repaired that will not get out of order, call on me. I will guarantee to do it for less money than any other person in the city. Remember the place, 1 door from the Big Boot on top of the Store. oct1-1m CHILD TO ADOPT.
A NY GOOD CATHOLIC FAMILY WISHING to adopt a little girl of six months, can do so by applying at the Hospital, corner of Pine and Bryant streets, San Francisco. oct8
Information Wanted.
OF HUGH FLAHIE, who has been from the war in Boise City, Nevada. Any information of him will be thankfully received by DANIEL FLAHIE, at the Rainbow House, 318 and 320 Pine street, San Francisco. Nevada papers please copy. oct29-1m
Information Wanted,
OF MICHAEL DOOLEY, a native of Limerick and about forty-three years of age. When last heard of, about three years since, he was in San Francisco. Any information regarding him addressed to Tax Collector, Virginia City, Nevada, will be thankfully received by a friend. oct29-1m
Information Wanted,
OF THOMAS MULCAHY, of Gort, county Galway, Ireland. When last heard from he was in California. Any information will be thankfully received by his sister Mary, now MARY COLLINS, at the office of the "Freeman's Journal," Sydney, N. S. W. oct
Through Tickets sold to and from Liverpool, Queenstown, Southampton, Bremen, Rotterdam, Havre, Paris, London, Edinburgh, Dublin, Belfast, Glasgow, Londonderry, Hamburg, Berlin, Antwerp, Brussels, Basle, Zurich, Geneva, Milan, Turin, Florence, Rome, Naples, Vienna, Trieste, Venice, Constantinople, Alexandria, Cairo, Suez, Aden, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon, Singapore, Hong Kong, Shanghai, Yokohama, Nagasaki, Amoy, Foochow, Manila, Sydney, Melbourne, Auckland, Honolulu, Panama, Aspinwall, Havana, Mexico, Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo, Valparaiso, Lima, and all other principal points in the world.
Apply at the Company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.
oct8 DAVIDSON & IRWIN, Agents.

BILLIARDS!
MESSRS. PHELAN & COLLENDER,
THE WELL KNOWN BILLIARD TABLE MANufacturers, of the Original establishment,
511 Market street, San Francisco,
An extensive branch of their business, where they will be pleased to receive orders for the best, and most complete assortment of Billiard Tables, Cues, etc.,
ON THIS COAST.
THE TABLES are of the latest styles and are recently adopted in the Eastern States; are manufactured from the best seasoned materials, and by PHELAN'S RECENTLY IMPROVED CUSHIONS, will be of perfect playing qualities, and the prices fully as low as any other buyer in the business. Warerooms and Factory, 511 Market street, San Francisco.
Warerooms and Factory, 511 Market street, San Francisco.
P. B.—The public are notified that no other parties are in any way connected with Phelan & Collender.

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS
AND
LOAN SOCIETY
Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Market streets.
OFFICERS:
President.....M. D. SWEENY
Secretary.....C. D. O'SULLIVAN
TRUSTEES:
M. D. SWEENY, C. D. O'SULLIVAN, JOHN SULLIVAN, R. J. TOBIN, D. J. STANTON, P. McGRAN, GENEVIEVE TOUCHARD, JOS. A. DONAHOE, PETER DONAHUE
President.....EDWARD MARTIN
Attorney.....RICHARD TOBIN
Remittances from the country may be sent through Wells, Fargo & Co's Express office, or any reliable express company, which they will be responsible for their safe delivery. The deposits of those who should accompany his first deposit, a depositor book will be delivered to the agent by whom the deposit is made.
Deposits received from $1 upwards.
OFFICE HOURS—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

JOSEPH A. DONOHOE, New York. RICHARD KELLY, New York.
DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE KELLY & CO.,
NEW YORK
BANKERS
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON
BANK OF IRELAND.....DUBLIN
Payable at all the Branches,
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.
GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS
P. H. CANAVAN
IMPORTER OF
WINES, BRANDIES
Etc., Etc.,
N.W. COR. CALIFORNIA & FRONT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.
JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.
Fire-proof Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington
SAN FRANCISCO.
Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Refined Sugar, Old Tom and Holland Gin, Cordials, etc. Also, Goshen's native California Wines and Brandies. sep17-1y
M. H. KELLY. JOHN EGAN.
Kelly & Egan
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson, SAN FRANCISCO.
M. B. DOLAN
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN
FRENCH WINES AND BRANDIES,
Irish Whisky,
Imported direct from Ireland.
HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTment of California Wines of every description, which he will dispose of at bulk or by the case at the lowest rates.
All orders left at the store, 143 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge to any part of the city. aug6

B. CONNELL & CO.
(Successors to P. Riley & Co.)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
No. 806 FRONT STREET.

B. A. O'CONNELL,
WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER
195 Third Street, Near Howard.
He will examine your Watch or Clock free of charge, and if repairs are necessary will guarantee to put it in order at very moderate prices, and satisfactorily.
Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Watches, Clocks Jewelry, and Plated Ware, as good and cheap as can be had in the city. All kinds of Jewelry made to order.
Please give him a trial. All work warranted.
W. B. MALONEY, 31 MARKET
Street, Pioneer Block, No. 7, Sansome street, between Pine and Bush, San Francisco, Importer and Dealer in Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silver and Plated Ware, and Musical Instruments, Sewing Machines, Etc. Particular attention paid to repairing fine watches, clocks and jewelry. All work warranted for one year. Country orders promptly attended to. Please call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere. sep24-1y

THE MONITOR:
A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO
Irish and Catholic Literature
AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, BY
LYONS & BARRY.
DENIS LYONS. JOHN BARRY.
OFFICE—522 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Rooms 7, 8 and 9, up-stairs.)
DENIS LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER
☞ All communications, whether relating to the business or editorial department, should be addressed to "LYONS & BARRY."
ONLY IRISH and CATHOLIC JOURNAL IN CALIFORNIA.
TERMS (Payable in Advance):
Mail Subscribers, per year.....$3 00
Served by Carriers, per week.....12½
CLUB RATES:
Club of 10, in advance.....$25 00
Club of 20, in advance.....50 00
And one paper free to the person who gets up each club.
JOB PRINTING of every description executed at the lowest rates.

The Excommunication of the Italian Government.

The Papal Encyclical excommunicating the Italian Government is addressed to the whole body of Catholic Bishops throughout the world, and bears the date of the 1st of November. After an historical abridgment of the different attacks made at various intervals by the Piedmontese Government against the Sacred See, the Pontiff declares that the most grievous of all these aggressions, and proceeds to paint the idyllic happiness and parochial state of the Papal subjects in Rome before the final assault. Then it continues as follows:

"Well, our people were in the enjoyment of peace and tranquility, when the Subalpine King and his Government, subverting their opportunity and profiting by the dissensions which had broken out between two very powerful European nations (one of which had been instrumental in obtaining a formal recognition on the part of the King and his Government that the existing state of ecclesiastical rule should not be violated by factions and should be preserved untouched), decided all on a sudden upon invading the rest of the lands belonging to our territory, as well as the Holy Itself, and getting them into their power. But why this hostile invasion? What motives are adduced for such a proceeding? The facts contained in the King's letter dispatched on the 8th of September, and delivered into us by his messenger, are unquestionably well known to every one. By an artful and deceitful circumlocution and turning of words and sentiments, in which the terms 'loving son' and a 'faithful' are ostentatiously displayed and profusely made use of, and under the very pretext of serving public order, the Pontificate itself, and our person, we were requested not to look upon the independence of our temporal power as a hostile and criminal action, and to yield up our power, concessions to the futile promises made by the King himself, which it was asserted, would reconcile the wishes of Italy with the rights of the supreme right and liberty of the spiritual Roman Pontiff. But really, we could not be otherwise than taken by surprise and were greatly astonished to see under what pretext they proposed to us that we should be content to perpetrate with regard to us; nor could we help pitying from the bottom of our heart the fate of Italy, the dignity of the Italian monarchy, if the lat

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

"Red Wright's" Ministry.

At the Southwark Police Court, London, Mr. G. M. Murphy, the minister of the Borough Road Congregational Chapel, and one of the unsectarian candidates of the Metropolitan School Board, waited on Mr. Benson, for his assistance under the following circumstances: The reverend gentleman said that he had for some years worked very hard among the lower orders, and the working classes in the vicinity of the New Cut, where, some time ago, a converted Irishman, called himself Ned Wright, held meetings at a place called the Gospel Hall, in the New Cut. He had, nothing to say against those gatherings, but he wished to call his worship's attention to advertisements in the Christian and other religious papers, inserted by Mr. Wright, or by his orders, calling on the public for subscriptions to enable him to carry on his work in the Gospel Hall; whereas he had not used that building since September last. An article also appeared in the Record and Freed, a monthly magazine conducted by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, calling Ned Wright the Apostle of the New Cut, there by calling on the benevolent to supply him with funds. Mr. Benson asked if Mr. Wright ever carried on religious services in the New Cut. Applicant replied he did so afternoons and his worship might recollect that he brought his hearers together by supplying them with soup, thereby encouraging spiritual frictations with other matters. Mr. Benson asked him if he thought Mr. Wright was improperly collecting subscriptions. He should think the few Mr. Wright must be aware of what he was going on before he allowed such an article to appear in his work. On looking over the names placed before him he found among other influential names those of Messrs. Isaacs & Son. Cannon street, City, and he was sure those gentlemen would not subscribe to funds unless they knew that they were applied properly. Mr. Murphy supposed they were not aware that Mr. Wright was not connected with the Gospel Hall or working in the New Cut. Mr. Benson observed that a question of importance respecting the manner in New Cut was pending in this court regarding Sunday trading and other obstructions, and some one may have spoken to Mr. Wright and others of his class. It may be that whatever money he received he disposed of faithfully. Mr. Murphy had no complaint to make of that, but he considered it was not applied in the New Cut according to his appeal, and he thought the public ought to know it.

Postal Marriage Laws.

The case of Hill vs. Hibbit, decided on appeal from a judgment of Vice-Chancellor Malins by the Lord Chancellor the other day, adds another illustration to the multitude previously existing of the nature and operation of the marriage laws of Scotland. Although they have a superficial appearance of complexity, the facts which were in issue are extremely simple enough. The point the Court had to determine was whether Sarah Jane, the daughter of James Hay and Harriet Hibbit, was legitimate or illegitimate, and, consequently, whether she was entitled to succeed to a share, or to one of the next of kin, in the distribution of the property of Harriet Hibbit, who died intestate, and was the brother of Harriet Hibbit or Hay, who is also deceased. There was no question of fact as to the age of Harriet Hibbit at the time of the ceremony of marriage together, that fact having been proved by a witness named Sloss, that "one day last summer he was dining before the Alhambra, Leicester-square, when he met Miss Hay, a former acquaintance of his, and Harriet Hibbit, who was alive at the time of the pretended marriage with Harriet Hibbit, and, indeed, is still alive, although a lunatic and unmarried as a widows. It was said that the marriage in question had been celebrated in London. But of this there was no evidence except a partially erased entry by James Hibbit in a family Bible. The point, however, had resided in Scotland for a considerable period, where they represented themselves to be, and were supposed to be, man and wife. The Lord Chancellor, following Vice-Chancellor James' opinion, held that by these circumstances a marriage had been created between them by "habit and repute," and that therefore their marriage between James Hay and Harriet Hibbit was a valid and binding bargain. It was proved that after leaving Scotland and going to reside in the United States, Miss Hibbit assumed the maiden name, and continued to bear it for upwards of thirty years. That perhaps much weight could not be attached to this on account of her insanity. The case is a melancholy and edifying one. Still it will not be without use if it should help to put these questions in a clear light. Mr. Bright's resignation has created a good deal of the impression which at one time, at least, appeared to be shared by many in England, that Mr. Gladstone's Coercion Acts meant the real obstacle to a continuance of the union between the Government which originated them and honest John Bright.

FRANCE.

A Patriotic Priest.

A correspondent of the Standard tells a story of a terrier which recently saved the life of a wounded French soldier who had been carried by a ball in the chest, near Ham, and lay on the ground for six hours when the fighting was over. He had not lost consciousness, but his blood was running freely, and he was gradually getting weaker. There were none but the dead near him, and his only living companion was the terrier, who prowled restlessly about him with his master's cap in his mouth. At last the dog set off at a trot, and the wounded soldier made sure his only friend had deserted him. The night grew dark, the cold was intense, and he had not even the strength to bind up his wounds, which every instant grew more and more painful. At length his limbs grew cold, and feeling a sickly faintness steal upon him he gave up all hope of life and recommended himself to God. Suddenly, and when it had come in the words, he heard a bark, which he knew belonged to only one little dog in the world, but something else in his face, and saw the glare of lanterns. The dog had wandered for miles till he arrived at a roadside cabaret. The people there had heard the cannonading all day, and seeing the dog in the dog's face in, and noticing his restless movements, decided to follow him. He took them straight to the spot—not straight for a little—but they had enough with them to cross fields and hedges—but just in time. When the friendly help arrived the man fainted, but he was saved.

Hard Times.

Here is a copy of some lines found in a blank page of a letter from his cousin on a Saxon soldier named Birnbaum, of the 109th regiment: Order of the day of our troops before Paris. Four A. M.—Salute from the Parisian shells. Five A. M.—Milkless coffee, gruellous of strength. Six A. M.—Godsend of a sweet bath tub. Contents gratefully received and appropriated to the manufacture of tobacco. Seven to eight A. M.—Hunger. Nine A. M.—Roofing potatoes. Ten A. M.—Potato hunt fruitless. Eleven A. M.—Hunger again. Midday.—Dinner, consisting of delicious grapes, potatoes and crust of bread. Music, supplied by a company from Paris. Excellent orchestra. One P. M.—Gulped ditty. Two P.M. Balloon hunting. Three P. M.—Hunt of a carrier pigeon.

Person, if thou be'st carrier, thy chance is not big,
But tragic, if a soup thou find'st in thy tin tag.

Four P. M.—We catch two sparrows and a rat that was watching them. Five P. M.—Praying valiant leaves for our next pipeful. Six P. M.—Vesper hymn by the cannon of all the forts. Seven P. M.—Hunger. Supper, hunger over again. Eight P. M.—Illumination by the electric sun from the forts. Nine P. M.—Sleep. Hunger. Shells all around. Hunger and hunger again.

General Chassy.

"Nothing," as we have said, "succeeds like success;" and now that General Chanzy has won his laurels and revived the military traditions of the First Empire, encomiums are showered on him from all quarters. The Paris Mail Gazette congratulates the French on having, for the first time since the beginning of the war, a General who can both fight and manœuvre, and an army which can retire as well as attack. The Times' correspondent, writing from his head-quarters, remarks that the French have got a General who seems to know when he has got a good position and how to hold it." That was the opinion in Prince Frederick Charles' camp after eight days's fighting. "It cannot escape remark," says the military critic of the Daily Telegraph, "that Chanzy's retreat has been conducted in a most masterly manner." The same opinions are scattered broadcast through the correspondence published in England. Chanzy's praise is on every pen, and he appears to have fully deserved the credit given him. He is young, bold and skilful. "What," asks one writer, "if he should prove to be another Napoleon? Certainly there must be genius and military talent among the officers of France. What if it has at length revealed itself?" We can fancy Bismarck's shudder as the question suggests itself to his imagination.

Incidents of the War.

A writer to the Paris Star says that it is the recent engagements outside Paris a Prussian battery fired intentionally on the French troops, and mowed down the men. Five times the Zouaves advanced to take the guns, five times they were repulsed. At last the officer gave orders to sound the retreat. An old Zouave pushed forward from the ranks and said, "Pardon, mon officier, but if we retreat like this, they will say we are cowards." The officer looked at his men, and changed the order into "En avant." This time the point was gained, the artillerymen were killed at their posts, and the battery captured. A few days after, the writer visited the wounded at Fontenay-aux-Roses, and found the old Zouave and his officer in the same room. The soldier was triumphant, and was demonstrating to the officer that it was always possible to take the cannon if will be happens. "And next time I'll remember it," the officer replied, "and I'll command in the action, and had suffered amputation in consequence.

Disciplined.

Among the wounded who came into Paris after the sortie, were two Mobiles, the one a sergeant, the other a private, both sitting side by side on the bank. Generally speaking, on such occasions the usual distinctions disappear, and there would have been nothing strange had the two soldiers treated each other on a footing of equality; but what quite surprised the ambulance men and the assistants was the extreme deference shown by the sergeant to his comrade. A captain of the line who had also come into the saloon by accident, asked the Mobile the reason, the private answered, "Monsieur, I am rich, and, consequently, I had not to become a coachman and a valet de chambre. After the disaster of Sedan-ville, I enlisted in the Mobiles with my servants, and as my coachman, whom you see, had already been a soldier, he was appointed sergeant at the last election; but although thus become my superior, he will give up his old habits, no matter what I do or say."

An Exploit of General Ducrot.

A letter from Paris says that in the recent sortie General Ducrot rode forward at the head of his Staff and, with a cavalry escort, made a dash at a Prussian regiment, and with his own sabre killed a staunch of a Prussian Colonel and broke it to short off at the hilt, leaving but a few inches imbedded in his foe. This dashing exploit cost him dear, while-de-camp was put hors de combat; Narvaez was severely wounded in the arm, and one of his cheeks shot away; and two-thirds of the staff had their saddles emptied. He rode up to us in an hour later, and apologized to us for having presented the Prussians with the sabre of his uncle. He showed us the hilt, which had but a couple of inches stump left. At that moment General Trochu came up with his Staff, shook General Ducrot warmly by the hand, and told him that deeds such as he had done that day would be promptly recorded in the annals of French military history, rich in glory as they were.

A Good Priest.

Dr. Russell, the Times correspondent, tells of a person whose name he spells a "gonran of—who, from Sedan to the field before Paris, is continually seen on the track of the wounded. He has neither carriage nor horse, but, staff in hand, follows in the wake of battle, and, with the relish of a high-bred Parisian who has been accustomed to a woman, brings consolation to the dying. He is a French Redemptorist priest. I cannot tell," says the correspondent, "how often I have met him on his mission of charity. The other morning he said cheerily came upon me close to the battlefield, and asked very where were the wounded. He had walked about twenty miles that morning. He is paid by no government; he is a stranger to the whole war—a priest of God's." Mr. Dominick O'Donnell—This is to warn you to allow your tenants to burn land in future, as the grave will be your bed.—Captain O'Rourk's." Mr. Dominick O'Donnell at once proceeded to the police barracks, and gave the notice to Constable Bagley. During the night Sub-Inspector Hume, Constable Bagley, and other constables came to Mr. O'Donnell's house, and demanded admittance. The ball-door was at once opened, and Mr. Hume said he had a very unpleasant duty to perform—that he had a warrant to search all the drawers and desks in the house for papers, as it was suspected that the two threatening notices were written by some person residing in the house. The constables then opened Mr. Dominick O'Donnell's desk, and examined all the letters and papers which they found in it. They next directed that the desk of the youngest Miss O'Donnell should be opened, and threatened to break it open if necessary. The young lady complied, and Sub-Inspector Hume examined every letter found in the desk, one of which and an envelope he took away with him. The constables next proceeded to the bedrooms, and searched drawers and boxes, comparing each paper they found with the threatening notices in their possession. The plaintiff says, who returned home about this time, inquired what was the meaning of the police searching the house, and Mr. Hume informed him that they had a warrant from Mr. Mooney to search the house, as it was suspected that the writer of the two threatening notices resided there. Mr. O'Donnell then went to the house of the Rev. Mr. Constable, the curate of the parish, and brought him to the house, in order that he might witness what the police constables were doing. The learned counsel said that was the cause of action, and, in his opinion the entry of the police into Mr. O'Donnell's house was an illegal and unjustifiable act, for the statute distinctly provided that no houses could be broken into unless it had been distinctly sworn that the writer of the scurrilous and wicked letter resided in the house. Notice of action was served on the Rev. Gilt of Ayre, and on Mr. Bagley, and Mr. Mooney had been asked for copies of the informations on which he made the warrant to enter the house, and also for the name of the person or persons who gave the information, but he (plaintiff) was informed that the information could not be given. Counsel then read an information made by Constable Begley, on which the warrant was issued, and which stated that he believed that the threatening notices were written by some person in the house. This counsel submitted was insufficient evidence on which to issue a warrant, which caused so much annoyance to the plaintiff and his family; and he called on the jury to award his client substantial damages.

Mr. James O'Donnell, the daughter of Miss Alicia and Margaret O'Donnell—were examined, and deposed in the circumstances under which Mr. Hume and the constables carried out the search. It was admitted in cross-examination that Mr. Hume stated that he wished to discharge his duty with as little inconvenience as possible, and that he (plaintiff) had given up various battles in France; and had she resisted the incorporation with Prussia, she would have been isolated, and placed in an untenable position. A very probable rumor is in circulation as to the proximate establishment of an Apostolic Nunciature in Prussia. The Archbishop of Posen is named as likely to be the first Nuncio.

An Enemy's Testimony.

Herr Wirkede, writing to the Odense Gazette, says: "The single Frenchman is usually amiable, polite, open to any opinion clearly put before him; and even now, amid an embittered war, and in a hostile country, I would far rather, as a rule, have intercourse with the French than with many German cigar-vendors, horse-dealers, adventurers hoping for appointments—in short, with the great mass of the so-called Germans who, under the guise of patriotism, seek only their personal advantage, frequently in very petty matters. I must, however, a dozen Frenchmen come to-

ITALY

Mysterious Present to the Pope.

A letter from Rome says: "Rich gifts continue to pour in upon the Pope every day or two ago he was sitting alone, when he suddenly perceived at his side a veiled lady, who, as he looked up, sank on her knees and presented him with a casket of gold. Astonished that no one could come into his saloon unannounced, the Holy Father waited for an explanation; but the mysterious stranger merely said, 'Pope and King, I am a Genoese lady of the first family in the country. At a place now called Monsignor Ricci, and in Turner Gallery, or the Battle Ridge, there exists a vast cemetery, tumulus, or Danish mound. Irrespective of the value of the two thousand pounds, it is in itself an extraordinary gorgeous casket, richly set with precious stones, and gravel of an ancient sea-beach, and interested from it up to the Castledelingham and Holy Father drew from it an ivory crucifix of exquisite workmanship."

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

Constabulary Sodgers.

The case of Dennehy O'Donnell and Crampton was tried in Dublin during December, before Lord Chief Justice Whiteside and a special jury. This action was brought by the plaintiff, Mr. James O'Donnell, of Kilcommon, in the county of Mayo, to recover damages from the defendants, who are justices of the peace for that district, for causing his house to be broken into and searched, and for the carrying away of certain letters and documents. Damages were laid at £5,000. The defendants pleaded not guilty to the action, and to say the plaintiff's claim. Counsel for the plaintiff—Messrs. Robinson and Meiser. Defendants—Mr. McCormick. For the defendants—The Solicitor-General, Mr. R. P. Carton, instructed by Mr. N. Davis. Mr. Robinson, in stating the case, said the plaintiff, Mr. O'Donnell, was a gentleman possessed of some property in Belmullet, county of Mayo. The defendants complained since the beginning of April last, and it was alleged that Mr. O'Donnell had prohibited his tenants from burning the land, which was a process injurious to the land. On the night of the 5th of April, Dominick O'Donnell, the plaintiff's son, who had a notice served on him that day, by the bailiff of the estate, that he had formed by his eldest sister that she had received a notice signed "Rock," and took the paper in his hand, and read the following threatening notice: "Mr. J. O'Donnell—This is to warn you to allow your tenants to burn land in future, as the grave will be your bed.—Captain O'Rourk's." Mr. Dominick O'Donnell at once proceeded to the police barracks, and gave the notice to Constable Bagley. During the night Sub-Inspector Hume, Constable Bagley, and other constables came to Mr. O'Donnell's house, and demanded admittance. The ball-door was at once opened, and Mr. Hume said he had a very unpleasant duty to perform—that he had a warrant to search all the drawers and desks in the house for papers, as it was suspected that the two threatening notices were written by some person residing in the house. The constables then opened Mr. Dominick O'Donnell's desk, and examined all the letters and papers which they found in it. They next directed that the desk of the youngest Miss O'Donnell should be opened, and threatened to break it open if necessary. The young lady complied, and Sub-Inspector Hume examined every letter found in the desk, one of which and an envelope he took away with him. The constables next proceeded to the bedrooms, and searched drawers and boxes, comparing each paper they found with the threatening notices in their possession. The plaintiff says, who returned home about this time, inquired what was the meaning of the police searching the house, and Mr. Hume informed him that they had a warrant from Mr. Mooney to search the house, as it was suspected that the writer of the two threatening notices resided there. Mr. O'Donnell then went to the house of the Rev. Mr. Constable, the curate of the parish, and brought him to the house, in order that he might witness what the police constables were doing. The learned counsel said that was the cause of action, and, in his opinion the entry of the police into Mr. O'Donnell's house was an illegal and unjustifiable act, for the statute distinctly provided that no houses could be broken into unless it had been distinctly sworn that the writer of the scurrilous and wicked letter resided in the house. Notice of action was served on the Rev. Gilt of Ayre, and on Mr. Bagley, and Mr. Mooney had been asked for copies of the informations on which he made the warrant to enter the house, and also for the name of the person or persons who gave the information, but he (plaintiff) was informed that the information could not be given. Counsel then read an information made by Constable Begley, on which the warrant was issued, and which stated that he believed that the threatening notices were written by some person in the house. This counsel submitted was insufficient evidence on which to issue a warrant, which caused so much annoyance to the plaintiff and his family; and he called on the jury to award his client substantial damages.

Mr. James O'Donnell, the daughter of Miss Alicia and Margaret O'Donnell—were examined, and deposed in the circumstances under which Mr. Hume and the constables carried out the search. It was admitted in cross-examination that Mr. Hume stated that he wished to discharge his duty with as little inconvenience as possible, and that he (plaintiff) had given up various battles in France; and had she resisted the incorporation with Prussia, she would have been isolated, and placed in an untenable position. A very probable rumor is in circulation as to the proximate establishment of an Apostolic Nunciature in Prussia. The Archbishop of Posen is named as likely to be the first Nuncio.

An Enemy's Testimony.

Herr Wirkede, writing to the Odense Gazette, says: "The single Frenchman is usually amiable, polite, open to any opinion clearly put before him; and even now, amid an embittered war, and in a hostile country, I would far rather, as a rule, have intercourse with the French than with many German cigar-vendors, horse-dealers, adventurers hoping for appointments—in short, with the great mass of the so-called Germans who, under the guise of patriotism, seek only their personal advantages, frequently in very petty matters. I must, however, a dozen Frenchmen come to-

GERMANY.

The German Empire

is now an accomplished fact. Following is the address which is to be presented by a deputation of the North German Parliament to King William, at Versailles. It was adopted by 191 ayes against six noes: "Most Illustrious and Most Mighty King, Most Gracious King and Master—At the call of your Majesty the people have rallied around its leader, and heroically defends on foreign soil the Fatherland, which had been wantonly challenged. The war demands immeasurable sacrifice, but the deep grief at the loss of her brave sons does not shake the determined resolution of the nation, who will not lay aside her arms till peace is assured by security, and better protected frontiers, against the recurring attacks of her jealous neighbor. Thanks to the victories to which your Majesty has led the armies of Germany in faithful companionship of arms, the nation looks forward to an enduring unity. The North German Parliament, in unison with the Princes of Germany, approaches with the prayer that your Majesty will deign to consummate the work of unification, by restoring the Imperial Crown of Germany. The Teutonic Crown on the head of your Majesty will inaugurate for the regaining-established empire of the German nation, an era of power, of peace, of well-being, and of liberty, secured under the protection of the laws. The Fatherland thanks its leaders and the glorious army, at the head of which your Majesty still dwells on victorious battle-fields. The devotion and the deeds of its sons will be remembered forever. May it soon be vouchsafed that the Emperor, crowned with glory, shall restore peace to the nation. United Germany has proved itself mighty and victorious in war, undertakership of its supreme commander! The United German Empire will be mighty and peace-loving under its Emperor. Your Royal Majesty's most humble and most faithfully obedient,—The Reichstag of the North German Bund." Bavaria, absent of the Southern States, has obtained such concessions as preserve to her, for a time at least, the semblance of independence. She had no option, however, in the matter. One half her army has spent its blood in the various battles in France; and had she resisted the incorporation with Prussia, she would have been isolated, and placed in an untenable position. A very probable rumor is in circulation as to the proximate establishment of an Apostolic Nunciature in Prussia. The Archbishop of Posen is named as likely to be the first Nuncio.

An Enemy's Testimony.

Herr Wirkede, writing to the Odense Gazette, says: "The single Frenchman is usually amiable, polite, open to any opinion clearly put before him; and even now, amid an embittered war, and in a hostile country, I would far rather, as a rule, have intercourse with the French than with many German cigar-vendors, horse-dealers, adventurers hoping for appointments—in short, with the great mass of the so-called Germans who, under the guise of patriotism, seek only their personal advantages, frequently in very petty matters. I must, however, a dozen Frenchmen come to-

A WALK BEFORE BREAKFAST.

"Hooop!" laughingly said Alfred; so,
Laughing, she stooped, the while she played
In her straw hat a new simplicity.
The sunny out age wall had grazed,
So long the path to fix right.
That Uncle's mother, whom they deemed Asleep, appeared. "Why, bless my sight!
You very early birds I should demand!
But now for a walk, my lad and lass.
And back to breakfast soon. You'll guess
The ones to merely hearing pass
Yonder, the Eight O'clock Express."

The summer morn was bright and calm—
Each feathered songster well was with them.
From meadows high some milky lamb
Bleated—some rustic smoke rose blue
Remotely opened the misty brow.
And mist still veiled the new-mown hay,
As by the gates basked Bullyard two
They heed their love delighted way:
And, whispering now, now silently,
Paced the congenial quietness,
Forgetting all beneath the sky
Beside the Eight O'clock Express.

"Now were alone, my dearest one,
Tell me, when shall I lay me rest
Upon your heart?" "Ah, dear, I know not Upon your heart? Ah, dearest one,
Can love be sure, except for the present?
Shall it be next week, or the next?
Why should our wedding be delayed?
Either day, pressing to be owned,
Or, with her crimson ribbon played,
And, pouting, said—" "Two months or four.
Or—five—I leave you with my mother."
Trifling with him—who had been more
Fond than the Eight O'clock Express.

And so they paced the grassy rigs
Which sloped along the line, until
Came in a curve, crossed by a bridge
Over a cutting, and stood still.
Bright silence seemed for leagues to reign
Along the rails, and none were near;
Repeated, said—"Well—next week—yes,"
While pale violets through his heart grew faith,
Swift as the Eight O'clock Express.

Now, Uncle, deemed girl, "he cried,
"Take my hearty thanks, and with it this"—
And clasping to his breast his bride,
Pressed on her lips love's long first kiss.
Faith seemed to whirl beneath their feet
That moment, and the very sense round—
The next, they knew with quick heart beat,
Tramp of ships of sound were close—Before down to the
Across the rail. "Dear Uncle, excuse—" mouned
Alas!—it—then my God know—"
Fast he a—then—" Alfred's voice
Thunder'd the Eight O'clock Express.
Nation.

THE DOUBLE PROPHECY;

OR,

TRIALS OF THE HEART.

BY WILLIAM CARLETON

CHAPTER II.

Mrs. Clinton's Interest in Maria, and the Very Original Love of Wilhaus Wallace, the Young Blacksmith.

The figure of Maria Brindsley gradually developed itself into all the exquisite proportions of a Grecian statue, with drapery and ringlets. She was, she grew up, she became not merely the most beautiful, but the most accomplished young woman in the neighborhood. Nor was her beauty confined to that contracted limit. Her light, agile and graceful step, was a charm even of a book; and when playing on the green; her sylph-like motions reminded one of those of the fawn or antelope. She flew rather than ran; and her hair, which in the lassate warmth and excitement which resulted from the free and boundless enjoyment of exercise, it was impossible to look at it without feeling one's self literally enchained by a species of enchantment. Yet so full of sweetness and affection was her disposition, that notwithstanding the wonderful superiority of her beauty and person, she was never known to excite among young women the slightest feeling of envy, jealousy or ill-will. Her own sex were, in fact, her greatest admirers, and she was never known to frown as she was of a regular attendant, but always accompanied by her mother, and, indeed, of late, and ever since those disagreeable importunities had become so frequent, she never went anywhere unless under her protection, or the escort of some steady friend. Now, she led a most unconfortable and unpleasant life; and if it had been possible for her mother to leave the neighborhood altogether she would have done so. This, however, was out of the question. She could not think for a moment of removing from the reach of those friends, by whose counsel and kindness she and her child were supported in the exercise of her humble skill and industry.

About this time an old lady, in a distant part of the country, who had heard much of her beauty, and of the temptations to which she was in the habit of being subjected, after having made herself acquainted with the circumstances, drove to Mrs. Brindsley's cottage, and asked to see her.

"I wish," said she, "to have some private conversation with you; and it is, I think, of importance to yourself."

Mrs. Brindsley was somewhat embarrassed, because the only neat little parlor she had into which she could have asked her to enter, and that was their working room. She soon recovered her presence of mind, however, and requested the work women and her daughter to retire to the garden, until she should send for them. She then brought her visitor in, and placed a chair, asked her to sit down, and, having gazed through the window for a few minutes, she and Dr. Brindsley walking, she contemplated the former with apparently deep and earnest interest—an interest deeper than poor Mrs. Brindsley was aware of at the time, but which our readers will very soon understand.

This lady, whose name was Campbell by the name of Clinton, was a woman of high connections, both by her own family and that of her husband. She was a widow, and had her own circle, but she was kind, assuming, and peculiarly benevolent out of it. In many instances her influence of life she was liberal-minded, generous, and warm in her feelings and sentiments, and accomplished as well in her natural intellect as in her education. The amiable principle, however, was strong in her, and no woman living ever manifested a prouder disposition to maintain the doctrine of social caste than she did. Avice she was remarkable for an unusual degree of that artlessness of disposition and simplicity of character, which are uniformly inseparable from a kind and beneficent heart. Altogether, she was the most popular woman in that part of the country. Having given this slight sketch of her character, we proceed to detail the conversation which took place between her and Mrs. Brindsley.

"That is a beautiful girl of yours, Mrs. Brindsley," said Mrs. Clinton. "What do you intend to do with her? Don't you think it is time she was settled in life?"

"Why, ma'am," replied Mrs. Brindsley, "she is little more than a child yet—only entering her seventeenth year. As for marriage, she has no thoughts of it; and, besides, I can assure you, that no temptation or offer of that kind could ever induce her to leave me. She is the most affectionate and dutiful child that ever drew the breath of life; and, indeed, I scarcely think that I could part with her."

"Well, that is but natural, and I am not surprised at it. She is much spoken of."

"How, ma'am," replied her mother, alarmed—"not to her disadvantage, I trust?"

"Certainly not, Mrs. Brindsley, but for her good qualities and virtues; but especially for her extraordinary beauty. Now, I am come to speak to you as a friend; and let me tell you, Mrs. Brindsley, that placed as she is, without a father to protect her, beauty is a fearful gift to a female."

"Indeed, ma'am, I am not unaware of that; and if you wish to have your daughter improved in her business, I am sure I would gladly accommodate you. I would not for much consider it a trouble to have her with me for a few months, and I am sure she would be glad to improve herself in her business."

"Not exactly that, Mrs. Brindsley, but I am glad to hear you confirm what I have heard from other sources, because it will prepare you for what I have to say. I admit that many attempts have been made to lead her from the right path, but they have all failed, and she has made her mother's care and her mother's heart acquainted with every secret of her life."

"I am glad to hear you confirm what I have heard from other sources, Mrs. Brindsley; but I beg you to reflect that your daughter is very inexperienced, and ignorant of the wiles of men, and that, although she may have resisted so far, it is not impossible that the hour and tempter may come, at a moment when her own heart may betray her. Few, indeed, fall in this world under circumstances, whether in ambition or love, upon a first temptation, but, on the contrary, we well know that many have maintained long and severe struggles, yet have fallen at last. The great art of prudence, Mrs. Brindsley, is either to remove the danger or to avoid it. There is a beautiful author—an Irishman—named Goldsmith, whose advice is, that we ought to have recourse to flight—

"And when we cannot conquer, learn to fly."

Now, I say, you cannot remove the temptations from your daughter, but you may remove your daughter from the temptations."

"There is a great deal of truth in what you say, ma'am," replied Mrs. Brindsley; "but I do not like to hear anything that would weaken the trust of a mother in the virtue and purity of her children."

"May God forbid, Mrs. Brindsley, that ever I should do so; but I speak to you as a woman who has had more experience in life, and upon a much larger scale than you could possibly have had. I am, perhaps, better aware of the danger to which your daughter is exposed than you are, or than you can be. My son, the lieutenant, a young man—and a very handsome one, I can assure you—is now at home on a visit, and spends his whole time in the neighborhood, and, consequently, much alarmed."

The Roman Prebiscite Examined.

Our Protestant friends still assure us that the Roman plebiscite was a most complete piece of mockery. It must, consequently, be worthless as evidence. What could have been clearer than the plebiscite? What could prove more evidently that the Romans do not wish to be governed by the Pope, but that they are all for a united Italy? We beg of our contemporaries to take the trouble of reading the following calculation, which has been made by a correspondent to the Armonia: "A friend of ours, who was informed of the number of votes stated to have been given in Rome on the 2nd of October, 1870, has compared the length of time assigned for the voting with the number of persons required for receiving the votes, made a calculation as to how many persons a minute could be got to give their vote. The following is the result: Supposing that the result is worth noticing: The number of persons who voted—Yes, 40,-785; No, 46. Total, 40,831. The time appointed for the voting was ten hours—viz., from eight A. M. to six P. M. The number of urns was twelve in all. Simple sum in division 40,831 ÷ 12, or 10,931 by 5,200. The number of minutes in ten hours gives 600 as the first essay on an ideal subject, which was "Virgil reading the Æneid to Augustus." The first commission with which Moroney had been asked for copies of the informations on which he made the warrant to enter the house, and also for the name of the person or persons who gave the information, but he (plaintiff) was informed that the information could not be given. Counsel then read an information made by Constable Begley, on which the warrant was issued, and which stated that he believed that the threatening notices were written by some person in the house. This counsel submitted was insufficient evidence on which to issue a warrant, which caused so much annoyance to the plaintiff and his family; and he called on the jury to award his client substantial damages.

Mr. James O'Donnell, the daughter of Miss Alicia and Margaret O'Donnell—were examined, and deposed in the circumstances under which Mr. Hume and the constables carried out the search. It was admitted in cross-examination that Mr. Hume stated that he wished to discharge his duty with as little inconvenience as possible, and that he (plaintiff) had given up various battles in France; and had she resisted the incorporation with Prussia, she would have been isolated, and placed in an untenable position. A very probable rumor is in circulation as to the proximate establishment of an Apostolic Nunciature in Prussia. The Archbishop of Posen is named as likely to be the first Nuncio.

An Enemy's Testimony.

Herr Wirkede, writing to the Odense Gazette, says: "The single Frenchman is usually amiable, polite, open to any opinion clearly put before him; and even now, amid an embittered war, and in a hostile country, I would far rather, as a rule, have intercourse with the French than with many German cigar-vendors, horse-dealers, adventurers hoping for appointments—in short, with the great mass of the so-called Germans who, under the guise of patriotism, seek only their personal advantages, frequently in very petty matters. I must, however, a dozen Frenchmen come to-

Death of Mr. Patrick McDowell, R. A.

The Royal Academy has lost one of its most eminent supporters in the person of Mr. Patrick McDowell, R.A., who died at the close of his 70th year, after having attained his seventy-first year, was a native of Belfast, where he was born on the 13th of August, 1799. His father having met with some reverses of fortune, at the age of eight he was sent to a school at Ballyshannon, where the first symptoms of his genius displayed themselves in the production of art by the copying of such models as he could procure his own way. At twelve he went to England with his father, who had removed him to a coach-builder in Hampshire; but the boy's genius for art was not to be trammelled, and, fortune having sent to the neighborhood a French sculptor, he found an opportunity of improving himself in modelling, and only for an opportunity of developing that genius which he have been of age when we find him engaging a studio in Gloster Square, and setting up as a sculptor on his own account. The previous attempts, which were only partly successful, made his first essay on an ideal subject, which was "Virgil reading the Æneid to Augustus." The first commission with which Moroney had been asked for copies of the informations on which he made the warrant to enter the house, and also for the name of the person or persons who gave the information, but he (plaintiff) was informed that the information could not be given. Counsel then read an information made by Constable Begley, on which the warrant was issued, and which stated that he believed that the threatening notices were written by some person in the house. This counsel submitted was insufficient evidence on which to issue a warrant, which caused so much annoyance to the plaintiff and his family; and he called on the jury to award his client substantial damages.

Mr. James O'Donnell, the daughter of Miss Alicia and Margaret O'Donnell—were examined, and deposed in the circumstances under which Mr. Hume and the constables carried out the search. It was admitted in cross-examination that Mr. Hume stated that he wished to discharge his duty with as little inconvenience as possible, and that he (plaintiff) had given up various battles in France; and had she resisted the incorporation with Prussia, she would have been isolated, and placed in an untenable position. A very probable rumor is in circulation as to the proximate establishment of an Apostolic Nunciature in Prussia. The Archbishop of Posen is named as likely to be the first Nuncio.

An Enemy's Testimony.

Herr Wirkede, writing to the Odense Gazette, says: "The single Frenchman is usually amiable, polite, open to any opinion clearly put before him; and even now, amid an embittered war, and in a hostile country, I would far rather, as a rule, have intercourse with the French than with many German cigar-vendors, horse-dealers, adventurers hoping for appointments—in short, with the great mass of the so-called Germans who, under the guise of patriotism, seek only their personal advantages, frequently in very petty matters. I must, however, a dozen Frenchmen come to-

Academy; and a statue in marble for the late Lord Plunket, for Dublin.

Ireland and France.

The Univers of the 7th December publishes the following from the Archbishop of Tours:

TOURS, December 2, 1870.

MONSIEUR LE REDACTEUR: The publications already made that the people of Ireland offer up their prayers for our success. But they should also be informed that those prayers are not barren, and that that generous nation offers numerous offerings for the wounded and sick of our army. I have received donations from Dublin, from Limerick, Carrick-on-Suir, Ballingarry, and Kilkenny. This last city has sent me £369, which is a sum very considerable for its population. I know, moreover, that other Bishops situated as I am, near to the scene of war, have also received considerable sums of money for the same purpose. There can be nothing more admirable than the generous devotion of these good-hearted people, nor anything more touching than this holy confraternity. Many, when sending their contributions, invoke the memory of the great Saint Martin, in consideration of the intimacy which attached him to St. Patrick, the Apostle of their country. The sacrifices which the Irish make in order to manifest their sympathy for our unfortunate brethren, their determinations to carry it out in its entirety, are proclaimed in the magazines to the contrary notwithstanding; but they were not as good as their word. They declared, indeed, on Sunday at the election meetings, which were only partly successful, that no one should be elected to represent Ireland in the British Parliament who should not be a Fenian, and a Home Ruler, and a French sculptor, he found an opportunity of improving himself in modelling, and only for an opportunity of developing that genius which he have been of age when we find him engaging a studio in Gloster Square, and setting up as a sculptor on his own account. The previous attempts, which were only partly successful, made his first essay on an ideal subject, which was "Virgil reading the Æneid to Augustus." The first commission with which Moroney had been asked for copies of the informations on which he made the warrant to enter the house, and also for the name of the person or persons who gave the information, but he (plaintiff) was informed that the information could not be given. Counsel then read an information made by Constable Begley, on which the warrant was issued, and which stated that he believed that the threatening notices were written by some person in the house. This counsel submitted was insufficient evidence on which to issue a warrant, which caused so much annoyance to the plaintiff and his family; and he called on the jury to award his client substantial damages.

Mr. James O'Donnell, the daughter of Miss Alicia and Margaret O'Donnell—were examined, and deposed in the circumstances under which Mr. Hume and the constables carried out the search. It was admitted in cross-examination that Mr. Hume stated that he wished to discharge his duty with as little inconvenience as possible, and that he (plaintiff) had given up various battles in France; and had she resisted the incorporation with Prussia, she would have been isolated, and placed in an untenable position. A very probable rumor is in circulation as to the proximate establishment of an Apostolic Nunciature in Prussia. The Archbishop of Posen is named as likely to be the first Nuncio.

An Enemy's Testimony.

Herr Wirkede, writing to the Odense Gazette, says: "The single Frenchman is usually amiable, polite, open to any opinion clearly put before him; and even now, amid an embittered war, and in a hostile country, I would far rather, as a rule, have intercourse with the French than with many German cigar-vendors, horse-dealers, adventurers hoping for appointments—in short, with the great mass of the so-called Germans who, under the guise of patriotism, seek only their personal advantages, frequently in very petty matters. I must, however, a dozen Frenchmen come to-wealth, some of insinuating manners, handsome in person, and, very probably, profligate in principle; I say, Mrs. Brindsley, that when that beautiful girl of yours is placed, as she is, within a circle of temptations, at the most dangerous period of life, it is your duty to remove her beyond their reach if you can."

"Madam," replied Mrs. Brindsley, with something of the mother's indignant pride, "I am not afraid of my daughter. She has no love but that for me, her mother; and, besides, Mrs. Clinton, young as she is, she has the fear of God. I admit that many attempts have been made to lead her from the right path, but they have all failed, and she has made her mother's care and her mother's heart acquainted with every secret of her life."

"I am glad to hear you confirm what I have heard from other sources, Mrs. Brindsley; but I beg you to reflect that your daughter is very inexperienced, and ignorant of the wiles of men, and that, although she may have resisted so far, it is not impossible that the hour and tempter may come, at a moment when her own heart may betray her. Few, indeed, fall in this world under such circumstances, whether in ambition or love, upon a first temptation, but, on the contrary, we well know that many have maintained long and severe struggles, yet have fallen at last. The great art

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

January
21 Sun. Third Sunday after Epiphany.
22 Mon. St. San Moral, Confessor.
23 Tues. St. Timothy.
24 Wed. Conversion of St. Paul.
25 Thur. St. Polycarp, Bishop and Martyr.
26 Fri. St. John Chrysostom, Bishop and Conf.
27 Sat. St. Flavian, Martyr.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY.....JANUARY 21, 1871.

"THE MONITOR."—Any person having a copy of THE MONITOR for October 22, 1870, will confer a great favor by forwarding it immediately to this office. It is wanted to complete the file.

CONVENTION OF IRISH SOCIETIES.

On to-morrow, Sunday, there will be a Convention of Irish Societies, for the purpose of taking measures to secure a proper observance of Saint Patrick's Day. The idea is a capital one, and we trust it will be carried out in a manner satisfactory to all parties. We need hardly remind our countrymen of the necessity of ensuring harmony in their deliberations, and unanimity in their decision; for the evil effects of disunion are sufficiently well known to all of them. One of the most widespread calumnies against men of our race is that which represents them as incapable of uniting for the attainment of a common object, and extremely addicted to factious disputes. It will be in the power of those who meet to-morrow, to furnish at least one proof of the recklessness of the slander. It is not difficult to secure harmony in council, if men will only be a little tolerant of one another's differences of opinion, and give mutual credit for good and honorable intentions. When a petty sacrifice of one's own judgment on some unimportant matter may be the means of averting trouble and dissension, it seems to us astonishing that any true Irishman could be found unwilling to make it. We do not apprehend that there will be any such churlish or obstinate individuals in the Convention on Sunday next; but, as we are aware that on previous occasions inconvenience has been caused by that class of persons, we think it right to warn the well disposed against them. It is only necessary to call to mind the splendid demonstration which the enthusiasm derivable from united and harmonious action on the part of all of our Irish Societies. There could not possibly be a more pleasing or imposing demonstration of the number, influence and intelligence of our countrymen in San Francisco, than the grand display with which last St. Patrick's Day was honored. It is not too much to say that it reflected the highest credit on all concerned in it. We see no reason why the celebration of the coming 17th of March should not be quite as successful and satisfactory in every respect, and we think we can already discover some justification for expecting that it will be even superior in particulars. With regard to the expense attending these demonstrations, there are a few remarks which strike us as fit and proper to be brought under the notice of our readers, because they may have a very beneficial affect if attended to. Hitherto the cost of these national displays has been borne in very great measure by the workingmen of the city, who, as everybody knows, are not in the most flourishing circumstances, and can badly spare money for the mere purpose of unsubstantial gratification of their national pride. We hope to see this corrected in the future, and the Irishmen of wealth and position assuming their legitimate share in the burden of the day. Now is the time for the members of the lately formed "St. Patrick's Society" to come forth and show the public what they are capable of doing in such a cause. The programme which they have selected for themselves enumerates "the proper observance of St. Patrick's Day" as one of the objects to which their labors are to be directed. If, at this early stage of its existence, the Society does not care to take a prominent part in getting up the demonstrations, it might at least appoint a committee to collect subscriptions and in other ways coöperate with their fellow-countrymen who are engaged in the patriotic work. The last adjournment of the meetings of the "St. Patrick's Society" was until the first Wednesday in February, we believe, but a special meeting can readily be called, should it be deemed requisite to take action before that time arrives. Whether a special meeting is called or not, we hope the members of the Society, both individually and collectively, will do all in their power to make the celebration of next St. Patrick's Day every thing it ought to be.

[As we go to press we learn that a special meeting was called for Thursday evening last. The hour was too late to allow us to give any summary of what transpired in the present issue.]

THE BOMBARDMENT OF PARIS.

If the Germans themselves are to be believed, they are earning an imperishable right to be considered the most brutal and barbarous race in the world. They and their sympathizers are actually gloating over the unutterable horrors of the bombardment of Paris. The unction with which they tell stories of the Prussian shells killing wounded men in the hospitals, tearing women to pieces in the streets, and mangling infants in their mothers' arms, is truly revolting. It is only made more so by the thin veneer of conventional expressions of regret with which they attempt to disguise their exultation at this inhuman massacre. Bad enough would it be if they simply described the terrible sufferings of the beleaguered Parisians, but to season their narrative with a plentiful sprinkling of mock sympathy, is a baseness beyond all parallel. We have been told a great deal about King WILLIAM'S "humanity;" about his exceeding desire to spare the inhabitants of the French capital, and this is what it comes to—he has inaugurated the most unchristian, ruthless and savage bombardment of which modern history has any record. This "fine old fellow," this "bluff and hearty monarch," cannot be satisfied in his diabolical thirst for vengeance upon the French nation without a wholesale slaughter of women and children! It appears most astonishing to us how such a blood thirsty ruffian is allowed to cumber the earth for the space of five minutes. We cannot account for intelligent and reasonable beings allowing such a fiend in human shape to live and move among them. Heaven forbid that we should advocate tyrannicide or countenance assassination; but, when a wehr-wolf like WILLIAM of Prussia is let loose upon humanity, it becomes the duty of all who wish to preserve organization to take any and every means to crush the rabid breast. A genuine descendant of the "Berserkers" of old, his Royal majesty knows no keener pleasure than quaffing blood; and if he could only drink it, like the inhabitants of the fabled Valhalla, out of the skulls of his enemies, his paradise were found in this world. The bombardment of cities has long been regarded as the last and most desperate expedient in warfare. It has never been resorted to except under pressure of the direst necessity, and even then every possible means have been always taken to mitigate its horrors. Nearly two hundred years ago—that is to say, long before the sickly humanitarianism, of which the present age is so proud sprung, up—when the celebrated LUXEMBURG bombarded Brussels, he distinctly avowed his regret at being compelled to do so; declared it was solely by way of reprisal; stated that if the Allies refrained from similar proceedings thenceforward, he would do the same; hoped to follow their example; and, furthermore, gave timely warning of the commencement of the firing, so that the people might seek shelter. When the army of JAMES II. besieged Londonderry, due notice was given to the garrison, and all the women and children were permitted to pass unmolested through the investing lines. MACAULAY censures in the very strongest terms the French cook-mariner who even proposed that they should be kept inside the city. Coming down to our own times, any one at the age of manhood can recollect the storm of indignation which was raised throughout the civilized world when it became known that FRANCIS II. of Naples allowed the rebellious city of Palermo to be shelled for less than an hour by some of his war ships. This exploit earned for him a nickname, "BOMBA," which will probably stick to him as long as he lives, and be handed down to the execration of future ages. The English have not the reputation of being a very humane people in war, and yet when it was found out that the Russian hospital had been struck during the bombardment of Sebastopol, merely by accident, the utmost horror was expressed by all classes of the population, and it was imperatively commanded that every precaution be taken to prevent the recurrence of any similar mishap. This being the general practice with respect to bombardments, we may well ask what judgment posterity will pass upon King WILLIAM. He seems to estimate the excellence of the fiery storm to which he has been enabled to subject the great French city by the number of wounded soldiers that it kills in their beds, and of women and children that it crushes into shapeless masses of blood-stained flesh and bone. It is hard to speak with common patience of the men who allow themselves to be dragged from their homes, torn from their wives and families, in order that this ghoul may gratify his devil-inspired ambition. They are slaves in the lowest and most degrading sense of the word; for, if they had the smallest spark of honor, manliness or independence, they would never become tools of such a cruel and murderous despot. The Ashantee who crouches in abject terror at the foot of his Fetishman is as noble a specimen of humanity as the Prussian rushing blindly to murder and ravage at the word of his "Sovereign Lord and Master, the King." What is to become of liberty and civilization in Europe if such soulless, submissive, unquestioning and fanatical slaves become dominant on the Continent? What people have the slightest guarantee that the modern "Berserker" will not hurl the dense masses of his brutalized legions against them, and reduce their country to a condition as deplorable as that in which France now lies? It is high time for the men who love liberty, who have so long worked for the overthrow of despotism, to take counsel as to the best means of preserving society from the new dangers with which it is threatened, and also to preserve humanity itself from the attacks of the wolves—eaten each other up—to make it impossible for them, we say, to insult one section of our countrymen by wheedling another—to make them feel that they cannot afford to abuse the confidence of men. How is this to be done? we shall be asked. We see one clear solution of the whole difficulty, and that is a thorough and complete amalgamation of all our Social fusion growing daily more and more manifest, and that one strong, powerful organization of this kind, permitting none but the best men of each at the head of affairs, besides giving infinitely greater security to the members, would be capable of double, treble their present utility, is a fact that scarcely needs demonstration. For instance, with the amount now paid by all together as doctors' fees alone, interest may be paid on nearly a $100,000, with which sum the finest hospital on the Pacific coast may be erected, while we are assured by several of our most distinguished medical men, that it would be a pleasure to them to devote their time and best efforts to such an institution gratuitously—an advantage in one item alone from $700 to $800 a month. We recommend this project of amalgamation, with all the earnestness in our power, to the members of our Societies, and we beseech them not to be deterred from its execution by any petty trickery on the part of the small vampires, whom a union would annihilate. That, side by side with those noble monuments devoted to religion, education and charity, diffusing their beneficent influence throughout the length and breath of the fair domain of this Pacific slope, and filling each generous Irish heart with legitimate joy and pride that he, too, belongs to the same race and country as our glorious pioneers who wrought them—what a proud reflection for us all that our Benevolent Societies had added one more in the shape of the magnificent "St. Patrick's Hospital!"

The "Sacramento Union" and "The Monitor."

The brief interval elapsing between the receipt of Tuesday's Sacramento Union and our going to press, precludes us from desiring, as we would wish to do, this week, the full and fulsome article on the Excommunication Document. However, we hope to effectually dispose of the evasions, sophistries and misrepresentations therein contained in the next issue of THE MONITOR. Even at the risk of wearying our readers, and sacrificing space, which could easily be better employed, we feel compelled to probe this subject to the very bottom, and expose to the censure of the honorable and liberal-minded the calumnies which are incessantly ventilated against the Catholic Church. For the present we must content ourselves with securing our readers that there is no justification for connecting the Papacy with any of the dogmas so triumphantly put forward by the Union.

OUR BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

That we have here among us some dozen Irish Benevolent Societies, chiefly mutual, and embracing from three to four thousand members, is of itself no small proof of the intelligence of the great mass of our countrymen in this city. Most of these have been, in the main, so well conducted hitherto, that our duty was simply to stand aloof and admire, and we should most probably confine it to that, but that some recent developments, both within those societies and without them in other spheres, have admonished us of the fact that a little friendly interference on our part would not be quite out of place. This is all the more opportune at the present time, because quite recently one of them has "burst up," and, as usual, has thrown several most deserving poor families into a state of utter destitution. What has led to this result is the question that unavoidably forces itself upon us; and we have no hesitation whatever in replying—gross incompetency and petty perfidy. We have among us a whole tribe of small MOONEYS and MURPHYS, poor frivolous, hapless creatures, many of them, too, "gifts of speech," who assign themselves over by the capacity for low trickery—who consider themselves "smart" in proportion to their ability to gain and abuse the confidence of their honest, straightforward fellow-countrymen; and these being unable to control capital enough for even the show of a banking business, turn their weighty thoughts to the organizing of Benevolent Societies which are mutual! To the extent of merely serving the purposes of those contemptible petty cheats themselves. That we have at the head of some of our present existing societies several men of the most unsullied reputation, strong natural parts, and fine healthy Irish feeling—men who are at once a credit to the lands of their birth and adoption—we are well aware, and feel no less proud of the fact; but that individuals of quite a different stripe—creatures who are a disgrace to any country or community—govern some, is a fact no less certain and deplorable; and that some of the very best of them possess among their governing bodies some few artful pettifoggers, to whom every manly feeling is unknown, so quite estranged to the first principles of honor as even to hate or dread those possessing it, we have full and sufficient evidence to prove. We could show that men here in this town, taking an active part in the management of those societies, who, without Irish support, would quickly undergo all the discomforts of rapid starvation, never once fail to bolster up foreigners to the detriment of their own countrymen, when opportunity offers. We shall not now indulge in detail nor point to individuals—who, like Dead Sea fruit, would crumble to ashes in our hands—but to take one flagrant example, let us ask, Is it with the consent of the intelligent majorities of those societies, that only one or at most two of them, unlike the societies of any other nationality among us, can command the medical services of gentlemen of their own nation and blood? Is it with their consent that an individual, whose ignorance may be concealed by his ignorance of our language, should be habitually entrusted with the lives of themselves and families, while gentlemen of their own country, whose professional standing is beyond dispute, whose ability the general public so well appreciate, should be systematically discarded and insulted by a prefference of the former? We unhesitatingly answer, certainly not. The practice simply results from the corruption of the back-sliding little manipulators who never for an instant hesitate to injure or insult, as far as in them lays, their fellow-countrymen of every class, when their own base personal ends are to be attained. We cannot afford to waste speech on those poor creeping parasites, whose very exposure to open sunlight would befoul the air we breathe. For the sake of our common country we spare them, but we appeal to the intelligent masses of our Societies to check the growth of those unwholesome weeds—to make it impossible for those incapables who breathe, live and laving their being from Irish-men, who without the generous support of their countrymen in their various callings, would long since have met the fate of the starving wolves—eaten each other up—to make it impossible for them, we say, to insult one section of our countrymen by wheedling another—to make them feel that they cannot afford to abuse the confidence of men. How is this to be done? we shall be asked. We see one clear solution of the whole difficulty, and that is a thorough and complete amalgamation of all our Social fusion growing daily more and more manifest, and that one strong, powerful organization of this kind, permitting none but the best men of each at the head of affairs, besides giving infinitely greater security to the members, would be capable of double, treble their present utility, is a fact that scarcely needs demonstration. For instance, with the amount now paid by all together as doctors' fees alone, interest may be paid on nearly a $100,000, with which sum the finest hospital on the Pacific coast may be erected, while we are assured by several of our most distinguished medical men, that it would be a pleasure to them to devote their time and best efforts to such an institution gratuitously—an advantage in one item alone from $700 to $800 a month. We recommend this project of amalgamation, with all the earnestness in our power, to the members of our Societies, and we beseech them not to be deterred from its execution by any petty trickery on the part of the small vampires, whom a union would annihilate. That, side by side with those noble monuments devoted to religion, education and charity, diffusing their beneficent influence throughout the length and breath of the fair domain of this Pacific slope, and filling each generous Irish heart with legitimate joy and pride that he, too, belongs to the same race and country as our glorious pioneers who wrought them—what a proud reflection for us all that our Benevolent Societies had added one more in the shape of the magnificent "St. Patrick's Hospital!"

TRIUMPH OF CATHOLIC CHARITY.

However fearful a visitation may be such a war as that which France is now enduring on her soil, it is, at least, a crucial test of the different principles that are struggling for the mastery over the minds of her people. Catholicity, infidelity and Protestantism are all being weighed, and the two latter are found woefully wanting. The apostles of infidelity, like VICTOR HUGO, EDMOND ABOUT and ERNEST RENAN can distinguish themselves with the pen, and are matchless in grinding out bombastic proclamations and "progressive" cant, but they uniformly manifest a wholesale horror of the dangers of the battlefield, or the drudgery of the ambulances. Fireside philanthropy is, no doubt, highly effective as a rival to Catholic charity in the field of newspaperdom, and it is an easy task for enlightened modern philosophers to show how far they are ahead of the "dark ages" of Catholic faith, so long as powers of long are the only test of superiority; but it is when war and its attendants, famine and pestilence, come down in all their horrors on a people, that the power of Christian principles in elevating human nature can fairly be appreciated. Amid the smoke of battle and the heaps of wounded, we everywhere see the forms of priests and religious flitting on their mission of mercy to allay and soothe the horrors of death. And even the bitter foes of Catholicity are forced to admit that whatever ruin the corruption of Napoleon's Court may have wrought in France, it has failed to dry up the sources of Catholic charity. Alone among all the officers of the late imperial Court, the much maligned almoner of the Empress, Mgr. BAUER, is now to be found by the side of his country in her hour of peril, and risking his life as boldly as the bravest soldier of the gallant band of Pontifical Zouaves, who rivalled at Orleans the glories of ancient Marathon. The correspondent of the London Daily News, who has seen him at his work, describes him as bearing himself as calmly under the fire of the Prussians, as he did in his pulpit; while the Christian Brothers, whom the leading demagogues and "progressists" of Lyons thanked sneeringly, "for the present," for "having done their duty," as a dwelling in their city, are described as forming the very elite of the Ambulance Corps, by the accomplished correspondent of the Times. Even Bull Run RUSSELL, with all his sevenfold mantle of bigotry, is forced to pay an unwilling compliment to the devotion of a Benedictine whose course he has crossed near every battle-field from Sedan to Paris. The Christian Brothers alone furnish nearly eight hundred of their body to the service of the wounded, exclusive of the Sisters of Charity, the chaplains, and the thousands of other apostles of Catholicity, who have thrown themselves into danger. As a matter of course, no one hears anything of Protestant ministers in connection with the battle-field. Looking after the wounded and dying is no part of their "mission," and, on this point, to give them their due, they have entirely free from any desire to interfere in the occupations of the Catholic clergy. Even if it should produce no other good than to show to France and the world the practical difference between sham philanthropy and Catholic charity, this terrible war with its consequences can hardly be regarded as an unmixed evil, and the ultimate consequences may be far more beneficial to the cause of religion and France than any one can now venture to prophesy.

The Public Debt.

The following is a correct statement of the condition of the public debt of the United States at the beginning the new year:

| | |
|---|---|
| Debt bearing interest in coin | $ 433,342,700 00 |
| Interest accrued | 10,800,627 48 |
| Debt bearing interest in lawful money | 58,229,307 41 |
| Interest | 446,931 79 |
| Debt on which interest has ceased | 7,161,822 24 |
| Debt bearing no interest | 422,043,373 48 |
| Total debt | $ 1,442,130,206 40 |
| Total interest | $ 11,247,559 27 |
| Total debt, principal and interest | $ 1,453,377,765 67 |
| Amount in the Treasury | 130,096,272 41 |
| Total debt, less amount in Treasury | $ 1,323,281,493 26 |
| Decrease of debt during December, 1870 | $ 1,340,000 00 |
| Decrease of debt since March 1, 1870 | 106,206,881 42 |

MONEY'S BANK.—Many of our readers will be gratified by the assurance that we are reliably informed that the California Building and Loan Society will be able to pay dollar for dollar. A dividend of 25 per cent. will be declared in April, another dividend of 25 per cent. in May, and about six months thereafter 50 per cent.

PATRONIZE ADVERTISERS AND TAKE THIS PAPER.—Twenty thousand volumes of Catholic books, setting at comparative at H. C. Bateman's, 303 Kearny street, corner of Sutter.

Ordinations in New York.

ST. BONAVENTURE'S COLLEGE, Allegany county, N. Y., January 6, 1871.

EDITOR MONITOR: Knowing the interest you take in anything pertaining to the progress of Catholicity, I send you the following report, and you will confer a favor on the undersigned by publishing the same in THE MONITOR. The following students of St. Bonaventure's College were promoted to Tonsure, Minor Orders, Sub-Deaconship, Deaconship, and finally to Priesthood, Right Rev. Bishop Ryan conferred the Orders in the Cathedral at Buffalo during the Ember days. Subjoined is a list of those who were promoted to orders, ranked according to their dioceses. Promoted to Tonsure and Minor Orders, December 16th: John Concannon, diocese of Dubuque; Patrick L. Quaille, Springfield; Bernard McGivney and Fanel Briordy, Erie.

On the following day there were promoted to Subdeaconship—Revs. P. L. Quaille, diocese of Springfield; John Concannon, Dubuque; Bernard McGivney, Fanel Briordy and T. J. McManus, Erie; Peter Donlhoe, Buffalo; J. T. Costello, Scranton; J. H. Fitzpatrick and Michael O'Reilly, Albany.

Received Deaconship the following day: Revs. J. Concannon, diocese of Dubuque; J. T. Costello, Scranton; Peter Donohoe and J. Leddy, Buffalo; J. H. Fitzpatrick and Michael O'Reilly, Albany; T. J. McManus, Erie.

Were ordained Priests on the 17th, in the Seminary of our Lady of Angels, Niagara: Revs. H. M. Laddy, diocese of Buffalo; T. J. McManus, Erie.

I remain, Yours respectfully, P. L. Q.

Lecture by Colonel F. F. Walsh.

On Wednesday evening next, 25th inst., Col. P. F. Walsh will deliver a lecture, in Platt's Hall, on the subject of "Volunteer Military Organizations." We are sure the great importance of thoroughly discussing such a topic at the present time will be recognized by every intelligent citizen. The momentous events now transpiring in Europe prove that no country can consider itself secure unless its population is trained to the use of arms. We Americans may imagine that the broad Atlantic is a sufficient barrier against invasion, but the idea is a huge mistake. It would be sheer folly to risk the safety of the nation on the chances of an engagement at sea; but, if we were free from all apprehension on this score, prudence would, it seems to us, suggest that our citizens should all know how to use firearms, and possess at least some degree of military training, in order that they might aid and defend the supremacy of the laws and the integrity of the Republic. From Colonel Walsh's high repute as a lecturer, we feel confident that he will do every justice to his subject, and treat the audience to an exceedingly interesting discourse. The hundreds who listened so attentively to his lectures on "Ireland," will certainly be happy to hear him again. Colonel Walsh is unquestionably one of the most attractive lecturers who have entertained a San Francisco audience for a long period of time.

An "Irregularity."

Quite a stir has been created in the Sheriff's office, caused by the detection of a small "irregularity" in the working of the word "sending" practiced by an attaché of that office on a poor mariner. It appears that a man named Bailey was convicted of insanity, and ordered to Stockton Insane Commissioners of Lunacy. He had on his person at the time $32 50, of which the Deputy Sheriff appropriated $25 for expenses, thinking, no doubt, that insanity was only one remove from idiocy, and would know that dead men tell no tales. Bailey, however, was doomed to a better fate: he recovered, and with recovery a recollection of the trick that had been played upon him. He demanded his money, and his demand led to investigation, and the investigation elicited the facts stated. Considering that the city has also been robbed, we give them their due, and attending Mr. B.'s committal, we cannot help thinking that the $25 taken from him took place on the French right, or "irregularly" when a wood near the village of Bailey, January 13.—The bombardment was on the extreme left of the position, stretching for miles southward. The ground between Fort Issy and Thomas F. Stokes, Clerks: Marshin Hoel, formerly Acting Recorder, and William H. Lowrey, of ruining in between the two objects, and now of counsel for the New Brim Company.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

Business in the real estate line is lively at Santa Rosa and vicinity.

Thirty-four ships have loaded with wheat at South Vallejo.

The fare from San Francisco to Santa Rosa has been reduced to $2.

Nine and-a half miles of track on the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad have been completed.

The Mariposa Free Press says an Eastern company has purchased the Buchanan copper mine and will shortly reopen it.

Nine oranges—large, juicy and most excellent flavor—have been produced at Campo Seco, Calaveras county.

Fifty-nine newspapers in Idaho and cities on the Pacific coast have perished during the past year.

Two car loads of California-grown cotton were shipped East from Sacramento on the 17th.

At Deer Lodge, Montana, one hundred and twelve buildings were erected last year, at a cost of $214,950. This is a good showing for that young city.

The car robbers have been sentenced to thirty years imprisonment in the State Prison. Three names are—Daniel Taylor, Daniel Baker and Leander Morton.

The Arlisea rancho, of two square leagues, and the Heintzleman mine, near Tubac, Arizona, have been sold to General Ripley, of London, for half a million dollars.

More than half of the business portion of the town of Truckee was destroyed by fire, with its town hall and other public buildings on the morning of the 17th, in the Donner Hotel.

The thieves who burglarized J. W. Coffroth's residence, on the night of the 16th, had the politeness the next morning to return his mess suit, minus valuable papers found in the pockets of the clothes they stole.

The completion of the railroad to Santa Rosa, from Petaluma, or rather from Donahue, seven miles below Petaluma, has increased the travel greatly, the cars being filled with passengers on every trip.

The body of an old man named C. E. Campbell, who has been missing from Murphy's, Calaveras county, since New Year's Day, was found January 15th down a shaft, stabbed to the heart. He had resided at the Flat for fifteen years.

Maxwell, who walked with Kennovan on New Year's day, from San Francisco to Los Angeles and back for the Orphans, has gone into training at Sacramento for a fifty-mile foot-race, for the benefit of the two Orphan Asylums in that city.

The decision of Commissioner Wilson, giving the title lands to the city of San Diego, meets with general satisfaction between the City Attorney, the City Trustees and the citizens, each claiming a right to the spoils.

A quarts vein, situated at what is known as the "Hadley Field," near the town of Cooterville, worked several years since and abandoned, has been recently reopened and many rich ores developed. It is thought that the vein will prove a permanent paying thing.

John Rooney, a well-known citizen, who resides at Brighton, near Sacramento, was shot at that place on the evening of January 14th, by a man named Murphy. The trouble grew out of a dispute as to the ownership of a piece of land. The land appears to be owned by Rooney, but is claimed by Murphy. Rooney and a friend went to the house of the latter, and, to promise the matter, and on their approach, Murphy, who was armed with a shotgun and a pistol, commenced firing with the gun at the distance of about sixty yards. Eight buckshot struck Rooney; three in the head, three in the stomach and two in the legs. The war then ceased. Rooney was brought to Sacramento for medical aid. His wounds are pronounced not very dangerous. Murphy was arrested and admitted to bail in the sum of two thousand dollars to appear for examination. Rooney is getting on very comfortably.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

John H. Brown has recovered judgment against Wm. Sharon, Trustee, and Wm. F. Page, of the old banking firm of Page, Bacon & Co., in the sum of $5,000 and interest, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, from November 14, 1854.

At a meeting of the Excelsior Social Club, held on Tuesday, the following were elected: President, M. Hurley; Vice-President, T. Cronan; Recording Secretary, J. McCloskey; Financial Secretary, M. Lindsay; Treasurer, P. Duane; Sergeant-at-Arms, M. Kennedy.

The Rincon Point Democratic Club has perfected an organization, and numbers ninety-five members. Officers have been elected as follows: President, Alex. McKeon; Vice-President, James Flood; Treasurer, Mark Mcriocosky; Sergeant-at-Arms, Peter Farrell.

The following officers of the Jackson Dragoons were recently elected: Captain, Meredith Leuenroth; First Lieutenant, Hugh Dougherty; Second Lieutenant, Michael Dolan; Brevet Second Lieutenant, Thomas McCole.

A certificate of incorporation of the San Francisco Cooperative Printers' Association was filed on Monday last. The Trustees are Francis A. Bonnard, Edmund Williamson, Bernard H. Daly, Chas. Babb and Peter Cook.

The San Francisco Gas Company held their regular election on Monday. The old officers were all reelected as follows: Peter Donahue, President; Joseph A. Donohoe, Vice President; and Joseph G. Eastland, Secretary.

The Police Commissioners, at a recent meeting, adopted the following resolution: Resolved, That hereafter any street officer while on duty, found lounging on his beat, or standing around corners, talking with his friends or others, except it may be in the line of his duty, and not patrolling his beat, will be sufficient cause for his removal, when proven.

Following is the result of the election of the Mercantile Library Association, held on Monday: President, Ogden Hoffman; Vice-President, Monroe Ashbury; Recording Secretary, William Harney; Corresponding Secretary, H. H. Raymond; Treasurer, Minthorne M. Tompkins; Trustees—Thurlo Parrott, H. C. Bodel D. Thomas Bennett, William Alvord, H. H. Lloyd, William Lewy, Henry Kimball, N. C. Fassett, Ralph C. Harrison.

His Excellency, Joshu Hirshmale Ino Assistars, Assistant Minuser of Finances of the Empire of Japan, and accredited as Commissioner to the Government of the United States, arrived in this city on the steamer Americal, from Japan. He is accompanied by a suite of secretaries, aids, servants, physicians, etc., in all, number ing twenty-two persons. They are on their way to Washington City, on business connected with their Government. They will remain in this city two weeks, and visit the public institutions, and the fortifications around the harbor. They are stopping at the Grand Hotel.

Balls.

We have received complimentary tickets for the Masquerade Ball to be given at the Lick House on the evening of January 26th; for the Invitation Ball of the Wolfe Tone Guard, to be given at Irish-American Hall, on the evening of January 26; for the Ball of the Independent Order of White Men, which took place at Turn Verein Hall on the 19th inst; and to the Invitation Ball of the Amity Social Club, to come off on the 10th February, at Pacific Hall.

Gov. HAIGHT has publicly announced that he will be a candidate for reelection. The candidates now prominently before the public for gubernatorial honors, on the Democratic side of the house, are—H. H. Haight, of Alameda; Philip A. Roach, of San Francisco; and Congressman Johnson. Several others are spoken of, but we are not authorized to give their names.

IRISH ON THE ALERT. If you have symptoms which indicate the approach of fever and ague, such as a sensation of cold water being poured down the back, chills over the whole body, pains in the back and loins, &c. As soon as you feel these symptoms coming on, take MAGEE & DOLLARD'S ANTIDARIEIC. It is a sure preventive, and will speedily remove all disagreeable sensations.

BORN.

HORNIAN—In this city, January 19, to the wife of D. Horgan, a son.

MARRIED.

MALLIN-MORIARTY—In this city, December 19, at St. Mary's Cathedral, by Rev. Father Caden, Michael Mallin to B. M. Moriarty, both of this city.

O'NEILL-MANNING—At Santa Rosa, January 12, by Rev. Father Aviero, Peter O'Neill to Mrs. Mary Ann Parrott.

GILLES-DYER—In this city, January 18, at St. Mary's Cathedral, by Father Prendergast, Charles J. Gilles to Mary T. Dyer, both of this city.

DIED.

DOHERTY—In this city, January 18, Fanny Doherty, a native of Roscommon, Ireland, aged 36 years.

MURPHY—In this city, January 18, Mary Murphy, a native of Ireland, aged 48 years.

SHANNON—In this city, January 16, John Gardiner, son of Michael and Mary Shannon, aged 7 years and 6 months.

PAYNE—In this city, January 14, Mrs. May Pay, wife of Thomas Pay, a native of County Mayo, Ireland, aged 36 years.

MCMILLAN—In this city, January 17, Mary M. McMillan, mother of Mrs. Henry Sampson and Mrs. John Kerr, a native of County Kildare, Ireland, aged 72 years.

CUNNINGHAM—In this city, January 14, John Cunningham, a native of Limerick, Ireland, aged 27 years.

HAYES—In this city, January 14, Eugene, infant son of Daniel and Mary Hayes, aged 1 month and 20 days.

MCCONKEY—In country, January 15, Mary, daughter of Philip and Margaret McCloskey, aged 3 years and 11 months.

MORRANE—In this city, January 18, Maria S., wife of Hugh Morrane, a native of Newfoundland, aged 28 years.

DEVINE—In this city, January 18, Daniel Devine, a native of the parish of Teaghrea, county Roscommon, Ireland.

MCCAFFERY—In this city, January 18, Bernard McCaffery, a native of county Tyrone, Ireland, aged 42 years.

MCCARTY—In this city, Jan. 17, M. Marshall Riordan (printer), eldest son of Mary A. and the late Richard Riordan, aged 22 years and 4 months.

MCRAE—In Knoxville, Lake county, January —, Mrs. Helen, widow of the late George W. McRae, a native of county Cork, Ireland, aged 58 years.

MCCAFFERY—In this city, January 18, Bernard McCaffery, a native of county Tyrone, Ireland, aged 42 years.

CARROLL—In this city, Jan. 17, M. Marshall Riordan (printer), eldest son of Mary A. and the late Richard Riordan, aged 22 years and 4 months.

MCRAE—In Knoxville, Lake county, January —, Mrs. Helen, widow of the late George W. McRae, a native of county Cork, Ireland, aged 58 years.

FUNERAL NOTICES.—The funeral of Bernard McCaffery, late of Tyrone, Ireland, will take place from his late residence, No. 1 Natoma street, between Fifth and Sixth, this day (Saturday), at 1 o'clock P. M. Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Ann Parrott will take place from the residence of her son-in-law, Peter O'Neill, No. 1 Natoma street, between Fifth and Sixth, this day (Saturday), at 1 o'clock P. M. Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend.

The funeral of Mrs. Helen McRae will take place from the residence of her son-in-law, Peter O'Neill, No. 1 Natoma street, between Fifth and Sixth, this day (Saturday), at 1 o'clock P. M. Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend.

The funeral of Mrs. Maria S. Morrane will take place from the residence of her husband, No. 1 Natoma street, between Fifth and Sixth, this day (Saturday), at 1 o'clock P. M. Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Ann Parrott will take place from the residence of her son-in-law, Peter O'Neill, No. 1 Natoma street, between Fifth and Sixth, this day (Saturday), at 1 o'clock P. M. Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend.

The funeral of Mrs. Helen McRae will take place from the residence of her son-in-law, Peter O'Neill, No. 1 Natoma street, between Fifth and Sixth, this day (Saturday), at 1 o'clock P. M. Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend.

The funeral of Mrs. Maria S. Morrane will take place from the residence of her husband, No. 1 Natoma street, between Fifth and Sixth, this day (Saturday), at 1 o'clock P. M. Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend.

New Advertisements.

F. X. KAST,
F. X. KAST,
F. X. KAST,
F. X. KAST,
F. X. KAST,
SUCCESSOR OF
BRODERICK & KAST,
IS NOW SELLING OFF HIS ENTIRE STOCK OF FIRST-CLASS
BOOTS AND SHOES
—AT—
VERY LOW PRICES FOR CASH.

Ladies' French Kid and Waterproof Button Boots and Fancy Slippers, in great variety.
Gents' Boots and Bootjee Gaiters and Oxford Ties; also, Boys' Boots and Shoes, at the lowest wholesale prices.
The very best Ladies', Gents' and Children's wear made to measure.

F. X. KAST,
392 AND 324 BUSH STREET,
Ja21 Between Montgomery and Kearny.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY
Tuesday, February 14, 1871.

JENNIE'S VALENTINE.

I'll give you a line, if you divine
Who 'tis that sends this valentine:
But prophet, if your guess proves true,
For my poor pen you will forgive me,
If, Jenter dear, should ren complain,
Your forfeit I'll return again.

IF THOU'LT BE MINE

Bright flowers shall bloom wherever we rove;
A valley divine shall talk in each stream;
The stars shall look like worlds of love;
And this world be one beautiful dream
In our eyes—if thou'lt be mine.

Valentines, rich in gold and silver, and tinted with hues borrowed from the rainbow, winged with fragrance plucked from the plumes of young doves, radiant with flowers from the garden of the Papphian heaven, and steeped in sunlight Love's spirits for wistful hearts.

CUPID'S ADVICE.

To the unmarried of the nation
As they would avoid the mortification
And shun the application
Of old maids and old bachelors in this generation
To make direct application
Without any flirtation
To the object of their affection
Whose Valentine beats his relation
For an appropriate communication
To suit the occasion
Which will afford a gratification
And be a sufficient remuneration
For the money spent on the occasion

VALENTINES for sale at 120 Post Street, also, at 1 Montgomery avenue, and Montgomery House. Sold with or without imprint.

The greatest variety of every conceivable variety, at the lowest prices, at the Valentine Depot, 120 Post street.

CHRISTY new and original California Comics.

VALENTINES WRITTEN, comic and sentimental.

APPLETON'S VALENTINE EXPRESS, with Valentines every hour on the hour, every hour on Valentine's Day, in every period the city.

D. E. APPLETON & CO.,
386 and 310 Montgomery Street.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO., HAVE OPENED THEIR
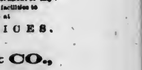
NEW STORE,
No. 706 Market Street,
Opposite Third Street,
With a complete Stock of Foreign and Domestic
DRY GOODS,
FURNISHING GOODS, Etc.
CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.



NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Central Pacific Railroad Company will be held at the office of the Company, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on Monday, the 6th day of February, A. D. 1871, at 12 o'clock M., for the election of Trustees to serve for the ensuing year.

Transfer Books will be closed on the 20th day of January, A. D. 1871, at 3 o'clock P. M., and will be reopened on the 7th day of February, A. D. 1871, at 10 o'clock A. M.

By order of the Board of Trustees.

CHARLES CROCKER, Secretary.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 14, 1871.

J. P. CAMPBELL & CO.,
146 KEARNY STREET,
Between Sutter and Post, San Francisco.

DRY GOODS!
—AT—
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
DRY | $200,000 | GOODS.
Comprising the most Complete Assortment of any House on this Coast, and offering facilities to to all classes to purchase at POPULAR PRICES.
TAAFFE & CO.,
No. 9 Montgomery Street,
LICK HOUSE.
Call the attention of Hotel-keepers, and strangers visiting the city, to this sale, which will continue for Sixty Days.
The stock consists of the most complete assortment of SILKS,
SHAWLS,
DRESS GOODS
LACES,
EMBROIDERIES,
HOSIERY,
GLOVES,
NAPKINS,
TOWELS,
BLANKETS,
QUILTS,
TABLE COVERS,
PIANO COVERS,
LACE CURTAINS
LINEN SHEETINGS,
LINEN SHIRTINGS,
LINEN DAMASKS,
CASSIMERES, CLOTHS,
FLANNELS,
Etc., Etc., Etc.
A fine assortment of
JONES' SOFT-FINISHED CAMBRIC,
PLAID AND STRIPED JACONETS,
FRENCH PERCALES and CAMBRICS
All of which were purchased previous to the war, and will be offered for sale at less prices than the c

IN EXILE.

Erin, lov'd, remembered Erin,
Isle forever dear to me!
On a foreign shore I'm dreaming—
Dreaming of past times and thee.
Oh! the sweet, cool sheltered valleys!
Oh! the wide, capacious bays!
Oh! the dreamy, beaming moonlight!
Oh! the bright and sunny days!

A little hut among the bushes
Rises fair to memory;
Though its roof was straw and rushes,
Oh! 'twas dear, how dear, to me!
Oh! the happy, playful children!
Oh! the gay gray-headed sire!
Oh! the snow-clad winter evening!
Oh! the blazing, sparkling fire!

And my dear, true-hearted mother,
Sisters, brother, father, too,
Fancy-pictured, stand before me—
Live and move within my view.
O! the kindly tone of welcome!
Oh! the bright and loving smile!
Oh! my handsome colleen, Mary!
Fairest in the Emerald Isle!

I tried to wear a look of gladness
When I parted from them all,
While with grief approaching sadness
My poor heart near burst its shell.
Oh! the last fond glimpse of Erin!
Fields of green and skies of blue!
Oh! the groan of grief and anguish
When they faded from my view!

Erin, wronged but faithful Erin!
Wrongful lip-friend! we ne'er will be foe,
Soon may Freedom's sun shine on thee—
Cheer thy sorrow, end thy woe.
Oh! the mountain and the wild wood!
Oh! the fairy lake and glen!
Oh! for men to aid dear Erin!
And, oh! for Freedom back again!
—Nation.

St. Jarlath's College.

ST. JARLATH'S COLLEGE, TUAM, }
Feast of the Immaculate Conception of the } Blessed Virgin Mary, Mother of God, 1870. }

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MONITOR, SAN FRANCISCO.—Dear Sir: In the midst of the many appeals made within the past four months to the benevolent among the Irish race, no voice in favor of any individual project, however good, could well be heeded in the conflict of nations and the loud expressions of practical sympathy that have gone forth in favor of the suffering and self-sacrifice of a sorrow-stricken but noble people. Nevertheless, circumstances have thus been sent by a few, to whom I tender my grateful acknowledgments:

Most Rev. J. McEvilly, Lord Bishop of Galway....£ 5
Very Rev. C. J. O'Brien, P. P., Headford..... 5
W. Joyce, Esq., Cargory House, Castleblakeney.. 5
Rev. T. Hardiman, P. P., Ballinrobe..... 2
P. A. Nolan, Esq., Solicitor, Dublin..... 2
Rev. Michael Hearne, Professor, Maynooth..... 2
Rev. James O'Kane, rector Dean, Maynooth..... 2
Rev. J. Rossiter, P. P., Kilcolman..... 2
University, Stephen's Green..... 2
Martin Melvin, Esq., Dunmore..... 2
Martin Reidmond, landed proprietor, Dunmore.. 5
Stephen Mell-mosh, Esq., Dunmore..... 5
Rev. Peter Watters, P. P., Aherlow..... 2
Felix McCuskey, Mobile, Alabama..... 5
T. J. Hussey Gaffey of Tuam, son of N. Orleans 5

It is only ten months since a circular regarding the enlargement of St. Jarlath's College was issued, soliciting the aid of the Irish people for the purpose of erecting Novo Desiderata. In the circular it was stated that the proposed enlargement by means of additional wings to the new buildings, so as to double the number of rooms, on account of the connection of the college with the cause and principles of Catholic education, of more than local interest." It is optional with all—and especially so with all outside the diocese—to contribute. Yet the sum of seven hundred pounds was readily realized in six months.

The wings then projected are now a reality. Both are nigh complete; one fully so—the other under "roof." Each edifice (fifty-four feet long by thirty wide, and three stories high, can lay claim to little or no architectural elegance. The cost, however, of the entire work will amount to nigh fifteen hundred pounds (£1,500). To collect, in addition to what has already been received, eight hundred is not, to-day in sight, a prospect lighted with the sunshine of hopefulness, nor cheering with the charms of assured success. But hope in Him who has moved the hearts of the people to contribute seven hundred already, will not be confounded, especially as the work is His own, and no matter who are the instruments destined to promote His glory on earth and in Heaven.

The Irish people, too, possess a vigorous, practical piety. They have a traditional title to founding churches and colleges, not only in their own country but in all the lands in Europe and in America which they have visited. This practical tradition, of which the monuments are to be found in "Cills" in every parish in Ireland, and the magnificent churches throughout Europe, are a standing proof, is traceable up to the sixth century, to the days of St. Columba, and those of the western Apostle Bishop—St. Jarlath.

The present time may well be regarded as the renascent complement of the "ages of faith," as is seen from the spirit which has inspired and animated the living generation of the Irish people at home and abroad, in erecting noble structures dedicated to learning or to religion.

For my own part I am much beholden to all who have contributed to the enlargement and increased usefulness of St. Jarlath's College as a seat of science, and a nursery for the growing youth in knowledge, and in love of creed and country.

From my manifold applications by letter —perhaps over one thousand—men in lowly and in high positions; to men of true and talent; to others poor in fact but in possession of ample monetary means, I have, by a process of induction from particulars, like a physician dealing with patients, drawn general deductions regarding the characteristics of philanthropy, or its absence among men.

First—The most generous are the educated middle-classes, amongst whom I rank the educated man with even humble means, yet sufficient for his daily wants.

Second—The wealthy aristocrat, gifted with judgment and a refined taste, capable of appreciating, and whose heart is turned to deeds of goodness—such a one stands, as a patron of progress, out from his compeers by whom he is surrounded, as a pillar of light shines forth amid the clouds, showing its native tints, and at the same time displaying the beauteous dark-blue above which it rises.

Third—The poor and those who are not possessed of much worldly wealth prove efficient by organization. Their mites, to be practically valuable to attain great end, need amalgamation. Like soldiers composing an army, they are a power. Individual members, however, have not all the same noble and generous impulses.

Fourth—The least generous is the wealthy landowner—(and there are not a few of them in this Catholic country)—who from habit regards wealth as the summum bonum, who values nothing belonging to the nobler part of man, because it cannot make him more wealthy or more admired by that class who are at once selfish and servile, who, like children or certain dumb animals run after glare and glitter, and mistake them for glory and greatness. Such a one while alive, does as little good as he can for society, or for the benefit of the public. His life and death verify the proverb: "A dorus nist cum mortor nil reste facit." I am, your faithful servant,

† DAVID J. BORDER, President.

Sympathy with France.

On Thursday, December 29th, a most enthusiastic meeting was held in the Cooper Institute, New York, to express sympathy with the French Republic. Mr. John Mitchel spoke as follows:

Mr. President and Gentlemen—Americans, Frenchmen, Irishmen, if there be any here—I address you here the eloquent language of welcome! Oh! the bright and loving smile! Oh! my handsome colleen, Mary! Fairest in the Emerald Isle!

Americans, you have heard from a native American well acquainted with the subject and able to do ample and triumphant justice to it—after that I do not know who has a better right to speak for France than an Irishman. It is very true, as that eloquent gentleman has just said, that France sent to this country in its trouble some of her greatest warriors and statesmen to aid in the establishment of your independence—the most British dominion—Lafayette, Rochambeau, D'Estaing—and they had the good fortune and happiness to triumph in your triumph. But do not forget—Irishmen will not forget—that when France was a Republic before—that is to say, in '98—France sent to the shores of Ireland a large expedition in ships and soldiers than ever she sent to America. And she sent them to aid in the same purpose—to throw off British dominion. The weather was against them, however; the weather turned out to be English weather, and the splendid fleet was for a time beating about in Bantry Bay, and at last was driven off entirely by the easterly winds. Another time a second expedition landed at Killala Bay, and another expedition came to Lough Swilly with Theobald Wolfe Tone on board, and this too, to aid a small nation to win its liberty. Now, what nation has ever done such things except France? Yet it is not altogether for these efforts that France has made in our behalf that I am so enthusiastic to-night in behalf of—Frenchmen. Neither is it for the blood shed by my people in behalf of France, though 40,000 have fallen fighting her battles in the last one hundred and fifty years. Neither is it for that that I speak for her here to-night. Nor it is because France this day stands up in Europe the representative champion of a great principle—and that principle is the right of self-government. Gentlemen, the man who most personifies, who resumes within his own person the whole of the German cause, is a single vassal, not a single serf. One man may be rich and another poor, but they are all equal before the law, and one man's son is as good as another. It is for that that the great Prussian monarch is precipitating his forces upon France, under the lead of his vassal Bismarck. I think that I describe the situation pretty exactly in its general view. But let us take one example: The Prussians say that they have conquered France—not that it is all over yet, but they say that they have conquered, they say that they intend to take possession of two great countries—Alsace and Lorraine. I mention this as between the German theory of government on the one hand and French freedom on the other. Alsace is one of the most fertile countries, one of the best countries, in France, with the grand old city of Strasbourg for its capital But Alsace is not only very fertile and prosperous country—it is the most intensely French province in all France. It is true that many of the inhabitants can speak German; they learned that long ago. Sometimes Alsace was a fief of the German empire and sometimes of the French kingdom; but, for over 4wo hundred years ago, all Alsace became French, and French it has remained until this day. All their national memories, all their proud recollections, are French. Their soldiers, their young men for generations—for two hundred years—have served the French cause in the armies and in the highest places. Then came the French Revolution, which gave to every man in France his own farm. Well, Alsace got rid of all these landgraves and margraves—from that moment. Every farmer in Alsace owns his own farm, and they feel that it was France that made men of them. Ask one of these, Alsatians whether he is a German or a Frenchman, and he will look at you with astonishment. Why, it was Alsatians that were foremost to meet the Germans when Prussia came across the Rhine seventy years ago, met their assault, and flung them back. Who was this? Kolmerau and the men of Alsace. Another Alsacian was Kleber, one of the greatest of French Marshals, and Napoleon's successor in command of the army of Egypt. In short, when an Alsatian thinks of military glory it is always in connection with the old tricolor, with the eagles of the First Empire or of the Republic. Empire is a word we must perhaps forget for the present. It is because France is standing up as the great champion of liberty and freedom, and the right of the population to dispose of their own destinies and to order their own government, that we may sympathize with her. It is not many years ago since a statesman of England—Lord John Russell, I think—announced as a great principle. There was only one country that he excepted from this principle, and that was Ireland. Now it is expressly to see that he excepted a French aspiration for self-government that all Germany is united to-day to conquer France, and to crush her down by mere weight. I do not doubt that it was the Emperor of the French who commenced this war. I do not excuse him. He was found, before commencing it, to see that he had a large army, fit to do the work. He was the sole governor of France, and he ought to have known what was in the hearts and souls of his dominions. He ought to have had confidence in his Marshals. Well, if he commenced this war rashly, he has paid thepenalty. But France is not the Emperor. France is grander than all Emperors and Empires long she will appeal so loudly to all lovers of freedom that even our German citizens themselves must respond. There are vast numbers of excellent German citizens in this country; they came here for self-government, or else what brought them here; and they fully participate in the free exercise of the rights of citizenship and of manhood. They naturally feel some degree of pride that the black and white flag should soar high amid the glare of the battle smoke above the banners of France. There is something in the idea that intoxicates them, but they say that it is a conspiracy of a feudal oligarchy, why then I believe that even our German friends will unite with us in sending over words of cheer, and say with all their hearts, as we do—"Vive la France!"

The Nuns Among the Wounded.

The correspondent of the Standard, describing a visit to a French military hospital, says:

Just as I was on the point of leaving the room, the Sœurs Augustines, who had been at dinner, entered. I never shall forget the quick, sudden change that came over the sick men's faces. They had been lying in a sort of torpid langor whilst they were absent, but the moment they appeared their faces flushed with a sudden sparkle of gladness that gave quite a different color to the sick room. The very atmosphere, which was > "Hot, damp and close,

> Like a sick man's room when he takes his repose,
> An hour before death—"

Seemed of a sudden to change and grow more purified. Each sick man's face lighted up with an animation that was before wanting. But the strangest change was in my old friend the Turco, who confessed to take the rare Havana I offered him. The moment the Sisters entered he feebly attempted to raise himself in his bed, and whispered as far as his strength would permit to one of them to come near, and showed, with the pride of a child in a new toy, the cigar he was slowly smoking. I wanted nothing more than the silent looks of the sick men to show how the nuns were loved by the poor invalids. They spoke of them and treated them as if they were children; petted, comforted and scolded them as the occasion demanded; identified themselves with their interests in every possible manner, and gave one completely the idea that they esteemed it a rare and cherished privilege to be allowed to devote their whole lives to the holiest of works. If human gratitude can possibly be a reward, and if such a thing exists in more than one or two rare exceptions, they certainly had obtained it in the idolizing respect and childlike reverential love of the wounded soldiers. I devoted so many hours here, chatting with the men—who were full of curious and interesting anecdotes—that I found but little time to visit the other ambulances. These were the Grand Seminaire in the palace of the Archbishop, the old Dominican Monastery, the Petit Seminaire (a very large one), the Ambulances des Charlottes, and the Sœurs et Muets.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Barbara, a short distance from the sea, in the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and convenient.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education, Spanish etc., etc.

TERMS.

Invariably half yearly in advance.
Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, per annum..... $200 00
Piano, and use of instrument, per month..... 4 00
Guitar, per month..... 2 50
No extra charge for Fish Peeling, Fancy Needle Work, etc.

The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences August 16th, and terminates on the last Thursday in June.

For further particulars apply to
SISTERS OF CHARITY,
Santa Barbara, Cal.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA

THE FOURTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, conducted by the Fathers of the Order of St. Francis, will open on the 16th August, 1870.

The object of the institution is to give a good English, mathematical, Classical and Philosophical education, at the lowest possible cost—a boon that only can be fully appreciated by those who have children to be taught at all.

TERMS.

Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, of ten months..... $150 00
Music, French and German forms extra charges.
Those who spend vacation at the College will be charged $10.
Physician's pay for medical attendance, and supply of toilet articles, etc.
Money will not be advanced by the College; for the purchase of all fancy articles, a sufficient sum must be deposited.
For further particulars apply to
FR. PASCUAL DE KEEFE, O. S. F.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Academy commences on the first Monday in September. This establishment was founded by assistance from the Legislature of California, and is specially devoted to securing to young ladies a solid and substantial education; to form their hearts to virtue, their minds to habits of order, to acquaintify the frowns and smiles of the world; to teach them to know and appreciate themselves; in a word, to educate the minds and the hearts of the pupils confided to the primary object of the Sisters of Notre Dame. The Academy is situated in the most healthy portion of Marysville. The building is commodious and well ventilated.

Particular attention is given to the moral welfare of the pupils constantly receive the maternal care of the Sisters. The diet is plain and wholesome, and the most scrupulous care is paid to the comfort and health of the pupils. Parents desiring to withdraw their children from the Academy before the close of the session will please give notice to that effect. No deduction will be made for absence, except in cases of protracted illness.

Each pupil is required to be provided with the following articles, which will be furnished them on their entrance, at the usual prices: Two mattresses, three pairs sheets, two pillows, pair of blankets, counterpane, bowls, knife, fork, fork and spoon, tumbler, napkin-ring, two towels, two table cloths, pair of curtains, one chair, one bath, one combed with table, the other with grease; two pairs of tables with drawers, one looking-glass, paper, envelopes and pen-holder.

Pupils are required to furnish the same articles as the boarders.

Each young lady is required to be provided with the following articles, and to have them distinctly marked with her name, for the sake of uniformity all are required to be provided with the same articles: Two dresses of ordinary use, two morning-dresses, dressing-gown, four sheets, four pillow-slips, pair of blankets, mattress, two pairs boots, four towels, four table napkins, a knife, silver spoon, fork, goblet, napkin-ring, two white skirts, bath, one crimped with white, the other with green; two pairs of tables with drawers, one looking-glass, paper, envelopes and pen-holder.

Parents may rest satisfied that every attention, consistent with the strictest discipline, will be extended to all the pupils in the comfort of the young ladies placed under their charge.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the superioress. Letters of enquiry may be addressed to the
SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED ACCORDing to the laws of the state of California, and conducted by members of the Congregation of the Mission, is situated in the most healthy portion of Los Angeles, protected by the salubrity of its climate and the surrounding mountains. It is directly under the supervision of the FATHERS OF THE CONGREGATION OF THE MISSION, and of the SISTERS OF CHARITY. The Fathers themselves to promote the health, the comfort, the moral welfare, the intellectual and moral advancement of the students entrusted to their care.

Particular attention is paid to the young children who are competent to enter the primary course, and who will be received as boarders or day scholars.

Parents desiring to supply the wardrobe of their children will please to comply with the following regulations of the College: Each boarder must be provided with one mattress, one pillow, two pairs of sheets, two pairs of blankets, one counterpane, one comfortable, one pair of pillow-cases, six towels, six napkins, one napkin-ring, one knife, one fork, one spoon, one goblet, one tumbler, one bowl, one plate, one chair, one bath, one combed with table

Arrest of the British Commissioner by the Prussians.

A correspondent of the Echo, writing from Versailles on the 16th December, says:

On the evening of Wednesday, the 14th of this month, two friends of the writer (Mr. Landell, the artist, representing the Illustrated London News, and Mr. Holt White, of the Pall Mall Gazette), with Captain Keith Fraser, of the First Life Guards, a son-in-law of Lord Ward, arrived at Rheims, on their way home from Orleans. The tired travelers put up at the Three Couriers Hotel, where they were delighted to find that two Englishmen, well known to the three travelers, were staying for the night, on their way to Orleans. The two gentlemen were Captain Hozier, the British Commissioner to the army of Prince Frederick Charles, and Captain Brackenbury, one of the correspondents of the Times. The former was the only one of the party in uniform. Dinner was just over, when a great clanking was heard along the passage, a dragoon entered the room with a carbine, and stood on guard inside the door. He was followed by an officer of mature age, who, in an excessively rude manner went up to Mr. White, slapped him on the shoulder and demanded his papers. They were all produced, as were those of Captain Fraser and Mr. Landell, when the major kept them, and told the whole of the five in an insolent manner that they were a pack of English spies. Our Commissioner thereupon mildly called the attention of the officer to the fact that he was the guest of England's Commissioner, wearing the uniform of her Majesty's army, upon which his papers were roughly demanded, and, after examination, handed back with the remark that they were genuine enough. Captain Hozier having had his official position thus recognized, again inquired of the major what offence his fellow-countrymen were charged with, when, in an excited way, the major brought a variety of vague accusations, the pith of which seemed to be that they were spies. These four gentlemen are personal friends of mine, said the Commissioner, and I assure you that they are quite incapable of being spies, or of doing anything disgraceful.

Captain Fraser, who is connected with the English society for aiding the sick and wounded here, ventured to inform the excited German officer that, although not in uniform, he, too, was an officer in the British army, and that far from being a spy, he had been dispensing sundry comforts to wounded Germans in Orleans. This gave an opening for a capital retort, which was made by an employé; yes; you are doubtless one of the English officers who travel with linen." Of course, after this there was no more to be said, for it was an undeniable fact that the suspects were only Englishmen, and everybody knows that Englishmen have lately turned their attention to binding up wounds rather than to make them. The upshot of the altercation was that our countrymen were first asked if they would give their word of honor not to leave the hotel, which they did, and were then further insulted by having the hotel surrounded by soldiers, and guards placed over them at their bed-room doors, who kept looking in during the night, to assure themselves that their prisoners had not broken their parole. When Captain Hozier, finding that he could do nothing for his friends in Rheims, resolved to proceed on his journey to Orleans and mention the matter to Prince Frederick Charles, he and Captain Brackenbury, to their huge astonishment, found that they, too, were under arrest. The sentries have, it is true, paced up and down the passage outside their rooms all night, but they thought it was merely the watch over the suspected correspondents. In the morning, however, they were mistaken, for upon attempting to leave the house a loaded carbine was brought to bear, and a very significant invitation given them to halt, which, of course, they at once did.

Captain Hozier immediately wrote to the commandant asking for an explanation of his being placed under arrest while wearing the Queen of England's uniform. No answer was returned. He wrote again, and still no answer came. He wrote a third, and were immediately tickled at the British commissioner's pitiable condition. Verbal messages were sent to warn the persons concerned that the consequences would be serious. No reply. Then Captain Hozier wrote out telegrams to the Crown Prince, to the King, and to Heaven knows who else—among others, I believe, to General Walker. Whether Captain Hozier's telegrams were sent as he demanded or not remains a mystery, but I rather fancy they were, for in the evening—that is to say, after the captain had been under arrest for nearly twenty-four hours—an officer came to say that there had been some mistake, and that not only could Captains Hozier and Brackenbury leave as soon as they liked, but the three suspects might now see one another and leave their lessons. The latter were ordered to be up at six in the morning, and were brought in here to-night under a guard, with an immense crowd at their heels. The charges against them being so grave, they are only released on their parole not to leave the town pending an inquiry, which our energetic representatives demand on their behalf, after hearing all the circumstances of the case. Captain Hozier has gone to Orleans, and here the matter rests.

"Bismarckism."

Mr. Frederic Harrison, in the Fortnightly Review, says: "The energy, unity, and patriotism of France in the first shock are far greater than was shown either by Prussian, German, or Austrian after Austerlitz, Jena, and Wagram—greater than was shown by the great American people in the first months after Bull's Run. And first months after Bull's Run. And the moment France has weathered the storm, the impulse given to her social movement will be enormous. The Republic has been established, and the Republic itself is the only institution in France which has not been discredited. France, too, has been happily relieved of that incubus which has hitherto rested on progress and her army. Those 350,000 praetorians and marshals, generals, staff, guns, standards, material, and eagles—the whole chauvinist camp, from the Emperor to the drummer-boy, have been swept into space and ignominy. The professional soldier in France is morally dead. Her army, the curse of Europe and of civilization, has gone out with an illi-savor. It was not the decheance of Napoleon that was proclaimed on the 4th of September, but the decheance of militarism. The soldier is become an anachronism; the symbol of national degradation. The only sort of honor has been won by the workman and peasant volunteers—a true citizen army of national guard. For the first time in French history, the workmen of the great towns are armed and organized, and the whole of the new army from top to bottom is essentially democratic. In a military sense, this may as yet be a weakness; but in a political sense it means the emancipation of the people."

Superstition.

Some very strange instances of superstition have of late been mentioned in the English papers, and it is rather surprising no doubt to some to learn that they have not occurred in poor "Popish" Ireland. The other day a man was drowned in the Severn, near Bewdley, in Worcestershire, and when the inquest was over, a woman, accompanied by her son (a lad of nine), asked leave to draw the boy's hand nine times across the dead man's throat in order that certain wens which disfigured his neck might disappear. Strange to say the experiment stable gratified the upperstitious inhabitant of the woman, and she went through the ceremony, which gave her great satisfaction. A Protestant clergyman, writing to the Times from the east of England, states that in his neighbourhood a similar instance occurred of bringing young persons into contact with a dead body, and as the deceased in that case had died of typhus fever, that terrible disease was propagated to a considerably than a large number of persons fell victims. It is extraordinary how long these superstitions customs live, notwithstanding all that we hear about the "enlightened nineteenth century."

Sympathy with the Pope.

In a recent number of the Allgemeine Zeitung we read the following account of a meeting held on the Feast of the Immaculate Conception in Ratisbonne, by the Catholic inhabitants of that city and its adjoining district, to protest against the violent overthrow of the temporal power of the Holy See: "As lately we had occasion to furnish an account of the meetings held in Fulda and Ramberg, we have now to state that there took place on the 8th December in this old Imperial city a most imposing and multitudinous demonstration against the sacrilegious and forcible dethronement of the Pope. The numbers assembled was great beyond all precedent. The land proprietors and farmers thronged to the meeting in thousands. In the Emeransplatz the vast multitude formed into a procession, headed by the Papal Nuncio from Munich, and moving on through streets beflecked with banners, triumphal arches and pendants of velvet and silk of many colors floating from the windows, arrived in the spacious square of the Cathedral. The whole space was clear; the scaffolding constructed for the completion of one of the towers of the glorious Gothic pile had been wholly removed. The Cathedral, vast as it is, afforded no room sufficient for the vast multitude. In the evening another meeting in the same established Catholics was held in the Dominican Church, when many of the speakers dwelt with great eloquence on the supreme importance of the question which caused them to come together. Finally, it was resolved that an address should be forwarded to the Holy Father expressing the sympathy of that portion of his spiritual flock, and protesting energetically against the deeds of hi[gh]land, and that another address fully embodying their sentiments regarding the disloyal acts of the Piedmontese Government should be laid before the King of Bavaria."

Wholesale Market Report.

MONEY & STOCKS, SAN FRANCISCO, } Friday, January 20, 1871. }

FLOUR—Only a moderate export demand. Agood inquiry, however, is maintained for consumption, and the sales for local brands have been enlarged. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra, at $6 50@7; Oregon and Sonora family, $7@7 50; Sonora and Colorado, $7@7 50; and extra, at $8 62½@9; in sacks at $6 50@6 75.

WHEAT—The market shows a dull and heavy feeling. We quote the close superfine grades at $2 50@2 62½; fair to choice shipping at 2 50@2 57½; and choice at $2 57½@2 62½ per ctl.

BARLEY—Sales of fair feed to-day may have been made at 1 70@1 75, and of choice at $1 80@1 85. Market weak at the above quotations.

OATS—Have been in demand, and choice sold at $2 10@2 20, which is a fair quotation at the close.

CORN—Is in good demand, and choice white at $1 85@1 90 per ctl.

POTATOES—Market firm, and prices have advanced during the past week. We quote Carmichael at $1, and other kinds, fair to choice, at $1 @1 75 per ctl.

STRAW—We quote rango lots at $7@8 per ton.

BRAN—We quote at $1 12½@1 25 per ctl. Butter, $1 @1 25. Pea, $2; Small White, Red and Pink, $2 50@2 75 per ctl.

HAY—We quote Oat or Volunteer at $18@20; Barley, $16@18; Wheat, $18@20; Alfalfa, $16@18 per ton.

GROUNDS—We quote Coffee at 9@9½c; Chicory, 9@9½c; Rye, 8@8½c per lb.

SEEDS—We quote Flax at 4½c, and Canary at 3½@4c per lb. Mustard, nominal.

HOPS—We quote new California at 19@22½c per lb. Old, nominal, as the season of 1870 has passed by.

BEANS—Bayo, Los Angeles, Small Lima, 3½@3¾c, and Large Lima, 3¾@4c per lb. Butter, 3@3½c; Pea, 3@3½c; Red, 3@3½c; Pink, 3@3½c; Red Kidney, 3@3½c per lb.

TALLOW—Quotable at 7@7½ lb.

WOOL—We quote Mission shipping grades, 15@16c; very choice, 16@c; heavy, at 13@15c; slightly dry, 12@13c per lb.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California, ordinary to choice firkin, 17½@20c; fresh roll, 20@25c; packed roll, in kegs, 20@22½c; Oregon, firkin, 20@22½c; roll, 22½@25c.

CHEESE—California, 12@13c, with a few fancy lots at 15@16c per lb. Oregon, 15@16c.

EGGS—Oregon, 30c; California, 30c per doz.

HAMS—California at 15 @ 17½c; Oregon, 16½ @ 18c.

BACON—California at 13@15c; Oregon, 16@17c.

LARD—California, in tins, 13@13½c; Oregon, 13@13½c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 10 00 lb; second do, 8@9c; third do, 6@7c.

VEAL—At 9@10c lb.

MUTTON—At 9@10c lb.

LAMB—At 9@10c lb.

PORK—Dressed, at 8@8½c; on foot, 6@6½c per lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Hens, large, at $7 @8; young Chickens, $6@6 50; Roosters, $6@6 50.

GAME—Geese, $1 50@2 per pair; Brants, $1 50@2; Teal, $1 50@2; Ducks, $1 50@2; Snipe, $1 50@2; Rabbits—At $1 50@2 per dozen.

Quail—At $1 50@2 per dozen.

Pigeons—Tame, at $1 per dozen.

Wild Pigeons—At $1 50@2 per dozen.

Turkeys—At 25c per lb.

Ducks—Wild, $3 per pair.

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY

This Remedy does not Simply relieve but it positively cures the most protracted cases of Catarrh, however severe or long standing. One bottle will prove its merits, or $500 will be paid for a case it fails to cure. Thousands of certificates and letters from those who have been cured with a few applications. If you have a cold in the head, or any symptoms of Catarrh, such as dull heavy pain in the front of the head, frequent blowing of the nose, with discharges of mucus, or matter, sometimes tainted with blood, the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed, the sight dim, the hearing impaired, smell or taste partially or entirely destroyed, a dry cough, indicating the last stage of the disease, you can be cured by the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. In the worst cases of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Consumptive symptoms, Asthma, Hay Fever, Deafness, Headache, Scrofula, Canker Mouth, Canker Stomach, Ulcerated Throat, Rheumatism, Mercurial Diseases, Blood Poisoning, Ulcers, Tetter, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Pimples on the Face, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Scrofulous Humors of all kinds, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, and Catarrhal Headache, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is the most wonderful and unfailing remedy that has ever been discovered. Its mild, soothing, healing properties, its power to cleanse, purify, and invigorate the whole system, its safety and certainty in all cases, and its perfect harmlessness in the most delicate constitution, have rendered it the most popular remedy for these diseases in the world. Its proprietors have thousands of letters from all parts of the country, certifying to its wonderful curative powers in the most obstinate and aggravated cases. Its mild, soothing, healing properties, its power to cleanse, purify, and invigorate the whole system, its safety and certainty in all cases, and its perfect harmlessness in the most delicate constitution, have rendered it the most popular remedy for these diseases in the world. Its proprietors have thousands of letters from all parts of the country, certifying to its wonderful curative powers in the most obstinate and aggravated cases. Its proprietors have thousands of letters from all parts of the country, certifying to its wonderful curative powers in the most obstinate and aggravated cases.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is sold by druggists everywhere. Price, 50 cents.

Beware of counterfeits. See that the signature of R. V. Pierce, M. D., is on the wrapper of each bottle.

Subscriptions Received.

| | |
|---|---|
| San Leandro—A. N. Hopkins | $20 00 |
| Vallejo—Mrs. Mary Ann Lawrence | 5 00 |
| Vallejo—T. McKinley | 20 00 |
| Watsonville—Mrs. Mary Lee | 5 00 |
| Watsonville—Rev. Bernard Ireland—M. Bradley | 6 00 |
| Marin Valley—Frank Wadden | 1 00 |
| Marin Valley—Bishop—John McDonald | 1 00 |
| Anthony House—John Cavagnaro | 1 00 |
| Oroville—Hotel—Mrs. Delaney | 1 00 |
| Marysville—Timothy Hutchison | 1 00 |
| Marysville—John Breningham | 1 00 |
| Dennis's Mills—James Kean | 1 00 |

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

P. H. CANAVAN
IMPORTER OF
WINES, BRANDIES,
ETC., ETC.,
N.W. COR. CALIFORNIA & FRONT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Jan1y
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.,
Fine grocd Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington.

SAN FRANCISCO.
Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Rhineand Gin, Port, Sherry, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser. Also, Gaskell's native California Wines and Brandies. fe6 1f

M. H. KELLY. JOHN JOAB.
Kelly & Egan,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson. San Francisco.

WM. B. DOLAN,
145 THIRD STREET, ..... SAN FRANCISCO,
Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Retail, in FRENCH WINES AND BRANDIES,
AND
Irish Whisky.
Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTMENT of California Wines of every description, which he will dispose of, in bots or in case, for the convenience of families.

All orders left at the store, 145 Third street, will be promptly attended to. All delivered free of charge to any part of the city.

B. Commins & Co.
(Successors to P. Riley & Co.,)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
'myG No. 805 FRONT STREET.

A COURSE OF THREE POPULAR
SCIENTIFIC
ENTERTAINMENTS TO BE GIVEN BY THE STUDENTS OF
Natural Philosophy and Chemistry
OF ST. IGNATIUS COLLEGE, S. F.,
SAN FRANCISCO,
ON THE EVENINGS OF
January 31st, February 9th and 16th, 1871,
FOR THE BENEFIT OF THEIR
Physical and Chemical Cabinets and Laboratories.

THE STUDENTS OF THE SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT OF ST. IGNATIUS COLLEGE, anxious to show their appreciation of the kindness and patience of science and of education by gratuitous lectures to a large number of the citizens of San Francisco during the course of the past winter, have resolved to give a series of Three Entertainments, in the College Hall, Jessie st., between Second and Third, during the month of January, 1871, under the personal direction of Professor Eisen, assisted by Professor Philosophy and Chemistry.

Each evening will consist of a short but interesting lecture on the Science of Electricity, illustrated by the most beautiful experiments, and will conclude with a Grand Exhibition of Fireworks, manufactured by the students themselves.

The wonderful properties of the chemical compounding Water their separation and their reunion.

The melting and burning of iron and steel by water.

The burning of water by the electric spark.

The production of the most powerful light ever produced, the electric light, from a three large battery, and the light from a calcium battery, a discovery never yet here before.

The Electric Telegraph on a grand scale, will also be used with other clock work regulated by the electric current, and the Electric Light will be used in the illustration of various acts of typical photography and the Electric Telegraph will be used in the illustration of various acts of typical photography and Harmonic Telegraphy. The various

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Mr. Gladstone and the Catholic Church.

"A gentleman who describes himself as impelled by a fervent and active zeal for the preservation of the Established Church and of our glorious Reformation," lately sent to Mr. Gladstone two letters, containing an assertion, by a lady not named, that the Premier was received into the Catholic Church at the same time as herself. He letters have elicited the following reply:

"SIR: I am directed by Mr. Gladstone to acknowledge the receipt of a letter dated the 18th instant, written by you on behalf of the committee of the Birmingham Protestant Association, asking him whether he can, in justice to himself and the British nation, allow certain letters which have appeared in a newspaper called The Rock, purporting to be a statement of facts, and stating that he had been received into the Church of Rome, to be propagated if untrue. Mr. Gladstone desires me to thank you for your letter and to inform you, in reply, that he cannot undertake to contradict this or any other imputation, which he also foolish and insulting. He is quite content to leave the matter to the good sense of his countrymen, for, if his acts do not contradict such imputations, he is convinced that his words will do so. Mr. Gladstone begs that you will use your own discretion as to the publication of the correspondence in the publication of the correspondence in the newspapers. I am sir, your obedient servant,

ALGERNON WEST."

More Slaughter on the Rail.

A telegram announces another railway holocaust. It was offered up on Monday, December 26th, at the Bell Iar signal station, near Hatfield. The cause was simple—the consequences fearful. The tire of one of the wheels of the break van broke, throwing that and three other carriages off the road. Seven passengers only were killed and the signal man's wife, who was standing by the side of the line, was struck dead by the passing wreck. So terrific was the violence of the shock that identification will be next to impossible, except by clothing and articles found on the bodies. The line was broke in a perfectly new. The line was being worked on the absolute "block" system, and the train was punctual to time. The fact that the guard was being walking on the line, and not in the train, and two of the men injured were also walking on the line. The bodies of the dead were conveyed to the nearest village, some two and a half miles distant, and the wounded were taken care of in the third wounded were taken care of in the third company's carriages, which close where signal station. The only bodies yet identified are Mr. Brannan, of Glaston, near Hitchin; James Fenton, gentleman's servant; and the sister of the signal-man. The brother of the signal-man is among the injured.

German Treachery.

The contrivance by which France was made the apparent aggressor in the present war was cleverly planned, but the truth is bound to leak out at length. Evidence is daily accumulating that Prussia had for some time been in communication with Austria in the conclusion of peace with Austria in 1866, meditated and prepared the present war. Most remarkable testimony to this effect is supplied in a speech recently delivered by Lord Bury, M.P. The following is an extract from this speech: "A feeling is abroad that the Emperor Napoleon, in the selection of his own, Lord Albemarle, and many with General Blumenthal, who, next to Count Moltke, was the greatest military authority in the Prussian councils. Lord Albemarle expressed a wish to see some of the manœuvres which had made the tierman army so celebrated, and proposed to the General to go over to Prussia and witness the movements of the armies. Blumenthal made use of this remarkable expression, for which he could not vouch: 'Do not take the trouble to come and see me in Prussia; we will have a review for you in the Champ de Mars.'" Few will be inclined to dispute Lord Bury's inference from this anecdote, that Prussia have since determined on a rupture of the peace of Europe, and on forcing France into war.

A Poetical Murderer.

On Monday morning, Patrick Burr, who was condemned to death at the last Manchester Assizes for the murder of his wife, was executed within the precincts of the Salford Hundred Prison, Strangeways, Manchester. The murder was of a most brutal character, and the only witness who could speak to its perpetration was the second son of the prisoner, a lad fourteen years of age. The murderer walked to the scaffold with—

"Dear boys, don't fret,
This is a debt
To nature due,
I must go to the earth
Which gave me birth,
And so must you."

He stood quietly while the rope was being adjusted, and, before the bolt was drawn, frequently exclaimed, "Lord Jesus, have mercy on me!" He struggled violently only for a short time after the bolt was drawn.

Fenian Convicts.

There are at present twenty-six Fenians in English convict prisons. Of these, three were convicted of high treason, and all the rest of treason-felony. Two of those convicted of high treason were actually condemned to death, which sentence was afterwards commuted to penal servitude for life. Two others were sentenced one for high treason, the other for penal servitude for life, while the remainder are under sentence of penal servitude for periods varying from seven years down to five years. Six were convicted in the year 1865, two in the year 1866, eleven in the year 1867, and seven in the year 1868.

FRANCE.

Trochu's Plan.

The Times' correspondent at Versailles has arrived at the conclusion that General Trochu is forming a vast entrenched camp under the guns of Fort Valerien, into which he intends to retire when Paris is all but starved and the population is become full of troubles. The fact of itself a little suspicious; but it is safe from fire; it commands Paris, and by day they have seen long convoys of carts going along the road from Courbevoie to the rear of the fort, as if heavily laden, and returning briskly, as if light. The labor bestowed on the entrenchments and their extent indicate somewhat the work of a month, many days in a stubbornly contested one. There is the centre of one great entrenched camp, another still larger—to the south of the Mill Battery, and beyond it to the south again—that is, nearer to the German position—is yet another work, with its front defended by rifle pits. There can be no question about the intention of these entrenched positions; they can cover a very large force; nor can there be any doubt but that the Germans intend to try the 'metal' of the French guns and their own left upon it. Then, on various points which appear assailable, they will animate their troops, at all events, and it may be with results—to us undesirable change in the attitude of the defence. The guns of the tiermans are of exceedingly long ranging powers. The larger guns, with 170-lb. shell are very effective; but I question if even their masters in a fair duel. To the end great mortar-battery, of whatever it may be called, the French have no means of replying.

Durrot's Escape.

I have heard (writes a correspondent of the Times) from a trustworthy source the account which General Ducrot gives of his escape; and as it contains some particulars which I do not remember to have seen given in extenso in print, I will place it before your readers. He lays stress upon his refusal to sign the capitulation at Sedan, and says that, being a prisoner, it was suggested by his captors that he should proceed in his own carriage on parole with his wife and aides-de-camp to the railway station at Pont-a-Mousson, and there deliver himself up. He duly arrived there, found the station in the hands of the Prussians, reported himself to the officer in charge, and thereby, as he considers, redeemed his word. He was ordered to enter a train about to proceed to Germany, but could not find a vacant seat. He called attention to this, and asked for an additional carriage. The reply was that the train was already too long, and he must proceed by the next, which would start in two hours. He then asked if he might visit a friend in the town, and received permission, on pledge being either asked or given as to his return. At his friend's house he and his aides obtained peasant's dresses, and a country cart with a load of manure. Their swords and uniforms were buried under the potatoes. In a blue blouse and trowsers, with a pipe in his mouth, a peasant's hat on his head, and with bare feet thrust into sabots padded with a bit of straw, General Ducrot rode on the box of the cart. General Ducrot rode on the box of the cart. The ladies large dangling. An aide-de-camp, similarly attired, led the horse, and another acted as postilion. In this way the party passed safely through the Prussian lines, and reached a place which they could call neutral ground. In their natural characters. Whether in all this there was a violation of the parole is a question that every reader must decide for himself.

The Empress and the War.

The Observer publishes the following statement respecting the Empress Eugenie, which it has received from a reliable quarter:—"The last Council of Ministers held at the Tuileries early in the morning of the 4th of September. The Empress announced that she had received a telegram in cipher from the Emperor confirming the news of the surrender of the army and the captivity of the Sovereign. After an animated discussion, the Empress was advised by a unanimous vote of the Council to convoke a meeting of the officers of the Paris garrison in the courtyard of the palace, to tell them what had happened and ask for an assurance of their support. The Empress replied that she did not doubt for a moment that they would responded to, but she would not for the sake of the Emperor and the dynasty, suffer a drop of blood to be shed in civil strife. During her exile her Majesty has constantly maintained the same reserved attitude. She has constantly rejected every proposal to make her influence felt in political affairs. She has lived in complete privacy, and, so far from intruding herself on public affairs, has successfully striven to keep her name out of the papers. The accounts that have appeared of her Majesty's intrigues and negotiations for the restoration of the Imperial power are absolutely and entirely without foundation. The resolution arrived at on the 4th of September not, in time of war and invasion, to incur the risk of civil strife, has never been violated in thought or deed."

Rouher's Diary.

Apropos of prisoners, an amusing story is told by a correspondent. "A Prussian cuirassier had the luck to capture a Prussian subaltern. On the road to Paris, the latter passed the time in a friendly manner, chaffing him unscrupulously on the length of time the Prussians took to reduce the city. 'How do you fare in your capital?' 'How do we fare?' why, first-rate," was the reply. "You see, we even have a diary, as extensive as you imagined they were?" "Quoi! oh, they have been eaten long ago, then?" "No, indeed, I have a couple of them still." "Why, then, they disappeared simultaneously with the horses?" "Not at all; you have the bullocks." "Ah! I see, then, you have your horses to fall back on." "I wish we had; we devoured them long since." "What the deuce, then, eat, then?" was the astonished inquiry. "What do we eat?" replied the sailor, with the utmost gravity of the world, "have you not heard in your rear, and the enemy on all sides?" "Yes." "Why, we eat our prisoners, of course, reckoned his word. He was a young Prussian turned pale at the thought, and did not venture another remark till his arrival at his destination.

An Artillery Duel.

The bombardment of the earthworks on the eastern slope of Mont Avron was kept up during several days without opposition. continued fire on the Versailles telegrams mostly state as follows, suits the Prussian line was inconsiderable." Mont Avron itself is 450 feet above the level of the Seine, and from the top of it the view of the enemy's lines and the French three shells into Clichy, Montfermeil and Chelles all important points. In the Prussian position the comparative superiority of the means for attack and defence which the Germans have hitherto brought up by the fortress throws an enormous advantage into their hands. The marine guns of the French are more missiles of from 250 to 300 pounds, but it is doubtful whether any of these great shells ever reach the mark.

Garibaldians.

The French Provincial papers speak of Garibaldi's resignation or dismissal as immaterial. The Liberté says: "The Garibaldian Corps are losing prestige daily. They exchange more stripes and letters with each other, and such a municipality than bullets and bombs with the enemy. Their officers, moreover, are accused of indulging in too much luxury when simple volunteers are in want of the necessaries. Everybody remarks in want of the necessaries. Everybody remarks that if Garibaldi's staff is the little staff of a great army, it is the little staff of a great army, without all this theatrical display and ostentatious grandeur which fills the public with indignation. Added to this color on the Garibaldian Corps, there is the little affability part of Garibaldi's staff, which is not calculated to conciliate patriots without faced uniforms who wish to give them good advice."

Affecting Scene.

An immense number of shells fell into the Convent des Ursulines at Beaugency, during the progress of one of the recent fights. The rest cries flag was floating over it, and over all the hospitals, but no part of the town of the College, which was crammed with wounded. It took off half legs of a Prussian officer, who, as a volunteer lyer, who, as a volunteer live political assistant, had gone through the whole campaign, and who was at this moment engaged in binding up the wounds of a German soldier, whom he had protected and brought in. Then a most affecting incident occurred. The German lad seated his benefactor's hand, and, shrinking himself it repeatedly as the necessary amputation was performed. Alas! the noble spirit of the man, who closed an exemplary life in an act of love for his enemy, passed away in mortal agony.—Correspondent of the Times.

GERMANY.

The Prussian Spoon-Stealers.

The following caustic story is told by some Swiss by a London contemporary: "During the recent detention of a party of Englishmen by the Prussians, Captain Hozier, the Times' correspondent appeal to have enjoyed a modified kind of liberty, sufficient to admit of their remaining in the salle à manger of the hotel in which they were imprisoned, while their less fortunate comrades were confined to their rooms. By this semi-liberty they determined to avail themselves to the utmost, in hopes of coming in the course of the day across some German officer who might take up their cause. And here it was that the incident occurred, the narration of which may fairly, we think, be taken as a receipt in full of all demands. Dinner was proceeding in a hotel at Etampes, when a big, burly Prussian, whose shoulder strap showed that he belonged to the Ninetieth regiment of infantry, seated himself at the end of the table. His brow was heavy; his countenance dull, but with an expression which might easily turn into ferocity. Captain Hozier and were struck by his appearance, and were regarding him closely when his attention was attracted by a movement at each other. He had just taken a spoon from the table and put it in the breast of his coat—probably in a pocket. Before he used a second spoon followed, and as it went I heard the clink of metal. Sundry more was a tall, portly man in spectacles, they called for their bill, not a large one, and paid. I listened carefully—not a word was said about the spoons. In a few minutes the massive mast of the Ninetieth disappeared, and the small will be found missing from his right elbow, and working quietly there. Something was being slowly let down from the breast of his coat—probably a pocket. Something was being slowly let down from the breast of his coat—probably a pocket. Something was being slowly let down from the breast of his coat—probably a pocket

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 4.
Sunday—Fourth Sunday after Epiphany.
Monday—St. Martina, Virgin and Martyr.
Tuesday—St. Peter Nolasco.
Wednesday—St. Bridget, Virgin, Patroness of Ireland.
Thursday—Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary.
Friday—St. Blase, Bishop and Martyr.
Saturday—St. Andrew Corsini, Bishop.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY.....JANUARY 28, 1871.

THE EXCOMMUNICATION IMPOSTURE.

The course pursued by the Sacramento Union, during its brief controversy with us respecting the Excommunication Imposture, has been the reverse of honorable or straightforward. It printed as emanating from PIUS IX. a disgusting document written by an immoral person named STERNE. When brought to book for the calumny, instead of frankly acknowledging the mistake and apologizing, it shifted ground and declared that if the Pope did not issue the formula in question, some of his predecessors promulgated ones very similar. Challenged for proof, it quoted two Protestant writers, one of them of no literary repute whatever, and the other of some standing as an English scholar, but both bitterly hostile to the Catholic Church, and therefore, in all fairness, excluded from court. It was asked to produce some authority not open to suspicion, and such are to be found in plenty; but our ecclesiastical contemporary could only reproduce LEA and trot out MELMAN. Then it dexterously turned the tables and, as if the onus probandi lay with THE MONITOR, demanded that we quote in full the Bull excommunicating VICTOR EMMANUEL, and also that cutting off BALDWIN of Flanders from the Church. In the article thus challenging us, it to a certain extent confesses the "Orisian Shandy" forgery, and by our insinuates throughout that it is genuine and has been used by the Church. We need not say how grossly unfair such a proceeding is, and how perfectly useless to argue with one who avails himself of such paltry tricks. But we will meet him on his own ground. There is no necessity whatever of our quoting the entire of the Bull against the King of Italy. It would occupy five or six columns of our space, and we printed the most interesting portions of it last week. It principally consists of a long summary of the outrages upon the Papal temporalities committed by the emissaries of the excommunicated King. But the opening" par, so far as anything like it is to be found, is as follows. (We copy from a translation in the London Tablet of November 26th, 1870. The same was published in the Times and most of the leading English papers):

> But since our admonitions, expostulations and protests have been without effect, by the authority of Almighty God, of the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul, and by Our own, We declare to you, Venerable Brethren, and by you to the whole Church, that all those who have perpetrated the invasion, usurpation and occupation of any of the Provinces of Our dominion and of this our Beloved City, or have done any of these things, of whatever dignity they may be, and even though they should be worthy of most special mention and in the manner all the aiders, abettors, assistants, counsellors, adherents and all others, either obtaining the execution of these things, under whatever pretext or in whatever manner, or executing them themselves; have incurred, according to the form and tenor of Our Letters Apostolic, recited the 26th of March, 1870, the Greater Excommunication, and the other censures, and ecclesiastical penalties published by the Holy Canons, Apostolic Constitutions, and Sacred Decrees of General Councils, and particularly of the Council of Trent. (Sess. 22, C. 11 de Reform.)

But, calling to mind that We look on earth the place of Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost, We desired nothing more ardently than to embrace with paternal love the wandering sons who may return to Us; and, therefore, raising Our hands to Heaven in humility of Our heart, remitting and commending to God the most just of causes, which is He still more than Our own, We conjure and supplicate Him, by the bowels of His mercy, to aid Us by His succor, to aid His Church, and to bring about through His mercy and compassion that the enemies of the Church, thinking upon the eternal damnation which they are preparing for themselves, may hasten to appease His terrible justice before the day of vengeance, and to console by their conversion the affection of their Holy Mother the Church, and their own grief.

Our readers, and, we hope, the editor of the Sacramento Union, will acknowledge that there is no comparising" in this—nothing even resembling the truculency of LAURENCE STERNE'S allusy of mistellections. We might lawfully end the controversy here, inasmuch as we fully established the only point we ever raised, viz: that PIUS IX. never fulminated the curses in "Tristam Shandy" against VICTOR EMMANUEL. But we wish to enlighten our contemporary a little further. His Holiness declares the perjured monarch to have exposed himself to the "Major Excommunication," and he pronounces it against him in the words we have quoted. We now give an authoritative definition of what this dread sentence is. Saint LIGUORI in his "Theologia Moralis" thus defines it: "Excommunicatio est censura, per quam quis privatur communione Ecclesiæ. Estque duplex, minor, quæ tantum privat ad passivo, seu recipiunc sacramentorum: et major, quæ etiam dicitur anathema, ac in jure fere semper annexa excommunicationi intelligitur, privat quoque communione ecclesiastica, secundum divinda. (Mechlin edition, vol. 8. p. 203.) No intimation is here given that any cursing or wishing evil belongs to the punishment. This celebrated divine, in the course of more than three hundred pages—in which he describes with the most painstaking minuteness the nature and effects of censures, excommunications and interdicts, and in which he lays down strict rigidity how persons falling under the judgments of the Church are to be treated—never once alludes to the imprecation of maledictions as any of the terrors to which they are exposed. Nor do the "Canons and Decrees of the Council of Trent," although they lay down very precise rules as to how and against whom the censures of the Church are to be directed, enjoin or sanction the use of language like that quoted by the Union. Now, as for the excommunications alleged to have been promulgated against BALDWIN of Flanders and others, what does the Union expect us to do? It says they were issued by the Catholic Church; we maintain they were not, and our contemporary wants to push the burden of proof upon us! Does it require us to prove a negative? Must we quote every Bull issued by the Popes, just to show that there are no such among them? It would, we fancy, be quite time enough to make such a demand when the supposititious documents were traced to any recognized authority on such matters. We did hope, however, to be able to give the Union's assertion the best possible refutation, by showing that the documents referred to were not in the authentic records. There is not, we are sorry to say, a Bullarium in California, and therefore we could not make the necessary investigation. There is one, we understand, in the Astor Library, New York, and we have written to a friend to identify the Bulls in question and report to us. Should we receive intelligence that the Union is correct we shall acknowledge the fact and say no more about Excommunications. The trouble we have taken to enlighten our contemporary compels us, we venture to suppose, the right to administer a little advice. Let the Union-support Radicalism and oppose railroads to its heart's content, but leave Catholicity, and matters of which it knows nothing whatsoever, severely alone. When, by inadvertence or otherwise, it makes a mistake, let it "own up" frankly, and not try to twist and wriggle out of the difficulty. Finally, we would ask our contemporary to reflect upon the words of NIGHTINGALE in his "Delusion of all Nations," in book, of just such a bête higher repute than Mr. HENRY C. LEA's ostudies in Church History":—"In scarcely a single instance has a case concerning the Catholics been fairly stated, or the chandeliers of history not been grossly, not to say wickedly, corrupted." A prudent recognition of the truth of this confession may prevent him from catching up every second-hand slander and palming it off on the Illuminati of Sacramento as a crushing charge against the Catholic Church.

THE MAGDALENA BAY SETTLEMENT.

For some months past every effort, in the way of pleasuring and advertising, has been made to attract public attention to a scheme for the colonization of certain lands in Lower California. It seems that a Company, comprising some of the choicest New York Radicals, and other kindred spirits, have contrived to secure a grant from the Mexican Government, of the greater portion of the peninsula, and sixty acres exactly to all comers —It has been thought proper to discourage a certain nationality for reasons which have not been made public, but are, no doubt, sufficient. If individuals of this proscribed nationality will go, there can be no help for it, but a little dexterous "discouragement" of their intentions in the Company's office will act as a check upon them. The persons, whoever they may be, declared ineligible to the new Eden down at Magdalena Bay, can lawfully console themselves with the reflection that they lose very little indeed. All the accounts published by parties really acquainted with the place agree in describing it as one of the most uninviting looking spots to be found on the whole Pacific coast. Some who have examined the Company's location have declared it utterly impossible that any population can be supported there. The land, for the most part, is sandy waste, diversified only with dense thickets of cactus, and therefore totally unsuited for cultivation. Fresh water is very scarce in the best localities, and cannot be procured in any quantity at all over the great extent of the Company's grant. It has been stated, upon what authority we know not, that the promoters of the colonization scheme are keeping the little good land to be found for themselves, and planting the happy settlers on that a square mile of which would hardly provide sustenance for a grasshopper. But, it may be urged, why should these gentlemen pay the Mexican Government thousands of hard dollars for square leagues of sand and cactus? The answer is, because with the land, which is comparatively worthless, go certain fishing rights, and deposits of guano which are rather valuable. Magdalena Bay is a great resort of whales, and the Company intends to do a trade in oil and bone. The islands in the bay are covered with guano, of an inferior kind, but still good for something, and the Company intends to ship this off and sell it for what it may fetch. It is to be borne in mind, however, that the colonists will not be permitted to meddle with the whales or dispose of a pound of the guano—these things belong to the extremely generous Company. It will, no doubt, be asked—why should the Company give away their lands? Fearful that the distinguished gentlemen comprising it should be found guilty of reckless liberality, we reply—because their charter from the Mexican Government obliges them to have a thousand bona fide settlers on the spot by a certain date. If the colonists are not on the ground, as per agreement, then the lands, whales and guano revert to the Government. Time is rolling on and the thousand colonists are not yet located near Magdalena Bay so the probabilities are that the Company will lose whatever title they have to the place. It is easy to imagine how comfortable the immigrants will feel when left to the tender mercies of the Mexican Government. Of course when we admit this supposition, we also admit the possibility of finding sufficient water to support life. Considering that a well has already been sunk a hundred and sixty feet and no water been struck, we feel that we are stretching our probabilities too far. Taking all things into consideration, we think Lower California is a very nice place —to avoid.

THE TENIAN PRISONERS.

The manner in which the four Fenian prisoners, who arrived in New York last week, frustrated the attempt of recalcitrant political factions to make capital out of their reception, reflects the highest credit on them. It shows that they are perfectly well acquainted with the currents of party intrigues in this country, and had made up their minds that they would not be used as stalking horses by any section of the community. It was neither respect for them personally, nor yet sympathy with the cause for which they suffered, which prompted the men of Tammany and their opponents to take such very great trouble to do honor to our patriotic fellow-countrymen. Their principal, if not their sole, object was undoubtedly a desire to influence the Irish vote. The unfortunate tendency of our people to be extravagantly grateful for small favors being well known, the Eastern politicians went confidently thought that any attention shown to Rossa and his companions would bear good fruit in the forthcoming election contests. This was practically underrating the intelligence of the Irish voters, and treating them as though they were the easiest fooled people in the country. Moreover, it was equivalent to believing that the Fenian prisoners had so little respect for themselves and the cause they represented as to be capacitated for enlisting as recruiting "decoys," as soon as they had landed on American soil, for a clique of scheming politicians. Therefore we are heartily glad that O'DONOVAN ROSSA and his comrades eschewed all public receptions and retired to the privacy of their hotel. They will find plenty of more honorable as well as more congenial work upon which to employ themselves. The attitude of the various associations and organizations, into which the Irish nationalists in the United States are divided, is such that it only requires the influence of the leading spirits among the unsettled prisoners to induce them to lay aside jealousy and antagonism and cordially unite for the good of the common cause. They can, if they are wise, perfect the labors to which the new organization known as "United Irishmen" has specially devoted itself. Much progress has already been made. Incapables have been pushed aside and charlatans ejected; order and efficiency are rapidly taking the place of confusion and worthlessness; so that, in a very short time, the best possible relations will exist between the Irish Republicans in this country and those at home. It is to the realization of this blessed consummation, and not to the furtherance of the schemes of New York politicians, that O'DONOVAN ROSSA and his companions in suffering ought, and, we have no doubt will, direct all their energies.

ENGLAND AND THE CONFERENCE.

The action of Russia in repudiating the Treaty of 1856 was certainly a direct challenge to England, and we have not the slightest doubt it was designed as such by the Emperor Alexander. It was tantamount to a declaration that the great Northern Power would not be restricted in its career of conquest by any apprehension of what Great Britain might do, and that thenceforward the Muscovite autocrat would pursue the great scheme of national aggrandizement sketched out by Peter the Great, without any regard to its effects upon the interests of other potentates. British statesmen were not prepared to let this defiant pronouncement lie unchallenged, for it would be a self-evident surrender of the nation's honor; so they waxed highly wroth and used the very strongest language of condemnation, just as if they meant to declare war at once if Russia did not abandon her purpose of repudiating the Treaty. The Czar's Government, however, listened to all these furious diatribes with the serenest composure, and kept on tearing the obnoxious document to pieces as if no such power as England existed in the world. Here was a crisis fast approaching; a collision was absolutely inevitable unless one or other of the parties gave way. Russia had no great objection to a fight and therefore some sensible man took down; England had no stomach for a quarrel, but was ashamed to retreat. Evidently what was wanted was some dexterously contrived expedient, by which the Czar could get all he sought and the British Cabinet change its base without appearing to do so. A Conference was therefore proposed and accepted by all the parties concerned. It was, beyond all question, the most stupendous piece of humbug ever known. Before the Conference could be found chronicled in diplomatic annals, Russia was quite willing to send a representative to the assembly provided that the right for wrong of her abrogation of the Paris Convention should not be brought under discussion. Now, considering that the only cause for this Conference at all was the simple fact of the repudiation of the Treaty, it must be admitted that the demand of the St. Petersburg Government was anything rather than modest. But England jumped at the idea of this Congress, notwithstanding this strange proviso, because it afforded her an excellent opportunity of slinking out of the war she was bringing upon herself. The Conference of Russia's accepting the Conference was trumpeted all over Great Britain as a splendid moral victory. The press sang its praises with every variety of intonation and accompaniment. Orators treated the public to glowing accounts of what the army and navy would have done if the Northern Bear had not retreated and abandoned his aggressive attitude. But the truth is that the aforesaid animal has got some back a single step and abandoned nothing whatsoever. The Treaty of Paris is shivered into atoms, and it never will be put together again by the Conference or any other agency. The diplomates have assembled in London, only JULES FAVRE is wanting to complete the representation of all the Powers that signed the document in question, but what they are to do, what business they have to transact, goodness only knows. The whole proceeding is a farce of the broadest and most ludicrous kind. Yet England is supremely happy; the Conference, such as it is, is an accomplished fact, and there will be no war—that is to say, unless the Czar ALEXANDER dishes up some more humble pie and presents it to Mr. JOHN BULL. MARTIN has been empowered by the gallant men of Meath to act as their representative in the British Parliament, and let the Italian masters of Ireland know the true sentiments of her people. We do not know whether the new Member for Meath will ever trouble the Hall of St. Stephens; but we are perfectly aware that he could not alter the cruel policy of the Ministry, though he spoke with the tongue of angels and of men. It is but too well that it should be so, for we should regard it as an overwhelming misfortune if anything should tend to make the Irish disposed to accept British domination, no matter how amended or reformed. Our people must be free, sovereign and independent, or they will remain slaves—there is no middle course. While the Irish have the fullest and their appreciation of the patriotic self-sacrifices of O'BRIEN and MARTIN, they have not, we are happy to say, forgotten more practical work. Every account which has reached those who are in communication with the Irish publican organization in Ireland, tells of new recessions to the national ranks, the abandoning of ancient feuds and dissensions, incessant preparation for a great struggle, the accumulation of arms and ammunition, and not much activity in drilling as circumstances will allow. This is cheering intelligence, for it proves that our countrymen set a proper value on the blessings of freedom, and are willing to make sacrifices to obtain them. No doubt, it is melancholy to think that a civil war is visible in the future of Ireland, but there are worse things than civil war—which, at most, is only the matter of a few years—and one of them is subjection to foreign rule. That, to a man of proper spirit, is a thousand fold more deplorable, numbous sacrifices which such a desperate policy would entail. We know that that area of devastation would be still further increased; that more fields would be ravaged, more cities burnt, more cities pillaged; and thousands, and perhaps, hundreds of thousands, of lives would be lost; and an amount of human suffering positively fearful to contemplate would be endured by all classes of the population. But, when national peace is at stake, when the record of a people that have stood foremost among nations for a thousand years is not to be sullied; when the glorious fame of a line of heroes traceable all through history until it loses itself in the very earliest ages of myth, are in peril of being tarnished,—these things sink into insignificance, and the natural impulse of every man who is not the brand of a slave on his back is to fight on and fight desperately to the last. The present generation of Frenchmen have a heavy responsibility upon them, for upon their conduct in the crisis now opening their country, rest its future and its fame. If they bear themselves in a manner worthy of their fathers, they will place the millstone of disgrace from their children's necks for ever. But, if they succumb, these are two dramas, the first of the acts, and the second in order of opening before. They would assuredly fill the civilized world with horror and dismay. At Tantes, and we trust they will be availed of for that purpose. They can be had at Mr. Bateman's, Catholic bookseller, on Kearny street.

THE CATHOLIC ALMANAC DIRECTORY.—The highly compiled annual has just made its appearance. It contains full returns of the various dioceses in the United States and British North America, and a list of Archbishops, Bishops and Priests in the land. It is, therefore, extremely valuable to all Catholic families as a book of reference. It may be had in this city, from Mr. Bateman, of Kearny street or Mr. Flood, of Market street.

THE OVERLAND MONTHLY for February has a number of much merit. The articles which show a wide range of selection, are "Walking in Alameda," "The Bohemians and their Race," "Ghost Whaling," "A Phantom Tragedy," "Graveyard Literature" (a rather morbid subject), "A Nook of the Latest Question," "The Night Side of Whisky," "Under the Dragon's Standard," "How Jack Breeze Missed He was Pasha," "A Chinese Primer," "Critical Notices," and the usual notices of Current Literature.

S. WARNER.—So many southern merchants are observed for the cure of various diseases when tried "found wanting" that the brand of Warner & Co's specifics We have yet to learn. Many of the first factors of Warner's Balsam of Wild Cherry in our country, cures and pulmonary complaints, and Warner's Safe Cure, which is also a standard remedy for all diseases of the kidneys, liver and urinary organs, are both worthy of the confidence of the public. Their depot is at 214 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

VERSAILLES, January 19.—The bombardment of Paris proceeds slowly but steadily. The gunners systematically avoid firing on the public buildings. A flag of truce was sent into the city yesterday, with a number of letters.

Accounts from Paris represent terrible hardships and suffering caused by the bombardment, the shells falling within a few feet of Louis (Grenelle) and reaching as far as the Champs Elysées.

The German batteries on the southwest of Paris are advanced to within eight hundred yards of Fort Montrouge, which replied yesterday with one gun on the west front. Fort Issy firing two guns at long intervals. The French outworks at Villejuif, silenced at the beginning of the bombardment, have been broken out again, and the four long-range guns there are doing some still shooting over the batteries, making it uncomfortable for travelers.

VERSAILLES, January 20.—There is great excitement throughout the German lines. The sorties have already been officially reported from headquarters. It was a last desperate attempt of the French yesterday to break through the lines. During the assault on the German entrenchments many of the French leaders displayed reckless bravery, urging their men bravely, without effect. In some instances the French fought with fury, evidently heightened by strong drink and other causes, but all efforts of their leaders were in vain. The French, after being turned, fled, dropped on the ground, and threw away their arms. The first dash, early in the morning, was made from the Bois de Boulogne against the entrenchments opposite Montretout, and was successful. The Germans fell back from their position, which was held by the French till evening. Immense masses of French kept pouring out, evidently concentrating for an attack on St. Cloud. At Versailles there was a tremendous commotion. Ladies drinking wine were moved to the front, and amidst the roar of the guns of Fort Valerien, a general rush was made to string the lines to the west and southwest. The advancing columns were met by a deadly fire from Sevres, while the artillery in the rear kept up a constant shelling on the Bois de Boulogne and the entrenchments of the French lines. The German troops in several instances followed them up attacking the former in their position at Montretout. The whole French force withdrew to Valerien, under the shelter of the guns.

A report is current that Trochu asked for an armistice, but it is doubtful if the truce was granted it, for the purpose merely of gathering the wounded. Officers on duty at the outposts say that large masses of men were busily discernible, and lanterns and stretchers were occupied the whole night.

The streets are filled with rumors of capitulation; there is a feeling that the end is coming at hand. The masses of the entire defeat of Faidherbe's army, and probably the annihilation of Bourbaki's army.

Prisoners captured yesterday concur in the statement that the object of the sortie was to distract the besieged. They say the men were disinclined to fight, and were driven to the front like sheep to slaughter. An order issued by Trochu before the sortie, stated that the army was surrounded, and notified the army that it would be shot, and a special guard was placed in the rear to carry out the order. The troops in the forts were supplied with extra food and liquor.

It is believed that the armistice will be renewed when the weather clears, but the result can be no longer doubtful; there is no hope for the troops in Paris but additional slaughter, unless the present failure should lead to capitulation.

LONDON, January, 21.—Despatches from the bombardment average fifteen shells per minute.

The Standard says Quentin railway station was destroyed by the Germans yesterday morning, and the town afterwards occupied. Two thousand French were wounded and fifteen hundred captured, with six guns.

The Germans refused the demand for an armistice to bury the dead before Paris, because it was considered inadmissable.

Bismarck William telegraphs to Empress Augusta the following:

"VERSAILLES, January 21.—Yesterday the enemy was entirely withdrawn from Montretout and the Moulin de Pierre, and 250 men made a sortie at St. Cloud. The unwounded of the enemy's troops passed the night in 1200 beneath 2,000 wounded taken in the town. The total loss of the French was 15,000 men. WILLIAM."

LONDON, January 22.—Advices from Paris state that at a meeting of the Council, on Friday, General Trochu announced that all hopes for assistance from the provinces should be disappointed, it would be his duty to surrender the city. Gambetta and Favre opposed the plan of surrender, but were overruled, and it was accepted unanimously, after a hot quarrel.

LONDON, January 22.—On Saturday afternoon Gambetta addressed an enthusiastic crowd, and advised resistance to the last extremity. He also issued the power of any price party, and regulated dictatorship. He urged all to be calm and prophesied final triumph.

VERSAILLES, January 22.—It is said the French losses by the sortie are under 3,000. In an order of the day Trochu eulogizes all engaged.

PARIS, Sunday evening, January 22.—The French repulsed an attack of the Prussians on the extreme left line. The enemy were pursued, and the positions held by them at Issy and Montrouille occupied. The Garibaldians entered Pupin and Montrouille. The Prussians Pine Bridge in their flight abandoned their wounded.

PARIS, January 21.—Last night at 11 o'clock, a general summons to arms was sounded in the turbulent quarters, but as no response was the immediate result that not more than five hundred men responded to the call. It was useless to attempt to organize them, as the Hotel de Ville, as they gave up the job in despair, and betook themselves to their cafés and cheerful beds. To-day the Prefect of Police and a strong body of the National Guard are at the Hotel de Ville, and the adjacent streets bristle with bayonets. The mischievous citizens of Paris are not much wasted by misery to be able to incite a revolution, although it is probable that some trouble will occur in the streets.

BERLIN, January 21.—The Emperor William, in a letter to the Grand Duke of Baden, says:

"Germany, which has become strong through the unity of her princes and people, has received her former position in the council of nations. Germany neither wants nor is inclined to conquer her frontier. She seeks only independence and the mutual advancement and welfare of the nations by extension of her commerce."

VIENNA, January 23.—There is reason to believe that a willingness will soon be shown by France or Prussia, or both, to admit of the interposition of neutral Powers in the interests of peace.

LONDON, January 24.—It is impossible to make the Parisians consider the question of surrender. They are anxious to fight under competent leadership.

The ration of flour is half a pound daily per man. The poorer people receive bread gratis, with a pint of wine each, and a little syrup daily. The middle classes suffer most seriously. Potatoes are sold at a franc apiece, and dog-flesh is worth a dollar per pound.

LONDON, January 25.—The London Times has the following special:

"VERSAILLES, January 24.—Favre is here, and proposes the capitulation of the soldiers and garrison of Paris with the honors of war. The terms are not deemed admissible. The attack on St. Denis and the disaster of the sortie of the 19th, mainly led to the resolution to ask for terms. General Trochu is sick and Vinoy is in command. The arrangement of the terms of surrender will take time; the French demands are by far too large."

The Times, in a leader, says that if Favre refuses unconditional surrender and will not send the whole war on German terms, Bismarck has in his possession a full acceptance of these terms by the French Emperor and Empress, and will threaten to restore Napoleon.

A special dispatch to the World, from Versailles, January 24th, says: At an interview with M. Regnier to-day, Bismarck said: "The general Bonbaki is caught between generals Werder and Manteuffel and must shortly surrender. Paris will capitulate in a day or two, when 300,000 Germans will be released to subjugate France. I want a Republic with whom I cannot negotiate with the nation." Regnier suggested that Napoleon would be useful for any party in France to make peace. Bismarck became angry and closed the interview.

LONDON, January 25.—A dispatch to the Telegraph, from Versailles, says that there is ground for believing that Paris will surrender. There is a great scarcity of fuel and provisions.

BERLIN, January 24.—The Liberals condemn Bismarck, and not Favre, for delaying peace. A Democratic paper says: "There is no necessity for pricking the vanquished with pins; the Chancellor's last note may encourage resistance north, and if it costs a dozen soldiers' lives, it will be a too expensive fee for the author of the classical dispatch of the 16th."

BERLIN, January 23.—Letters from Paris by balloon state that the Ungirdle Defence, on the afternoon of the 21st, accepted the resignation of Trochu, and recalled Admirals Saisset and La Roncière. Trochu remains as Civil Governor. Leflo is succeeded by Lavalin.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

Some gentlemen of means have in contemplation the organizing of a company for the manufacture of beet sugar, at Tuscola, Tulare county.

President Grant and Vice-President Colfax are each to be the recipients of another present from California, in the shape of a barrel of beet sugar from the Alvarado factory.

Parties in the vicinity of Hot Springs (Nev.) have found borax of fine in large quantities. A ton has been shipped, and specimens received in the State. The discovering parties have located the ground and propose working it immediately.

Three thousand six hundred shares in the Farmers' and Mechanics' Savings and Loan Bank, which is to be organized in Stockton, have already been subscribed. The institution is to have a capital of $500,000. At present, but ten per cent. of that amount will be called in.

The stage from Murphy's Camp and San Andreas was again robbed on Monday morning by three highwaymen, at the Calaveras Grocery's Creek, a short distance this side of San Andreas. Wells, Fargo & Co.'s treasure box was broken open and its contents taken. The amount in the box is not known here. The mail bags were left untouched. The robbers were in the stage.

SANTA FE, January 23.—The Las Cruces correspondent of the Daily Post gives glowing accounts of the yield of ore from the Organ Mountain mines. The latest report he says, have been received from ore sent to Newark, N. J., and New York to be assayed, during the last few days, the lowest of which was $68, the highest $8,000, and the average $2,500 per ton.

The Committee on State Affairs from the Nevada State Legislature paid a visit of inspection to Carson and Virginia, on Friday last. The Sisters now have fifty-five orphans in the institution upon their charge, for whose keeping they receive half-pay, and ten for whose board and lodging they receive the full pay. The Committee were highly pleased with the cleanliness and good order observed in every department of the institution.

The $5,000 prize in the Compagnie Industrielle Drawing (recently) was drawn by ticket 40,153. There have been 1,900 prizes drawn, four of them coin prizes. They are as follows: 5,000 francs, 2,500, 1,000, 500. The following numbers draw silver watches on Saturday last: 2,326, 2,332, 2,365, 2,385, 28,342, 28,360, 13,148, 19,227, 29,886, 16,770, 31,361, 10,848, 21,858, 19,983, 12,584, 24,980, 13,305, 36,726, 38,531, 40,044, 10,257. The drawing on Monday the following prizes were awarded: No. 10,049 wins $10,000; No. 4,899, $1,000; No. 30,010, $200; No. 7,629, $100; No. 15,746, $2,000; No. 10,162, $200; No. 5,450, $200. Nos. 11,529, 14,513 and 19,035 drew a gold watch. William Sharon, of Brooklyn, Alameda county, drew a $5,000 prize.

Saint Patrick's Day.

On Sunday last a very satisfactory meeting of delegates from the various Irish Societies was held in Irish-American Hall, Howard street, for the purpose of taking into consideration some proper celebration of St. Patrick's day. Thirteen organizations were represented, showing that our countrymen are increasing every year in numbers and importance. Mr. Thomas Burke was elected President of the Convention, Mr. H. Sherwood, Vice-President, Mr. C. D. O'Sullivan, Treasurer, and Mr. Jeremiah J. Donovan, Secretary. Mr. Patrick Keenan was elected Sergeant-at-Arms. A Committee composed of Representatives of the various organizations was authorized to draw up programmes of exercises, and divise means of defraying the expenses. The delegates present bound the Societies, on whose behalf they acted, to agree to the decisions of the Convention. The meeting then adjourned. From the harmony and good feeling that prevailed, it is evident we shall have a splendid demonstration on the festival of Ireland's Patron Saint.

J. K. MOTT has now on hand the largest and best assorted stock of Irons and Shares in the city. He is now making the best irons and grate bars, stoves and ranges to measure. He imports only the best material and employs only the best workmen. Give him a call at 512 and 514 Front street, between Montgomery and Kearny, opposite Alhambra Theatre.

EASTERN NEWS ITEMS.

It is the general impression among Senators at Washington that the bill, for the repeal of the income tax will pass that body by a large majority.

The bill for the disposition of the Presidio at San Francisco originated with the House Committee on Public Lands, instead of with Senator Casserly.

The funeral of Mrs. McGee, widow of the late Hon. Thos. Darcy McGee, in Montreal, was numerously attended; the Mayor and many prominent citizens joining in the procession. Mrs. McGee was found dead, kneeling, with her prayer-book in her hands; evidently having died during her devotions.

Senator Sumner, Chairman of the committee on Foreign Relations, has addressed a letter to Secretary Fish, requesting him to draw up a bill, to be laid before the committee, embodying the recommendations in the President's Message, about the Alabama claims. As soon as this is furnished, the consideration of claims will be commenced by the committee.

Since the organization of the Internal Revenue Bureau in 1862, until the first of January, 1871, the full amount collected has been $1,482,000,000. (Of this total, $1,387,000,000 were collected in the several districts, and the remaining $95,000,000 as direct receipts from the sale of stamps. New York collected $333,000,000, of which total New York city paid, in round numbers, $182,000,000.

A Washington dispatch of January 25, says: "An entertainment will be given tomorrow (Thursday) evening, at the Arlington House, by Representative S. S. Cox, in honor of ex-Senator Hendricks, and soon after died, Blair. The Democratic members of both Houses have been invited, and the expected attendance of ex-Governor Seymour, of New York, Governor Hoffman and Governor Bigler, of Pennsylvania, will impart to the occasion considerable political significance."

The scheme of plundering the Government of 800 acres of the Presidio Reservation at San Francisco, supported by the lobby, is in the House, and has been put in shape in a bill introduced by Axtell. The Government has an undoubted title of the land, which is worth $2,000,000, and has acquired it since the acquisition of California. It is now proposed that the Government shall relinquish it without payment, in order that it may be seized by a ring of speculators who endeavored to signal on it some years ago, but were promptly driven off by the military authorities. The bill gives 160 acres of the reservation to the city for a park, 880 to land-grabbers, and allows the United States to keep 200 acres for its forts and barracks.

It is believed that in the negotiations for the settlement of the fishery question, General Schenck will be instructed to make a proposition that the fishermen of the United States shall be put on an equal footing in all respects with those of British Provinces; that they shall have the same rights to fish in Canadian waters, to land and cure their fish and to refit in Canadian ports; in short, that the difficulty shall be settled at once and forever by the abrogation of all former treaties and legislation, and the repeal of all Canadian laws resorting any fishing ground for the exclusive use of Canadian fishermen. In return for such concession on the part of Canada, some important considerations will be asked from this Government, and it is thought that the United States could afford to pay whatever remuneration may be demanded, for the settlement of this vexatious question.

Late News from Rome.

A dispatch from Rome, January 24th, states that the ambassadors of Austria and the North German Confederation, in compliance with instructions received from their respective governments, have inquired of Cardinal Antonelli what guarantee the Pope would regard as sufficient on the part of the Italian Government, to remove the distrust at present existing between the civil and religious authorities, the reply, by order of the Pope, intimated that the Court of Rome wished no guarantees other than the pure and simple restitution of the territories of which the Head of the Neapolitan frontiers to the Pope, and would accept of no arrangement based upon the Roman conditions. The Pope's health is good; much of his time is occupied in receiving visitors. A Belgian deputation waited on him recently, and presented the offering of the Catholics of Belgium, and in an address the Pope, in reply, said:

"I thank you for having come to comfort me. Under the circumstances, doubtless, God is our principal support, but the natural affection of children should lead them to sustain the courage of their father. I will continue on the way I am walking. Do not allow yourselves to be carried away by those who to-day is only a trial. The Church was born amid trial, and has always lived in trials, and will continue its career on earth expecting and surmounting fresh trials."

Captain Sheehan Cased.

After the regular business of the Sons of the Emerald Isle Benevolent Association had been transacted on Wednesday evening, the 18th, at Irish-American Hall, an entertainment in such occasions ensued. It was the presentation to the esteemed ex-President, Daniel Sheehan, of a magnificent mammoth cane, with a gold head set with quartz. It is a beautiful specimen of artistic taste and skill. The lump of Erin holds a prominent place, as well as the All-seeing Eye of the Association. The presentation speech was made by John O'Dowd, and appropriately responded to by the recipient. Speeches were made by J. D. Shelly, Messrs. Flanagan and O'Connell, Judge Veuney, Mr. McNerey, of the Irish-American Benevolent Association, and others. Toasts were drank, and everything went off pleasantly.

LECTURE BY COLONEL WALSH.—The lecture by Colonel Walsh, to which we alluded last week, came off as advertised. It was a gratifying success, although the weather was not as propitious as it might have been. Colonel Walsh treated his audience to a very interesting dissertation on "Volunteer Military organizations," and added not inconsiderably to his good fame as a lecturer.

LONDON, January 26.—Legacy has capitulated—4,000 prisoners and 200 guns were taken.

NEW YORK, January 26.—Nothing additional to the special to the London Daily Telegraph from Marseilles that there is solid ground for the belief that Paris will surrender to-day has been received.

As already telegraphed, Bismarck announced at Versailles that General Bourbaki had been caught between the armies of Von Werder and Manteuffel, and must surrender.

THE DOMINICAN FATHERS, of Benicia, will recommence a mission at St. Peter's Church, Twenty-fourth and Columbia streets, on February 26th, the first Sunday in Lent.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

Cases to be tried before juries in the County Court will be taken up on Tuesday, the 31st instant.

In the case of Eugene McCarthy vs. Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, in the County Court, judgment was yesterday rendered for the plaintiff for $60.

James Stray was arrested beneath a heavy plate of machinery at Coffey & Risdon's works. His right arm was broken and his hand was cut off at the wrist.

The new steamer Thoroughfare makes regular trips daily between the landing at the foot of Second street and the new pier on the Oakland side of the bay.

A correspondent calls attention to the dangerous condition of the planking on Meiggs wharf. The proper authorities should see that it is put in a condition to accommodate travel.

On Tuesday, Johnny Carson, son of John Carson, who resides at the San Jose road, about a mile beyond St. Mary's College, was kicked by a horse so severely that it is doubtful whether he will recover. His thigh was badly cut open.

A new locomotive, named "J. D. Dowley," designed for the North Pacific Railroad, was, on the 20th instant, taken from the Union Iron Works, where it was manufactured, to the Market street wharf, whence it is to be shipped to Petaluma.

On Sunday night last, there were taken from the Americus, recently arrived from China, twenty-five car loads of tea and silks, destined for Chicago, New York and Boston. This is the first heavy shipment of these articles overland in bulk. The twenty-five cars were all in one train.

James Gibbons fell down the stair way of a house on Jackson street, near Montgomery, and received such injuries that he died in a few minutes. He followed the occupation of hatter, and was in the employ of George Dougherty, on Merchant street.

By a recent order from the Commissioner of Pensions, applicants for pensions and all pensioners requiring periodical examinations, must go before the Board of Examining Surgeons, on the first Wednesday in the month. Dr. C. N. Ellinwood is President of the Board; office at 28 Montgomery street, and Dr. P. H. Humphrey, Secretary.

The ladies conducting the Fair on Twenty-first street, between Folsom and Howard, for the benefit of St. Peter's Church, return their thanks to his Excellency, Governor Haight, and to Sheriff White, for their kind visits and liberal donations on Saturday last. They also feel gratified to P. H. Canavan, Esq., for his generous contribution.

John Kelly, Jr., and others, proprietors of the Russell Hotel, on Bush street, recently recovered judgment against Michael Farrell, and enjoined him from using the name "Russell" on his hotel building. He has attempted to evade the restriction by inventing the name "Franklin." On Wednesday he was adjudged guilty of contempt in the Fourth District Court, and given until Friday to show how far he had in other respects complied with the first judgment.

If you have a discharge from the nose, offensive or otherwise, partial loss of the sense of smell, taste or hearing, eyes watering or weak, foul fetid and pungent or no perceptible odor, pain or pressure in the head, sore throat, raw, you may be sure you have the Catarrh. Thousands annually without suspecting half of the above symptoms, terminate in consumption and end in the grave. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is a perfect specific for Catarrh in its worst form, "or catarrhal headache," and is sold by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents. Sold by druggists.

Parsippany Forewarns the consumptive of death, even by unmistakable signs. Infancy or manhood, sickness or health, a dry cough, a quick pulse, and pain in the left side, are the unerring symptoms. Before it is too late consult Dr. Sherman's Office, 105 Sansome street. Pamphlet free.

Dr. Sherman's Lung Preservative is the most successful remedy ever discovered. Read his pamphlet.

Subscriptions Received.

San Leandro—Catherine Dillon, $1; Dr. Edwards, $1 00
San Jose—Patrick Cronin, $2; Capt. Ingram, $2

PARIS TO PRUSSIA.

Too ask us to yield up our city
To your haughty, implacable King!
We listen with wonder and pity!
Hark, this is the answer we fling
In the face of your chief:—No surrender!
Though your arms and your armies are vast—
While one soul is left to defend her,
Our Paris will fight to the last!

You call us a craftily nation!
Yodrew us the avengers of Right;
But, as loosely you bring denotation,
And scourge with homerical might Whatever of offences and insolence
At the door of our capital lie,
When your giant artillery thunders,
We'll show you we know how to die!

That Chalons, Metz, Strasburg, are lying
Despoiled in the blanket's pain,
Shall that be a cause for complaining?
No; let it rekindle our rath!
Though the flower of our country hath perished,
By Sadowa, by force and by flame,
Shall the honor that Frenchmen have cherished
Be lulled to sad in name?

Surrender!—and tarnish the glory
We won from the shrines of our sires!
Rather, add a fresh leaf to their story,
Which grows with undispensable fires!
By the past, and its deathless traditions;
By the memories and wounds of our Brave,
We despise and reject your conditions—
Let Paris be rather one grave!

While our women can shoulder a rifle,
While our children can march from disgrace,
Your murderous hordes are a trifle
To conquer the pride of our race!
A gentle, low answer!—Surrender!
Come on! With your armaments vast there—
You may kill us, you may burn us, you may Hurl Paris will fight to the last! —Nation.

"THE MEMORY OF THE DEAD."

Inauguration of the Statue of William Smith O'Brien.

On Monday, December 26th, the fine statue to commemorate this chivalrous, high-minded and patriotic Irishman, erected at the angle formed by the junction of Westmoreland street and D'Olier street at the south side of Carlisle bridge, was unveiled in the presence of a vast assemblage and amidst a scene of the greatest enthusiasm. The statue is about twice life-size, and is composed of Carnavazian marble, which is very hard and close-grained, and well suited to resist the effects of our climate. The pose is easy, dignified and natural. The head is thrown slightly upwards and to one side. The arms are folded across the breast, and a scroll is held in the right hand. The body is supposed to rest on the left leg, and the right one is thrown slightly forward. The costume selected is the ordinary walking suit of a gentleman, and Mr. Farrell has contrived to make the very best use of the drapery at his disposal for producing artistic effects. The hands and features are exquisitely chiseled, and we do not remember to have seen any statue in which the likeness and the manner of the person represented were more faithfully preserved. As a work of art it reflects high honor on its producer.—Soon after the statue was finished, application was made by the committee for a suitable site, and the splendid one on which the figure now stands was selected. For some reason or another a considerable time was permitted to elapse before measures were taken for erecting the statue, until about two months ago, when the pedestal was built from designs by Mr. Farrell, who, with excellent taste, made it to be as plain and simple as possible—a block of square granite, rising on a moulded foundation and surmounted by a corniced platform, on which the statue was raised a month since, when it was covered with canvas to await the ceremonial of Monday, which it was intended should be entirely devoid of any political or party tendency, and be nothing more than a national tribute to the memory of a distinguished and patriotic Irishman. Meetings were held within the past week at which the several trades and bands were assigned positions in the locality where the ceremonial was to take place, and it was arranged that there were to be no flags, banners or party emblems present on the occasion. The time announced for the proceedings to commence was one o'clock, but long before that hour large crowds began to settle down on the south side of Carlisle bridge, Aston's quay, Westmoreland street and D'Olier street, and on every point where a view of the covered statue could be obtained. Owing to its being a general holiday, and the weather being dry and reasonable, the crowds increased every moment, and it gave large detachments of the police as much as they could do to keep spaces clear for carriage traffic on the greatest thoroughfare of the city. The scene presented when the time arrived for the ceremony to commence was striking and impressive. Above the masses of the people rose the bannerols and the veiled statue on which all eyes were bent. The numerous bands played all kinds of national tunes, and one band had to take up its position on the site of the O'Connell monument at the north side of the bridge. There was not the slightest disorder in the vast assemblage, and the police, though present in large numbers, had little or nothing to do during the entire proceedings.

The platform around the base of the statue was of small dimensions, and afforded indifferent accommodation. The members of the committee, the speakers and others who received tickets, made their way with difficulty to the structure, which was invested on all sides by enormous crowds. Among those on the platform were—Messrs. Isaac Butt, P. J. Smyth, James Cantwell, Finnegan, Butler, A. M. Sullivan, Pilsworth, P. McCabe Fay, T. D. Sullivan (Bodkin), Brodigan, Thomas Ryan, Kavanagh, John Flood, O'Brien, Rev. Mr. Carroll, St. Brides's; Edward Carey, etc. The arrival of Mr. John Martin was the signal for loud and general cheering. When Mr. Martin appeared on the platform he was enthusiastically cheered, and the Sir T. Deeilla band played a Parisian pour la Syrie," followed by "God Save Ireland," the latter air evoking immense plaudits, again and again repeated. Soon afterwards the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, accompanied by Dr. William Purdon and Dr. Corley, arrived in one of the civic equipages, and was conducted by members of the committee amidst the hearty greetings of the assemblage to the platform. The proceedings were then commenced by Mr. Cantwell moving his lordship to the chair. Mr. Butler seconded the resolution. The Lord Mayor having taken the chair, Mr. P. J. Smyth said: "I now, in the discharge of a grateful and solemn duty, call upon Mr. John Martin (whom may Heaven long preserve to be the upholder of O'Brien's principles) to unveil this statue of our friend and chief, and in the name and on the part of the committee to hand it over to the city of Dublin, to be guarded like the patriot's sword, as a precious treasure, and kept bright forever."

Mr. John Martin, with the assistance of some of those on the platform, then withdrew the covering from the statue, which was revealed to the vast assemblage amidst the wildest enthusiasm, waving of hats and handkerchiefs, and other demonstrations of popular feeling.

Mr. John Martin then delivered an address. He said: Fellow-countrymen, we are assembled to-day to mark the beginning of a new epoch in Irish history. This is the first time for seventy years past that a monument has been set up in a public place to the memory of an Irishman, whose title to such an honor at the hands of his country is, that he devoted his life to his country's national cause. Free peoples erect such monuments as this, and only such—monuments to honor the memory of men of high talents and noble qualities, whose character and deeds gave renown to the name of their country, because, unhappily, our country is deprived of her national right of home government. The monuments which occupy the finest public places of the stately streets of Dublin are to the memory of men who have served England and won the favor of England—the country to which ours is made subject. They are symbols of the haughty mastery of the English people over us, and of our servility or hopelessness. They are in honor of the memory of men who loved and served England. But for our country—Ireland—"Twas their fate here to fall death to defend." Yet of late years Ireland has taken courage to set up in public places of honor in the metropolis monuments to some Irishmen who were Irish in genius, and to a great extent in sympathies also. Not far from where we are assembled stand statues of Thomas Moore, Oliver Goldsmith and Edmund Burke; and the Irish people really love and honor the memories of those three Irishmen. But no one of those three dared to advocate the national right of his country in such fashion so as to bring upon himself the enmity or even the disfavor of the power which tramples upon our national rights. Neither Moore, nor Goldsmith, nor Burke, ever exposed himself to the danger of imprisonment or exile for the sake of Ireland. And now, here standing the statue of an Irishman who, twenty-two years ago, was condemned to be hanged, drawn and quartered for his love of Ireland, for his earnest efforts in the cause of Irish independent home government. It is only now that we begin to set up in the public places of our capital, monuments to the memory of Irishmen distinguished for open and avowed patriotism—men like O'Brien, who devoted their lives to the task of redeeming Ireland from bondage, of replacing in Ireland's hand the scepter of national sovereignty, of restoring this ancient nation to her rightful place among the free nations of the world—men, in short, who strove to bring the time when we shall be no more the subjects of the English, but freemen and their equals—the time when the English shall no longer make laws for us, and appoint officials over us, and consume our revenues, and treat us, in short, as what things to be used and abused at their pleasure—the happy time when we shall be the masters of our own destinies, enjoying the inestimable blessings of independent home government. I trust that time will come peacefully, by consent of our English neighbors, so that we may become their friendly neighbors instead of their robbed and discontented subjects, as we are at present. Two other monuments expressing the same national sentiment with this one, will soon stand in sites of honor in this capital. The sculptured effigy of Henry Grattan in the midst of the halls of our old Parliament House, as if waiting for the reopening of its doors for the entrance of a restored Irish legislature. Across yon bridge, at the foot of the stateliest street of Dublin, will be raised a gorgeous monument in honor of the memory of Daniel O'Connell, the first martyr of his Catholic fellow-countrymen from the penal laws, the great apostle and champion of Irish home government. And here actually stands this statue, recalling well the features and figure of a noble, a chivalric man, a pure patriot, a beloved son of Ireland—William Smith O'Brien—a work executed in Dublin by an Irish artist, and a credit to the artist's skill. The man to whose memory this monument is dedicated came of a family whose name has been known with distinction in Ireland for two hundred years. He had the full consciousness of his high descent in all that related to duty and responsibility. No man could more thoroughly feel that noblesse oblige than did the man we honor to-day. But he never arrogated to himself any exclusive or superior rights in consequence of his high descent. He had, indeed, all the virtues of an aristocrat, and all the virtues of a democrat. He was a truly noble and virtuous Irish citizen, loyal to his country to the death. He was incapable of faction; he was all for country. I shall not now attempt to tell the virtues of my friend. I shall only say a few words upon the meaning of the placing of a public monument to his memory, and the influence of such a monument. These monuments to the memories of Grattan, O'Connell and O'Brien are sure symptoms of the approaching triumph of the cause to which the lives of those three great Irishmen were devoted. The three have been happily selected as worthy representatives and standards of Irish nationality. They were all patriots in the highest and purest sense. They were for their country, and not for foreign rule, for religious liberty and equality. They were for the equal rights of all citizens before the law. They were for the union of Irishmen in the honest love of their country. Each

Letter from Thomas Clarke Luby.

The subjoined is a copy of letter from Mr. Thomas Clarke Luby (one of the Fenian prisoners) to his wife:

PORTLAND PRISON, December 24, 1870.

MY DEAR LETITIA—I suppose that ere this you have learned that I am to be banished from my country for fifteen years. Probably you may think this "an act of clemency" on the part of her Majesty's Ministers, following an imprisonment of five years and a quarter (an imprisonment almost unexampled in severity and humiliations), might rather be styled an act of (political) cruelty. At all events you will hardly deem that "act of clemency" which may probably sever me for the rest of my life from you and my darling children, and all the other objects of my love, a boon, and most assuredly you will expend upon it little of your gratitude. A singular document, apparently emanating from the board of directors, was read to me the day before yesterday, with all the oracular ambiguity of style that is said to characterize the literary productions of the Circumlocution Office." It announced to me the probability, probability, mark, for, up to this, I have received no definite intimation about anything either from the Government or any other parties), that her Majesty's Ministers would advise her Majesty to grant a conditional pardon to myself and others. This curious document next proceeded to ask what sentence, in the event of the beneficent intentions of the Government taking effect, I proposed to make in order to merit the benefits of their magnanimous act of grace. In order to facilitate any arrangements I might choose to make, the privilege was given to me of seeing my friends to any reasonable extent, and of writing any amount of letters.

I really do not see that I can make any arrangements whatever, unless I be, in the first instance, allowed to visit Ireland for, at least, a limited period. I do not want to made the slightest display, or to take the slightest public action there; but it is utterly impossible for me to talk of private matters, either family or pecuniary, through the medium of a correspondence, one half of which must go from Portland prison; and I am determined not on any account to have you or my children to travel to this place in such dreadful weather. Your illness or death might be nothing to the British Government, but it would cause endless remorse and misery to me if anything happened to you or any of the children in consequence of exposure to the hardship of a journey, at this inclement season. After what I have suffered and gone through for years, it is time or nothing to me to have endured a somewhat longer incarceration. I am in no tremendous haste to take advantage of the gracious gift of exile. In truth, but with my present light it is not easily to see how you could conveniently, even if the weather were ever so mild, arrange matters with me here. You might have to come and stay here for a few days so as to see and talk with me repeatedly. You might have to go back to Dublin, and then return here again, etc. All this would be wastefully expensive. In a word, I cannot say anything definite about any arrangements under present circumstances; besides, as I said before, I have up to this got no definite intimation of anything from the Government, nor from authorities. A word or two about other matters. Every night I think of my mother's death and grieve for it; yet on the day before yesterday I could not help saying to my companions, in the bitterness of my soul, "Thank God! she died six months ago. Thank God! she escaped from this!" You will guess that I am in no very blissful frame of mind; but the bitterest ingredient in my cup is the [illegible] and sorrows I have, that you and my poor children are this moment suffering the most intense agony. I could say many things about what has caused your woe, but it is better for me not to say exactly what I think of it. I shall leave the task of characterizing it as it deserves to others. Again, I say, do not on any account have you or the children undertake a journey in this inclement season. Any arrangements whatever, unless I be, in the first instance, allowed to visit Ireland for, at least, a limited period. I do not want to make the slightest display, or to take the slightest public action there; but it is utterly impossible for me to talk of private matters, either family or pecuniary, through the medium of a correspondence, one half of which must go from Portland prison; and I am determined not on any account to have you or my children to travel to this place in such dreadful weather. Your illness or death might be nothing to the British Government, but it would cause endless remorse and misery to me if anything happened to you or any of the children in consequence of exposure to the hardship of a journey, at this inclement season. After what I have suffered and gone through for years, it is time or nothing to me to have endured a somewhat longer incarceration. I am in no tremendous haste to take advantage of the gracious gift of exile. In truth, but with my present light it is not easily to see how you could conveniently, even if the weather were ever so mild, arrange matters with me here. You might have to come and stay here for a few days so as to see and talk with me repeatedly. You might have to go back to Dublin, and then return here again, etc. All this would be wastefully expensive. In a word, I cannot say anything definite about any arrangements under present circumstances; besides, as I said before, I have up to this got no definite intimation of anything from the Government, nor from authorities. A word or two about other matters. Every night I think of my mother's death and grieve for it; yet on the day before yesterday I could not help saying to my companions, in the bitterness of my soul, "Thank God! she died six months ago. Thank God! she escaped from this!" You will guess that I am in no very blissful frame of mind; but the bitterest ingredient in my cup is the [illegible] and sorrows I have, that you and my poor children are this moment suffering the most intense agony. I could say many things about what has caused your woe, but it is better for me not to say exactly what I think of it. I shall leave the task of characterizing it as it deserves to others. Again, I say, do not on any account have you or the children undertake a journey in this inclement season. Any ### Sinking British Ships in the Seine.

The London Standard's correspondent at Harve gives the following account of the sinking of British ships in the Seine by the Prussians:

The Prussians, who, as I informed you in a previous letter, have occupied in force the little town of Honfleur, have not permitted us to disregard on the British flag which will put our equanimity to the test. The time has gone by when the Union Jack was an effectual protection, and when British subjects could not be molested with impunity. The Prussians, in utter defiance of international law, in utter contempt of the British flag, have seized on and sunk, one after another, the English vessels in the Seine, between Pauclair and La Maillerayre. Those vessels which were brigantines or schooners. Five of them —the Syph, Juno, Paragon, Jane Kendall and the Anne—were laden with the entire harvest of coal at Rouen, and had applied for a sauf conduit to return. This was neither granted them or refused them, and they were tired of waiting, the five vessels, in ballast, took advantage of the current and were dropped down in the river. Nonopposition was offered to their departure, and it was only when they reached Duclair that, as I am assured, by orders of General Von Goeben, they were fired into and made to bring to. The crews were ordered off, many of them without being allowed to take their clothes or money, and the Prussians, having boarded the ships, though they were fully aware of their nationality, proceeded to scuttle and sink them across the river so as to block up the passage. Another vessel, whose name I have not been able to ascertain, was nestled in cargo nor in ballast; she was scuttled too, but the strong tide that prevails in the Seine keeps her knocking about down the river. The Prussians added insult to injury; they put fancy prices on British vessels thus destroyed, and said they were their (assumed) value by means of "requisition notes." The masters and crews of them went back to Rouen, where they lay their complaint before the British vice-consul, and have at present understand from me thereupon. The vice-consul at Rouen has sent a report to the consul-general here, but when I called on him this afternoon he had not yet time to read the report, and to my request for precise information, replied that he must first communicate with the Foreign office. The French authorities, however, with a courtesy to which I am happy to be able to pay a public tribute, exerted themselves to facilitate my investigations, and on their information, and that picked up at shipbrokers' offices and from river pilots, the above narrative is founded. The story is a plain one, and speaks for itself. If Prussian insolence has even now gone to the length of repudiating English vessels and sinking them, in utter defiance of the stipulation entered into at the beginning of the war, what are we to expect next? If Prussia is at liberty thus to treat our merchant navy, surely it is a mistake to expend such vast sums on our naval establishments. I venture to assert that had these six colliers been Yankees, the Prussians would not have dared to touch them, but being English, the case was far other-wise. Only the other day, some scores of our countrymen had to leave Paris under the protection of the Stars and Stripes. Perhaps you will kindly interfere in behalf of English merchantmen now in French harbors, exposed to Prussian attack, and obtain from our Foreign Office that it will intercede with the United States to protect them from capture and ruin—the British flag seems unable to do it now.

The Fenian Prisoners in New York.

On Thursday evening, January 19th, the steamer Cuba arrived in New York Bay with a portion of the released Fenian prisoners on board. It having been rumored for several days that Collector Murphy would meet the Fenians on their arrival and bring them to the city on a revenue cutter, their presumably leaving the regulators of the reception out in the cold, there was considerable rivalry as to who would be the first on the ground. The Tammany Committee was successful in first boarding the Cuba and receiving the exiles, who were subsequently brought to the city and taken to Sweeny's Hotel, where a great number of their countrymen collected to welcome them.

Richard McCloud, Chairman of the Committee on the part of the United Irish Organization, presented an address of welcome to O'Donovan Rossa, in behalf of the thousand dollars. O'Donovan Rossa, on behalf of his companions, returned thanks warmly.

In reply to an official invitation extended to the Fenians by the Mayor, in behalf of the city authorities, by Hon. Richard O'Gorman, O'Donovan Rossa, in behalf of the Fenian prisoners, replied that owing to dissensions among the delegations, he and his companions refuse to accept any public invitation until the remainder of their comrades arrive here. Only five of the exiles are on board of the Cuba, viz.: John McClure, Henry Mullady, Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, Charles Underwood O'Connell and John Dewey.

The Irish exiles visited the Grand Opera House on Saturday night, at a special invitation. They went, but discovering early in the evening that the invitation was merely a stroke of politicians, to win them over to one side as against the other, they withdrew.

A banquet had been prepared, and it was the intention to have the exiles attend, but this offer was firmly declined by O'Donovan Rossa and the rest.

John M. Moriarty, President of the Irish Republican Association of Pennsylvania, sent a congratulatory dispatch to the Irish exiles in New York, proffering them a kindly reception from their brethren in Philadelphia. He invites them to be sure of New York politicians, who, he says, would use them for unscrupulous purposes. The Irish Republicans and United Irishmen of Philadelphia held a meeting on Saturday evening, and a committee was appointed to invite the exiles to that city, and to ask the cooperation of the city, State and national authorities to aid in giving them a reception.

SPREAD THE TRUTH.—Some medical men insist that it is undignified to advertise a remedy, however much it may benefit suffering humanity. It is like saying that an article which the world needs should be hid in a corner—like saying that the means of protecting and restoring health should be a close monopoly, and not accessible to all. The argument is the same as Shakespeare's—"Let your light so shine before men," etc. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters—an absolute specific for dyspepsia, biliousness, nervousness, and debility—had never been known to the world, and its virtues to the afflicted, if it deserves to be known, the consequence? Instead of resting quietly on its laurels, and letting the facts of its preparation would have been confined to a comparatively few persons, the proprietors thought rightly that light should not be hid under a bushel; that the afflicted everywhere should be placed on a vantage ground, which, if used, would enable them to take care of themselves. Hence the extensive use of printer's ink, and the publication of pamphlets, which have been circulated and continue to be extensively. In every instance the effect has been beneficial to the sufferer, and that the spontaneous testimonials in favor of the Bitters would fill all written languages would be a work of supererogation. It is only necessary to say that the Bitters are now standing on both of sides even if the newspapers had not been silent with regard to this unrivaled invigorant and corrective for and wife. Suppose quacks has been written from this publicity? Is that any argument against it? If the public health has been protected? If thousands have been saved, if the feeble have been strengthened and the sore restored, great results have been accomplished, and what better encouragement to exertions so directed than their success?

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTH OF DEVIL, 6TH PRECINCT,
THURSDAY, January 19, 1871.

FLOUR—The market during the past week has been inactive; we quote standard brands of Oregon extras at $7 62½@8 07½, and local brands as follows: superfine at $6 50@7 00; extra at $7 75@8 75; fancy at $9 00@10 00.

WHEAT—The offerings have been light, as well as the demand, during the week. Prices, however, show no advance. We quote superfine grades at $1 10@1 12½; fair to good shipping at $1 07½@1 10; and shipping at $1 07½@1 07½ @ 1 00 ⅝.

BARLEY—The market is very quiet, nothing doing the past week in shipping. Prices however, have been maintained. Fair feed to choice at 90@92½ cts. with the range of 85@90 cts. for poor to fair.

OATS—Have been only a moderate inquiry. We quote at the market at $1 60@1 65 ℔ bushel.

HAY—Receipts have been fair and prices well maintained. We quote good timothy at $18@19 per ton; at $18@17 ℔ ton.

POTATOES—Receipts have been in good demand, and prices have advanced. We quote the range of all kinds at $1 50@1 75 ℔ ctl.

STRAW—We quote rates as at 50@55 ℔ bale.

BRAN—We quote at $17 ℔ ton; shorts at $17 ℔ ton; ℔ 2500 ℔ 21; Pea, ℔ 2000 ℔ 23; small white, $1 90; Pink, $1 75; Lima, $2 25; Butter, $1 75@2 00.

BUTTER—Receipts are light at $1 10@1 25 ℔ roll, and $1 25@1 40 ℔ roll. The mill rate here is 30@32½ cts.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 25@1 50 ℔ ctl; Southern, at $2 50@2 75 ℔ 100 lbs.

EGGS—We quote at 37½ @ 40 cts. ℔ doz.

MIDDLINGS—The following are the quotations at the principal mills: Feed, $19 ℔ ton.

RYE—sales at $2 ℔ ctl, ℔ 100 lbs.

HOPS—We quote at 12½@15 cts. ℔ lb.

SEEDS—We quote flax at ——; and timothy, at ——; Sack, as Montioned in the market.

HOPS—We quote new California at 12½@15 cts. ℔ lb.

OIL CAKE—We quote at $30 ℔ ton from ——.

MONEY—Los Angeles, legal rate, 12@24, and Portland do., 18 cents ℔ month.

TALLOW—We quote California dry at 17@18½ cts., and Portland, 16@17 cts.

TALLOW—Quotable at 7@7 50 ℔ lb.

WOOL—We quote the following: Spring staple at 22 ℔ lb, otherwise prices are entirely nominal, the market being free of sales.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—Receipts for the week ordinary, 1640 lbs., and 3000 lbs good; 2500 lbs. fresh roll, 800@1000 lbs. good roll, 50 lbs. do. in tubs; Oregon, 1000 lbs. 200 lbs. Eastern, 500 lbs. Orange, 400 lbs.

EGGS—Receipts for the week, 1000 dozen, with a few fancy parties held at an advance. Eastern, 1000 lbs. San Juan—Oregon, per California, 75 @ 80c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 14 cts. ℔ lb; Oregon, 16c.

BACON—California at 13@13½c ℔ lb; Oregon, 16c.

DRIED BEEF—California, 16@16½c ℔ lb; Oregon, 16 kegs.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 10 @ 10c ℔ lb; second do, 9@9½c; third do, 7@8c.

VEAL—At 11@12c ℔ lb.

MUTTON—At 12@13c ℔ lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 10 @ 11c ℔ lb; corn fed, grain-fed, 6 cents ℔ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Receipts for the week, large, at 7@8 50; young Chickens at $5@6 ℔ doz; Hens, $6@7 ℔ dozen.

GAME—Geese at $1 25@1 50 ℔ dozen; Wild, $4@5 ℔ dozen; Ducks, $1 @1 50 ℔ pair.

Turkeys—Alive, 18c; dressed, 20c.

Venison—Saddle, 15c.

Hare—$1 50 ℔ doz.

FRENCH SAVINGS SOCIETY.

FRENCH MUTUAL PROVIDENT SAVINGS AND LOAL SOCIETY.

Twenty-Second Semi-Annual Statement.

Statement for the Second Half of the Year 1870.

1870. Jan.—To Balance on hand, ..... $168,345 24

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE HALF YEAR.

1870. DEPOSITS.
August, ..... Deposits ..... $98,521 70
September, ..... Deposits ..... 104,107 99
October, ..... Deposits ..... 107,142 68
November, ..... Deposits ..... 87,278 70
December, ..... Deposits ..... 129,625 75
December 31, ..... Deposits ..... 117,007 73

Total Deposits for the half year ..... $1,150,847 45

ENTRANCE FEES AND PASS BOOKS.

New members.
July, ..... 95 ..... $270 00
August, ..... 87 ..... and 1 Dup. 297 00
September, ..... 82 ..... and 2 Dups. 274 00
October, ..... 97 ..... and 1 Dup. 324 00
November, ..... 84 ..... and 1 Dup. 280 00
December, ..... 94 ..... and 1 Dup. 320 00
Total Entrance Fees and Pass' ..... 1,505 50
Books of 150 new members.

INTEREST AND PREMIUMS RECEIVED.

July, ..... Received ..... $32,802 75
August, ..... Received ..... 32,319 28
September, ..... Received ..... 32,623 25
October, ..... Received ..... 28,626 74
November, ..... Received ..... 30,140 50
December, ..... Received ..... 47,991 74

Total Interest and Premiums received ..... 240,239 25

CASH—Have been only a moderate inquiry. We quote at the market at $1 60@1 65 ℔ bushel.

HAY—Receipts have been fair and prices well maintained. We quote good timothy at $18@19 per ton; at $18@17 ℔ ton.

POTATOES—Receipts have been in good demand, and prices have advanced. We quote the range of all kinds at $1 50@1 75 ℔ ctl.

STRAW—We quote rates as at 50@55 ℔ bale.

BRAN—We quote at $17 ℔ ton; shorts at $17 ℔ ton; ℔ 2500 ℔ 21; Pea, ℔ 2000 ℔ 23; small white, $1 90; Pink, $1 75; Lima, $2 25; Butter, $1 75@2 00.

BUTTER—Receipts are light at $1 10@1 25 ℔ roll, and $1 25@1 40 ℔ roll. The mill rate here is 30@32½ cts.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 25@1 50 ℔ ctl; Southern, at $2 50@2 75 ℔ 100 lbs.

EGGS—We quote at 37½ @ 40 cts. ℔ doz.

MIDDLINGS—The following are the quotations at the principal mills: Feed, $19 ℔ ton.

RYE—sales at $2 ℔ ctl, ℔ 100 lbs.

HOPS—We quote new California at 12½@15 cts. ℔ lb.

SEEDS—We quote flax at ——; and timothy, at ——; Sack, as Montioned in the market.

HOPS—We quote new California at 12½@15 cts. ℔ lb.

OIL CAKE—We quote at $30 ℔ ton from ——.

MONEY—Los Angeles, legal rate, 12@24, and Portland do., 18 cents ℔ month.

TALLOW—We quote California dry at 17@18½ cts., and Portland, 16@17 cts.

TALLOW—Quotable at 7@7 50 ℔ lb.

WOOL—We quote the following: Spring staple at 22 ℔ lb, otherwise prices are entirely nominal, the market being free of sales.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—Receipts for the week ordinary, 1640 lbs., and 3000 lbs good; 2500 lbs. fresh roll, 800@1000 lbs. good roll, 50 lbs. do. in tubs; Oregon, 1000 lbs. 200 lbs. Eastern, 500 lbs. Orange, 400 lbs.

EGGS—Receipts for the week, 1000 dozen, with a few fancy parties held at an advance. Eastern, 1000 lbs. San Juan—Oregon, per California, 75 @ 80c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 14 cts. ℔ lb; Oregon, 16c.

BACON—California at 13@13½c ℔ lb; Oregon, 16c.

DRIED BEEF—California, 16@16½c ℔ lb; Oregon, 16 kegs.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 10 @ 10c ℔ lb; second do, 9@9½c; third do, 7@8c.

VEAL—At 11@12c ℔ lb.

MUTTON—At 12@13c ℔ lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 10 @ 11c ℔ lb; corn fed, grain-fed, 6 cents ℔ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Receipts for the week, large, at 7@8 50; young Chickens at $5@6 ℔ doz; Hens, $6@7 ℔ dozen.

GAME—Geese at $1 25@1 50 ℔ dozen; Wild, $4@5 ℔ dozen; Ducks, $1 @1 50 ℔ pair.

Turkeys—Alive, 18c; dressed, 20c.

Venison—Saddle, 15c.

Hare—$1 50 ℔ doz.

FRENCH SAVINGS SOCIETY.

Statement for the Second Half of the Year 1870.

1870. Jan.—To Balance on hand, ..... $168,345 24

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE HALF YEAR.

1870. DEPOSITS.
August, ..... Deposits ..... $98,521 70
September, ..... Deposits ..... 104,107 99
October, ..... Deposits ..... 107,142 68
November, ..... Deposits ..... 87,278 70
December, ..... Deposits ..... 129,625 75
December 31, ..... Deposits ..... 117,007 73

Total Deposits for the half year ..... $1,150,847 45

ENTRANCE FEES AND PASS BOOKS.

New members.
July, ..... 95 ..... $270 00
August, ..... 87 ..... and 1 Dup. 297 00
September, ..... 82 ..... and 2 Dups. 274 00
October, ..... 97 ..... and 1 Dup. 324 00
November, ..... 84 ..... and 1 Dup. 280 00
December, ..... 94 ..... and 1 Dup. 320 00
Total Entrance Fees and Pass' ..... 1,505 50
Books of 150 new members.

INTEREST AND PREMIUMS RECEIVED.

July, ..... Received ..... $32,802 75
August, ..... Received ..... 32,319 28
September, ..... Received ..... 32,623 25
October, ..... Received ..... 28,626 74
November, ..... Received ..... 30,140 50
December, ..... Received ..... 47,991 74

Total Interest and Premiums received ..... 240,239 25

CASH—Have been only a moderate inquiry. We quote at the market at $1 60@1 65 ℔ bushel.

HAY—Receipts have been fair and prices well maintained. We quote good timothy at $18@19 per ton; at $18@17 ℔ ton.

POTATOES—Receipts have been in good demand, and prices have advanced. We quote the range of all kinds at $1 50@1 75 ℔ ctl.

STRAW—We quote rates as at 50@55 ℔ bale.

BRAN—We quote at $17 ℔ ton; shorts at $17 ℔ ton; ℔ 2500 ℔ 21; Pea, ℔ 2000 ℔ 23; small white, $1 90; Pink, $1 75; Lima, $2 25; Butter, $1 75@2 00.

BUTTER—Receipts are light at $1 10@1 25 ℔ roll, and $1 25@1 40 ℔ roll. The mill rate here is 30@32½ cts.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 25@1 50 ℔ ctl; Southern, at $2 50@2 75 ℔ 100 lbs.

EGGS—We quote at 37½ @ 40 cts. ℔ doz.

MIDDLINGS—The following are the quotations at the principal mills: Feed, $19 ℔ ton.

RYE—sales at $2 ℔ ctl, ℔ 100 lbs.

HOPS—We quote new California at 12½@15 cts. ℔ lb.

SEEDS—We quote flax at ——; and timothy, at ——; Sack, as Montioned in the market.

HOPS—We quote new California at 12½@15 cts. ℔ lb.

OIL CAKE—We quote at $30 ℔ ton from ——.

MONEY—Los Angeles, legal rate, 12@24, and Portland do., 18 cents ℔ month.

TALLOW—We quote California dry at 17@18½ cts., and Portland, 16@17 cts.

TALLOW—Quotable at 7@7 50 ℔ lb.

WOOL—We quote the following: Spring staple at 22 ℔ lb, otherwise prices are entirely nominal, the market being free of sales.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—Receipts for the week ordinary, 1640 lbs., and 3000 lbs good; 2500 lbs. fresh roll, 800@1000 lbs. good roll, 50 lbs. do. in tubs; Oregon, 1000 lbs. 200 lbs. Eastern, 500 lbs. Orange, 400 lbs.

EGGS—Receipts for the week, 1000 dozen, with a few fancy parties held at an advance. Eastern, 1000 lbs. San Juan—Oregon, per California, 75 @ 80c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 14 cts. ℔ lb; Oregon, 16c.

BACON—California at 13@13½c ℔ lb; Oregon, 16c.

DRIED BEEF—California, 16@16½c ℔ lb; Oregon, 16 kegs.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 10 @ 10c ℔ lb; second do, 9@9½c; third do, 7@8c.

VEAL—At 11@12c ℔ lb.

MUTTON—At 12@13c ℔ lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 10 @ 11c ℔ lb; corn fed, grain-fed, 6 cents ℔ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Receipts for the week, large, at 7@8 50; young Chickens at $5@6 ℔ doz; Hens, $6@7 ℔ dozen.

GAME—Geese at $1 25@1 50 ℔ dozen; Wild, $4@5 ℔ dozen; Ducks, $1 @1 50 ℔ pair.

Turkeys—Alive, 18c; dressed, 20c.

Venison—Saddle, 15c.

Hare—$1 50 ℔ doz.

FRENCH SAVINGS SOCIETY.

Statement for the Second Half of the Year 1870.

1870. Jan.—To Balance on hand, ..... $168,345 24

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE HALF YEAR.

1870. DEPOSITS.
August, ..... Deposits ..... $98,521 70
September, ..... Deposits ..... 104,107 99
October, ..... Deposits ..... 107,142 68
November, ..... Deposits ..... 87,278 70
December, ..... Deposits ..... 129,625 75
December 31, ..... Deposits ..... 117,007 73

Total Deposits for the half year ..... $1,150,847 45

ENTRANCE FEES AND PASS BOOKS.

New members.
July, ..... 95 ..... $270 00
August, ..... 87 ..... and 1 Dup. 297 00
September, ..... 82 ..... and 2 Dups. 274 00
October, ..... 97 ..... and 1 Dup. 324 00
November, ..... 84 ..... and 1 Dup. 280 00
December, ..... 94 ..... and 1 Dup. 320 00
Total Entrance Fees and Pass' ..... 1,505 50
Books of 150 new members.

INTEREST AND PREMIUMS RECEIVED.

July, ..... Received ..... $32,802 75
August, ..... Received ..... 32,319 28
September, ..... Received ..... 32,623 25
October, ..... Received ..... 28,626 74
November, ..... Received ..... 30,140 50
December, ..... Received ..... 47,991 74

Total Interest and Premiums received ..... 240,239 25

CASH—Have been only a moderate inquiry. We quote at the market at $1 60@1 65 ℔ bushel.

HAY—Receipts have been fair and prices well maintained. We quote good timothy at $18@19 per ton; at $18@17 ℔ ton.

POTATOES—Receipts have been in good demand, and prices have advanced. We quote the range of all kinds at $1 50@1 75 ℔ ctl.

STRAW—We quote rates as at 50@55 ℔ bale.

BRAN—We quote at $17 ℔ ton; shorts at $17 ℔ ton; ℔ 2500 ℔ 21; Pea, ℔ 2000 ℔ 23; small white, $1 90; Pink, $1 75; Lima, $2 25; Butter, $1 75@2 00.

BUTTER—Receipts are light at $1 10@1 25 ℔ roll, and $1 25@1 40 ℔ roll. The mill rate here is 30@32½ cts.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 25@1 50 ℔ ctl; Southern, at $2 50@2 75 ℔ 100 lbs.

EGGS—We quote at 37½ @ 40 cts. ℔ doz.

MIDDLINGS—The following are the quotations at the principal mills: Feed, $19 ℔ ton.

RYE—sales at $2 ℔ ctl, ℔ 100 lbs.

HOPS—We quote new California at 12½@15 cts. ℔ lb.

SEEDS—We quote flax at ——; and timothy, at ——; Sack, as Montioned in the market.

HOPS—We quote new California at 12½@15 cts. ℔ lb.

OIL CAKE—We quote at $30 ℔ ton from ——.

MONEY—Los Angeles, legal rate, 12@24, and Portland do., 18 cents ℔ month.

TALLOW—We quote California dry at 17@18½ cts., and Portland, 16@17 cts.

TALLOW—Quotable at 7@7 50 ℔ lb.

WOOL—We quote the following: Spring staple at 22 ℔ lb, otherwise prices are entirely nominal, the market being free of sales.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—Receipts for the week ordinary, 1640 lbs., and 3000 lbs good; 2500 lbs. fresh roll, 800@1000 lbs. good roll, 50 lbs. do. in tubs; Oregon, 1000 lbs. 200 lbs. Eastern, 500 lbs. Orange, 400 lbs.

EGGS—Receipts for the week, 1000 dozen, with a few fancy parties held at an advance. Eastern, 1000 lbs. San Juan—Oregon, per California, 75 @ 80c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 14 cts. ℔ lb; Oregon, 16c.

BACON—California at 13@13½c ℔ lb; Oregon, 16c.

DRIED BEEF—California, 16@16½c ℔ lb; Oregon, 16 kegs.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 10 @ 10c ℔ lb; second do, 9@9½c; third do, 7@8c.

VEAL—At 11@12c ℔ lb.

MUTTON—At 12@13c ℔ lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 10 @ 11c ℔ lb; corn fed, grain-fed, 6 cents ℔ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Receipts for the week, large, at 7@8 50; young Chickens at $5@6 ℔ doz; Hens, $6@7 ℔ dozen.

GAME—Geese at $1 25@1 50 ℔ dozen; Wild, $4@5 ℔ dozen; Ducks, $1 @1 50 ℔ pair.

Turkeys—Alive, 18c; dressed, 20c.

Venison—Saddle, 15c.

Hare—$1 50 ℔ doz.

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

P. H. CANAVAN
IMPORTER OF
WINES, BRANDIES,
ETC., ETC.,
N.W. COR. CALIFORNIA & FRONT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.
Fine proof Pures, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington.
SAN FRANCISCO.
Foreign Liquors in bond, Fine Brandies, Holland Gin, Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser at the lowest rates, by native California Wines and Brandies. de2 12

M. H. KELLY. JOHN EGAN
Kelly & Egan,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson. SAN FRANCISCO.

WM. B. DOLAN,
145 THIRD STREET, ..... SAN FRANCISCO.
Importer and Dealer in Foreign and Retail, in FRENCH WINES AND BRANDIES,
AND
Irish Whisky.
Imported direct from Ireland.
HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTMENT of California Wines, Brandy and Whisky, which he will dispose of, in bulk or in case, for the wholesome or retail trade.
All orders left at the store, 145 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free at any part of the city. ap1 6m

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & C
Northwest cor. Pine and Fro
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK O
PAINTS,
OILS,
GLAS
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC CO
AT THE LOWEST MARKET R
121, 123 and 125 FRONT STRE
AND
110 PINE STREET.

WASON & MORR
Successors to C. B. ELLIS,
PLAIN AND RECORD
HOUSE AND SIGN PAIN
GILDING AND GLAZIN
Imitations of Wood and Banners, Flags and Military Standards in order.
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE, VARNISH
BRUSHES, GLA
No. 20 California St., San F
Two doors below Davis street, Sa

JAMES K. DEAN
Importer and Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS,
WINDOW GLASS,
VARNISHES,
BRUSHES.
SAN FRANCISCO.

STAINED AND CUT GLASS WOR
MALLON & BOYLE
NO. 309 MISSION STREET.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STAINED FLED, EMBOSSED and Cut
Churches, Private Houses, Saloons,
Railroad Cars, etc. Metal Sash work of all done. Particular attention paid to Roofing
We invite the Public to examine our new ap19

UNDERTAKERS.
JAMES KELLY,
Late of St. Mary's Hospital: and
J. H. Mallon,
Undertak
NO. 818 MARKET STREET.
Nearly opposite Fourth ..... San

PERMANENT BURIAL CASES
Always kept constantly on hand.
Orders will receive prompt attention moderate charges

MASSEY & YUNG
Undertakers
DRAPERIAL FURNISHING ESTAB
Hardson's Burial Caskets always on hand
Burial Robes and Shrouds.
Everything necessary for funerals furnished
Orders by telegraph or otherwise will prompt attention; and all communications coffins—all no-charge—direct, between Kea

ST. MARY'S HOSPITA
CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT
SAN FRANCISCO.
THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE auspices of the Sisters of Mercy
JAMES MURPHY, M.D. ..... Visiting P
J. F. LANE, M.D. ..... Resident P
A. P. HEINNER, M.D. ..... Resident P
TERMS
Payable monthly in advance for board attendance, etc. ..... $
In the wards ..... $1
In rooms with one or more ..... $2
Private rooms ..... $3
Liquors and washing ..... $1
Medicines furnished at cost.
Money should be sent by Express or Post Office Order, or Bank Check.
Patients will be received at any hour day or night.

$10 MADE FROM 50
SOMETHING ENTIRELY NEW
Everybody. Unit and valuable. Sa postage paid for 10c; 3 cents than retail TEN DOLLARS
J. E. WILLIS
181 Chatham Square, New

DRY GOODS, ETC.

DRY GOODS!
SPECIAL NOTICE OF REMOVAL.
KEANE BROS.,
No. 42 Third Street.
WE BEG TO INFORM OUR PATRONS AND the Public that we will REMOVE from our present place of business,
No. 44 Third Street,
To our NEW PREMISES, now in course of erection on the EAST SIDE OF KEARNY STREET, BETWEEN POST AND SUTTER, On or about
The First Day of March, 1871.
Prior to removal, we will close out, REGARDLESS OF PROFIT, our large and elegant stock of Dry Goods.
JUST RECEIVED,
Another lot of those superior
Silk-Finish Black Alpacas,
At 30 cents per yard.
Ladies will do well to secure some of them at once as this is positively the last lot we will be able to offer at the EXTRAORDINARILY LOW PRICE.
STORE TO LET. LEASE AND FIXTURES FOR SALE.
KEANE BROS.,
42 Third Street.
oct24

INFORMATION WANTED.

Information Wanted,
OF WILLIAM O'LEARY, Whose last heard from he was in Virginia City, Nevada County. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his sister, Mrs. HARKEE, No. 1 Bernal Place, Bernal Heights, Long Island. de9

Information Wanted,
OF THOMAS BARRETT, Who left Port Home, Parish of Buttevant, county Cork, Ireland. When last heard from, nearly four years ago, he was living in Buffalo, State of New York, and stated that he was coming to California. Any information respecting him will be thankfully received by his sister Honora, at No. 1 Bernal Place, Bernal Heights, San Francisco. de24

Information Wanted,
OF THOMAS BARRETT, Who left Port Home, Parish of Buttevant, county Cork, Ireland. When last heard from, nearly four years ago, he was living in Buffalo, State of New York, and stated that he was coming to California. Any information respecting him will be thankfully received by his sister Honora, at No. 1 Bernal Place, Bernal Heights, San Francisco. de24

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Passenger Trains leave and are due to arrive at San Francisco as follows:

| Leave Sacramento | Arrive at Sacramento | Jan. 16 | Arrive at Ogden | Leave Ogden | Arrive at San Francisco |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Daily | Daily | | Tuesday | Thursday | Monday |
| 6:00 P.M. | 6:00 A.M. | San Pablo | 12:30 | 1:30 | 7:00 A.M. |
| 6:30 | 7:30 | San Jose | 9:00 | | 4:30 |
| 5 | 7:30 | Reno | 11:45 | 4:30 | 7:00 A.M. |
| 5 | 7:30 | Carson | 11:45 | 4:30 | 7:00 A.M. |
| 6:00 | 6:00 | Sonoma | 1:20 | | |
| 2:30 P.M. | 10:45 A.M. | Reno | 11:45 | 4:30 | |
| 2:30 P.M. | 10:45 A.M. | Carson | 11:45 | 4:30 | |
| 12:00 M. | 7:30 P.M. | Reno | 11:45 | 4:30 | |
| 12:00 M. | 7:30 P.M. | Carson | 11:45 | 4:30 | |
| 1:00 P.M. | 10:00 P.M. | Reno | 10:10 | | |
| 1:00 P.M. | 10:00 P.M. | Carson | 10:10 | | |

SHIPPING.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.
FOR NEW YORK, VIA PANAMA.
Cabin ..... $100 | Second Class ..... $70
LEAVE WHARF, CORNER OF First and Brannan streets, at 11 o'clock A. M. on the 5th and 19th of each month (except when either date falls on Sunday, then on Monday preceding), for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's first-class steamships from ASPINWALL to New York.
February 3 leaves for Panama, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN
All steamers touch at Acapulco. The steamer of 19th touches at MANZANILLO.
Steamers of the 30 touch at SAN JOSE DE GUATEMALA and PUNTA ARENAS.
Tickets will be sold to Panama at Half Rate only.
Through Tickets sold to and from Liverpool, Queenstown, Southampton, Bremen, Hamburg, Havre, and Paris.
FOR JAPAN AND CHINA.
Steamers leave on the 1st of every month, at noon, punctually, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG, connecting at Yokohama with the Company's Branch for SHANGHAI, touching at NAGASAKI.
For Freight or Passage apply at the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's Office, at the WHARF, CORNER OF FIRST AND BRANNAN STREETS. de28 ELDRIDGE & IRWIN, Agents.

NATIONAL LINE.
LIVERPOOL, every WEDNESDAY
QUEENSTOWN every THURSDAY
Sailing from NEW YORK every SATURDAY.
SWAN, HUNTER & WIGH

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Brutal Murder in Scotland.

A brutal and unprovoked murder was committed in the village of Camelon, near Falkirk, on Saturday night, on a sail-maker named Henry McGilvray, his alleged murderer being Thomas Rose, a laborer, employed at Rose' Chemical Works, Falkirk. The facts, so far as known, are these: On Saturday night Rose, along with several others, was in the house of George Henry, or, as he is more commonly called, "Paraffine," a shoemaker in Camelon. The company had been drinking, but not to excess. Rose' wife came to bring him home, and meeting him as he left Henry's an altercation took place in which she slapped his face. Rose attempted to retaliate, but was prevented by those present, and his wife made good her escape. He followed her towards his house in Sailor's Square, near Lock No. 16 on the Forth and Clyde Canal, brandishing a pocket-knife. He was met by a moulder named James Craig, to whom he said that either his wife or some one else would catch it." On reaching his house, which only contains one apartment with a small garret above, he found the door locked and his wife absent. This appears to have further exasperated him, and he attempted to get admission by forcing in the window. The noise of the glass breaking aroused the attention of McGilvray, with whom some companions, was standing at the north end of the square. McGilvray was known to Rose, who for the time was within the house, and said, "What is wrong with you, Captain, to-night?" "Captain" being the name by which Rose, who had been at sea, is known in Camelon. Rose asked his assistance to get out, and by the combined efforts the door was forced open. This occurred shortly after eleven o'clock. Rose, on entering the house immediately caught hold of McGilvray, and, as described by a bystander—he never uttered a word—struck him several times. By an effort, McGilvray got away from his antagonist, but before he had gone many yards he slipped in the snow and fell. Rose, who was pursuing him, sprung upon him before he could rise, and Rick heard McGilvray cry that he was stabbed. The boy Rick was so alarmed at what was occurring, that he ran home to his father's house and bolted the door. Shortly afterwards a knock was heard at the door, and McGilvray was heard asking admission in a faint voice. He was found outside, unable to stand from loss of blood, and had to be carried into the house. He soon expired, having only strength to ask for a napkin to stop the flow of blood from his throat. Information was sent to the Falkirk police office, and the greatest excitement prevailed in the village. Medical assistance was obtained, and on examination it was discovered that McGilvray had been stabbed in four places. Two of the wounds were slight, but one in the throat and another on the right side were of a fatal character. The jugular vein and the windpipe were completely severed, and the weapon had deeply penetrated the right lung. Immediately after the commission of the crime Rose went to his own house and deliberately washed the blood from the knife, which, there is little doubt, was the instrument used. He then undressed himself and went to bed, where he fell sound asleep, and was only awakened by the police on his assuming him. He was conveyed to Falkirk Prison. Rose is a strong-built man. He is fully thirty years of age, and has a wife and family. He has only recently returned from the Baltic, and, besides his wife, leaves a widow and five children. He is of good-looking disposition, and one of the last acts which he did on Saturday night was to assist an old man to his house in Camelon, who had dropped in the snow. The man could certainly have suffered but for his timely assistance. Rose was examined, and committed to prison. The scene of the murder was visited on Sunday and Monday by large numbers of people from the neighboring districts.

[As the man killed was only a "mere trishman," the guilty party will not be punished.]

The Poor of Liverpool.

The sanitary commissioner of the Lancet gives a description of the condition of the dwellings of the poor of Liverpool: "The houses are often occupied from cellar to roof by families in every room. In the cellar those wretched dens below the side for shelter who are unable to pay for lodging elsewhere. They lie upon the damp floor, often without covering of any kind, or fire or light. There are 25,000 empty cellars from which they may seek their lodgings, and when driven out of one they readily find another, with or without the connivance of the owner of the house. Names in quit were served last year to 3,274 of the inhabitants of illegal occupied underground lodgings. Fines are useless, imprisonment is vain, for there is a form of poverty which can neither be chased or coerced. Then there are, also, upwards of 8,000 cellars which are occupied by permission of the law. Ordinarily, the occupants of cellars are in a wretched state. Many of them have neither bedsteads nor bedding. They sleep on the floor, beside the drain, in a corner of the room. They belong to the very lowest class of laborers—men whose average earnings do not amount to more than 10s. a week, the half of which is spent in drink. Here, too, is to be found the widow whose husband succumbed to typhus fever six years ago, leaving her four little children to attach to her labor and the parish allowance of 1s. 6d. a week. The state of things grows even worse as we proceed from house room to room, until the climax is found in the attics, where there is neither fireplace nor ventilator to let out the foul air. Here, at night, drunkenness and dirt, wretchedness and rags, herd together pell-mell. The pestilential atmosphere depresses the nerves and rapidly destroys the appetite. It is to upon these they are compelled to work. The air is polluted with odors of filthy persons, foul rags and sinking fats. The very walls exhale a sense of vermin and contagion. In not one room in ten is bedding to be found. In one schoolroom I saw. The inmates sleep, or rather lie, upon the floor, from which they are separated by a bit of straw or a bundle of dirty rags. No one in twenty takes off either boots or clothes. The drunken slumber off their drink; the sober lie restless and awake. Rotting rest there is none. Mothers and sons, fathers and daughters, brothers and sisters, relations and strangers, of both sexes, lie indiscriminately together, locked in each other's arms for warmth. The water is kept outside to wash the crosses, vegetables and fish, when, after being steeped in the poisoned atmosphere through out the night, will be sold to their buyers and converted into drink. This is a true but feeble picture of thousands of houses in Liverpool."

This is in the richest and most prosperous country in the world. Happy England!

The Rights of Women.

Under the head of "damning modesty" the Hampshire Telegraph treats us to an edifying episode in the proceedings of a Southampton Police Court. Several women, it seems, were recently charged before the magistrates—with habitual contempt of the provisions of the Contagious Diseases Act. Just as the case commenced, the entire audience of the court was widely disturbed by the irruption of a band of Amazons, led, of all men in the world, by "several Dissenting ministers, including the Rev. J. Osborne and the Rev. E. Knell." The female phase of politics known as Women's Rights had found in these its local exponents, and certainly if unblushing effrontery avails anything, the cause is not destined to lose much in their hands. In vain did the Bench exhort them to leave the Court. And to the request that, "if they had any sense of modesty or decency they would do so," their prompt reply was, "that they felt inclined to remain; that they thought it a matter of decency to stop; that it was a monstrous injustice, and it was unreasonable to ask them to go there!" Later in the day, we are told, a case came on "so revolting in its details as to be unfit to be reported," and though remonstrated with in still stronger terms, the ladies persisted in staying. It is a nice question of casuistry how far a thin affectation of woman's rights would purge such conduct of its grossness and indecorum. What is to be said when cases of this kind are becoming the day after day of greater frequency—when society tolerates indites who thus open the door of their sensibilities from the restraints of woman's native modesty—and when men who call themselves the "representatives of pure Bible Christianity" are foremost among their leaders and abettors?

Conviction of a Protestant Lecturer.

At the Quarter Sessions for the county of Hampshire, George Mackey, a lecturer, employed by the Protestant Electoral Union, was indicted for selling at Lymington an obscene book entitled, "The Confessional Unmasked!" At the previous sessions the case was heard, but the jury had to be discharged because unable to agree as to the guilt. Mackey came up to-day, and from the contrains of woman's native modesty—and when men who call themselves the "representatives of pure Bible Christianity" are foremost among their leaders and abettors?

Conviction of a Protestant Lecturer.

At the Quarter Sessions for the county of Hampshire, George Mackey, a lecturer, employed by the Protestant Electoral Union, was indicted for selling at Lymington an obscene book entitled, "The Confessional Unmasked!" At the previous sessions the case was heard, but the jury had to be discharged because unable to agree as to the guilt. Mackey came up to-day, and from the records of the court it was proved that a copy of the book was purchased of him by a police officer, and the ladies would not be admitted; and it was proved that a copy of the book was purchased of him by a police officer, and the lectures and placed in the hands of the police. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. In passing sentence, the chairman said no charge ever gave him greater difficulty, because in the disgusting nature of the case. The contents of the book were so gross indeed that he could not read some passages. Prisoner was then sentenced to three months' imprisonment, and ordered, at the expiration of the term, to enter into recognizances of one hundred pounds and find security for good behavior.

English Republicans.

The new political society which has been founded at Cambridge this term by Professor Fawcett, Mr. Seeley Taylor and Mr. Sedgwick is stamping itself as a re-presentation of the Manchester Guardian; no little attention was excited among the town of two-penny-halfpenny Church" has a creed of four articles—no more monarchies, no increase of monarchy, no gambling in the rights of property by will, and no disqualification for civil trusts or offices on account of religion. Mr. Charles, who resigned his fellowship rather than affect a nonconformity he did not feel in the doctrines and rites of the profession of holy orders in the Anglican Church, is one of the most recent recruits of the new republican band of Cambridge, and that, notwithstanding the overwhelming weight of discurrent and unfavorable influences, the democracy are already found in the field with their banner unfurled.

The Military Resources of England.

The Prussian official paper published at Versailles has published a significant article on the military resources of England. It describes the military organization of that country permits her to assume "only one army of 25,000 men." In the event of invasion her artillery is entirely inadequate; she has no army of reserve, and her militia, and particularly are only a collection of military amateurs, on whom it would be impossible to impose the duties and the strict discipline of the citizen-soldiers of Prussia. In conclusion, it says its present military system allows England one attitude, that of "obliteration."

FRANCE.

The French a Public and Religious People.

The correspondent of the Standard, in writing from Bordeaux, thus remarks: "One unlike any other in the world—the universality of prayer. No noise or boisterous singing, no showing or vulgarity. The last is a thing at any time utterly impossible to find in France—just as it is to find venomous reptiles in Ireland. These people are courteous and generally a pass Dieu vous garde, monsieur, half way to claim there is no other country with so fine a people, springing out of a grassmound enclosed by very old stone walls. Here I never saw any one seek the grounds to go by without raising their hats and making a low reverence. The other day it is so happened was the first time I had passed that way since the commencement of the war, when, as I have before I came up to a group of some fifteen or twenty people, who had come from la Marquise, kneeling at the foot of the cross, absorbed in their own devotion. I was so struck with the whole scene, and above all, with the old woman and the young girls few, that has ever painted me, that I waited some time, till one man arose and walked on the road towards Calais. I got easily, as a matter of course, into conversation with him, and he confirmed me in my supposition that they were all praying for their relatives and friends at the war. I then asked him about the figures just built apart from the rest. The old woman was the great-grandmother of the young girls, whose only brother had been taken away the very first week of the war. From the day on which he left their last never missed a single day, no matter what the weather, coming to the foot of that cross to pray for the boy's safe return. And every day they went out on the road to meet the postman—an old veteran of the Imperial Guard—to hear the never came. Once, only a fortnight after the actual commencement of hostilities, a letter did come from one of his comrades, and was given out in the village but those two knew that he had not left the second day to the Prussian artillery. He lay on the ground wounded, and a Uhlan stabbed him as he was dying. They never had the courage to break the news that they knew by heart for more than three long months.

Irish Charity.

We learn (says Le Moniteur Religieuse du Herrig) that the Committee of the Irish Ambulance has granted 1,250 francs for the succor of the ambulances of our army, and that this sum shall be at once transmitted to Monseigneur the Archbishop of Bourges. The same committee, after having equipped their ambulances, which has done so much good wherever it passed, has voted 1,250 francs to Monseigneur the Bishop of Orleans, 1,250 frs. to the Cardinal Archbishop of Rouen, 1,250 frs. to Monseigneur the Bishop of Metz; in fact, more than 10,000 francs to two ambulances in France. We cannot praise too much the charity of the Irish people, so sincerely Catholic and friendly to our country. From her bosom she draws the offering with which to solace our glorious soldiers, to heal their wounds, and to consecrate our heroes for their graves. To the Pontiff-King they also generously sent their offerings. Rich and poor rival each other in acts of generosity and charity. Admirable people, faithful and courageous nation, worthy of the benediction of the Church and the love of France! The Irish people have none of that egotism so often engendered by misfortune; the hearts of her children know well how to bring an undertaking to a good end under the auspices of God, and also, thanks to their initiative spirit, and the intelligence of all among whom they live. Honor to the sons of Green Erin! St. Patrick may always be proud of them. Lord give them abundant blessings, who have done so much for us. Bless, above all, the worthy ministers of the Ambulance who crossed the Waves that part us from our kind friends bear to them our best and warmest thanks."

Letter of Jules Favre to Count Bismarck.

A Versailles correspondent says it affords occupation and amusement to the German staff to read the letters in the papers of M. Jules Favre. Each one of these is now given to show that the defendant, in issuing a notice of his intention to stand his ground to the last extremity, and in calling upon the people to rise en masse, was only following the example of the Parisian leaders. Favre is now said to have been the first to call upon the people to rise, and when only the other day five million francs were stolen from the Bank of France, and when the Versailles Government refused to put down the insurrection refused? This large sum was the Peace's peace offering of the Catholic world, Italy excepted. Every Catholic country in Europe, Fourth.—No civil officer to enter the Pontifical pontificate without the consent of the Pope. Last assassins are freely admitted, and on the 8th of December inaugurated the new dogma of the Immaculate Conception in the Pontifical in front of St. Peter's, the police and the military looking calmly on! Fifth.—No Bishop to be appointed without the consent of the Pope. Sixth.—No Bishop to reside outside the limits of his own diocese. Seventh.—The cardinals and other ecclesiastics, even foreigners, are not to be arrested. No less than fifty have already been brutally attacked; the Rector of the Belgian College was found with his throat cut, and generally and senseless on the public footway; twice the cursed the Church of St. Augustine, while carrying the Holy Viaticum to the dying has been compelled to seek shelter from the violence of the mob—Garibaldians, Italian sailors and peaceful inquirers of Italian School? I have read some extracts from them, and I don't think I've ever read anything more offensive to the feelings of the great majority of the people of any country. They are not fit for any school in which Christian children are taught. Suffice it to say that they are not left in the hands of the Italian children, and nothing was to be found in the Italian states discontinuity. Even and they not fit for the Protestant or Catholic schools in any civilized country. I would not put such books into the hands of my own children, or, if I had no children, at least in the schools. In general Pontifical institutions throughout the country, to which we are shocked, none of would tolerate objectionable books, against any body of Christians, for one week.

Reception of Frenchmen at Basle.

The French frigate Guyenne arrived at Basle on the 26th ult., bringing the remains of the Prussian man-of-war, which, however, had left some time previously. The Guyenne brought on some sailors and received with every demonstration of respect. A steamer was also sent down the Rhine to meet her, and a large number of persons visited the Roman Catholic church in company with two of our own priests, and were received with every mark of hospitality and courtesy, and having four hours with us, returned in the evening to Basle. The Guyenne left at the same time for Strasburg, where she remained for a few days, and then proceeded to Havre. It was stated that a promise had been made in the first wife that the children should be brought up as Catholics. Miss Rodgers also stated that the children were brought up Catholics with Mr. Ayrton's consent, and that on the day of his wife's burial he requested the petitioner to take the children to see her remains previous to their being interred, and that they were not baptized. She added that she resided in the house and had the care of the children until Mr. Beadle again married. The matrimonial alliance effected a total change in his character, and he became the slave of his wife's every caprice. Miss Travers has written, to say that she is ready to receive her at any time she may find it convenient to go. How could you avoid her?

«Why, she will require some little things in the shape of an outfit," remarked her mother, «for, you know, ma'am, I cannot go out with her in a condition that she need not be ashamed of. I think in about a week I will have her ready."

«There is one thing I would beg to impress upon you," observed Mrs. Clinton, «and it is this—keep the child's mother's residence as much a secret as you can. The less she knows of it the better. She will soon be made acquainted with it, the better, both for her own sake and yours."

«Oh, I shall take care to keep it a secret," said her mother; «in that case, ma'am, I must act contrary to your wishes. What would the neighbors say, if they found out that I had gone off secretly, and concealed her place of residence from them? Anything like secrecy might be the ruin of her character, and of the child's. I will have nothing of the kind."

«Well," replied Mrs. Clinton, I obelieve I must submit—still, from what I have learned of the mother, and from her conduct of your daughter, I don't think you might apprehend any misinterpretations on the part of those you have to deal with. How to reconcile this, however, she still knew not. In the meantime she waited with anxiety for the expected visit of Mrs. Clinton. To her own good sense and good feeling she placed much reliance. Both were interested in the dangerous position in which those two young persons were placed, but she felt that she herself and her child had a dread both disgreaceful ruin, should Mrs. Clinton's designs be accomplished. On him the infamy of the crime would rest, but slightly—in fact, it would be a matter to boast of among his brother officers, and would be considered rather in the light of a feather in his cap than as a villany; for such are the morals and notions of the profligate. At length the day appointed by Mrs. Clinton arrived, and that lady was punctual to her promise. After a little chat, she entered upon the subject without further delay or circumlocution.

«Mrs. Brindsley," said she, «I have thought much of the subject we were talking of since I was here last. And now that I know whether you are willing to part with your daughter a time?"

«I am anxious to place her beyond the reach of danger," replied her mother, «but I dont know how it is to be done."

«It can be done without any difficulty," said Mrs. Clinton, «and the removal, I can assure you, will be not only for her safety, but every way for her advantage. There is a most respectable elderly gentleman in the town of Armagh, the principles of which has been working for him and my family these many years. I have written to her since I saw you, and proposed to her that she should take your daughter for a time, in order that she should receive a competent knowledge of her business in its highest branches. To oblige me, she consented to this, and your daughter is to live in her own house, and under her guardianship and protection. This must be every way desirable for you, as it will be advantageous to the young woman herself, and I certainly cannot see any objection to the arrangement, otherwise I might have to make some objection on your part."

«I will be a severe task to me to part with her," replied Mrs. Brindsley, «still, for my child's own sake, I feel that I ought to do it. But do you think, ma'am, that there's no one in such a large town as Armagh—"

«Why, as for that matter," replied Mrs. Clinton, «you know there is

THE DOUBLE PROPHECY;
OR,
TRIALS OF THE HEART.

BY WILLIAM CARLETON.

CHAPTER III—(Continued.)

"Vara well," replied the father, "in the course of a week or ten days, we'll see about it. We must let them draw breath, though. We must not appear to drive the bodies, nor let them think that we can't live without them. I grant that the minister mark is against you. If you come in orthers now, ye could go and face her wi' a pleasant and sportive manner, and if you found her shy and distant, you canna conceive what an effect two or three honest smacks wad has upon her—how she'd scuttle up her hair, blushing wi' an angry face, but a smile under it—and then when you took leave of her and she refused to shake hands wi' you, and when you turned to look at the window that she was leanin' out of, and you kissed your hand to her—and then, after refusing to notice you for a little, she'd give a kind of saucy smile, touch her little white fingers wi' her lips, as if were to get rid o' you. Oh! man, but woman is a draw-well, only sun feart that truth's at the bottom o' it. Now, I know all this, my lad, frae my experience wi' your mother—ahem! Well I think we've had enough about it—leave it to me, and I'll put it out of the pin for you a'm not here;" and upon this project the ultimatum depended.

The old man immediately went to Joe, to whom he mentioned the conclusion to which he and William had come.

«As for him," said he, «I see clearly the poor lad's no' fit for a wife. We must first try and get this nonsense out of him. But how to do that's the difficulty. Troth, a'm of opinion that a good sharp dose of active medicine o' some kind would be as good as anything else. I'm not clear, but I'm we could get him to take a good shower-bath every mornin' or twa, and drinking pirns; or if the Lord was send him a heart-sore or a consumption —any one o' them might do mair than all our reasoning. Poor lay, at events, he has to be pitied.

Joe knew not exactly what to say. He felt considerable anxiety about the effect which the disappointment might have upon his brother's health, but, perhaps, on his intimate knowledge of his character, and of the danger everywhere—abroad as well as at home. In Armagh, however, she will not be so conspicuous as she is here. There is no place where a person can be so completely alone, or so little liable to observation, as in a great city. In that town she will lead a quiet and unobtrusive life, and will consequently escape notice and observation. Under those circumstances, I think, then, that you should consider this proposal as a welcome one. You ought to reflect, besides, that she will have an opportunity of improving herself in her business, and, most likely, of ultimately advancing herself in life."

"Indeed, ma'am," replied Mrs. Brindsley, "to own the truth, I am so far from having any objection to your kind proposal, that I am very glad to comply with it. My only objection is what I have just stated—my sorrow at parting with her; for, after all, it is a trying thing to a mother's heart to let her only child go from under her own eyes and among strangers, who will not treat her with the tenderness and affection that she received at home."

«But you know, Mrs. Brindsley, that we cannot have everything after our own way. You ought to reflect that she will not be more than a short day's journey from you, and that under any circumstances it would be your duty to pursue the very plan which I have proposed."

«I am deeply grateful to you, ma'am, for the interest you take in my child, and I will leave her entirely to your advice," replied Mrs. Brindsley.

«Well, then," said the kind lady, «I think the less time you keep in following it the better. Miss Travers has written, to say that she is ready to receive her at any time she may find it convenient to go. How could you avoid her?

«Why, she will require some little things in the shape of an outfit," remarked her mother, «for, you know, ma'am, I cannot go out with her in a condition that she need not be ashamed of. I think in about a week I will have her ready."

«There is one thing I would beg to impress upon you," observed Mrs. Clinton, «and it is this—keep the mother's residence as much a secret as you can. The less she knows of it the better. She will soon be made acquainted with it, the better, both for her own sake and yours."

«Oh, I shall take care to keep it a secret," said her mother; «in that case, ma'am, I must act contrary to your wishes. What would the neighbors say, if they found out that I had gone off secretly, and concealed her place of residence from them? Anything like secrecy might be the ruin of her character, and of the child's. I will have nothing of the kind."

«Well," replied Mrs. Clinton, I obelieve I must submit—still, from what I have learned of the mother, and from her conduct of your daughter, I don't think you might apprehend any misinterpretations on the part of those you have to deal with. How to reconcile this, however, she still knew not. In the meantime she waited with anxiety for the expected visit of Mrs. Clinton. To her own good sense and good feeling she placed much reliance. Both were interested in the dangerous position in which those two young persons were placed, but she felt that she herself and her child had a dread both disgreaceful ruin, should Mrs. Clinton's designs be accomplished. On him the infamy of the crime would rest, but slightly—in fact, it would be a matter to boast of among his brother officers, and would be considered rather in the light of a feather in his cap than as a villany; for such are the morals and notions of the profligate. At length the day appointed by Mrs. Clinton arrived, and that lady was punctual to her promise. After a little chat, she entered upon the subject without further delay or circumlocution.

«Mrs. Brindsley," said she, «I have thought much of the subject we were talking of since I was here last. And now that I know whether you are willing to part with your daughter a time?"

«I am anxious to place her beyond the reach of danger," replied her mother, «but I dont know how it is to be done."

«It can be done without any difficulty," said Mrs. Clinton, «and the removal, I can assure you, will be not only for her safety, but every way for her advantage. There is a most respectable elderly gentleman in the town of Armagh, the principles of which has been working for him and my family these many years. I have written to her since I saw you, and proposed to her that she should take your daughter for a time, in order that she should receive a competent knowledge of her business in its highest branches. To oblige me, she consented to this, and your daughter is to live in her own house, and under her guardianship and protection. This must be every way desirable for you, as it will be advantageous to the young woman herself, and I certainly cannot see any objection to the arrangement, otherwise I might have to make some objection on your part."

«I will be a severe task to me to part with her," replied Mrs. Brindsley, «still, for my child's own sake, I feel that I ought to do it. But do you think, ma'am, that there's no one in such a large town as Armagh—"

«Why, as for that matter," replied Mrs. Clinton, «you know there is

CERMANY.

Public Feeling in Germany.

In Germany, writes a correspondent of the Standard, the end of war, the spectacle, though very different in many respects from that presented by France, is the reverse of edifying. That the whole country is being fast drained of its able-bodied men, and that it is becoming terribly evident. The contrast since my visit in October is very striking. The number of men in the prime of life seems fearfully diminished, and still the insatiable Moloch of war calls for fresh victims. Almost all the young men of Germany, and on every side with a camelhair pencil. Since the fall of Paris, he has temporarily laid aside his pencil, and, having played out of peppermint as a social pastime, not only in hospitals, but at home, only in hospitals, but at home, only in hospitals, but at home,

WEEKLY CALENDAR,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 11.
Sunday—Septuagesima Sunday. St. Agatha, V. and M.
Monday—St. Dorothy, Virgin and Martyr.
Tuesday—St. Romuald, Abbot.
Wednesday—St. John of Matha, Confessor.
Thursday—St. Apollonia, Virgin and Mart'yr.
Friday—St. Schholastica.
Saturday—St. Saturninus and companions, Martyrs.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY.....FEBRUARY 4, 1871.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

The remarks which we made in our issue of January 21st respecting Irish Benevolent Societies, seems to have occasioned no small commotion in certain quarters. From letters we have received, from advertisements in the daily papers, and from other evidence which has come under our notice, we learn that the members of the St. Joseph Benevolent Society believe themselves to be the persons alluded to, and are highly indignant thereat. They have no just or sufficient cause for anger. In the first place, we distinctly spoke of Irish Benevolent Societies. Now, the St. Joseph is not an Irish Society—It is a Catholic one, a very different thing indeed. Consequently, the members might have known that our censures were not directed against them, and spared themselves a great amount of very disagreeable excitement. In the next place, we mentioned no names, avoided all identification of the associations in question. Consequently, the members of St. Joseph have no more right than any others to cry out that they have been assailed. Finally, the St. Joseph's Society is, we understand, about one of the best managed and most creditably conducted institution of the kind in the city. Consequently, its members might have rested perfectly satisfied that they were not the parties open to censure. Moreover, they ought to know perfectly well that the last thing THE MONITOR could wish to do would be to unjustly attack them or interfere with their organization. They might, therefore, have exercised the virtue of patience, and waited to know whether they were really aimed at before they adopted extreme measures. But we can assure those gentlemen that, while we shall always cheerfully give them, equally with every other Irish and Catholic Association, all the support and encouragement in our power, we shall never be deterred from doing our duty as public journalists, from giving censure where censure is due, and praise where praise is due, by any conceivable amount of intimidation in the shape of resolutions. The St. Joseph Society, being a purely religious organization, perfectly well it would fall in its mission if any distinction were made in its ranks between Irishmen, Frenchmen, Germans, Americans, etc. We should be the first to oppose any attempt to introduce the jealousies of race into a Society which should be as broad and liberal as the Church whose offspring it is. We will carry our liberality, however, to no absurd length, for we maintain that Catholic societies should have Catholic officers and Irish societies Irish officers. Of course, we say so on the supposition that efficiency need not suffer by the preference, since we should be sorry to see a superior man rejected from any position of trust or emolument, simply and solely because he did not belong to a particular creed or race. If anything more than another could demonstrate the folly of the members of Saint Joseph's applying our remarks to themselves, it would certainly be the idea of our finding fault with their choice of a medical officer. The gentleman who now fills that position, having been recently reelected, is a man eminently qualified—one whose professional standing is probably inferior to that of no doctor in this city. He is, moreover, of high character and honorable antecedents. The very circumstances under which he first settled in San Francisco are such that, while they reflect the highest credit upon himself personally, they should secure for him the warmest sympathies of all who love patriotism and freedom. Even were the society with which he is connected purely and exclusively Irish, which it is not, there is no Irishman worthy of the name who would not be proud to extend to him the hand of fellowship and brotherhood, and number him among his comrades. We trust the medical adviser of the Saint Joseph's Benevolent Society will long continue to retain his honorable position, and that the Society will long continue to flourish and prosper. We have no wish to see it otherwise. We have no wish to see any Benevolent Society otherwise. We have no wish to see any Irish Society otherwise. We have no wish to see any Catholic Society otherwise. We have no wish to see any Society otherwise. We have no wish to see anything otherwise. We have no wish to see anything otherwise. We have no wish to see anything

THE MISSIONER.

"Obedience seems to conquer regret . . . in life, at leisure, in the forest, from dawn till dusk, it stands soon as amid cares."—Epic.

Faintly the lamp sheds its flickering light
Round the silent and sombre closet;
The cuckoo echoes it from the hall without,
The mansion is still as the home of the dead;
And feels but the hand of the breathless night
That thinks she's a spirit at most.

That clay waits around him alone, and
Where the watches are in the midnight hour;
While mind as abstract and life as sure
Are pent up, hushed in thought intense—
As if the unbreathed wing of fear
Overshadowed all and it its sightbower.

Bright thoughts flash from like-or upon him calls,
And earthen and its stories softly flow.
Like dews that serenity bathe and bless
The parched face of life with incense.
And filtering through the calm, clear brain,
Are striking upon the heart below.

His thoughts are not of princely days,
Of earthly pride, of earthly splendor;
The Sager of God hath marked His brow
With the nobleness of heavenly wisdom,
And, lost in the mystic world of grace,
He follows a taken deep and louder.

Like distant smoke upon his ears,
Doubtful at first, and rising and falling,
A voice is stealing—a voice of love—
It was to his soul from the above above;
Hallowed and sweetly he thinks it hears
God's messenger to his spirit calling.

And he bows it sealed in silent prayer,
And his heart is stillness closed—
And he rises up, borne on a wish, light wise
Far away to the feet of his Maker and King,
And the face of His Father in love beheld there.
Doth sign with the Sign of the chosen.

Calmly and slowly he lifts his head—
No more is he life of or brother,
For the Master has beckoned him away
From all he was linked to yesterday,
Nor the pathway of earth may he longer tread,
For his footprints shall mark another's.

The shadows of pride are brilliant and gay,
And the heart and brilliance dazzle them;
Grand revelries gather at Pleasure's call
In the glitter and lights of the lofty hall—
But pensively he hath glided away,
And his face from the scene is turned.

At the festive board is an empty place,
And an empty wine-cup near it;
And the guests all the vacant mark
For he is gone and no longer there—
Like a dream he hath vanished and left no trace,
Save a thought for the passive spirit.

His name is blotted from Beauty's roll,
And he hasks not where she dashes;
To the world of pageant and pomp and pride,
Calmly and serenely he hath died,
And the burdens of death left on his soul
No vestige of dust and ashes.

Now, where the lone lamp through the solemn
In the distance its light throws—
Where the lofty walls their vigils keep,
And the ghostly shadows along them creep—
Alone in the still deserted hall
He kneels in the sacred PRESENCE.

With humbled spirit and bended head
He offers his heart in fervency—
To the Father who sees him silent there,
Prostrate before His throne of power—
And the peace for the quick, and prays for the
That none may be sacrificed.

And now in ingenuous thought and prayer
Alone, is the Levite's mission—
His tongue is unspoken and the world's rude din—
His feet must tread not the haunts of sin—
Of cares or ease, need, for he is under vows,
Of Charity and Contrition.

Where Crime's dark haunts are rife from the day
In the depths of the night only—
Where horror and shame seek out secret places,
Where hardened sin flaunts its brazen face;
Where Want cries down through the gloomy
With none to relieve or pity:

Where Hunger hollows the orphan's eye
And hardens the gaunt Destroyer;
Where Sin's hectic lends and Misery's tear
Are all that are known from year to year;
And plagues and Povery favor pass by
On the wings of their direful Empire!

Where the rebukes of Crime may reign
In scorn—or the fiery dart
Wherever the Tempter lays his toils,
Or Profligacy gapes for its horrid spoils—
There doth the Missioner now and then
Perform the ministry of his Father.

Yet, this did the Missioner onward glide,
With labor and love his master;
By noble deed and by noble word
He hailed in the Vineyard of the Lord,
And he ever was found by the sinner's side,
With hope for the parting spirit.

At length he died; to the snow he lay,
With the Cross on his breast in Heaven;
The shroud that wrapped him was pure and white
As the soul that had passed to St. Martin's sight—
And so the pale Missioner passed away,
To the home of his Master's throne.
—Dublin Nation. F. McD.

The New King of Spain.

The London Times asserts that if ever a man deserved success by putting a brave countenance on a terribly hazardous game, it must be admitted that the young Duke of Aosta has shown himself worthy to wear the diadem of Ferdinand and Isabella. It would be idle to attach any serious meaning to the clamorous enthusiasm with which the King is said to have been greeted by the multitude gathering around him in his progress. But, on the other hand, neither should we be much moved by the rumors of apprehended insurrections in the Provinces. In Spain, as in France and in Italy, the minorities are perpetually striving to impose themselves upon the community. All opposition invariably develops factious and revolutionary tendencies; but its strength lies less in any real force of its own than in the faint hearts of those upper and middle classes whose interests it compromises. In a society organized on such principles, the Government is powerful, whatever it may be, is always helped to the extent of its ability to help itself. The Times would not be at all surprised if the new King, by basing his power on the orderly instincts of the nation, and by following the straightforward and resolute line of conduct traced out by Prim, were to find the task of governing Spain less arduous than the experience of so many years' miserable might intimate us to suppose. The really serious difficulty arose at the outset, and the tragical catastrophe by which the new reign is ushered in will establish between the sovereign and the people a point of sympathy which no stroke of policy could have brought about. The vote of the Cortes acquits Montpensierists, Esparteristes, and other Constitutional Monarchists of all obligations towards their respective candidates, and the death of Prim removes those personal jealousies and enmities which were, perhaps, at the bottom of all political opposition. Amadeus himself comes to Spain as the man of no party. He has all parties at his service, and, by the choice of his new Cabinet, he can give his policy that turn which may best enable him to act the part of a true sovereign—that part which places him above all parties, and, by constraining, moderating, and reconciling them, gives him power to make them all co-operate with him in the promotion of the common interests.

The "Alabama" Claims.

The appointment of Gen. Schenck by the President as Minister of the Republic in England in place of Mr. Motley, who has been recalled, chiefly, we believe, on account of his close intimacy with Senator Sumner, has been confirmed by the Senate, and his arrival in London may be soon expected. He is, it appears, to reopen the Alabama question "in the most amicable spirit" imaginable, and to "abstain from all extravagant demands" upon the country. We shall only be required to pay the owners for the vessels and other property destroyed by the Alabama and kindred vessels, with interest from the date of the destruction; that England shall reimburse the American Government for all expenses incurred by them by reason of the sailing of those cruisers; and that England shall recognize this basis of settlement as containing the true principles of neutrality. Can anything be more moderate, more reasonable, or less extravagant? It is, it seems, a positive fact that the new American Minister will not come authorized to insist upon the Queen's going upon her knees in front of the American Legation, and asking pardon for the Stars and Stripes for having allowed ships to leave English ports, by which their puissance was disputed, when commanded by American captains and manned by American crews, or to require the execution in front of Newgate of the builders of the Alabama and the Custom-House officers who suffered her to run out to sea, as an unarmed mercantile vessel, the law officers who doubted the legality of selling her, and the Ministers of the Crown who took the opinion of the law officers. In the excess of their generosity and moderation, the United States Government have forborne to impose upon England such humiliating conditions as these. All that John Bull will be required to do to appease American wrath is to pay as many millions hard cash as Jonathan shall claim as his right, and to acknowledge that all our casuists, lawyers, and statesmen have hitherto known nothing of international law or of the rights and duties of neutrals. Can we be ever sufficiently grateful for forbearance so great and so magnanimous?—Weekly Reporter, Jan. 7.

A Welch Clergyman on the King of Prussia.

The rector of Merthyr Tydvil, who preached at St. David's on Christmas day, and took for his text Isaiah xlv. 6, said: The age they lived in seemed to be rolled back into the very middle of the dark ages. Nation was raging one against another, as though they were devils — tearing and killing each other with a degree of hatred as if Jesus had never been born. At the head of this was an old, old man, seventy-five years of age—with one foot in the grave and the other half paralyzed out of it. Yet, there he is mocking God with his thanks and his hypocrisy, as though God, the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, were the god of Tophet, who took delight in drinking the blood of children—or of Moloch, who caused them to pass through the fire, and then went to prayers! Oh, the brazy-headed old Pharisee, clothed in purple and fine linen, wearing a crown of gold, and dipping his hands in the blood of innocents! Does he ever consider what sort of a place that God whom he is forever mocking will reserve for him in another world, when he has done with all these cruelties? Does he ever see the lesson that is read to him in the very spot where he is now reveling in blood and the slaughter? Those of you who have been at Versailles will remember that one of the most remarkable sights connected with that place is the wonderful set-'s of pictures recording the battles, the sieges, the stormings, the surprises, and all the other forms of wholesale and retail murder which France has ever taken part in. There they are, in rows upon rows; I might almost say in miles upon miles! Such an array of painted canvas was perhaps never seen before in one gallery. As you enter, you will also remember the inscription over the door is, "To all the glories of France." Poor France! When she paint all that canvas over and wrote above it that vainglorious legend, she little thought how bad it was to glory in anything so wicked as that which is the result and consequence of war. Instead of this it were better for us to wipe them off memory altogether; to let Christianity cast a veil over them. However, she has now had to pay dearly for her vanity. Her assembled glories are trodden in the dust, trampled upon by the iron feet of the invaders—that pious monarch, whose prayers are lengthened in proportion to the number of men and women, and priests and children, whom he has slaughtered. I often wonder, when he reads this legend—as he cannot but do, day by day, as he goes in and out of that palace—whether the thought ever comes across him that Fortune is but a fickle goddess; that the battle is not always even to the strong; that the goddess may give her wheel yet another turn, and that the mercy which he now ruthlessly withholds from downtrodden France may yet be withheld from him when a mightier and a stronger than he is shall take the field, and judge him for his deeds. Possibly he thinks of no such thing. Most probably, indeed, he only thinks that when he gets to his palace-home at the Unter den Linden he, too, will have a Versailles there, and that the legend over the door will be, "To all the glories of Berlin." May be so. But for me, I do not hesitate to say, far better consecrate a slaughter-house—a shambles—to all the glories of a butcher; for a greater butcher of men, women and children never yet walked in purple and fine linen.

Letter from an Irish Franc-Tireur.

The following is a letter from Dr. O'Carroll, of Athlone, who accompanied the Irish Ambulance Corps to France. It is addressed to his father, and is dated Le Mans, December 21:

"I trust you have received my last letter telling you that I have received an appointment to the Franc-tireurs of Constantine, numbering seventy-five men, two lieutenants and a captain. This is an appointment better than any other man has got who came out with the Ambulance Corps, as I am now a military doctor and rank as captain. On Thursday morning at half past one o'clock I was under fire for the first time. The name who firing began I forgot all the excitement, and wished to be at the head of my troops. I rushed on with them as they stormed the farm-house, and left-s flew on all sides. There was danger certainly, but my duty called me on, and many of our men were wounded and I not on the spot to assist them as they might have bled to death. Our men smashed in the windows and door with the butts of their guns—the Prussians, twenty-two of whom were inside, keeping up a fire all the time, but they did not hit any of us, as they fired too high. We thought of the ancient drawing of our family, and then I wished for nothing better than a sword; but the captain came rushing up to me and seized me by the jack, saying what a dreadful thing it would be if I were shot and four hundred soldiers there without any doctor to attend them. The Prussians who took were fine men, dressed in white jackets, with helmets and white covers. When I arrived here, a few days ago, I found the town in a great state of agitation, for the first batch of wounded had just come in. Since then there have been several other trainsfull, which is a pretty sure proof of the severe nature of the fighting. From what I hear on all sides, there seemed to be a very immense desire for peace, coupled with the very irreconcilable but unanimous wish for the cession of Alsace and Lorraine, a complete disdain for the proposers of resistance of France, and an utter abhorrence of the earnest manner in which the continuance of the struggle. By the intensions I am assured that Count Bismarck does not represent Germany until the provinces are ceded; by the captive French officers and soldiers I am told that France will never consent to surrender them. The Germans, meanwhile, have very great confidence in their ultimate success; but it is based upon the assumption that France is a well-nigh exhausted, and at present this can hardly be said to be the case. I have just met a friend who has arrived from Orleans, and regret to learn from him that the English Society of Aid to the Wounded is about to wind up its affairs through want of funds. This will be a great misfortune, for the good that those societies have done is incalculable. Meanwhile the staff is being disbanged, and the "sick and wounded" are practically requested to get well on or before December 31.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. BONIFACE ASYLUM,
Corner of Gough and Fulton Streets,
HAYES' VALLEY.

WILL BE OPENED ON THE 16th APRIL. The English, German and French languages will be taught by competent Professors.
CATHERINE GIBBONS,
Principal of the Asylum.
San Francisco, April 7, 1870. apr9

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,
CONDUCTED BY
THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC,
BENICIA, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION AFFORDS EVERY FACILITY for the acquisition of a refined and solid education. The Academy was founded in 1856, and has become the most successful Educational Institution in the State.

The course of instruction embraces the English, French, Spanish and Italian Languages, Elocution, Composition, Ancient and Modern History, Mythology, Chemistry, Chemistry, Astronomy, and Use of the Globes, Arithmetic, Mental, Commercial Music, including the Piano, Guitar and Singing, Drawing, Painting, Wax Flowers and Fancy Work, Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly, in advance)..... $225
Washing..... 30
Entrance Fee..... 10

EXTRAS.

Piano and use of Instrument, payable half-yearly..... $40
Guitar..... 30
Vocal Music Class..... 10
Private Lessons..... 40
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors..... 20
Painting in Oils..... 40
Use of Bed and Bedding..... 10
School Books at Current Prices.

Each pupil on her lady of entrance will be furnished with four dresses, besides the uniform (which is a black Cloth Dress with cross and Cord), a black Cloth Cloak, a Sun Hat, a Straw Hat, and a Bonnet, all of which are to be procured at the Academy. Each pupil will also be furnished with four pillow-slips, pair of blankets, mattress, tun pillow, counterpane, sheets, towels, a Looking Glass, a Spoon, Fork and Knife, a Cup and Saucer, one Goblet with white Bed, and a supply of note paper, envelopes and postage stamps.

The Academic Year commences on the first Monday in June.

The Academic Year consists of ten months and a half, the first commencing August 16th, the second, January 24th.

Pupils of any religious denomination will be received, but for the sake of uniformity all are required to be present at the regular religious services of the Institution.

Pupils entering after the commencement of a term will be charged from the time of their entrance to the end of the session; no deduction will be made if the pupil is withdrawn before the close of the term, except in case of sickness.

Parents may rest satisfied that every attention, consistent with the spirit of a true but mild parental rule, will be paid to the comfort of the young ladies placed under their charge.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be submitted to the inspection of the Superioress, before it may be delivered to the parents.

MISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,
LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED ACCORDING to the laws of the State of California, and incorporated to confer honors, is situated in the city of Los Angeles, proverbial for the salubrity of its climate and the beauty of its scenery. The Faculty is composed of members of the Religious Community OF THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS. The PRESIDENT DE PAUL, who devotes himself to the personal care and supervision of the students, secures the moral and social advancement of the students entrusted to his charge. The Faculty of Arts and Sciences is under the immediate superintendence of the Director, who devotes his entire time to the discharge of the duties of his office, and is assisted by a sufficient number of Professors, Teachers and Assistants, to secure the advancement of each pupil in the branches he may study.

TERMS:

Per Board, Tuition, Washing and Mending..... $200 00
Piano and Use of Instrument..... 40 00
Vocal Music..... 20 00
French and its Use in Daily Conversation..... 20 00
Use of a Library for the Spanish Language, Plain and Ornamental Penmanship..... 10

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

CAPITULATION OF PARIS.

AN ARMISTICE FOR THREE WEEKS.

VERSAILLES, January 27.—The terms of the capitulation of Paris provide for the possession of the forts around Paris by the Germans, but no occupation of the city by them.

The Prince Imperial to be the future Emperor, with the Empress as Regent.

The terms of peace offered by Bismarck to the French nation are as follows:

First—The cession of Alsace and that part of Lorraine known as German Lorraine.

Second—A money indemnity of one thousand million francs.

Third—Forty war ships from the French fleet.

Fourth—One of the Colonies now held by France.

The money indemnity must be guaranteed by the municipalities. If this guarantee be refused, the property of rich individuals will be held possession of until acquiescence is obtained.

On the morning of Monday, January 23d, a flag of truce left the French lines, and was met by the Germans. The bearer delivered a letter from Jules Favre, addressed to Count Bismarck. At noon the missive reached Versailles and was placed in the hands of Bismarck. It requested permission for Favre to come to Versailles. He replied that he might.

At 4 o'clock the same night the Prussian Premier applied to the Emperor of Germany for permission to hold an interview with him.

Favre spent the night at the quarters of the Lieutenant of Police. Next day, about noon (January 24th), a Council of War was held to consider Favre's mission. General Von Moltke and the Crown Prince of Prussia were present, in addition to the Emperor, who presided.

The Council lasted two hours, and the result of the deliberation was communicated to Favre, who returned to Paris at half past four o'clock the same evening. As he was being driven to his carriage down the avenue leading to the Seven Rond, Bismarck, who was taking his daily ride, encountered him, and turned his horses' heads and rode by the window, conversing with Favre all the way to town.

It is understood that Favre asked that the Army of Paris be allowed to march out with full honors, and take up a position in some unoccupied District of France, under his management, and not resume hostilities for a term of months to be agreed upon, and that there would be no triumphant entry into Paris by the Germans.

These terms were refused by the Council, which insisted Favre must base the basis of surrender would be the same as at Sedan and Metz.

The state of Paris is terrible. The political clubs are in arms, and a sortie with 300,000 men was demanded. General Vinoy refusing to allow the useless butchery, General Leflo was put in his place.

The fleets demand a new Government, and two hundred and ten members of the National Guard have been chosen for that purpose.

Three new batteries were opened to-day between Bicêtre and Le Bourget, and twenty-three batteries in all—all in activity.

It is reported that Belfort will yield before the 28th.

WASHINGTON, January 29.—Secretary Fish has received the following telegram from Moran, Chargé d'Affaires at London, dated Sunday morning, January 29th:

"The foregoing has been Lord Lyons has been officially informed that the capitulation of all the Paris forts and an armistice of three weeks, to Paris and an armistice of three weeks, to commence at 8 o'clock last evening, at Versailles, by Count Bismarck and Jules Favre. The Army of Paris will remain prisoners of war in the city, but it is not known whether they will be disarmed or not. Details have not yet been received."

Count Bernstorff thinks it an important fact that the armistice extends over the sea, and that it should be made known as widely as possible.

LONDON, January 29.—The Observer supposes that the Conference will be adjourned, on account of the capitulation of Paris.

A dispatch has been received at the British Foreign Office, confirming in full the previous reports of the capitulation of Paris, to which it adds that the division of Troops of the Line, beside the National Guards, will not be required to disarm, and communication with Paris is provisionally restricted.

There is no prospect now that Favre will come to London, and no other delegate has been selected to represent France in the Conference.

Provisions for Paris have been forwarded by way of Dieppe.

The capitulation and armistice settles nothing, politically, nor do they ensure the end of the war; all depends upon the Assembly.

Paris is to pay two hundred millions of francs.

A strong influence is at work favoring the restoration of the Imperial family, under a Regency, composed of the Empress, Trochu and Favre.

At a meeting of the Mansion House, January 27th, for the relief of non combatants in and around Paris, the Lord Mayor read a note from Earl Granville, stating that Odo Russell had been instructed to ask Count Bismarck to designate the route by which a convoy of provisions from England might be sent into Paris, in order that they may not be interrupted on the way.

BERLIN, January 29.—All Germany is in a fever of rejoicing, and to-night fires, illuminations and processions may be seen everywhere.

Immediately after the occupation of the Forts by the Germans, the Provisional Government, still retaining its authority in Paris, will summon the Assembly, which body will decide on the form of the future Government of France.

Prince Frederick Wilhem will hereafter be styled "Imperial Highness and Crown Prince of Germany."

BORDEAUX, January 30.—There are demonstrations in several French towns against the armistice and the municipal of France, and several municipalities appear to maintain a firm resistance, and deputations to Bordeaux with that object.

LONDON, January 31.—Gambetta rallies the opposition and will not resign.

The armistice begins instantly in Paris, and in three days in the departments, ending at noon, February 19th.

The cessation of the terms of the Convention between Favre and Bismarck proceeded yesterday without interruption.

The Prussians are driving cattle into Paris for food for the inhabitants.

Postal communication between London and Paris has been re-opened.

NEW YORK, January 31.—The armistice at Paris enables the Bremen steamers to resume their trips for English ports.

BORDEAUX, February 1,—Gambetta has issued a proclamation, saying:

"Frenchmen: Prussia believes that the armistice will dissolve our armies and secure the election of a Chamber ready to conclude a shameful peace. It depends on France to upset these calculations. During the armistice we must proceed with the instruction of our young troops, and continue our preparations for defence, and for war, if necessary, while you install a National Republican Assembly willing to make such a peace only as is compatible with the honor, rank and integrity of France."

LONDON, February 1.—A dispatch from Berlin says that the conditions of peace prescribed by Bismarck to Favre, embrace the cession of Alsace and Lorraine with Belfort and Metz, the payment of ten millions of francs, indemnity for the expenses of the war, the cession of the Colony of Pondichery and the transfer to the German Navy of twenty first-rate frigates. Favre is to refer these terms to the National Assembly, which is to meet at Bordeaux.

BERLIN, February 1.—The semi-official journals declare the belief that an understanding has been established between Bismarck and Favre as to the basis on which the negotiations for peace shall proceed.

FLORENCE, February 1.—Prussia declines the suggestion of neutral Powers with regard to pacification, and prefers to prescribe the conditions of peace herself.

NEW YORK, February 1.—A World cable, dated London, January 31st, says:

"Court circles here are confident of the restoration of the Empire, with Eugenia as Regent. The Empress's confidential aid arrived at Chislehurst to-day. Significant courtesies were lately extended by Victoria to Eugenie."

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTH OF OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, } THURSDAY, February 2, 1871.

FLOUR—The receipts during the past week has been active; we quote standard brands of steam superfine at $5 @ 5 50; family brands as low as superfine at $5 @ 5 25, and extra at $7 12½@7 50, in sacks $7 @ 7 50.

WHEAT—The offerings have been light, as well as the demand, during the week. Prices, however, show an advance. We quote superfine grades at $1 20@ 1 30; fair to choice shipping, $1 @ 1 20; No. 2, $1 @ 1 05.

BARLEY—The market has ruled quiet during the week. Prices were for rolling grain, 75 cents per bar; brewing nominal. Fair feed to choice bay brewing sold within the range of $1 @ 1 15; light to No. 3, $1 @ 1 05.

OATS—Have been only in moderate request. We continue to quote the market at $1 @ 1 05; No. 2, $1 @ 1 05 @ 1 10 @ 1 15; No. 1, $1 @ 1 20; No. 1 gray, $1 @ 1 25; No. 1 white, $1 @ 1 30; No. 1 black, $1 @ 1 30; No. 2 black, $1 @ 1 25.

HAY—Receipts have been fair and prices well maintained. We quote ordinary wild oat to choice at $14 @ 18 50; tame, $18 @ 20.

POTATOES—Have been in good demand, and yesterday sales were made at the close of last week at 90 cents @ $1 10 per cental.

BUTTER—We quote range lots at 35@37½ for fresh.

BEANS—We quote Pea, $3 @ 3 25; Bayo, $3 @ 3 25; Butter, $2 25@2 75; Pea, $2 62 50; small White, $3 @ 3 25; Pink, $2 25@2 37½; Red, $2 37½ @ 2 50.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 @ 1 50 @ 1 75.

CUCUMBERS—We quote at $1 @ 1 50 per box.

ONIONS—We quote bay at $2 @ 2 25; Southern at $1 @ 1 50; Red, $2 75 @ 3 00 per box.

BRAN—The mill price is $27 50 @ 30.

MIDDLINGS—The feeding is at $30 @ 35.

FEED—We quote at $27 50@ 30 00.

CHICKEN FEED—We quote at $2 @ 2 50.

BARLEY MEAL—We quote at $1 @ 1 10 @ 1 20 @ 1 30 per 100 lbs.

RICE—We quote Pea at 5@5½c; and Canary, 6@6½c. Mustard is the same as last week.

HOPS—We quote new California at 9@12½c per lb.

OIL CAKE MEAL—Nominal at $2 @ 2 50 per 100 lbs.

HONEY—Los Angeles, liquid cans, $12@13, and Potter's do., 5-lb cans, at 14 in dozen.

BEESWAX—We quote California at 17½@18½c; Island, nominal at 30c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 7@7 50c per lb.

WOOL—We note sales of choice long staple at 22 @ 24c; medium fleece at 20@21c; and ordinary, the market being nearly bare of stock.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh—ordinary, 30@32c; medium, 35@37½c; choice, 40@42½c; roll, 40@42½c; pickled do., 30@32½c; Oregon, fresh, 30@32½c; Deserts, 30@32½c.

CHEESE—California, 17½ @ 18c, with a few fancy lots at 19@20c; Oregon, 17½@18c; Deserts, 17½@18c.

EGGS—Oregon, 30@32½c per dozen.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 13 @ 15½c; Oregon, 16½ @17c.

BACON—California, at 13@15½c; Oregon, 16½ @17c; Deserts, 15@16c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 10 @ 10 ½ c; second do., 9@9½c; third do., 8@8½c.

VEAL—At 12@12½c per lb.

MUTTON—At 12@12½c per lb.

PORK—Fresh hogs, 10@10½ c; dressed, 12@12½c.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Live turkeys, 20@22½c; young Chickens, 16@17; Roosters, 16@17c; Ducks, 16@17c; Geese, 16@17c; Pigeons, 90c@$1; Quail, $1 @ 1 25; Rabbits, $1 @ 1 25; Hares, $1 @ 1 25.

DRESSED POULTRY AND GAME.

DRESSED—Turkeys, 25@27½c; Chickens, 20@22½c; Ducks, 20@22½c; Geese, 20@22½c; Pigeons, $1 @ 1 25; Quail, $1 @ 1 25; Rabbits, $1 @ 1 25; Hares, $1 @ 1 25.

AN APPEAL FROM DROGHEDA.

Of The Dominican Fathers of Drogheda earnestly solicit your assistance to enable them to erect a new Church and Convent. The site they have purchased is a large field in the suburbs and beautifully situated, within a few feet of the picturesque and historic River Boyne. The work they undertake is one of great necessity, as the present Convent and Church are fast tottering to decay, and in every way unsuited for the requirements of the present time.

The first Dominican Church in Drogheda, and dedicated to St. Magdalen, was commenced in November of the year of Our Lord 1224. It was destroyed more than 600 years—there has been an uninterrupted succession of Dominican Fathers in Drogheda—both in the boys and convent of the people.

The design of the contemplated new Church has been prepared by the eminent architect, Mr. Austin Pugin, of Salisbury Square, London, and is very beautiful.

The community will not fail to remember a day in the month of June, when the Church is open, and the Feast of Corpus Christi is celebrated in Drogheda.

"Behold the laborers of God with lilies, and behold the workers of God with roses." And they shall be surrounded and feel himself with them shall be their test and their reward.

The venerable Father P. V. Mcalth writes to Mrs. E. P. McCarthy, of this city, requesting her to use her influence with the sons and daughters of Erin-holds in California to aid in the noble work. The collection will be taken up in the Church on Sunday, on a handsome one, and it is hoped those of San Francisco will not be behind their sisters.

The names of the collectors will be published in THE MONITOR and in the Irish daily papers.

Subscriptions will be received by their resident-ances to Mrs. E. P. McCARTHY, corner of Bush-street and Van Ness Avenue, San Francisco, or to Mr. O'FARRELL, at the Hibernia Bank. de31

SEWING MACHINES.

WM. B. HIGGINS,

NO. 10 THIRD STREET, (WEST SIDE)

Bet. Howard & Folsom, San Francisco.

WHO HAS HAD THE ADVANTAGE OF SEEING and trying the New Machine, at Machining the finest-sewing Machine establishments in the United States, and in this city, having gone into bed room for himself, guarantees entire satisfaction to all who may favor him with their patronage. The Reversible and Cleaning sewing Machines on the most reasonable terms, and short notice.

Wheeler & Wilson's Machines adjusted and warranted for one dollar each. Sewing Machines for hire by the hour or day of reliable bondsmen.

Machines always on hand for sale or for rent by the month. dtw mon 41

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

The Office of the Hibernia Savings and Loan Society. At a meeting of the Boards of Directors, held this day, a dividend of ten per cent. per annum was declared for the six months ending June 30, 1871, payable on and after this date.

EDWARD MARTIN,

January 31, 1871. Treasurer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A COURSE OF THREE POPULAR

SCIENTIFIC ENTERTAINMENTS

TO BE GIVEN BY THE STUDENTS OF

Natural Philosophy and Chemistry

OF ST. IGNATIUS COLLEGE, S. J.,

SAN FRANCISCO,

ON THE EVENINGS OF

January 31st, February 8th and 16th, 1871.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THEIR

Physical and Chemical Cabinets and Laboratories.

THE STUDENTS OF THE SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENTS OF ST. IGNATIUS COLLEGE announce a course of popular illustration, and to the patronage of those and others in general that they intend to give a Public Session on the evenings of Tuesday, February 7, and 16, in the College Hall under the personal supervision and direction of their Professor of Natural Philosophy and Chemistry.

The Entertainments will consist of Popular Lectures on some of the most remarkable among the physical and chemical properties of matter illustrated by very numerous and striking experiments, for the most part never seen before in this or elsewhere out of the institution, and others altogether new.

The Lectures will be delivered in the English language, and will be illustrated by black-boarding when could, and reading to be by the application of time to all.

Experimental illustrations of some of the mysterious bodies of gravitation.

The fracturing of strong iron bands-shells by small amounts of cold water.

Steam-boilers converted into powerful electrical machines.

The beautiful structure of crystallize water in the ice-flowers, with a large collection of the best of snow flakes, carefully preserved for the occasion.

Experiments with the prism, showing the solar spectrum and the various colors of the rainbow, &c., &c., &c., &c.

The wonderful properties of the elements composing Water—their separation and their reunion.

The production of beautiful light, not produced by the melting and burning of iron and steel by water in its primitive condition, but by the decomposition of water under the same conditions.

A very brilliant and brilliant light, the only hydrogen or calcium light, obtained from the components in water.

The production of powerful light, not produced, the electric light, from a very large battery, with the range of a mile in the air.

A very interesting experiment, which has never been before.

The whole will be carried on a grand scale, will also be used, with other electrical apparatus of the celebrated Ruhmkorff, of Paris, as are also the beautiful collection of various sets of typical, topographical, astronomical, historical, Science, &c., &c., &c.,

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

England's Demonstrations of the Prussians.

A public meeting was held in London on Thursday afternoon, in the City Terminus Hotel, to express sympathy with France in the war between that country and Prussia, at which some very strange expressions were made use of. Adverting to the Lord Mayor's refusal to give the Guildhall for the purpose of the meeting, Mr. Merriman, who proposed the first resolution, said: "In consequence of this refusal, meetings had already been projected for the purpose of precipitating this country into war, in order to sustain France in her unequaled struggle against the most barbarous of despotisms." [At this, says the reporter, there were enthusiastic cheers; the majority of the audience leaping to their feet, and applauding vociferously.] Mr. Merriman proceeded with much justice to observe: "We have hitherto been content to say that the war was begun by France; but the State documents found in the Tuileries pointed to a different conclusion. The fact was that the Emperor had been trapped by Prussia, who had been for a long time preparing a secret for the conflict." Sir Henry Hoare, M.P. (who proposed another resolution), said: "He believed it would be a good act of statesmanship on our part to hold out the hand of friendship to France, and set her on her legs again, to be, as she would be, one of the defenders of constitutional liberty against the barriers imposed by the Hessrtts and Teutons. He wished the Prussians of a cruel, vindictive prosecution of the laws of ciyeralty in regard to an organized pillage of defenceless towns and villages, of systematic falsification of news in order to throw discredit on the French authorities."

Then the following dialogue took place:

Dr. Kenealy said he wished the French had hanged ten Prussian soldiers for one French soldier.

A Voice—Better hang the wooden-headed King.

Dr. Kenealy—Well, I would not be sorry to see him on the gallows. The speaker then referred to the shelling of English ships at Havre, and exclaimed, "Oh, for one hour of Chatham, Nelson or Cromwell!"

—adding that when these lads of this fair became known, there would be great indignation excited throughout the length and breadth of the land. He hoped our government had made no remonstrance.

A Voice—Let us sink saxy Prussian ships.

Dr. Kenealy—I wish you were Prime Minister, sir, to do it.

Mr. Lloyd Jones, in closing the proceedings, gave those who boast of England's unity "a bit of his mind." He told the audience that "the peace of Europe was not in her hands, for when it suited Prussia's purpose, we should have to take the field, whatever we might say. Peace never kept England blind to what was going on. It was known that the merchants and working people of England feared to go to war, but their wealth should be saved, their trade interfered with, or their lives sacrificed, that peasant the liberty of Europe would be at risk."

Quite a number of resolutions were passed in sustainment of the cause of the French people, and in favor of active interference by the British Government.—Dublin Daily Sumvary, January 7.

Happy England.

There are many people surrounded by happy faces in their own bright home at this Christmas season whose enjoyment of the pleasant scene around them arises chiefly from a desire to take care of him, but although perhaps they would not confess it —quite as much from the thought of the miseries of others as from their own blessings.

Not unnaturally, this conduct was resented, and he was assaulted by several, and charged with being a French spy. An influential friend luckily came up at the moment and rescued him, and he was conducted to the lines, where he was again immediately arrested, the Russian gentleman having by this time recovered sufficiently to give a true account of the whole affair.

A Noble Lady.

A Standard correspondent tells us he had the honor of an interview with Madame de Bourboulon, wife of Count de Bourboulon, commandant de la place: "A noble, heroic lady of the good old French school, and as calm and dignified as if she were in her own drawing-room at Versailles in time of peace, and not in the midst of one of the last Midsummer nights in this city to be numbered among the terrible years of history, with steadily flowing tears, and with steeling a fowl, the property of Mr. A. Roberts, of St. Leonards. The father of the two children, it seems, is now undergoing a term of imprisonment in Aylesbury jail for poaching, and the mother left home on the previous Tuesday to go to Aylesbury to see if she could get some assistance from her absent husband, taking her baby with her, and leaving five children at home, of whom the prisoners are the eldest. Being tired and faint from her journey, she stayed at Aylesbury, and the children, whose small stock of food was nearly exhausted, perceived the likes of trying to kill one of their neighbor's fowls and have for once a good dinner. In pursuance of their designs, they went one on one side of the hedge and the other on the other side of the road and there the fowl was, and commenced throwing stones at it until they killed it; the younger one was wrapping up the body in his smock-frock to take it home when a woman came by and took the fowl from him. She then gave information of the circumstance, and the children, who appeared to be in a state of terror, were sentenced to one month's imprisonment each, and afterwards to be sent to a reformatory for four years. When they were received they kept crying out for their mother, and the poor woman, it is stated, was almost overwhelmed with grief, remained in the precincts of the court for some time after the case was concluded, and, sending herself on a bench, kept rocking herself to and fro, with her baby in her arms, a picture of utter misery and despair. Such was the happiness that fell to the lot of this little Buckinghamshire home this Christmas; and although there are many persons who think that all poor children would be the better for being sent to reformatories—and certainly in this case it was a present rescue from starvation, and in the future probably from crime—yet others say they and their Christmas turkeys will feel for the poor woman whose children are taken away from her for four long years.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Extraordinary Attempt to Bury a Living Child.

A few days ago a man named Joseph Tarbuck, residing at 92 Cathcrine street, Ashton-under-Lyne, died, and arrangements were made for the interment of the body. It was arranged, for some reason, that the interment should take place at the new cemetery, which is eight miles distant from Ashton-under-Lyne, and Saturday last was fixed for the funeral. All the usual preliminaries having been arranged, and just as the coffin was about to be lowered into the grave, a few persons present were startled by a scream which undoubtedly proceeded from the coffin. The noise being continued, the coffin was removed to a convenient place and opened, and in addition to the body of the deceased man it contained a living female child, apparently about five or six weeks old. It has been ascertained that the mother of the child was married to the deceased man about a year ago, and the police have also discovered that the death of the child had been duly registered at the registrar's office. The remains of the deceased man were interred, and the child was brought to the Salford Police Station. The Ashton police are making further inquiries about the matter. The child, when there is more room to spare, will be delivered up given to it, died at the Salford Police Station last night. It was remarked at the time that no remarks were made at the cemetery that a woman who accompanied the funeral suddenly disappeared from the cemetery. The deceased, Tarbuck, was an agent at Ashton. At the last Midsummer assizes in this city he obtained £750 damages for injuries sustained in a railway collision, and there is a rumor that a short time before his death he made a will leaving a considerable sum of money to the child in question, which was his only one.—Manchester Courier.

A Coal Pit on Fire for a Hundred Years.

One of the most curious phenomena in connection with coal mining is exhibited at Bank Colliery, near Rotherham, the property of Earl Fitzwilliam. The pit caught fire one hundred years ago, and all the efforts of the workmen at the time and subsequently have been quite ineffectual to extinguish it. A short time ago it was ascertained that the flames were approaching the bottom of the shaft, and it was then resolved, if possible, to stay their progress, so that they might not extend to other parts of the workings. At length the superintendent of the collieries, Mr. T. Cooper, conceived the idea of building a wall to shut in the fire, and in order to ascertain the best site for this wall, several of the officials kept on climbing the shaft through the dense stifling smoke, as far as possible into the workings. Their efforts were successful, and a wall is now completed nearly one thousand yards in length, and varying from nine inches to five feet in thickness. At distances varying from thirty to fifty yards metal pipes have been inserted in this wall, which are closely plugged at the end, so that at any time, by removing the plugs, the state of the fire on the side of the fire, and even the position of the fire itself, can be ascertained. So intense is the heat arising from the fire, that the people possessing gardens above the colliery declare that the growth of plants is materially affected, and they are enabled to obtain two and three crops a year.

FRANCE.

A Strange Story.

A Paris correspondent of the Times, who witnessed the sortie of the 21st ult., in the capacity of an ambulance assistant, relates the following episode: The crowds of carriages, infermiers and priests was a busy one, left behind and, indeed, almost abreast of the French batteries, that if the Prussians had commenced an answering fire there would have been the most superfluous slaughter of non-combatants. We heard about two of the 74 shells that had been sent that morning, one mortally; but the priests of Bavaria, Prussia, and under fire with astonishing that the only wonder is that more are not hit. The ludicrous and the tragic jostle each other quaintly enough on these occasions. We were just being told of the fate of the poor Febres that drew attention was attracted by the sight of a well known Irish member of the ambulance corps in a big horse, riding furiously across the open in the with a solemnity almost supernatural in an Irishman, every now and then taking off his cap, and exclaiming, still solemnly, "Vive la France!" He passed through the midst of our party, but, though personally known to most of us, took no further notice of anybody than to remark, again, cap in hand, "Vive la France!" There was a strange light in his eyes which made his friends anxious for his safety. Our duty, however, was to be interfered with, and shortly after we were, in fact, ordered to the rear, and the ambulance, as well as the carriages, returned to Paris.—Pall Mall Gazette.

SPAIN.

The Funeral of Marshal Prim.

The remains of Marshal Prim, after being embalmed, were conducted with great pomp from his residence in the Ministry of War to the Basilica of the Atocha, where they lay in state three days. With the exception of the general honors to the Duke of Wellington, "the London Times' correspondent says Madrid says he never remembered any sight more imposing. Large flights of Civil Guards, mounted and on foot, opened the march. These were followed by two or three hundred pauper men and boys, each bearing a long lighted candle, a custom never omitted at funerals here. Behind these came an immense number of clergy in surplices, bearing crosses and other insignia of the Catholic religion. Next was the hearse—the handsome one belonging to the Royal house, which had carried Ferdinand VII., Narvaez, O'Donnell and a host of other Spanish celebrities to their last resting-places. Six magnificent black horses drew it along, led by six servants of the deceased. One of his cuirassier, in black velvet livery, rode the off horse. Some long time elapsed before the outer coffin was visible. It was of bronze, handsomely gilt, with figures of angels at the corners. Within this was a coffin of polished mahogany. Within this was the zinc one containing the body. A pane of glass was inserted over the upper part, so that the head and a portion of the body could be seen. The face was covered with a unidorm of a Captain-General of the army. On the top of the coffin were his sword, hat, and gloves. At every pause the priests and bishops of his various orders. From the Atocha to the Campo Santo the streets were held by Generals Contreras and Nouvilas, ex-Ministers Silvela and Figuerola, and Deputies Montemar and Rodriguez Vera. Behind the hearse came two war horses of the Marshal, led by soldiers in deep mourning. At the sides of these and of the hearse were the porters of the Cortes, those of the Ministers, the sergeants of the guard, and twelve old pensioners who had been soldiers. A long double file of gentlemen followed these, consisting of those Habitants of Madrid who desired to show their respect to the memory of Marshal Prim, but who held no official position. These numbered between three and four thousand. Next followed chiefs and officers of the army unattached. The Coadjutor Bishop of Madrid followed, and after him the Diplomatic Body, among whom were our Minister, Mr. Layard; the American Minister, General Sickles; the Italian Minister, the Ambassador Bianchi; and the Austrian Minister, Count Karnsky. The members of the Prussian Legation, of which Count Von Prim was President, brought up the rear of the long cavalcade, together with a large number of persons who had been exiled for political offences during Queen Isabella's reign. Carriages and horsemen closed in for a long line of carriages. The first of these was the private carriage of the late Marshal, the Ministerial carriage in which he was shot, bearing all the traces of the crimson blood, the cushions, doors, and blood-stained seats and lining, exactly as it was after the assassins had completed their work. Then came the state carriage, drawn by six iron-grey horses, followed by Municipal guards and volunteers with reversed arms ended the procession. The body was received at the Campo Santo by the Archbishop of Toledo. When this solemn responses were chanted, the body was lowered into the grave, and the military salutes fired it was all over."

Spain Versus Italy.

The Catholic Association of Madrid has published an eloquent and carefully worded Protest, with the view of uniting all Catholics of all parties in a public expression of indignation at the Italian usurpation. The movement has been successful in obtaining the signatures of a number of members of Spain belonging to different shades of political opinion. The Protest is published at the uncompromising tone of the Protest against the identity of Catholic sentiment in Spain with that expressed universally throughout Christendom. The Protest, which is entitled "An Invitation to the Catholic People of Madrid," says: "The Pope having been made a prisoner, and the Church usurped by force, the Catholics cannot fail to send up fervent prayers to Heaven; they must make the crime that has been committed their own by the completion of their silence. It is, indeed, a horrible crime, and one that fills the mind with wonder and the heart with sorrow. Human feelings would cause us to burn with rage did the greatness of our grief leave room for anger. It is an enormous crime—one which knows no bounds—and in which there is seen the sacrilegious hand on the Vicar of Jesus Christ, consecrated by the blood of the Redeemer, the sacred property of the whole Catholic world into the illegitimate patrimony of a single man, making a prisoner of the Supreme Father of the faithful by brute force, which has universally aroused the abhorrence of the Catholic world. The Pope is the King of Kings; the Pope is a captive if he is not a Sovereign; and the Prince who assails his sway over him thereby tyrannizes over the Catholics of the whole world. Yes, Catholics, the liberty of the Sovereign Pontiff is our liberty; on the freedom of the teachings of the Church depends the peace and happiness of men—the Shepherd having been carried off from his flock, the sheep are deprived of their protector and guide, their hearts are filled with sorrow, their consciences become troubled, the spiritual life of their souls is threatened by darkness and horror."—Tablet.

An Unsteady Throne.

The new King of Spain does not appear likely to have a prolonged experience of regal power. The Gironde, a Madrid paper of considerable importance, writes as follows upon his advent: This day the young Amadeus of Spain is going to his triumphal entry into his good city of Madrid." Had he come only two days sooner he might have attended the funeral of the man who put him his crown. We cannot but feel the most profound compassion for the young sovereign, who, in the midst of the joy of his subservitudes generally that surround him on such a visible advent, has rushed upon destruction. The assassin of yesterday cannot show much of a funereal advent as his. He was struck down against the national will, and by manifestly unpopular manœuvres. He is now to take possession of his throne without the aid of the man who alone was likely to protect him. He will need a President of Council who only a week ago expressed, in the face of the Cortes, a profound repugnance for the new Sovereign. Is it to be expected that Admiral Topete, now Prime Minister, will not be the first to offer his hand to help

WEEKLY CALENDAR,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 18.
Sunday—Septuagesima Sunday.
Monday—St. Valentine of Rome and Martyr.
Tuesday—St. Valentine, Priest and Martyr.
Wednesday—St. Faustin, Bishop and Martyr.
Thursday—St. Onesimus, Bishop of Ephesus, Martyr.
Friday—St. Theodulus, Bishop of Jerusalem, Martyr.
Saturday—St. Simeon, Bishop of Jerusalem, Martyr.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY.....FEBRUARY 11, 1871.

THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

While so many of the California newspapers are unsound at issue respecting our Railroad policy, and range themselves as either pro-railway or anti-railway, we shall do our utmost to maintain an independent position, and to discuss the matter exclusively as it affects the interests of the State. The man who will not admit that a good railway system has become one of the principal elements of prosperity in any country, is so insensible to the lessons of the age that we look upon it as a hopeless task to endeavor to instruct him. We shall take it for granted, therefore, that our readers are, one and all, convinced of the great advantages derivable from it. Consequently, we start in upon the discussion of the merits of the Southern Pacific Railroad with an admission that of itself it is a most desirable thing. The only question at issue, then, is, whether we may not be taxed too highly for its benefits; whether we may not be duped into paying too dearly for our railway whistle. The lands through which the intended railway is designed to pass are some of the best and most fertile in the United States. They are capable of supporting millions upon millions of inhabitants. As soon as their productiveness becomes known, and facilities for settlement are afforded, multitudes of peaceful and industrious people will fly from the bloodshed and disorder which threaten Europe to seek new homes upon them. Shall we, then, give vast areas of these rich domains to wealthy companies and corporations because they believe it will increase their wealth to build railroads? Before giving an answer it would be well to reflect upon two matters, antagonistic by their nature; first, that the only motive actuating railway companies is to enrich themselves, as they care little or nothing whether the country is benefited; secondly, that, practically, at all events, needless public service. It stands to reason that, without the railroads, the settlement of the country must be an extremely slow process. Immigrants deprived of facilities for pushing away to the glorious West, and bringing the boundless prairies under cultivation, can only settle down in the vicinity of the great Eastern cities, and by these every crowding reproduce the crime, misery and pauperism of the Old World. It will not, we presume, be denied that the highest considerations of national welfare imperatively demand that every endeavor shall be made to direct the stream of immigration towards those regions as yet unsettled. We should be sorry to see Government building these railroads, because we think it would be unfairly intruding upon the domain of private enterprise, which should be jealously guarded by a great industrial community like ours; and, also, because we know very well that jobbery and corruption to an incalculable amount would accompany their construction, and swell the cost to probably double as much as they could be built for by private parties. The evident fact that the simple traffic would not be sufficient to pay ordinary interest upon the cost of building the railroads is enough to deter private individuals from engaging in the work, unless additional inducements in the shape of subsidies or land grants are held out to them. The discussion of the railroad question has, accordingly, divided the citizens into three classes—those who think that no inducements should be offered, and that the roads should be built only as they are absolutely necessary; those who are of opinion that the system which brought the Central Pacific Road into existence ought to be maintained; and, finally, those who believe that it is right and expedient to encourage companies to build, but since a great deal too much has been done in that line, all future grants and subsidies should be moderate in amount, and given only on certain conditions. To this latter class we give our adhesion. We are perfectly satisfied that the Southern Pacific Railroad would prove an inestimable blessing to California, and, notwithstanding all assertions to the contrary, do much to promote the prosperity of San Francisco. But yet, we would oppose with all earnestness any attempt to transfer immense tracts of land, in addition to large money subsidies, to any body corporate or association of men, because they choose to invest a certain amount of money in building railroads. If the people got any control over the roads when constructed, if they were allowed any voice in the arrangements as to passenger and freight rates; if directly or indirectly they could exercise any influence in the management of enterprises to which they are asked to contribute so heavily, there might be some justification for the land grants and subsidies, but as matters go now there is none whatever. We should like very much to see the Southern Pacific Railroad an accomplished fact as speedily as possible, and yet we should prefer to wait a little while just to find out whether it could not be brought into existence with something less of a sacrifice than is demanded at present. The money grants about which such a dexterous juggle was perpetrated, can be very badly spared by the citizens who are already taxed beyond all reason; and the lands asked for being part of the public property ought not to be squandered recklessly and alienated without the possibility of ever getting a fair return for them.

THE INCOME TAX.

The complication which has arisen between the Senate and Congress in relation to the Income Tax is much to be regretted. It is the ardent wish of a great majority of citizens throughout the Union that the odious imposition may be speedily repealed, and anything tending to retard this blessed consummation is sure to be regarded pretty much as a public misfortune. In theory, the Income Tax is an admirable institution, just and equitable in its dealings with the whole community, making the rich man contribute to the expenses of the Republic proportionally with the poor man. But in practice, it is found a very different thing, indeed, showing itself a most iniquitous enactment, capricious in its effects, easily evaded by the wealthy, and pressing heavily, if not upon the poor, at least, upon the rent levied by the United States which gives rise to a greater amount of fraud and immorality. It is quite impossible to make people return their income at anything like its true figure, for men who actually pride themselves on being strictly honest in all business transactions, seem not to make the slightest scruple in swearing their yearly revenue to be one-half, sometimes even one-fourth, of what it really is. Curious to say, the higher the income is, the better the individual taxed is able to bear the burden, the more unwilling, generally speaking, is he to behave honestly towards the Government. Occasionally, the papers contain most astounding revelations of backsliding from the conscientious by bankers, merchants, professional men and others in the enjoyment of large annual receipts, who, by deliberate perjury, seek to rob the State out of three-fourths of their proper quota of income tax. In some instances the offenders are brought to account for the mal-practice and compelled to pay up all arrears; but, in an equal number of cases, perhaps, they escape scot free, and, instead of being condemned by their neighbors as dishonorable men, are rather admired as smart and cunning fellows, while their little misfortune of being "found out" is only heartily laughed at. We need not waste time and space characterizing that sort of morality which holds it to be no wrong to cheat the Government out of the money it levies for the maintenance of law, order and national security. We shall simply make the observations that taxation is probably not paid upon one-third of the gross incomes liable to the assessment throughout the States, and that there is no tax more costly and inconvenient to collect. Manifestly it is wrong to maintain any system of obtaining revenue which is productive of such universal demoralization. But, if the Income tax is thus objectionable as regards the people, it is likewise objectionable from another point of view as regards the Government. It partakes altogether too much of the nature of an inquisition, and is looked upon as an improper interference in the business of private citizens. One of the most universally recognized principles of modern taxation is that the methods of raising revenue shall be open and above board, and subject to the most searching investigation at every part of the process. Now the only condition upon which an income tax will be tolerated at all is that the Government shall keep strictly secret whatever information it may require respecting the sources and amount of the tax-payers annual receipts. This pledge of secrecy, notwithstanding that it is a necessary condition of the assessment, is the very reason why so much fraud is perpetrated—because it is that which make it possible. Evidently, then, the Income Tax is only a clumsy make-shift, divised first by some third-rate financier who lacked brains enough to invent a more legimate mode. The effort to repeal it, therefore, has the warmest sympathies of a large body of our best statesmen and our best citizens. It is not our intention to enter upon any discussion of the rights of the Senate to originate a bill for the repeal of the tax; that is a purely constitutional question, with which we do not concern ourselves at present; but we feel convinced that the motives which actuated the Senators in proposing the abolition were those of true statesmen as well as good citizens, but those of men anxious to grasp a power not belonging to them. At the same time, we can hardly find fault with the action of Congress in resisting the pretensions of the Senate. Those questions of privilege and competency do not seem, to superficial thinkers, of much importance; yet, to those who understand them better, they contain the vital principle of all government and discipline. We are sorry, however, that the Conference Committee of the two Houses, appointed to arrange the dispute as to the right of originating the repealing bill, should be so divided in opinion and so indisposed to come to an amicable agreement. It does seem to us as if they might very well hit upon some plan by which the country could be satisfied about the abolition of the Income Tax and they themselves be placed in a position to fight the battle of privilege as long and as fiercely as they felt disposed. The vote of the Committee of Ways and Means by which a resolution to report the bill repealing the tax "as passed" by the Senate was carried by a majority of two to one. This they would do, not because of any dislike to taxation in itself, but, simply and exclusively, because of a well-founded and intelligible objection to the principle involved in the maintenance of the Income Tax.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE OF FRANCE.

It is hardly possible to conceive anything more distressing than the present condition of France. Never indeed, was a gallant and chivalrous nation more deeply humiliated, more utterly crushed into the very dust. In her fairest provinces thousands of her people are without homes or shelter—the merciless shot and shell, or else, the devouring fire, having reduced their little cottages into shapeless masses of ruins. Over the fields which once presented such pleasing pictures of bounteous plenty, where the yellow corn waved, and the clustering vines displayed their wealth of grapes, desolation and neglect reign supreme. The poor people who tilled them and were happy in their humble lot have fled away terror-stricken from the fierce foreign soldiery. Half-filled graves, in the clay of which are visible scraps of faded cloth, buttons, fragments of military equipments, broken guns and bayonets, show where the brave defenders of their country received a hasty burial. The few sad peasants who still linger around the sites of their former homes bear the impress of famine and misery on their countenances, and appear more like spectres than living men. Nothing but blackened walls and roofless gables, in which the birds of the air build their nests, mark the location of the neat and picturesque villages which used to cull forth the warmest admiration from so many travelers. The towns, once all bustle, animation and industry, are now but half populated. Most of their young men have been either shot in battle or taken prisoners, and the few who have been left behind go about with a dejected and downcast air, like men from whom all hope has departed for ever. In the cities the same gloom and desolation are visible on a larger scale. Comparatively happy are the place which have escaped the visitations of the enemy with the consequent plunderings, burnings and requisitions. The climax of horror is reached at the capital. There are nearly two millions of people perishing for want of food, while their conquerors, revelling on the fat of the land, are calmly discussing on what conditions their sufferings may be alleviated! The railroads, the only means of conveying provisions to those starving multitudes, have been destroyed, and the gentle BISMARCK must be convinced that "military necessity" does not forbid their reconstruction before he allows them to be repaired. While the material condition of the country is thus disheartening, its political condition is even more deplorable. There are really two Governments, one in Paris, the other at Bordeaux, and they are vehemently opposed. The first favors peace; the second wishes for war. The first is either Imperialist or Monarchical; the second is Republican. The Paris authorities have the greater number of adherents in the country at large; the Bordeaux officials are, probably, strongest in the cities and towns. At present, things look as if the former will gain an ascendancy and conclude terms of peace with Prussia, but a civil war between the rival factions is far from being unlikely. In Paris there is much discontent with the armistice, chiefly among the individuals who were not remarkable for heroism during the sorties. The "Reds" talk loudly of impeaching THIERS and his colleagues for their share in bringing about the capitulation. Some even are come under notice, finding people so far gone as to propose the erection of the guillotine, and a repetition of the sanguinary scenes of 1793. The same fanatical set pretend to be very anxious to reject all terms of peace, and to make the war one of extermination. They seem to forget that the tiermans have full possession of all the forts around Paris, have trained the heavy guns upon the city, and are in a position to bombard it at their pleasure. The only chance of the whole population of Paris, therefore, consists in the possibility of the Prussians, those Red gentry would have swept them all off the face of the earth long ago. Yet, notwithstanding this insanehing, a powerful party which would come natural to them at any time, seemingly, they look possession of the third-class carriages at the end of the train, and refused to start. A detachment of Gardiners, they said, in the train, were called upon to act, but the latter refused to do so, declaring that it was illegally interfere, and set them at defiance. The railway officials, however, were equal to the emergency, for they got up one but the ticket-men filled the last compartment, and, when the Gardiners had attempt to dislodge them, they shut the doors and gave the usual signal for starting. The whistle sounded, the engine screamed, and the train moved off. It moved off, but with the disinterested supporters of the Government which would reflect much on the administration. The nominee was supported by Gavin Dandley, and others, and the first Gardiner is reported to have been very severe in remarks. Some of those opposed to election left the Senate chamber before debate closed; and, finally, it was voted that the committee from further discussion of the nomination, and the Protestant Orphan Asylum and Miss Hawkins appeared voting in the negative.

In the Senate, February 6, on motion of Mr. Ivory, Senate took up the bill to define and protect the rights of mines, which was duly amended at the suggestion of the Government will have the finest room in city wherein to trip it on the light fantastic toe. Indeed, every arrangement to hasten the passing of a pleasant evening connected with their mining interests, and other purposes.

Mr. Ivory regretted that partisanship had been introduced into the discussion, and said that the subsidy bills was of no interest to the people of the Pacific coast. On that account he had voted for the amendment was agreed to. The bill was then rejected—yeas 17, nays 15.

The Southern Pacific Railroad bill was by a two-thirds vote—129 to 61—taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Pacific Railroad Committee, with leave to report at any time after February 15th.

WASHINGTON, February 6.—In the Senate, on motion of Chandler, the bill introduced by Corbett to incorporate the Pacific Ocean Navigation Company, was taken up.

Bayard opposed the bill, arguing against the creation by Congress of corporations independent of State taxation and control.

Corbett explained that the company desired to operate between Japan and the American Minister at Paris, and that a national charter was necessary to give them a standing in the different Asiatic ports.

Morrill, of Vermont, offered an amendment reserving to Congress the right to repeal, alter or amend the circular. Agreed to.

DAVIS said he supposed that the object of the corporation in coming to Congress was to escape taxation in California, where much of its property is located. It seemed to him that every ring in the United States has come to Congress for a charter, asking charters for incorporation.

Nye advocated the measure in the interest of the revival of American commerce.

Bayard moved an amendment subjecting the company's property within the limits of State taxation, and making the corporation liable to taxation in the States where their stock, for all debts of the company. Agreed to. Commenting upon the growing danger to our institutions from great corporations, he remarked that the voice of the people of the United States was that of corporations.

Conkling said: "We have a corporation which pays no taxes, and which has not even a local habitation. He wished that the Senate would resist the encroachments of the great corporations, which were the curse of the dark days in store for them, if something was not done to check the growing influence of great monopolies.

Hamlin said there was not one word in the bill about regulating commerce; it aimed at nothing but to create a powerful privileged corporate power to a number of private individuals, and is a species of legislation upon which he regretted to see Congress entering.

After further debate, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

In the House, February 6th, bills were reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, and passed, confirming the act of June 26th, 1851, for the relief of Thomas H. Valentine, of California, claims to certain lands in Los Angeles; to grant to Juan Miranda.

The House at 2:30 P. M., resumed the consideration of the bill to establish a system of national education.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

Meirath, who was shot by Murphy, is improving.

Sheriff of Charles Edward Falstein was filed in the Probate Court on Monday last. It contains three mutilated lots in Gonzales township, valued at $5,000, and one to the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum and the Ladies' Benevolent Society, of $5,000 each. In all he bequeaths $15,000 to the three most worthy institutions. He appoints Hon. P. Hoating executor of his estate.

A suit has been brought by Louisa Rau against the Mutual Life Insurance Company, to recover five thousand dollars alleged to be due on the policy held by the husband of the plaintiff, who died on the 4th of John Rau, deceased.

The visiting surgeon of the County Hospital reports that Jeremiah Sullivan and James Murphy last Friday and Daniel Kelly, who was stabbed by a Mexican on Sunday morning, both to be in a dangerous condition.

Robert J. Beigle has commenced a suit in the Fourth District Court against the City and County of San Francisco, to recover the sum of three hundred and forty-one dollars, alleged to be due for stationery furnished to the defendant.

The Police Commissioners have adopted the following marking it good cause for dismissal for a police officer to "strut" for any lawyer or firm of lawyers, and requiring each officer to attend go a step further and put a stop to the practice of officers going their bail for prisoners and giving $1 in cash case to the prison keeper as his share.

Much complaints is made that a set of roughs and rowdy boys frequently commit depredations by wantonly destroying property in the vicinity of Meiggs' wharf.

The trial jury, now in session, have indicted Mrs. Laura D. Fair for the murder of A. P. Crittenden, on the Oakland ferry boat, on the 3d of November last.

P. E. Weygand died on Saturday morning last, of disease of the heart. Mr. Weygand was well known as one of the proprietors of the Informational Hotel, on Jackson street.

The committee hereodore appointed by the County Court to revise the Rules of Practice in the Justice's Court, have submitted their report, which has been approved, and the rules, as amended, adopted.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

Some of the wheat in Petaluma Valley is five inches high.

The Grass Valley Lottery is announced for March 1st, without fail.

Enterprising farmers propose to erect a beet sugar factory near Napa.

The Northern Pacific Railroad has received twenty-five thousand dollars for sales of town lots at Kalama, Oregon.

Commutation tickets from San Francisco to Vallejo are now issued on the steamer New World, fifty for twenty-five dollars.

About fifty thousand acres will be the aggregate of land sown in grain in the vicinity of Hollister, Monterey county, this year.

VIRGINIA, February 3.—In United States District Court, yesterday, Thomas Seals and Henry Mohr, mulmen, of Gold Hill, were adjudged bankrupts on the petition of their creditors.

The following are the annual bullion shipments by Wells, Fargo & Co. for the past five years: For 1866, $7,807,000; for 1867, $10,000,000; for 1868, $6,560,000; for 1869, $6,000,000; for 1870, $9,310,000.

SAN DIEGO, February 4.—The daily stage line between this point and Los Angeles has reduced the number of trips to six per week.

Reports from the Julian mining districts are very favorable. Four mills are now running day and night.

SACRAMENTO, February 4.—Senator Gifford Monday next the Central Pacific Railroad Company will attach a sleeping car to each night train between this City and San Francisco, for the accommodation of those who wish to speed Sunday in Miner and return in the forenoon of business.

LOS ANGELES, February 4.—The Arizona Miner of January 28th, says: On the 20th instant, about midnight, a fire occurred at Fort Whipple. Four mills are now running day and night.

Williams, who had originally introduced the bill, argued in support of its provisions. After considerable discussion the bill was rejected—yeas 9, nays 31.

Sargent moved an amendment providing that no person under 21 years of age should be allowed in any one township. He protested against the further absorption of lage tracts of land in California—a pernicious system which had already cost that State a million of inhabitants.

Johnston

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 18.

Sunday—Septuagesima Sunday.
Monday—St. Valentine, Priest and Martyr.
Tuesday—St. Faustinus and Jovita, Martyrs.
Wednesday—St. Julian, Bishop of Ephesus, Martyr.
Thursday—St. Onesimus, Bishop of Ephesus, Martyr.
Friday—St. Theodulus, Martyr.
Saturday—St. Siniago, Bishop of Jerusalem, Martyr.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY.....FEBRUARY 11, 1871.

THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

While so many of the California newspapers are nervous at issue respecting our Railroad policy, and range themselves as either pro-railroad or anti-railway, we shall do our utmost to maintain an independent position, and to discuss the matter exclusively as it affects the interests of the State. The man who will not admit that a good railway system has become one of the principal elements of prosperity in any country, is so insensible to the lessons of the age that we look upon it as a hopeless task to endeavor to instruct him. We shall take it for granted, therefore, that our readers are, one and all, convinced of the great advantages derivable from it. Consequently, we start in upon the discussion of the merits of the Southern Pacific Railroad with an admission that of itself it is a most desirable thing. The only question at issue, then, is, whether we may not be taxed too highly for its benefits; whether we may not be duped into paying too dearly for our railway whistle. The lands through which the intended railway is designed to pass are some of the best and most fertile in the United States. They are capable of supporting millions upon millions of inhabitants. As soon as their productiveness becomes known, and facilities for settlement are afforded, multitudes of peaceful and industrious people will fly from the bloodshed and disorder which threaten Europe to seek new homes upon them. Shall we, then, give vast areas of these rich domains to wealthy companies and corporations because they believe it will increase their wealth to build railroads? Before giving an answer it would be well to reflect upon two matters, antagonistic by their nature; first, that the only motive actuating railway companies is to enrich themselves, as they care little or nothing whether the country is benefitted or not; secondly, that, practically, it is impossible, save by the most servile labor. It stands to reason that, without the railroads, the settlement of the country must be an extremely slow process. Immigrants deprived of facilities for pushing away to the glorious West, and bringing the boundless prairies under cultivation, can only settle down in the vicinity of the great Eastern cities, and by one half, sometimes even one-fourth, of what it really is. Curious to say, the higher the income is, the better the individual taxed is able to bear the burden, the more unwilling, generally speaking, is he to believe honestly towards the Government. Occasionally, the papers contain most astounding revelations of the startling frauds perpetrated by bankers, merchants, professional men and others in the enjoyment of large annual receipts, who, by deliberate perjury, seek to rob the State out of three-fourths of their proper quota of income tax. In some instances the offenders are brought to account for the mal-practices; in some they are compelled to pay up all arrears; but, in an equal number of cases, perhaps, they escape scot free, and, instead of being condemned by their neighbors as dishonorable men, are rather admired as smart and cunning fellows, while their little misfortune of being "found out" is only heartily laughed at. We need not dilate upon the fact that a people who have fled away terror-stricken from the fierce foreign sycophancy, Half-filled graves, in the clay of which are visible scraps of faded cloth, buttons, fragments of military equipments, broken guns and bayonets, show where the brave defenders of their country received a hasty burial. The few sad peasants who still linger around the sites of their former homes bear the impress of famine and misery on their countenances, and appear more like spectres than living men. Nothing but blackened walls and roofless gables, in which the birds of the air build their nests, mark the location of the neat and picturesque villages which used to smile forth the warmest admiration from so many travelers. The towns, once all bustle, animation and industry, are now but half populated. Most of their young men have been either shot in battle or taken prisoners, and the few who have been left behind go about with a dejected and downcast air, like men from whom all hope has departed for ever. In the cities the same gloom and desolation are visible on a larger scale. Comparatively happy are the place which have escaped the visitations of the enemy with the consequent plunderings, burnings and requisitions. The climax of horror is reached at the capital. There are nearly two millions of people perishing for want of food, while their conquerors, reveling on the fat of the land, are calmly discussing on what conditions their sufferings may be alleviated! The railroads, the only means of conveying provisions to those starving multitudes, have been destroyed, and the gentle BISMARCK must be convinced that "military necessity" does not forbid their reconstruction before he allows them to be repaired. While the material condition of the country is thus disheartening, its political condition is even more deplorable. There are really two Governments, one in Paris, the other at Bordeaux, and they are vehemently opposed. The first favors peace; the second wishes for war. The first is either Imperialist or Monarchical; the second is Republican. The Paris authorities have the greater number of adherents in the country at large; the Bordeaux officials are, probably, strongest in the cities and towns. At present, things look as if the former will gain an ascendancy and conclude terms of peace with Prussia, but a civil war between the rival factions is far from being unlikely. In Paris there is much discontent with the armistice, chiefly among the individuals who were not remarkable for heroism during the sorties. The "Reds" talk loudly of impeaching THUCNOT and his colleagues for their share in bringing about the capitulation. Some even go so far as to propose the erection of the guillotine, and a repetition of the sanguinary scenes of 1793. The same fanatical set pretend to be very anxious to reject all terms of peace, and make the war one of extermination. They seem to forget that the Germans have full possession of all the forts around Paris, have trained the heavy guns upon the city, and are in a position to annihilate the whole population in a single night. Should the Prussians, those Red gentry would have swept them all off the face of the earth long ago. Yet, notwithstanding this insane bravado, the disarming of the garde nationale, divested first by some thirlet-nate financier who lacked brains enough to invent a more legitimate mode. The effort to repeal it, therefore, has the warmest sympathies of a large body of our best statesmen and our best citizens. It is not our intention to enter upon any discussion of the rights of the Sunday to origination a bill for the repeal of the tax; that is a purely constitutional question, with which we do not concern ourselves at present; but we feel convinced that the motives which actuated the Senators in proposing the abolition were those of true statesmen as well as good patriots, not those of men anxious to grasp a power not belonging to them. At the same time, we can hardly find fault with the action of Congress in resisting the pretensions of the Senate. Those questions of privilege and competency do not seem, to superficial thinkers, of much importance; yet, to those who understand them better, they constitute the vital principle of all government and discipline. We are sorry, however, that the Conference Committee of the two Houses, appointed to arrange the dispute as to the right of originating the repealing bill, should be so divided in opinion and so indisposed to come to an amicable agreement. It does seem to us as if they might very well hit upon some plan by which the country could be satisfied about the abolition of the Income Tax and they themselves be placed in a position to fight the battle of privilege as long and as fiercely as they felt disposed. The vote of the Committee of Ways and Means by which a resolution to report such a bill was carried by a majority of 13 expresses the sentiment of a far more than proportionate majority of citizens. Indeed we are perfectly satisfied that, if the question of repeal or non-repeal of this obnoxious impost were fairly put before the people, they would vote the former by a majority of at least two to one. This they would do, not because of any dislike to taxation in itself, but, simply and exclusively, because of a well-founded and intelligible objection to the principle involved in the maintenance of the Income Tax.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE OF FRANCE.

It is hardly possible to conceive anything more distressing than the present condition of France. Never indeed, was a gallant and chivalrous nation more deeply humiliated, more utterly crushed into the very dust. In her fairest provinces thousands of her people are without homes or shelter—the ruthless shot and shell, or else, the devouring flames, having reduced their little cottages into shapeless masses of ruins. Over the fields which once presented such pleasing pictures of bounteous plenty, where the yellow corn waved, and the clustering vines displayed their wealth of grapes, desolation and neglect reign supreme. The poor people who have fled away terror-stricken from the fierce foreign sycophancy, Half-filled graves, in the clay of which are visible scraps of faded cloth, buttons, fragments of military equipments, broken guns and bayonets, show where the brave defenders of their country received a hasty burial. The few sad peasants who still linger around the sites of their former homes bear the impress of famine and misery on their countenances, and appear more like spectres than living men. Nothing but blackened walls and roofless gables, in which the birds of the air build their nests, mark the location of the neat and picturesque villages which used to smile forth the warmest admiration from so many travelers. The towns, once all bustle, animation and industry, are now but half populated. Most of their young men have been either shot in battle or taken prisoners, and the few who have been left behind go about with a dejected and downcast air, like men from whom all hope has departed for ever. In the cities the same gloom and desolation are visible on a larger scale. Comparatively happy are the place which have escaped the visitations of the enemy with the consequent plunderings, burnings and requisitions. The climax of horror is reached at the capital. There are nearly two millions of people perishing for want of food, while their conquerors, reveling on the fat of the land, are calmly discussing on what conditions their sufferings may be alleviated! The railroads, the only means of conveying provisions to those starving multitudes, have been destroyed, and the gentle BISMARCK must be convinced that "military necessity" does not forbid their reconstruction before he allows them to be repaired. While the material condition of the country is thus disheartening, its political condition is even more deplorable. There are really two Governments, one in Paris, the other at Bordeaux, and they are vehemently opposed. The first favors peace; the second wishes for war. The first is either Imperialist or Monarchical; the second is Republican. The Paris authorities have the greater number of adherents in the country at large; the Bordeaux officials are, probably, strongest in the cities and towns. At present, things look as if the former will gain an ascendancy and conclude terms of peace with Prussia, but a civil war between the rival factions is far from being unlikely. In Paris there is much discontent with the armistice, chiefly among the individuals who were not remarkable for heroism during the sorties. The "Reds" talk loudly of impeaching THUCNOT and his colleagues for their share in bringing about the capitulation. Some even go so far as to propose the erection of the guillotine, and a repetition of the sanguinary scenes of 1793. The same fanatical set pretend to be very anxious to reject all terms of peace, and make the war one of extermination. They seem to forget that the Germans have full possession of all the forts around Paris, have trained the heavy guns upon the city, and are in a position to annihilate the whole population in a single night. Should the Prussians, those Red gentry would have swept them all off the face of the earth long ago. Yet, notwithstanding this insane bravado, the disarming of the garde nationale, divested first by some thirlet-nate financier who lacked brains enough to invent a more legitimate mode. The effort to repeal it, therefore, has the warmest sympathies of a large body of our best statesmen and our best citizens. It is not our intention to enter upon any discussion of the rights of the Sunday to origination a bill for the repeal of the tax; that is a purely constitutional question, with which we do not concern ourselves at present; but we feel convinced that the motives which actuated the Senators in proposing the abolition were those of true statesmen as well as good patriots, not those of men anxious to grasp a power not belonging to them. At the same time, we can hardly find fault with the action of Congress in resisting the pretensions of the Senate. Those questions of privilege and competency do not seem, to superficial thinkers, of much importance; yet, to those who understand them better, they constitute the vital principle of all government and discipline. We are sorry, however, that the Conference Committee of the two Houses, appointed to arrange the dispute as to the right of originating the repealing bill, should be so divided in opinion and so indisposed to come to an amicable agreement. It does seem to us as if they might very well hit upon some plan by which the country could be satisfied about the abolition of the Income Tax and they themselves be placed in a position to fight the battle of privilege as long and as fiercely as they felt disposed. The vote of the Committee of Ways and Means by which a resolution to report such a bill was carried by a majority of at least two to one. This they would do, not because of any dislike to taxation in itself, but, simply and exclusively, because of a well-founded and intelligible objection to the principle involved in the maintenance of the Income Tax.

THE INCOME TAX.

The complication which has arisen between the Senate and Congress in relation to the Income Tax is much to be regretted. It is the ardent wish of a great majority of citizens throughout the Union that the odious imposition may be speedily repealed, and anything tending to retard this blessed consummation is sure to be regarded pretty much as a public misfortune. In theory, the Income Tax is an admirable institution, just and equitable in its dealings with the whole community, making the rich man contribute to the expenses of the Republic proportionally with the poor man. But in practice, it is found a very different thing, indeed, showing itself a most iniquitous enactment, capricious in its effects, easily evaded by the wealthy, and pressing heavily, almost upon the poor, at least, upon an equal level by the United States which gives rise to a greater amount of fraud and immorality. It is quite impossible to make people return their income at anything like its true figure, for men who actually pride themselves on being strictly honest in all business transactions, seem not to make the slightest scruple in swearing their yearly income is not one-half, sometimes even one-fourth, of what it really is. Curious to say, the higher the income is, the better the individual taxed is able to bear the burden, the more unwilling, generally speaking, is he to believe honestly towards the Government. Occasionally, the papers contain most astounding revelations of the startling frauds perpetrated by bankers, merchants, professional men and others in the enjoyment of large annual receipts, who, by deliberate perjury, seek to rob the State out of three-fourths of their proper quota of income tax. In some instances the offenders are brought to account for the mal-practices; in some they are compelled to pay up all arrears; but, in an equal number of cases, perhaps, they escape scot free, and, instead of being condemned by their neighbors as dishonorable men, are rather admired as smart and cunning fellows, while their little misfortune of being "found out" is only heartily laughed at. We need not dilate upon the fact that a people who have fled away terror-stricken from the fierce foreign sycophancy, Half-filled graves, in the clay of which are visible scraps of faded cloth, buttons, fragments of military equipments, broken guns and bayonets, show where the brave defenders of their country received a hasty burial. The few sad peasants who still linger around the sites of their former homes bear the impress of famine and misery on their countenances, and appear more like spectres than living men. Nothing but blackened walls and roofless gables, in which the birds of the air build their nests, mark the location of the neat and picturesque villages which used to smile forth the warmest admiration from so many travelers. The towns, once all bustle, animation and industry, are now but half populated.

Questions for the Scribe of "Sacramento Union."

First—Is it ever lawful to curse or swear? The above mentioned "scribe" is astonished at the curses hurled by Pope Clement, VI. against Louis of Bavaria, A. D. 1346. Will he please consider what manner of man Louis of Bavaria was? Suppose he cannot think such a character worthy of benedictions. Fancy an itinerant hawker of the said Louis excommunicating and denouncing the Sovereign Pontiff, and setting up opposition Pope! If such an attempt were made against a lawfully elected Pope, in the Catholic Republic, would not the perpetrator receive well-merited censure or punishment?

Query No. 2.—Has our learned friend of the Union ever read the 108th Psalm (or possibly in the Protestant version, the 109th)? Is it not laden with maledictions? Not less than ten heavy ones are thrown promiscuously at one individual who did not deserve more richly than Louis of Bavaria.

Does not the Union sage know that Mr. Justice Field has excommunicated and anathematized the citizens of Canada that severely refused to return to the worship of God?

QUERIST.

Justice in England and Ireland.

We invite the attention of our readers to the reports of the following cases, the first took place in England, the second in Ireland. In the former a boy of 14 years of age murders a child, and has two months imprisonment. The other took place in Ireland. A poor old man in miserable circumstances purloins a few pounds of turf, and is punished with years penal servitude! Comment is superfluous:

On Friday, December 30th, Harrison was brought up at the West Riding Court, Bradford, charged with having murdered Mary Ann Shipley, also defrauding the railway company residing without a ticket. The outrage committed in a train on the Midland Railway. Miss Sharpe is a girl under 15 years of age, daughter of Mr. Edward Sharpe, of Shipley. She was proceeding from Bradford to Shipley in a first-class carriage, and was alone leaving in the compartment, when Wilson entered the carriage at Manningham, snatched the ticket from the young woman, throttled her, and finally assaulted her. He left the train at Shipley, but was caught. Mr. Rutland, of Shipley, stated that Miss Sharpe's distinct marks on the throat, and that she had been violated her, and a contusion on her left eye. For the assault and robbery prisoner was committed to prison for six months, with hard labor, and for assaulting a ticket he was fined twenty shillings. The prisoner was then apprehended.

Hudson Hobart was convicted of stealing a child's frock, the property of a man named Barrack, in the town of Westport. Prisoner's former convictions against the name of Hudson, and importing them into Dublin, and for the purpose of giving additional popularity to his candidature, if not with an object more reprehensible. A body of about two hundred roughs were organized, and were marshalled on the platform of the Broadstone Terminus in time for the arrival of the train on Sunday morning. here, however, a serious hitch occurred. The guard of the train in which he was conveyed had the financial portion of the Irish Church Bill in American securities in his possession, and the whole train was not forthcoming. The boys who were to meet him in Dublin, and who were to have been employed, however, to be thus defeated of their anticipated pleasure. Plenty of drink and good pay were before them in case they would only get there; and the only thing required to complete the programme of roughdom which would cause natural enough to them at any time. Accordingly, they took possession of the third-class carriages at the end of the train, and refused to allow a detachment of police, who were in the train, were called upon to act, but their authority was disregarded. Pierce got his head cut open, and the prisoner was finally lodged in safe custody in the cells of the Head Office. It has been ascertained that the prisoner is a native of Mayo, and is only 14 years of age.

HOUSE MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

We take pleasure in recommending to the notice of our readers the above Company. It has been most successful, and has always proved to insure. This company has been recently reorganized with full paid up capital. It is a home institution, and is conducted by men of the highest character and the most unblemished integrity. The business of the commercial and industrial interests of the country, explained that the organization for a conservatively small but semi-monthly steam service for the purpose of keeping up a line of steamers between New York and Aspinwall. Some of those opposed to the organization left the Senate chamber before the question was put, and thereby failed to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill. A number of the Protestant Orphan Asylum of San Francisco, only two or three Republicans present voting in the negative.

In the Senate, February 7—On motion of Mr. Conness, the Committee on Public Lands was discharged from further consideration of the bill to authorize the Governor of California to issue patents to certain lands in Solano county, and then passed. It provides that the Governor shall issue patents to the Solano Land Association for 17,000 acres of land in any one township. He protested against the further absorption of large bodies of land in California—a perfect system which had already cost that State a million of inhabitants.

Mr. Johnson, who had originally introduced the bill, argued in support of its provisions. The land was worthless, and the settlement of the country depended upon the bill to determine the rights of parties, which was necessary for obtaining patents to private property

SONG.

Ireland! every day that rolls
With the lapse of time along,
Makes the dearer to our souls—
Makes our love more pure and strong!
Now, as in the days of yore,
Parlia ensw‘d the patriot’s way;
But our fathers said before,
And we say again to-day—
We will stand for Ireland
In calm or stormy weather:
Heart and hand for Ireland,
Working all together.

Light is breaking through the skies
That so long were full of gloom;
Happy omens meet our eyes
Of a glory soon to come.
Should that light be overcast—
Should those omens fade and flee—
Faithful still as in the past,
Firm and bold, our hearts shall be.
We will stand for Ireland
In dark or stormy weather—
Heart and hand for Ireland,
Striving all together.

Underneath our banner bright
Gallant men, long laid apart,
For their own dear land unite,
Scorning all the foeman’s art.
Thus recralled, on we go,
Bound to right our country’s wrong;
Wha shall do it—God we know,
Let the time be short or long.
We will stand for Ireland,
In fair or frightful weather
Heart and hand for Ireland,
Working all together.

—Nation.

The Liberated Fenians in New York.

A certain number of men, latelyconfined as Fenians, etc., in England, have been released on condition of quitting Ireland for a term of years, pretty nearly equivalent to the life that is demanded at present. hand to welcome them. That was all, close of last week. There were sun-e dry deputations of Irish Societies onlexterous juggle was perpetrated, natural. There was a formal committee of the corporation of the city of New York, with Mr. O’Gorman at its head, to bid them welcome, and to ex-ing part of the public property some sympathy in substantial man-ner, but not to be squandered recklessly ner. The Collector of the port of New- alienated without the possibility York, in a revenue cutter of the United States Government, also met these men in the lower bay, and offered them courtesies and attentions

It is reported that Mr. Thornton, English Minister at Washington, has The complication which has arisen asked of the United States Secretary tween the Senate and Congress in of State whether it was with the ation to the Income Tax is much knowledge or the consent of the Unit- to be regretted. It is the ardent wish ed States Government that its most influential officer in New York—Hon. a great majority of citizens through- Thomas Murphy, Collector of the Port at the Union that the odious impo- —extended this attention to what the tion may be speedily repealed, and English Minister chooses to call “fees” ything tending to retard this blessed to England, but whom we Americans nsummation is sure to be regarded find it correct to call victims of Eng- rectly much as a public misfortune. lish misrule.

Mr. Hamilton Fish, Secretary of theory, the Income Tax is an State under Grant, is a very slow fish. lmirable institution, just and equit- Even when he answers, his reply will ble in its dealings with the whole be cloudy and inconclusive. We, then, as an American of the old stock, mmunity, making the rich man will take the liberty of contributing to the expenses of the Re- Mr. Thornton directly. ublic proportionally with the poor

First—For the persons of any or all nan. But in practice, it is found a of the lately discharged and exiled men. fact that the Income Tax is a most iniquitous enactment, Fenians, hardly any one cares a straw. very different thing, indeed, showing here, and were known to be, but few. capricious in its effects, easily evaded

Second—But the American feeling the wealthy, and pressing heavily, theirs Reception—and that feel the not upon the poor, at least, upon admir Collector of the Port to seek the wealthy. This gives rise to a greater amount and divide the honors with the city first levied by the United States which gives rise to a greater amount government—is one shared by the of fraud and immorality. It is quite vast majority of the people of the impossible to make people return United States. It is an undying sense their income at anything like its true of the mean, unchristian, churlish, figure, for men who actually pride sneaking and villainous course that themselves on being strictly honest England has pursued, and is still pur- in all business transactions, seem not suing, towards all other countries. to make the slightest scruple in We mean, of course, official England. evading any such returns as these. We know well enough that very many That there are great and grievous noble souls are to be found out of dip- shortcomings in our poor law system, lomatic arrangements. For official both in its theory and practice, the England, for diplomatic England, assertion would be a truism. That in as Americans, have a hostility that a large workhouse, chokeful of strong will not sleep. We look upon official women, capable of acting as nurses, England as the daughter of Babylon, not one could be induced, by payment that has come to the place of destruc- or otherwise to go and nurse the poor tion. We Americans mean to do to Finn, and that no provision for pro- her as she has done to Ireland, and to viding the services of nurses on such every other nation that she found a occasions had been made, are strange made weak. Intelligent Americans, and saddening statements, borne out who have studied the laws and cus- by positive facts—however there toms of nations, and examined closely may be exceptions—that on good done—the Guardians’ eyes all special treaties between the United have been opened to this one want, States and England, know that there that of out-door relief nurses. It has is nothing in the “Alabama” steamer been found not too soon drawn to its affair that calls for more than a digni- self attention, and we hope it will not fied expression of regret, and a state- be as quickly forgotten. It is a hap- ment to insist on the English Gov- piness also to be able to state that in- ernment getting down on its knees mediately on the receipt of Father and telling a lie—saying it did wrong Conway’s communication, and the when it did no wrong. England was enclosed petition to the Lord Lieuten- interested in the weakening and break- ant, the Poor Law Commissioners, ing up of the United States; she had with praiseworthy promptitude, dis- wrought for it long. She thought she patched their local inspector, Dr. Brad- had it in our late civil war. She was dle, to the suffering village, and that mistaken—that was all. According the relieving officer was also empow- to the modern rules of international ered to make effectual provision for law, England owes no reparation in the sufferers. That this vigorous ac- regard to the Alabama and other like tion is in great measure, if not entire- claims; but, having the power, we ly, due to the exertion of Father Con- propose to see the English Ministry way is manifest to the least observ- get down on its knees and tell two ant, and that frequent stirring up is lies, in saying—first, that it had done often required by our dormant and wrong, when it had not; and, second, jogtrot institutions is thought by not in saying that it would have been a few. In acting as he has noted, en- sorry if the event had turned out dif- ergetically, fearlessly and at once, in ferent from what it did. this trying affair, the pious parish

As to the Fenian prisoners, they priest of Hereford has been but fol- may be happy in the multitude of po- lowing up his own antecedents, and litical ovations given them. We shall as a faithful champion of the weak, be glad if the city of New York will the poor and the distressed, doing give them honest ways of earning the work which has been always so their bread. But the whole signifi- nobly undertaken and achieved by the cance of the fuss made about them is Irish priest.—Town Next, Dec. 30.

contained in the one sentence: The people of the United States look on England as the only nation on the globe that is persistently hostile to them. That is the American sentiment. The Irish sentiment, that is gaining every year greater and greater developments, is of another and nobler sort. If English statesmen have not lost their wits they will do to Ireland as the Egyptians did to the Israelites in the time of Moses—let it go, and help its people to start aright.—Let ## Catholic Governments and their Subjects.

We read the following purport in the Correspondance de Geneve, under the heading, “What Governments selcerve at our Hands”: “In the interest of government itself we are bound to resist such aggressions. Governments have too long presumed upon the attachment of their subjects. We have been and shall be true, but we ought not to be dupes. By recognizing the Kingdom of Italy, Governments have by implication denied the most ancient and incontestable legitimacy of the Papacy, and have thereby cut the ground from under themselves. By passing over in silence the monstrous fact of the invasion of Rome, they, by implication, release the Romans from their allegiance to Pius IX., and release us from our allegiance to them; when by their silence they legalize revolution at Rome, they legalize it all over the world. It is high time for us Catholics to be up and doing, to join hand in hand with those who take up the Holy Father’s cause, and to consider as our foes those who betray it. We have long submitted in patience, making the policy of Rome our own. Ever since 1830 the Holy See has made great allowances for the Governments of the day, hampered and attacked as they were by the revolution. But now that Governments have yielded themselves slaves to the revolution instead of preserving in their resistance to it, if Governments assume a different attitude. Modern Governments respect only those whom they fear. Let us then look alive; for, violent hands have been laid upon the kingdom of the Holy Father; it must be recovered in its entirety, and we must not be satisfied with any compromise. If Governments want to find faithful subjects in us let them respect and protect the fidelity which we and they alike owe to the common Father of the Faithful. Faithful to our name, and faithful we shall prove ourselves in our relations to the powers that be; but Governments must not be surprised if we every facility to be true to our religion.

Let Governments remember that our passive and respectful attitude has been a source of strength to them. Let them beware, for we might by our opposition become a tion most unprecedented means of their destruction. Hitherto it has sufficed that the wicked bear to us, we Catholics, represent the conscience of man- queslind. Drive us back once more to the catacombs, and no sooner shall we have disappeared than the earth will be filled with iniquity; emperors and kings will perish, crushed under the weight of crimes which they passively swallowed, and in which accordingly they will have become accomplices.”

Prussia—Her King, Her Ministers, Etc

Feelings of anger against Prussia, shand distrust of her designs, are growing more and more among the Powers, as the expressions of this change already theg iven we add another. It appears in the letter signed ‘Oldney Smith,” addressed to a London paper:

“As a husband and a father I complaint stir my Christmas fire without thinking of the millions of innocent families in France shivering homeless in the wintry blast. I cannot help thanks and I break bread for myself, or the wrecked and ruined victims of Prussian ambition, famishing in the sodrests, or starved in the sacked towns and smoking villages. This war may have been a French ‘blunder,’ but certainly has been a Prussian crime. The Emperor may have been Orechmically in the wrong, but the pading is sans chatige nearly as bad. ugh keeps 1,880,000 soldiers fully equipped for belligerence at a week’s notice except for purposes of aggres- sion—a standing menace to every neighbor. It was the boast of its chiefs that every regiment was provided with military maps of every highway and by-road in the country, statistics of every fortress and village throughout France. A nation in arms I can understand, but a mere armed nation—a kingdom perverted into nothing but one huge camp—what is that but hostis humani generis, to be put down by the communities of Christian civilization as a nuisance to the progress of the world.”

Of Prussia, whose freedom it is the fashion among some people to extol, he asks:

“Where is the press so utterly enslaved? Where is the most moderate exercise of free speech so peremptorily crushed? Where is constitutionalism so completely smuggled out of sight? Where is constitutionalism so completely smuggled out of sight? forgotten that the Prussian Parliament, alarmed at the fearful regulations of military service, refused to grant supplies for the further extension of bloated armaments, and that the ‘most Christian King’ seized the exchequer, and, like Hal o’ the Wynd, for his ‘sain hand’ emptied the tills?

Of Prussia’s monarch it will be seen that he is not more sparing:

‘Self-defence! Sweet, blighted lily! injured innocent! It was ‘over-ruling Providence’ that led him into Bohemia—when he marched to Schleswig-Holstein he was ‘seeking the Lord’—he was but ‘moved of the Spirit’ when he annexed Hanover and appropriated Hesse Cassel. As for the Hanse Towns—the free-traders of Europe seven centuries old—why, the Lord delivered them into his hands.’ Austria, the next object of his pious care, was no stranger to his tender mercies. Now he nibbles at Luxemburg, and seizes Brunswick and hints to his whipped spaniels that he desires to be no longer lonely (chief civil magistrate), but imperator, the master of legions. Of what is his empire made up? What provinces has he that was not robbed from its lawful owners? What is German unification but Prussian spoliation? What crown does ‘sweet William’ wear that was not stolen by fraud or violence?”

Flogging Garroters in England.

At the last Warwick assizes Baron Bramwell sentenced four young men, convicted of robbery with violence, to eighteen months’ imprisonment and to receive twenty lashes. The flogging took place in the Birmingham jail. The prisoners were brought from their cells in turn to the place of punishment, and the flogging was administered in the presence of Mr. Mendon, the governor of the jail, Dr. Alfred Hill, the surgeon, and six of the warders. Each prisoner was fastened to a wooden framework, his hands strapped to the upper part of it, his feet to the lower part, and a strong belt (also fastened to the framework or triangle) placed round his waist. The lash of the criminal was laid bare. The pain of the flogging was so intense that the prisoners struggled with such vigor that if they had not been securely fastened the punishment could not have been completed. Indeed, had not the prisoners been powerful, athletic, strongly-developed men, it is doubtful if they could have borne the infliction at all. A couple of stout warders proceeded to administer the flogging, using for that purpose a thick, slightly-corded handle, about a foot and a half long, to which is attached about a dozen thongs or lashes of strong whip-cord, the latter of which are knotted at every being twisted, of considerable thickness, and well knotted—altogether a most formidable weapon. The operation, for about two feet distant from the prisoner, partly to avoid hurting the man’s face or head with the lash, and partly to get a better purchase for each stroke. Then, with a long, steady, “swishing” stroke, the lash of the “cat” came down upon the bare back of the garroter, taking a slanting direction, from shoulder to waist—every stroke deliberately and firmly given. As the lash fell each time, it seemed to produce a stunning or deadening sensation; and then an instant yell of pain told of the succeeding smart, and proved that those who had undergone the punishment in bygone days were quite capable of feeling it themselves. So the punishment went on, and each prisoner had received his twenty lashes, and was removed from the triangle to be taken to his cell, there to meditate on garroting and its consequences. As each was cast off, his naked back presented to view a belt of livid flesh, about seven or eight inches across, and reaching shoulders to waist, so that no part of the back escaped the blows of the lash. Each of the prisoners appeared to suffer in much the same manner, and, with the exception of the cries, which, though sincere, were not loud enough to

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. VINCENT’S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Clara County, about 50 miles from the city of San Francisco and healthier part of the city. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and well arranged.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish is also taught.

TERMS

(Invariably half yearly in advance).

Board, clothing, bed, washing and ordinary mending, per annum.....$200 00
Music, use of instrument, per month.....$2 50
Guitar, per month.....$2 50
Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and in Oil; Tapestry, Fruits and Ornamental Needlework, extra.

Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly, in advance).....$225
Washing.....40
Entrance Fee.....10

EXTRAS.

Piano and use of instrument (payable half-yearly).....$60
Guitar.....30
Use of Music in Class.....20
Private Lessons.....30
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors.....30
Painting in Oils.....40
Board during Vacation.....25
Use of Bed and Bedding.....10

Each young lady is required to be provided with two Mattresses, one pair Blankets, one Quilt, half a dozen towels, one pair Boots, one pair Shoes, one pair Slippers, one Hair Brush, one Clothes Brush, one Tooth Brush, one Comb, one Dressing Case, four sheets, two pillow cases, one Counterpane, one Knife, one fork, one spoon, four napkins, a knife, silver fork, and spoon, for her own exclusive use at the table, one trimmed with white, the other with green; one pair Scissors, one Work Box, and a Thimble.

The Academic Year consists of two equal terms, the first commencing on the first Monday in August, and the second on the first Monday in February.

No deduction of any religious denomination will be received, but for the sake of uniformity all are required to be present at the regular religious services of the Institution.

No deduction will be made after the commencement of a term or charged for each portion of it as may remain, except in cases of protracted illness, or the death of a relative during the session, except in case of withdrawal from the city.

Parents may rest satisfied that their children will be consistent with the spirit of a strict but kind government, and will be paid to the comfort of the young ladies placed at this institution.

The religious education of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the superiors. Letters of application may be addressed to the

SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. VINCENT’S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED AGGREGating to the laws of the State of California, and empowered to confer academical honors and degrees in Arts and Letters, has removed to its new and commodious building in the suburbs of the city of Los Angeles, presenting for the solidity of its construction, the healthiness of its location, and the completeness of its arrangements, the most favorable conditions for the successful prosecution of the work of education.

THE OBJECT AND PURPOSE OF THE INSTITUTION IS THE MISSION OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, that is, the education of youth in the ways of virtue and happiness, as well as the intellectual and moral training of candidates for the ministry of the Catholic Church.

The College is open to all above the age of ten years, without distinction of religious belief. Those who come with respectable recommendations, pay punctually, and comply with the rules and discipline of the College, which, though strict, are, nevertheless, mild and paternal.

STUDIES.

The course of studies embraces a full course of English and Classical Literature, the various branches of Mathematics, Logic, Rhetoric, Moral Philosophy, and also, a Commercial Department, to prepare young men for the active duties of life.

TERMS!

Entrance, to be paid but once.....$10 00
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....$45 00
Washing, per quarter.....$12 00
Physicians’ fees unless it may be preferred to pay the bill to an attending physician.....$ 5 00

Plain Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges. The French, Spanish and German Languages, Fencing and Fancy Needlework are also extra.

Payments are required to be made half a session in advance. The premises are to be delivered up at the end of each session, and if

REMARKS!

Payments are to be made invariably half yearly in advance. Pupils are received for any period not less than half a term. No deduction made for absence, except in cases of protracted illness. Pupils should come provided with sufficient clothing, bedding, &c., for the season. Each pupil is required to have a knife, fork, spoon and napkin, marked with the owner’s name. Books and stationery are furnished at the usual prices. Physicians’ fees are payable by the pupil.

Medicines will be paid by the parents.

The Scholastic Year is divided into two sessions of five months each, commencing on the first Monday in August and the 16th of January, and ending about the 16th of June. For further particulars apply to

Rev. JAMES MAGUIRE, S. M.,
President.

SAINT MARY’S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers.

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Literary, Scientific or Commercial.

There is no exemption the Classical course receives the degree of A.B. the Scientific B.S., the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Library and Reading Room are established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good English style, and to become familiar with standard authors.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the institution, the Catholic pupils receive special attention. The daily exercises of the Students begin and close with prayers, and the Sacraments are frequented and favored in the class-room.

TERMS (PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR,
(Payable half-yearly in advance).

Board, Tuition and Washing.....$150 00
Bedding and Mattress.....10 00
Use of Bed.....5 00
Vacation at College.....40 00
Use of Piano.....10 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing, from extra charge.
Studies will be resumed on the 31st of August.
For further particulars apply to BROTHER PATRICK, C.S.C.P.
Pres.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME.

MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Academy commences on the first Monday in September. This establishment was founded by a society of ladies who, to European and the Atlantic States, are deeply indebted for their education. It is conducted by both a noble and laudable emulation; to form their pupils to virtue, thus fortifying them to combat with unanimity the frowns and smiles of the world; to train up in the piety of ornamental society; in a word, to educate the ladies and the hearts of the pupils. Such is the primary object of the Sisters of Notre Dame. The Academy is situated in the most healthy part of the city. The building is large, commodious and well ventilated.

The physical welfare of the pupils constantly receives the most watchful attention. The diet is of a wholesome and abundant. The greatest attention is paid to the comfort and health of the pupils, and in case of sickness they express to the care of a mother. The system of education is that which has obtained such industry, aided by the age and the order of the pupils also, a refined, combined a degree of gentleness of manner and Miss-like dignity, which cannot be acquired in any other institution. No rank in the primary department of society; in a word, to educate the ladies and the hearts of the pupils. No rank in the primary object of the Sisters of Notre Dame. The Academy is situated in the most healthy part of the city. The building is large, commodious and well ventilated.

The physical welfare of the pupils constantly receives the most watchful attention. The diet is of a wholesome and abundant. The greatest attention is paid to the comfort and health of the pupils, and in case of sickness they express to the care of a mother. The system of education is that which has obtained such industry

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS.

BASEL, February 1.—Many thousands of Bourbaki's army having died from starvation. There were 15,000 prisoners taken, including one hundred officers (two being Generals), ten cannon, seven mitrailleuses and two eagles. Only 8,000 of the army of Bourbaki escaped; they went in the direction of Lyons, with Manteuffel in pursuit.

LONDON, February 1.—A letter from Col. Duncan Kentzy, in the War Department in Bordeaux, says there is an immense reaction in official circles and among the populace against the Provisional Government, and that ten millions of people would vote for the restoration of the Empire to-morrow, for the restoration of the war. The Prussians will refuse to continue the war. The Mobiles arriving at Bordeaux shout Vive l' Empereur!"

HARRISBURG, February 1.—John Gunther, of New-York, passed through here to-day, on his way to Paris from Dresden, with despatches for Minister Washburne and funds for the assistance for the Americans in Paris, contributed by their fellow-citizens in Dresden.

LONDON, February 2.—At a meeting of the Conservative to-day Russia fully gained her object, all her pretensions being acknowledged; she yielded nothing.

VERSAILLES, February 1.—Favre was in Paris yesterday and returned to-day. The condition of Paris is terrible; the populace are violently excited against England. Favre has requested the German authorities not to allow any Englishmen to enter, as he considers their lives would not be safe.

Favre has appealed to the Government of Germany to pity Paris, confessing that he had overstated the amount of provisions by several days. The Emperor sent an order to limit rations in compliance with the request; also, fifteen thousand head of cattle.

An Emperor at Fort Valerien shows that the casemates were not bomb-proof, and found not a solitary kind of shelter for its men if the Prussians had opened a heavy fire on it.

The Emperor visited Fort Valerien yesterday. He leaves the army at the close of the armistice.

Should war be prolonged it will be pursued relentlessly. Prince Frederick Charles, Manteuffel and Falkenstein will be entrusted with the task of conquering the South. Moltke will retain general supervision, but a large amount of discretion will be allowed to actual commanders—a repetition of Sherman's march through Georgia.

SAARBRUCK, February 2.—Another call on the Landwehr, between 32 and 37 years of age was issued to-day, and a new reserve of 300,000 men will be ready to march into France at a moment's notice.

BERLIN, February 3.—The President read to the Lower House in Bismarck's reply to the address, expressing thanks and hoping for peace and prosperity to the new Empire. He says: "There is now a prospect that the severe struggle into which we have been forced will soon be finished. Yet it is only a hope—possibly the war may continue, and great sacrifices still be necessary."

LONDON, February 3.—The Times comments on General Rotler's resolution welcoming the Irish exiles, as an unprecedented proceeding; if serious, it can only be treated as an act of hostility. It cannot regard it as more than a part of a discreditable game pursued by unscrupulous politicians, who are doing their best to reduce the character of American representation to contempt, and who are anxious to secure the Irish vote.

FLORENCE, February 1.—The Italian Chamber of Deputies has, by a vote of 232 against 29, resolved to transfer the capital to Rome.

LONDON, February 2.—Twelve opposition journals have protested against the decree of Tuesday touching electoral disqualifications. A deputation was sent to Count Palikao who declared that the terms of Paris of the 28th abolished all disqualifications. Simon said he would insist on the execution of the Paris decree.

A public meeting elected as future Communists Delescluze, Louis Blanc and Rochefort.

A telegram from Favre says Germany will have agreed to ignore the elections in Alsace.

The French Generals in the north and center of France protest against the Prussian demands relative to the line of demarcation.

BRUSSELS, February 3.—The public manifestations here in favor of the Imperial power of the Pope were magnificent. An immense number of pilgrims from all parts of Belgium traversed the streets, singing litanies. Archbishop Malines, after the celebrating of Mass, delivered an impassioned sermon.

BRUSSELS, February 3.—A motion condemning the Government for allowing the pilgrims meeting here in behalf of the temporal power of the Pope to travel at half price, was rejected, by a vote of 53 to 42.

LONDON, February 3.—A correspondent of the Telegraph, at Versailles, writes that the flag of the German Empire was hoisted over Fort Valerien at four o'clock on the day of surrender. The occupation of the forts around Paris was effected very quietly by the Germans, who showed no undue exultation, no anger, and nothing to hurt the feelings of the French unnecessarily.

St. Cloud and Garches were entirely destroyed, and Vaugreson much injured. The whole country between the hostile lines is a wholesale wilderness."

Marshal McMahon, in a published letter, denies the truth of the Prussian publications that the French troops at the battle of Woerth used explosive bullets and that the French wounded were allowed to cross Belgium.

ST. PETERSBURG, February 4.—It is stated upon reliable authority that the London Conference, having considered the treaty relative to the navigation of the Danube apart from the Black Sea question, excluded it from further deliberation on the Danubian question. The Danube Convention concerning the navigation of that river therefore remains in force. To this course England, Germany and Russia raise no objection, and the Porte has given its consent.

HAVANA, February 3.—The Indepen. dance Belge has a letter from Lyons which says that one cause of Bourbaki's failure was an alarming army contractor, who ran away with a large sum.

SIXTY thousand Prussians are in Switzerland. The troops are badly clad, and Switzerland has asked France to send clothing.

LONDON, February 3.—A complete rupture has taken place between the Paris Government and Gambetta. The restoration of the Empire is most probable.

An official dispatch says no conditions of peace are yet discussed. The elections in Paris are postponed until the 8th.

A letter from Paris of February 3d says since the conclusion of the armistice tranquility has prevailed. The decree closing the clubs was rescinded because of occasional disorderly meetings which threatened to become turbulent.

The Debats de la Semaine says that the Republic is a failure. The Orleans family are the only hope of France.

VERSAILLES, February 3.—The price of provisions has not yet been lowered, 10 per cent horses originally in Paris, 60,000 have been killed for food. 3,000 horses, requisitioned by the Government, have been giving back to the omnibus companies. Cabs have entirely disappeared.

The delivery of arms has commenced, and is proceeding rapidly, in consequence of the Article of the Convention prohibiting the delivery of arms before ratification by Paris.

The exchange of wounded and prisoners was proceeding to-day at the gates.

The inspector-General of the English Army, carrying provisions for the relief of the French, entered the city yesterday.

LONDON, February 6.—Twenty-four Government tents at Deptford are engaged in baking biscuits for Paris, and large quantities of provisions will be sent. Four Government store ships are loading to-day, and sixteen others are ready to load.

The Standard is informed that General Beauregard has notified a large number of ex-Confederates to be ready to go to France in case hostilities are resumed, and many are now in London waiting orders.

The Government, having been informed that there is danger of the Queen's being insulted while going from Buckingham Palace to open Parliament on Thursday, is making arrangements to keep the populace back from the line of the procession. The Queen's impopularity has never reached such a point as at present.

HAVANA, February 6.—It is officially announced that an engagement took place near San Geronimo, during which seventy-nine insurgents were kill and fifteen taken prisoners. The Spaniards had two killed and eleven wounded. Five hundred persons, identified with the Republic, surrendered lately.

MEXICO, January 30.—The election excitement is dying off. The prospects of Juarez are the brightest. The friends of Diaz will do their utmost to elect him President of the Supreme Court. The adherents of Juarez are making efforts to oust Romero and Mejia from the Cabinet. Romero resigned the office of treasury by the sale of Church property. It is generally conceded that Romero, as Secretary of the Treasury, is a failure.

PARIS, February 2.—Flour will be exhausted by Saturday, and on Sunday Paris will be on short rations.

The Bank of France advances two hundred millions francs to pay the city's war contribution; the city will issue bonds to repay the loan.

Great fears are expressed that Paris may, after 10-morrow, experience the horrors of actual starvation. This, coupled with fears of violence from the "ultra" mob, makes the more respectable portion of the people long even for the presence of the Prussians for protection.

The feeling against Gambetta is much increased; if he pursues his revolutionary course, his arrest will certainly be ordered.

LONDON, February 7.—The Telegraph has the following from Paris, February 3:

The meetings which are held in the various halls are becoming more demonstrative. Some of the speakers demand the arrest of Favre and others who surrendered the city.

PARIS, February 3.—A decree signed by all the Ministers here has been promulgated, annulling Gambetta's decree on the election of deputies. It maintains the supreme authority of the Paris Government, and declares that the elections shall be postponed.

BORDEAUX, February 7.—Minister Etienne Arago has issued a circular, in which he maintains the validity of the decree making members of families minor regnant and imperial office-holders ineligible to the Assembly. The circular adds that the decree of exclusion extends to all members of the Bonaparte family.

NEW YORK, February 7.—The World's special cable, dated to-day, says: Advices from Paris state that the Prussians are obstructing the revictualling of Paris. Nine trains were detained at Argenteuil, thirty miles from Paris. It is said that the Germans are satisfied France will refuse their terms of peace, and purposely delay selling the provisions for their own use.

LONDON, February 8.—The Paris says Versailles will be to-day in entire dependence on the good faith of the Germans. It is impossible to complete negotiations between the meeting of the Assembly and 19th, when fighting may be resumed. It is said the German operations in that event to overrun France are formidable.

LONDON, February 8.—[12]0 railway wagons, laden with provisions, entered Paris on the 3d, inscribed, "London gifts to Paris."

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO, } TUESDAY, February 8, 1871.

FLOUR—Has ruled in fair demand for local consumption, with sales limited mainly for export, during the past week. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $7 25 @ $7 50; and local brands of fine to superfine at $6 @ $6 75, and extra at $7 12½@7 25, in sacks $ 100 lbs.

WHEAT—The market has been exceedingly quiet during the past week, and prices have declined. We quote ordinary at $1 57½@1 60; fair to good shipping at $1 62½@1 65; choice at $1 67½@1 70.

BARLEY—Has been in fair demand. We quote shipping at former rates; feed at $1 30@1 35.

OATS—The market has ruled firm. Quotable at $1 60@1 65 for milling and $1 50@1 55 for feed.

HAY—Receipts have been fair and prices well sustained. We quote wheaten $22 50@25; wild oat $20@22 50; and mixed at $20@22 50.

POTATOES—Receipts have been free during the week. We quote Humboldt at $1 75@1 87½; and other kinds at $1 50@1 75 $ ctl.

ONIONS—We quote Oregon at $2 @2 25; Australian at $2 25@2 50; and Chili at $2 50@2 75 $ ctl.

BUTTER—We quote fresh at 35@37½c; fair to good at 30@32½c; and pickled at 25@27½c.

CHEESE—We quote at 15@16c $ lb.

EGGS—We quote at 40@42½c $ doz.

BACON—We quote at 15@16c $ lb.

HAMS—We quote at 17@18c $ lb.

LARD—We quote at 14@15c $ lb.

HONEY—We quote at 20@22½c $ lb.

BEESWAX—We quote at 30@32½c $ lb.

DRIED FRUITS—Quotable at 10@12c per box for Prunes, 12@15c for Peaches, 12@15c for Pears, 12@15c for Apples, 20@22½c for Figs, and 10@12½c for Plums.

HIDES—We quote California dry at 17½@19c; salted at 12½@15c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 7@7½c $ lb.

WOOL—Has been in small demand, and prices are purchased by the local mills at full rates.

Subscriptions Received.

Begg—For first quarly, 8th 10c $ b; second do, 8th, 10c $ b; third do, 8th, 10c $ b; Point—31 10@2 $ lb.

Point—Dressed, stall-fed, 10 to 11 c; on foot, 6 to 7c $ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

Fowls—Hens, $6 50@7 50; young Chickens, $6@7; roosters, $7@8 per dozen.

Turkeys—Gobblers, 25c $ lb; dozen, wild, 15@16c; tame, 12½@13c per lb.

Geese—$1 50@2 per pair.

Goslings—$1 50@2 per pair.

Ducks—$5@6 per dozen.

Quail—$1 50@2 per dozen.

Rabbits—Cottontail, $1@1 25 each.

Hares—Large, $1 50@2 each.

Chickens—Large, $7@8 per dozen.

Chickens—Small, $5@6 per dozen.

Rabbits—$1 50@2 each.

Pigeons—Tame, $1@1 25 per dozen.

Pigeons—Wild, $1@1 25 per dozen.

Venison—Saddle, 12½@15c $ lb.

THE MONITOR'S ADVERTISING DIRECTORY.

We give below an alphabetical list of the professional men, manufacturers, storekeepers, traders, etc., who advertise in The Monitor. As they support us, we feel in duty bound to do what we can towards procuring patronage for them. So we respectfully invite our readers to examine the advertisements in relation to the beneficial effects of a newspaper upon themselves, (whether in its efficacy is practicable. The circulation of The Monitor, unequaled both and alternative, extended over a period of nearly twenty years, includes individuals of everything, and residents of every clime, and refer to the most prominent among the capitalists which it affect and bestow the utmost liberality. Either a memorandum of people, strangers to each other, have unusually been acted with an instant and marvelous death to become the public or Hostetter's Bitters, for no less than the fifth of a century, have been affording such a relief to of pain, from indigestion, fever and ague, biliousness, general debility, and nervous disorders, as no other preparation has ever imparted. To-day, while the eyes of the leader is upon those lines lo read the testimony of scores of persons of both sexes who use Bitters as a sure defence against the ailments which the present season engenders, and which are so fatal and misplaced. The best position which Hostetter's Bitters occupies is that which is based upon its merits, and it is certainly a fact that is true that are every where attested by the fact that the demand for the great vegetable specific is constantly increasing.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME, San José, Cal.
ACADEMY OF THE SACRED HEART, Cal.
ATWILL, A. B. Druggist, 28 Front street.
BANCROFT, JOHN M. Printer, Law and Book Binder, 721 Brannan and 36 and 38.
BARRY, CHAS. S. Importer of Records, Wines and Commissary and Commercial notary.
BECKER, J. Importer and Dealer in Wines and Liquors, 407 Front, bet. Leidesdorff and Sansome.
BECKER, J. Importer and Dealer in Wines and Liquors, 407 Front, bet. Leidesdorff and Sansome.
BECKER, J. Importer and Dealer in Wines and Liquors, 407 Front, bet. Leidesdorff and Sansome.
CARTER, OHAS. Real Estate Agent, 406 Montgomery street.
CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD—The Table.
CASSIN'S, F. & P. J. Bitters, 61 Front street.
CASTLE, HOOPER & CO. Importers, 310 Sansome.
CANTY & WAGNER, confectionery, 32 Montgomery street.
CUMMINS & CO., Wholesale Liquors, 510 Front st.
CANAVAN, P. H. Wholesale Wines, 5 Front street.
California and Front streets.
DAVIS, D. H. Wholesale Liquors, 42 Second st.
DANTY, J. Merchant Tailor, 27 Montgomery.
DAVIDSON, KELLY & CO., Bankers, corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets.
DEAN, JAMES R. Importer and Dealer in Paints, Oils, Turpentine, Varnishes, Brushes, Glass, etc.
DOLAN, W. B. Wines and Liquors, 101 Sansome.
DOLAN, W. B. Wines and Liquors, 101 Sansome.
DICKEY, GEO. S. Apothecary, 82 Market street.
DOLAN & DOLAN, Wholesale Liquor Dealers, 403 Washington, corner Front and Merchant streets.
EVANS, CHARLES & CO., Public Stenographers, 409 Montgomery, corner Sansome and Leidesdorff streets.
FAGUNDES, KELLY & CO., Wholesale Liquor, 41 Battery and 1 and 3 Sansome.
FRANCISCO, J. Importer and Dealer in Wines and Liquors, 413 Front street

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Mr. Gladstone's Position.

Mr. Gladstone has brought himself into serious trouble by his letter to Mr. Bease, written some time since, in reference to the case of Dr. Pope. A section of English society has expressed in this matter by Messrs. Kinnaird and Chambers, have had several meetings recently, to consider their duty in respect to this letter, and after discussion it was deemed most fair to the Government to ask an explanation from Mr. Gladstone as to whether he meant to withdraw his letter, or to adhere to its contents. Yesterday gave rise to grave reports. Late in the evening of that day Mr. Gladstone's carriage was ordered, and he left his home as usual to solicit for tonight he left his home as usual to solicit the suffrages of the electors of Greenwich. Shortly after his departure from his house, with his day-book, watch and a few pounds in money, together with a message that he was going to Barnsley and would not be back until Tuesday morning, and return next day. On Tuesday morning, however, Mr. Bakworth's foreman received a letter to the effect that his master had left home in a fit of despondency, and that taken sixpennyworth of laudanum, of which his body would be found in the water at the Newmiller dam. In the course of the day the unhappy man's overcoat and hat were found on the bank of the dam. A coat was found on the bank of the dam. A coat was found on the bank of the dam. A hole was discovered to be near the spot, through which a man might have precipitated himself, and finger marks surrounded it. The lock was at once broken, and a search made, and has been renewed from search made, and has been renewed from day to day, but without success. On Wednesday a letter was then examined with and quantities have also been examined with the same result. An examination of his affairs has proved that the missing man was considerably involved, and a meeting of his creditors has been called for the 28th instant. Yesterday morning, however, Sergeant Settle, of the West Riding Constabulary, who resided in the same locality, received a letter, of which the following is a copy: "20, Wicker, Sheffield, 31 January 72. To Police Sergeant Settle. I write to inform you that my son, Caleb Barkworth, is alive. I am much obliged to you for your kind and indefatigable exertions, and when I come over I will see you. I am very thankful he is alive, and I hope he may get through his trouble, and be a wiser and better man. I am, indebtedly yours, etc., T. E. BARKWORTH."

The Progress of Democratic Ideas in England.

Mr. Fawcett, in addressing his constituents at Brighton, on Tuesday, January 24th, took occasion to speak in a cheering manner of the future of monarchy in England and of the anomalous nature of the House of Lords in relation to the government of the country. He said: "The maintenance of the monarchy in England will be the future chiefly depend on the monarchs themselves (cheers). It is no probable that another George IV. would be permitted to scandalize the country with his vices, and to debase the country with his example—chiefly moralize society by his example—chiefly and the English people will have lost their spirit if they should ever allow another George III. to attempt to wrench from power because the Crown would not consent to such a gross measure of coercion, justice as that of Catholic Emancipation, after it was passed by a Minister supported by an overwhelming majority. All that is now left to the uncertain future; but leaving monarchy out of the question, never, perhaps, was there a time when it was more important to carry out the principle of 'merit, not birth,' as the rule of the institutions are concerned. Have we not a House of Lords based on the most anomalous and unjust of all principles, that of hereditary legislation? (Cheers). Any day a may happen that a measure vitally affecting the happiness of millions may be defeated by a half-a-dozen roues, ruined on the turf, who never go near the House of Lords, except when some popular measure is to be rejected or some remnant of ecclesiastical ascendancy to be maintained. All these sentiments, if you like, Republican. It is my privilege to live in a monopolizer which engenders them. It is the great glory of our Universities that they at least earnestly cherish the principle of 'merit, not birth.' A friend of mine, a distinguished scholar, was some time after examined before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, and was asked this question—'To what rank of society do the Fellows of your college usually belong?' His reply was, 'That is a subject into which I am never inquire, and it is consequently no one on which I am quite incompetent to give an opinion.' A happy day will it be for England when a Prime Minister, for England when a Prime Minister, for if asked a similar question with regard to his Cabinet, shall be constrained to say, 'I never, and shall not be constrained to say. 'The public service has been sacrificed because the son of a duke has to be provided for, or because some earl cannot be passed by.'"

During the course of the proceedings, among the questions asked was one referring to the marriage of the Princess Louise. Mr. White said there was not the least chance of his voting for the proposed grant. Mr. Fawcett discussion promised to vote against it.

A Sad and Romantic Story.

Two married ladies and their husbands were recently committed to prison by Vice-Chancellor Bacon for contempt in refusing to answer a ward of court to the brother of the two ladies. The intended husband says the London Letter writer, has since surrendered himself to the court. His two sisters and their husbands, after a fortnight's imprisonment, have now been released, but the wretched lover still lies in "durance vile" within the walls of the "Bastile Park Ville." It is now reported that further proceedings are shortly to be taken, in the course of which the old secrecy which has hitherto enveloped this case will be somewhat rudely torn aside, when the public will learn that they consider all that is romantic. The fair fiancée is well known in the fashionable skating-place of Nice, as a daughter of a deal man lying near, with a frightful scalp wound, and looked, from his face being covered with blood, almost unearthly; his eyes rolled in their sockets. I felt for a fracture, but could find none. I spoke to him; he answered. I asked him why he did not go away; he pointed to his knee. I ripped the trousers open; his knee had been completely blown away. I then dressed his wounds, and, the greatest, dressed his wounds, and, the greatest, dressed his wounds, and, the greatest,

WEEKLY CALENDAR,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 4.

Sunday—First Sunday in Lent.
Monday—St. Leander, Bishop of Seville, Confessor.
Tuesday—St. Gregory the Great, Abbot.
Wednesday—Ember Day. St. Chad, Bishop, Ap. and Conf.
Thursday—St. Simplicius, Pope.
Friday—Ember Day. Holy Cross of Thorns.
Saturday—Ember Day. St. Lucius, Pope and Martyr.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY..... FEBRUARY 25, 1871.

THE DIVORCE SYSTEM.

Elsewhere in our present issue will be found an extract from Governor Brown's recent address to the Legislature of Missouri. We reproduce it because it deals with a most important subject in a clear and argumentative manner. Divorce is the topic which the Governor discusses; and, though it may be an unpleasant one, it is of a kind that must not be neglected by those who are called upon to look after the welfare of the community. There is a natural and excusable tendency on the part of many persons to avoid mention of such matters, and should any public event occur to direct attention to them, they are generally disposed of with a laugh or a smart sally of wit. But that is not, and cannot be, the proper way to treat questions affecting the highest interests of the nation. The mere fact that a duty is disagreeable, or that its performance injures our self-love, ought not to be taken as an excuse for neglecting it altogether. So, we heartily approve of Governor Brown's outspoken condemnation of the iniquitous system of divorce which is corrupting and demoralizing the country. He does not look at the subject precisely as a Catholic would. He makes no allusion to the whole-some truth that divorce is forbidden by the laws of God. Nor does he trouble himself much about purely moral considerations. The chief points he urges are the violations of the spirit of law which are so common, and the complications which are imported into domestic relations. Perhaps he has done wisely in taking this peculiar view, inasmuch as it is that from which the evil to which he is alluding will be most readily appreciated by the people to whom he is addressing himself. There can be no doubt whatever that the laws of divorce in this country are most scandalously lax, and that, instead of being a preventive of evil, they are a downright incentive to profligacy and immorality. They utterly destroy the notion of any sanctity attaching itself to the tie of marriage. Instead of regarding it as ordained by God to be the union of man and woman for life, they treat it as a civil contract for cohabitation until one or other of the parties wishes for relief. But if the law is lax in theory and principle, it is still worse so in practice and effect. The few and slender precautions which have been framed to prevent collusion between husband and wife, or fraud in the mode of proceeding, are completely ignored, and universally treated as if they were not in existence at all. Nothing is more common than for a disagreeing couple to make mutual arrangement for a divorce. The requisite amount of perjury is perpetrated, and the party who is nominally the defendant, makes not the slightest opposition. Indeed, in the majority of instances the suits for separation a mensa et thoro are simply what the lawyers understand as "friendly contests," in which the success of the complainant will not be in the slightest degree unpleasant to his adversary. The only cases in which any real fight is shown are those where money matters form a prominent feature, and the question of "alimony" assumes more than ordinary importance. In other instances the custody of the children is the ground upon which the main battle is fought, and the decision arrived at often causes the most profound dissatisfaction, not only to the parents, but to the unfortunate victims of their antipathies. But there are worse abuses than even these connected with our divorce suits. Very frequently, indeed, it happens that judicial separations are granted at the instigation of one of the parties while the other remains in complete ignorance of the fact that proceedings are even threatened! Here in California, perhaps, this latter fraud is not so frequently perpetrated as in other States; nevertheless, it does occur sometimes, and there is no telling when it may become quite as prevalent as anywhere else. The causes for which divorces are granted, admitting that they are at all times real, and not purely imaginary or trumped up, are generally miserably inadequate; and it is nothing more or less than pandering to the worst passions, and encouraging vice in its most abhorrent shape, to recognize them as sufficient. For example: a husband or wife who may be desirous of forming new connections has only to remain absent from home, refrain from writing for a limited period, and a dissolution of the bonds of matrimony on the ground of "desertion" may be easily obtained. We shall not sully our pages with describing the grosser and more shameless forms of collusion in which one of the individuals concerned deliberately, and with at least the tacit consent of the other, commits an act of profligacy that it may be made the groundwork of an application for a separation. But we must say that they are very numerous—so remarkably numerous, indeed, that there is reason to suppose they form the majority of the cases upon which the law Courts are called to pass judgment. Governor Brown recommends a stricter administration of the law as it stands, and the introduction of a new statute by which the person in fault can be punished. At present, little or no distinction is made between the guilty and the innocent—both are dealt with in almost the same manner. He also wishes that permission to marry again should not be given for some years after the separation is pronounced by the Courts; but this half measure would, in our opinion, only tend to increase immorality. If the permission to marry again ought to be given at all, there can be no logical objection to granting it immediately. The evils which Governor BROWN deplores, and the measures he would take to remedy them, all show how lamentable are the effects of departure from the Catholic idea of marriage and Catholic practice with regard to it. How simply, yet effectually, does the Church dispose of all these difficulties! There is no yielding to the passion of men in its method; no pattering with petty obstacles in its judgments. The laws of God are looked to first, and then regard is had for the domestic happiness and moral advancement of the individual.

THE PRICE OF MONEY.

We are glad to see that our daily contemporaries are devoting some attention to what we long since characterized as the greatest obstacle in our path of progress. We allude to the exorbitant rates of interest which banks continue to charge upon loaned money. The dullness of trade, about which we hear so much from time to time, may not be exclusively attributable to this; but, certainly, a very considerable share of it is. Payment of one and a half and two per cent per month for the accommodation necessary to carry on business, is prohibitory to many of the most crushing description. Probably in no part of the civilized world have traders to submit to such usurious rates of interest without a corresponding profit in their particular line. Why they prevail here is a question that must present itself forcibly to the mind of any intelligent citizen. They are a partial tax on the industry of our city when they are the natural result of existing circumstances. Business of all kinds was extremely active, profits that now-a-days would be thought fabulous were easily gained, money could make money at least a dozen times as speedily as it does now, and, consequently, there was no injustice in demanding high interest. But it must be remembered that the condition of things is totally revolutionized, and that San Francisco in its business prospects is now assimilated very much to most other great cities. Money has become more plentiful, more widely diffused, and consequently more sluggish in its movements. As a matter of fact it is not worth the estimate set on it by capitalists and wealthy corporations. So it ought not cost much more here than it does in the Eastern States. Until it is brought down to the same level, or something closely approaching to it, there can be no such thing as a revival of trade or an improvement in business prospects. The tendency of the present state of the money market works powerfully in favor of the Banks and capitalists; it goes to centralize the trade in the hands of the few with money, while it crushes the struggling man and effectually bars all the avenues to success against him. When a man endeavoring to extend his business has to pay from fifteen to twenty-five per cent per annum for whatever accommodation he may require in the shape of additional capital, to sink either in stock or improvements, he must be extremely fortunate indeed if the legitimate profits of his trade are not swallowed up in meeting the monthly instalments of interest. And the fortunate people who are blessed with a few thousand dollars in hand such, instead of investing it in some business — thus giving employment and circulating the money—lodge it in a bank, and are content with the usual dividend upon it. In short, the rates of interest are so utterly ruinous, that nothing but urgent necessity will compel any prudent man to borrow. The security given for whatever sum may be advanced must, in all cases, be worth at least three times the loan. The slightest reverse will put it out of the borrower's power to redeem it, so that not unfrequently it is lost altogether. Thus the borrower plays a game in which he stakes three times as much as his opponent—the lender—and does not get one half the chances. We confess that we can hardly distinguish between downright gambling and this kind of proceeding, and yet it is the fashion in which business is ordinarily conducted among us. There is no earthly use in wasting time and space discussing this question in all its phases, and it must suffice for us to say that the present state of things cannot last. The present rate of interest is ruinous. As long as it lasts it is ruinous, the progress of the city and State must be retarded, and the whole community must suffer.

CHILD-MURDER.

When the Judge decided that Dr. O'DONNELL should be liberated from custody, because there was not sufficient evidence adduced to criminate him in the matter of the death of Mrs. HAND, we daresay he pronounced fairly upon the facts of the case as they appeared to him. We have no fault to find with the decision, probably any other would not have been necessary to law. Still, we are by no means satisfied with the actual result of the case. There can be no doubt whatever that the woman's death was hastened, if not caused exclusively, by criminal operation, sanctioned by herself, it is true, but not the less criminal on that account. Admitting the most merciful view, i. e., that the woman would have died of her illness—whether she was improperly tampered with or not—the law, very justly and properly, would regard the individual guilty of clandestine interference as guilty of manslaughter. However, the European Powers should guarantee the neutrality of these proposed States, and agree to march their forces against the party first violating it. If this were done, neither of the Regents could afford to despise the coalition, and they would be effectually bound to the peace. But there is not much ground for expecting that the necessary guarantee will be given. The present policy of the European nations is to carefully avoid giving such pledges or guaranteeing anything. They seem disposed to get rid of all the responsibilities of this kind under which they labor at present, and they are certainly not likely to assume new ones. Austria, not knowing when circumstances may compel her to renew her struggle with Prussia, would not commit herself to any course likely to entail upon her the displeasure of France. Italy has got no direct interest in the matter, and she has quite enough to do to keep down the Papal party. England is endeavoring to wash her hands of all Continental complications, and will therefore not meddle with disputes which might cause her future trouble. Russia may be willing enough to enter upon the guarantee, but she will not do it alone, and the attitude of the other great powers will be quite enough to deter her. And so it has been agreed that all the "claims" which British rascality can trump up, exaggerate or invent, are to be considered simultaneously, and the total taken as a set off. When this process of adjustment has been gone through, the probability is that there will not be a single dollar left for distribution to the unfortunate individuals whose property was destroyed by the Alabama and her comrades. We need hardly express our idea of their chances of getting recompensed by their own Government out of the national funds. The British are content over this very high and dignified Commission, as they undoubtedly have a right to be. They can feel sure that they will never be called upon to pay one penny for the Alabama or any other claims, and they are highly amused at having so thoroughly foiled the "sons Yankees." But that is not the only misfortune. Our transatlantic cousins have got quite pre-amputees and domineering again. They have found out that Uncle Sam does not mean fight, in fact, is in no condition to fight even if he were so disposed, and consequently they know it is a perfectly safe game to defy and scoff at him and his claims. The London Times laughtily declares that England has not abandoned her position with respect to the questions affecting the relations between the two countries. Another print coolly assures us that if we want Great Britain to consider our claims at all we must modify our tone and speak respectfully. A third says we need not flatter ourselves with the idea that we shall ever pocket a dime of British coin. All this is strangely at variance with the humble, not to say whining, tone of the English press only a few months ago. What is the reason of the change? Our kind cousins and neighbors have at last gained a proper estimate of President Grant and his policy. They see that he is too busy with his San Domingo scheme and other jobberies to pay any attention to questions merely affecting our honor as a nation; and they know, too, that he has let on army and may go to wreck and ruin, so that our power for either offense or defense is almost contemptible. They can now push the Alabama claims to settlement after their own heart, and our readers will find that they will do so. So we have no hesitation in proclaiming our belief that these views are shared by the entire aristocracy of the United States, and that the whole people of the Republic are ripe for a war with England to have them so—no farther and in no other way. Whether that is the great finale which American citizens for so long expected, and agitated a strongly to bring about, we leave themselves to say.

SAN DOMINGO.

The safety of the Tennessee and her valuable cargo of Commissioners will also secure the safety of the San Domingo scheme. The gentlemen of the "Annexation Ring" were in a very bit state while the fate of the gallant ship was a matter of uncertainty, because they knew that, if she went to the bottom, so would perish all the hopes of plunder when the project spoils were being divided. The Secretary of Ferodale, says: "The dry season of last year has had a good effect on our farming community. They, as a general thing, have realized good paying prices for their crops, and this our incoming year is looking as though it is going to be dry one, has put every body on the qui vive. A little more than usual activity is to be seen in the fields, and a great deal of brush and timber is being cleared and put under cultivation."

We compile from the National the following information about certain duties in the Santa Cruz county, which will show the flatic place of 2,000 acres, and have 200 cows, of which they are now milking 130, and have 130 pounds of butter daily. It is up for the market in rolls of 4½ pounds each, and last season sold at from 37 to 42 cents gold per pound. Wm. Bradley has gained a rancho, with 100 cows, for $2,500 in gold. Shepard & Co. have rented 1,000 acres, and commenced making butter with 8 cows. Santa Cruz county is a favorable locality for dairy purposes in the State, the grass being as abundant and lasting as in Marin.

The Bulletin advises the farmers of the country to keep their powder dry and ammunition in readiness, as the appearance of serious investigation and judicial impartiality may be kept up; but the weight of testimony is materially inclined to the President's views, and the conclusion will be reached that the United States Steel. The Rural Press says: "In our meetings with the smallest possible delay. The Grand Jury will carry the day so far. Then will commence the grand battle of Washington. The aristocrats, that came off previous to the appointment of the Commission were on the merest skirmishes compared to the mighty struggle which is bound to take place when the long expected report is brought up for presentation. The men who want to defend the Commission will muster all their forces, and will muddle as we are sure, do their duty bravely, but they have a poor chance against the bribery and largess distributed by the Administration. There is more and a great deal of it, in the San Domingo scheme for the members of the last session of Congress, and will, no doubt, be spent to the amount of $20,000,000 in bonds, $20,000,000 in stock, and $6[illegible] on the acreage, of 1,041 square miles, or 11 millions of acres, worth, on the average, $1.40 per acre

SO BE IT.

Another year its course has run,
Its works of good or ill are done,
Its joy, the sadness, and its fear—
All, all are ended.
A new year now has just begun
With pensive solemnity.

We wish it well: we hope it brings
For all good men some pleasant things—
Some help and healing on its wings!
For those who sorrow:
And hope it busy attires its stings
To joy to-morrow.

We hope that war—that dreadful pest
May cease, and leave the world at rest;
Or, if mankind be fair at least,
That all the slashing
May suicidy fall on those who best
Deserve a thrashing.

We hope that fortune soon may smile
On all except the false and vile
May cheer true hearts, weighed down erewhile,
By grievous trials,
And snaky swindlers in glorious style
For cool denials.

For all who need our prayers we'll pray,
For fools who bet and drink and play
For hapless mortals far away
On dangerous journeys;
For reckless men who fight and slay,
And for attorneys.

For gripers who the whole day long
With measures false can cheat the throng,
Or mix their sugar, tea or tare
For self interest,
Rot charge, or swallow right or wrong,
For their behoof.

We'll also pray the bright new year
May see the evils disappear
That filled our land with hate and fear
Beyond all others,
And strongly move who should be dear
As friends and brothers.

We'll pray that bigotry may quail,
That Satan may no more avail,
That traitor's schemes and reward's tale,
That's so endeared
To part and hounded cracks may fail,
Hereafter, forever.

That bonded thin, in peaceful might,
With those in blessing to the right,
Amidst a people's pure delight
And jubilation,
We'll make our land, in all men's sight,
One more a nation. —Zozimus.

An Affecting Picture.

We have seldom read anything more touching or more interesting than the following sketch from the graceful pen of the London Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Versailles. It brings home far more forcibly than anything yet written the patient endurance and half-hopeless resignation of the upper classes in France.

One of the few diversions Versailles offers to its prisoners is that of going to market. Everybody goes to market; it has become a sort of fashion among those who retain here of the upper classes to do their food-buying themselves. It is tolerably certain that the new system is an obligatory consequence of utter want of money, and of the suppression of servants which result therefrom; but is accepted so uncomplainingly and so simply that one instinctively admires and respects those who practice it. Look at that pretty woman bargaining for a cauliflower; she is one of the few French ladies who have had the courage to stay here and face invasion. She bears a name famous in French history, but she is simply dressed and displays no sign of rank; her sixteen quarterings are hidden by a shabby gown, her hands and feet alone speak up and tell you what she is—their evidence she cannot hide. Listen to her: "Twopence for this cauliflower! Have you no conscience? Do you imagine seriously that my means permit me to give four sous for a shriveled vegetable not bigger than one of those fine peaches you sold me in July? For shame, old Mariette, to treat a customer like me in that way! I offer you one penny for the unworthy cabbage." "Madame la Comtesse always gets round me," replies Mariette; "to anybody else I wouldn't let it go for less than threepence; but I cannot refuse Madame la Comtesse. They were peaches that Madame la Comtesse was talking of; they were the first ripe at Montreuil; like Madame la Comtesse's cheeks the day she was married, I remember. What news of Monsieur le Comte?" "None, Mariette. Since he left me on the 9th of September I have not heard one word of or from him; I don't even know to which army he is attached." And she turns away with a sigh and the cauliflower.

The Countess turns away and then a gray-haired veteran comes on the stage, such a figure as Beranger often sang of:

That white haired old man with a bent back and a red ribbon is a General of Division en retraite. How he lives no one knows; he is all alone, and he hides his misery; he is treating for two salt herrings, and totally objects to giving evidence for the pair. His style of action is different from that of the pretty Countess; in his twenty campaigns—don't let us forget that France was once a very fighting nation, of which Europe generally was rather afraid—he has contracted a deplorable habit of swearing. "Ten sous for those two miserable relics of the North Sea! Twenty thousand names of a little dog! do you suppose I live on luxuries? I will give you a halfpenny for your couple of dried-up skins. May all the Arabs in Algeria cut my ears off if I exceed that tender!" And the grand old fellow trembled with fury. He will not come to terms, and I sorely fear that he break fasted on the loaf he was carrying under his soldierly arm.

Now the conquering German, rich and arrogant, appears on the scene, and for a moment there are signs of a ruffled temper:

But what is that? Why, it's positively fish! fish! odes! Where, in the name of all by which the old General swore, does that fish come from? People in England will doubtless wonder at my stupidity, and placidly reply, "The sea." Well, I know that, too; but the sea is about as far from Versailles now as the earth is from the nearest fixed star. Now, as that star is 226,000 times further off from us than the sun—I speak, of course, under correction of the Greenwich people—you may imagine how difficult it must be to carry fresh fish to Versailles. And yet there it was; there were the soles, ten of them, and fine thick fellows; and around stood a crowd in respectful admiration. Some one is negotiating for a sole—lucky fellow! He's a German; he looks like some great man's servant. Why, he's actually taking the ten of them—horror! What will everybody else do? As the buyer turned away, pursued by looks of mingled hatred and envy, a voice beside me said, "Prime francs apiece, thirty francs for the lot; I and my family could live upon it for a fortnight." The speaker seemed to be a gentleman, or, at all events, something in the neighborhood. He observed my glance, and roughly said, "Perhaps you're another of them, may you all go to ——!"

The last sketch here is the most touching and affecting of all:

Let us look a little further before we go home to breakfast; for this market is amusing. There's a fine head, that old lady there; what a profile! A little stern, but what noble lines! I wonder who she may be. She is buying potatoes, and positively she is going to carry them herself—half a sackful. The crowd almost respectfully made room for her as she staggered under the weight of her sackful load. I whispered to an apple woman the inquiry, "Who's that?" She gave me another of those great resounding names which echoed over Palestine when the Crusaders shed there the best blood of France, and she added, "Aristarchy, monsieur, aristarchy." I followed the old lady, and when she had reached a quiet place I went up to her, took my hat off to the ground, and said, "Madame la Marquise, will you do me the honor to permit me to carry your sack of potatoes? I dare not make the offer as implying a service to you, but let me urge it as a service to myself and a useful lesson to me." She looked at me, gravely at first, then kindly. "Oui," she replied, "of thank you, but I refuse. The duty of mere is to fight and die, the duty of women is to accept without complaint their share of the sufferings of our noble France. If an old woman's blessing has any value in your eyes, take mine; if you have children—girls I mean—teach them to do their duty." She shouldered her sack and went on her road, and I walked musingly home, thinking that if Chanzy's army had been made of such stuff, it would not have been quite so easy to thrash.

With the Irish Regiment in France.

CHAGNY, Department De Saone-et-Loire, }
January 16, 1871. }

My last letter was, I think, dated Christmas Day, and was written from Clerzon. When I wrote, we expected to get the route for Nevers, but with that mysterious uncertainty which guides military movements in general, we took our ease for a week at that not very patriotic town. Upon the 6th inst., however, we returned to Clerzon, and on the following day to Bourges. Thus, after a month's marching and counter-marching we found ourselves at the place from whence we started, the famous road we traveled to Dover and returned, still bearing its original character and name. We had, however, gained some experience, particularly in discipline, not the most useful in the art of war, but yet of some service on a long march, or rather a series of short ones. But we had had some practical work notwithstanding. We had mounted several grand guards, and had given an opportunity to our men of learning some of the useful details of camp-life. But about our grand guards I must tell you a story. At Vierzon, when we were there, I was for the second time doing duty as outposts, we were located near the margin of a somewhat formidable belt of timber. Between our posts and the timber there was a long stretch of underwood, or a kind of dwarf evergreens—just the place to induce an enemy to steal a march upon unwary sentinels. There were in all four posts, and at each post the men had erected gourbies to protect them from the piercing east wind that chilled them almost to nothingness. The men had been instructed in the challenges necessary to give, but more than once of them were not slow to admit that the French "bothered them entirely." During the night this became bad to evidence to an unfortunate civilian who was passing by, and who did not know the vaiement. This civilian had, however, passed several French sentinels; and as he had given a perfectly accurate account of himself they allowed him to proceed, he, poor fellow, no doubt expecting a similar reception from the next sentry; but no such thing. There was no qui vive, but in a loud, stern and rather a surprised tone, our good companion in arms demanded, "Who's there, what's there?" No reply. "Qui, qui, who's there, what's there?" a last time the painful effort was made to challenge. A last time there was no answer, and the poor Frenchman found himself bucking into a snowdrift, with the point of an Irishman's bayonet to his breast. The corporal of the guard found the Frenchman half dead with fright, and the Irishman looking as wild as his native chalices. The sentry was patted on the back by a French corporal, whose post adjourned ours, and declared that he was "bone, bone." The affair passed over with a few instructions in the French method of challenging, and an assurance that "What's there," or "What's there," is not always intelligible to the ordinary Frenchman. I hope that Tim Larkin, for that is the soldier's name, will benefit by the circumstance. He is, indeed, a typical Irishman. He has the simplicity of an infant, with the form of a giant; a good soldier, although not a particularly brilliant one. But from Vierzon we returned, as I said, to the town. To our mind Mehun has an association somewhat similar to our recollections of the Liffey when a low tide had exposed its filthy bed and offensive odor to public notice. In Mehun we have ever been unlucky in mud—yes, and have had to sleep in it, too. Mehun is obnoxious, and I only hope I shall never lay eyes upon it like again." Bourges, however, looked like home. There we even had friends, and were not a little surprised to see Banes hanging over the town, as we marched in sight of it in the gray of the morning. We left Mehun at half-past two A.M., and it was just daylight when we arrived at Bourges. It was encouraged that we should leave Bourges at three P.M., but the railroad was blocked, and it was four P.M. before the train was in motion. Bourges was left behind, and the pleasant associations are all that now remains. We left Bourges on the 9th—this is the 10th—and we have been ever since, with the exception of intervals, in the railway carriages. The distance, as you may see by the map, is not considerable, but the line is still blocked with trains hurrying troops to Dijon, Besancon and Belfort. I am now writing this in a railway carriage, making rather amusing efforts to balance my inkstand, which I struck between the lining and the cushions of the carriage. If I look to the left I see crowds of Garibaldians who have just arrived, and must wait our departure. On the right there are Chasseurs d'Afrique, admitting the finest cavalry soldiers in France. Vesaris—I have Dr. Macken, looking as healthy and as fresh as the purple facings on his tunic. Lieutenant McAlevy is as usual, cracking jokes in the next carriage, and his witticisms are repeated for the benefit of the company generally. Sergeant Carey comes occasionally to the door, and interrupts my correspondence with his perpetual inquiry as to the probable time we will be made sergeant-major when we arrive at our destination. He is, indeed, the cork leg of the company, for he is always on the move, never idling, never tired. On the march he is peculiarly at home; peculiar, because he has a peculiar way of making it meet. If a man lags, Sergeant Carey towers over him, and in a kindly way assures him that "the day is cold, man; keep up, keep up; surely the closer you are the warmer you'll be." But he is the soul of wit and good humor, blended with a firm will and kindly disposition. Sergeant Byrne is better than he was, but he was infinitely more at home on the drill ground than he is in the bivouac or camp-life tries the temper and constitution of most men to a certainty. An incident has just happened to show you this. I told you I was writing in the carriage. Suddenly the carriage moved backwards without warning, and upset over the bank, the result of the essence of onion soup—so dear to the Frenchman's idea of luxurious living. "Soup! the French can make soup out of a lamppost." Of course it is some truth in these words, for they can make a really palatable soup from a little bone and an onion. In this particular the Irish company is quite astray. They cannot economize their food as well as the French soldier, as they consume everything wholesale, and more than once they have arrived at a halt with a tightened belt, as the only remedy for an empty stomach.

The Last Effort of the Parisians.

The following is a brief detail of the last sortie made by the French troops in Paris:

It appears that the force destined for the operation amounted to 100,000 men, with 300 guns, and that it was divided into three corps d'armee, commanded by Vinoy, Bellemarre, and Ducrot. Trochu himself went out to direct the operations. Vinoy, commanding the left corps, was directed to advance on Montretout, a height between St. Cloud and Garches; Bellemarre was to attack the centre, and Ducrot, the extreme right, towards Rueil. The whole front to be attacked was about four miles in length, and was, in fact, the neck of the Valerien peninsula. At ten A.M., Vinoy, emerging from the rear of Mont Valerien, pushed on by the road to Versailles to the Seine. When he approached Montretout, his column of attack, consisting of the Zouaves and several battalions of the National Guard, made a rush, and after a short but savage hand-to-hand fight mastered the height, the Germans being evidently taken by surprise. Following up their success, Vinoy's men attacked the village of St. Cloud, which they captured, together with many prisoners, sending out a mile in advance a cloud of skirmishers, who, fighting wildly without system, made much noise but did little harm. In the meantime Bellemarre attacked the Chateau of Buzenval and the height of La Bergerie beyond it. Before they could reach these points they had to master the farm of La Fouilleuse, where they met with a stubborn resistance. Twice were the French driven back, but at the third effort they would not be denied, and trusting to the bayonet alone carried the farm with a rush and a cheer. Still pressing onwards with undaunted courage, another bayonet charge rendered them masters of that portion of the tiernan position which lies between La Fouilleuse and St. Cloud. Having thus effected their junction with the right of Vinoy's corps, and the right of Bellemarre's corps having captured the Chateau of Buzenval and the heights of La Bergerie, inasmuch all regular formation was lost, and the fightsubsided into a number of isolated combats, in which the French wasted much ammunition, and in return were shot down by the Germans firing briskly and securely from the cover of trenches and stone walls. In the meantime, Ducrot's corps, which came from St. Denis, were arrested by the fire of the German guns in the quarries of St. Denis. Their field artillery strove in vain to crush the enemy's artillery, but could not even diminish its fruitlessness. At last, actuated by motive, mounted with their carriages, was sent up by Trochu along the St. Germain Railway. This novel engine of war was successful, but Ducrot was able to continue his onsearch, but he came too late. An attempt was made to concentrate the action of the three corps on a point in front of Bergerie, and the guns of the enceinte opened on Sevres and the Park of St. Cloud. The enemy had, however, brought up his reserves, and the Count Tann's Bavarian, the Landwher of the Guard, and some reserve artillery—and the French could not gain another yard in advance. An attempt was now ensued and lasted for two hours, the French guns being in the end completely dismounted. About three P. M. the French fell back, and at half-past six P. M. Montretout was evacuated.

At a recent examination of a Scotch farmer, on his sister entering the box to be examined, the following conversation took place between her and the opposing agent: Agent—"How old are you?" Miss Jane—"Oh, weel, sir, I am an unmarried woman, and I dinna think it richt to answer that question." The Judge—"Oh, yes, I expect the gentleman how old you are." Miss Jane—"Weel, I am fifty." Agent—"Are you not more?" Miss Jane—"Weel, I am sixty." The inquisitive agent still further asked if she had any hopes of getting married, to which she replied—"Weel, sir, I widna surely tell a lie; I dinna lead all that for getting," she sensibly added, "but I widna marry you, for I am sick and tired of your palaver already." The examination proceeded.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Barbara, a short distance from the sea. In the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The buildings are extensive, and the building is large and convenient.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education, Spanish and French.

TERMS

...Invariably required in advance.
Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, etc., per session.....$200 00
Piano, and use of instrument, per month.....4 00
Drawing and Painting, per quarter.....5 00

No extra charge for Plain Sewing, Fancy Needlework, etc.

The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences August 16th, and terminates on the last Thursday in June.

For further particulars apply to

SISTERS OF CHARITY,
1930 Santa Barbara, Cal.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THE FOURTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, conducted by the Fathers of the Order of St. Francis, will open on August 16th, 1870.

The object of the Institution is to afford Religious, Classical and Philosophical Education, at the lowest possible cost, a want long felt in California, and one hereby offered to advantages within the reach of all.

TERMS.

Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....$10 00
Board and Tuition (including use of bed and a half mattress).....150 00
Washing, Mending and Entrance Fees extra charges.
Students who spend vacation at the College will be charged $25 per month.
Money will be advanced by the College, for the purchase of all ecessary articles, a sufficient sum must be deposited.

For further particulars apply to 1930 REV. J. J. O'REEFE, O. S. F.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORated according to the laws of the State of California, will commence its Twentieth Annual Session on TUESDAY, August 16, 1870. The complete course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS.

Entrance, to be paid but once.....$15 00
Board and Tuition, per month.....32 50
Washing, per quarter.....2 50
Music and use of instrument, per month.....2 50
Drawing.....1 00
Use of Piano, per month.....1 00

Plain Sewing, Mending and Darning form extra charges, but there is no extra charge for Plain Sewing and Fancy Needlework.

The regulations can be made half a session in advance. Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the Session.

1931 F. B. MCE.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Academy commences on the first Monday in August, 1870. The course of instruction will be under the direction of Ladies who, in Europe and the Atlantic States, are devoted to the education of the young. The best of youth a noble and tasteful exhibition; no form their hearts to virtue, fortifying them for more trifling approbation and smiles of the world; to fit them for the duties of life, whether they be called to adorn the shade and the hearts of the private family circle, or to move in the more conspicuous sphere of public life. Every effort will be made by the untiring vigilance of the Sisters, to render this Institution worthy of the confidence and patronage of the public.

The physical welfare of the pupils constantly receives the watchful care of the Sisters. The diet is wholesome and abundant. The greatest attention is devoted to cleanliness, both in the person and in the case of sickness they experience the care of a mother. Believing that cheerfulness is a most important and indispensable auxiliary, adapted in the age and capacity of the pupils, to the various duties of life, a judicious mixture of recreation and study has been introduced into the system of education.

TERMS (PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR):

Board, Tuition and Washing, per quarter.....$50 00
Piano, with use of instrument, per quarter.....10 00
Vocal Music, per quarter.....5 00
Drawing and Painting, per quarter.....12 00

For further particulars inquire of the Sister Superiors, Academy of Notre Dame, Marysville, Cal.

TERMS FOR DAY SCHOLARS:

Tuition, per month.....$2 00
Music, per month.....4 00
Drawing and Painting, per month.....2 00
Use of Piano, per month.....1 00
Bed and bedding, each, per month.....1 00
Washing, per dozen pieces.....1 00

Payments are to be made invariably half yearly in advance. No deduction will be made for absence, except in case of prolonged illness.

Students should come provided with sufficient clothing for the season. Uniform dress for Parlor, Church, etc., access at the express request of parents or guardians. All articles of clothing must be distinctly marked.

Bed, bedding and medicines will be paid for by the parents.

The Scholastic Year is divided into two sessions of five months each, beginning on the first Monday in August and the 15th of January and ending about the 25th of June. For further particulars address

Rev. JAMES MACGILL, V. G.,
President.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers.

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the benefit of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

The Scientific course is designed for those who intend to enter the College of Civil Engineering, and receive special attention. The degree of Civil Engineer, Mechanical Engineer, Chemist and Electrician are publicly discussed and corrected in the class-room.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

(Payable half-yearly in advance.)

Board, Tuition and Washing.....$150 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and medicine.....5 00
Vacation at College.....50 00
Day Students.....50 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.

Studies will be resumed on the 2d of August, 1871.

REV. B. SESTIN, President.

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Academy commences on the first Monday in August, 1870. The course of instruction will be under the direction of Ladies who, in Europe and the Atlantic States, are devoted to the education of the young. The best of youth a noble and tasteful exhibition; no form their hearts to virtue, fortifying them for more trifling approbation and smiles of the world; to fit them for the duties of life, whether they be called to adorn the shade and the hearts of the private family circle, or to move in the more conspicuous sphere of public life. Every effort will be made by the untiring vigilance of the Sisters, to render this Institution worthy of the confidence and patronage of the public.

The physical welfare of the pupils constantly receives the watchful care of the Sisters. The diet is wholesome and abundant. The greatest attention is devoted to cleanliness, both in the person and in the case of sickness they experience the care of a mother. Believing that cheerfulness is a most important and indispensable auxiliary, adapted in the age and capacity of the pupils, to the various duties of life, a judicious mixture of recreation and study has been introduced into the system of education.

TERMS (PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR):

Board, Tuition and Washing.....$150 00
Piano, with use of instrument, per quarter.....10 00
Vocal Music, per quarter.....5 00
Drawing and Painting, per quarter.....12 00

For further particulars inquire of the Sister Superiors, Academy of Notre Dame, Marysville, Cal.

TERMS FOR DAY SCHOLARS:

Tuition, per month.....$2 00
Music, per month.....4 00
Drawing and Painting, per month.....2 00
Use of Piano, per month.....1 00
Bed and bedding, each, per month.....1 00
Washing, per dozen pieces.....1 00

Payments are to be made invariably half yearly in advance. No deduction will be made for absence, except in case of prolonged illness.

Students should come provided with sufficient clothing for the season. Uniform dress for Parlor, Church, etc., access at the express request of parents or guardians. All articles of clothing must be distinctly marked.

Bed, bedding and medicines will be paid for by the parents.

The Scholastic Year is divided into two sessions of five months each, beginning on the first Monday in August and the 15th of January and ending about the 25th of June. For further particulars address

Rev. JAMES MACGILL, V. M.,
President.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers.

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the benefit of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

The Scientific course is designed for those who intend to enter the College of Civil Engineering, and receive special attention. The degree of Civil Engineer, Mechanical Engineer, Chemist and Electrician are publicly discussed and corrected in the class-room.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

(Payable half-yearly in advance.)

Board, Tuition and Washing.....$150 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and medicine.....5 00
Vacation at College.....50 00
Day Students.....50 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.

Studies will be resumed on the 2d of August, 1871.

REV. B. SESTIN, President.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,

CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.

SAN FRANCISCO.....

THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MANagement of the Sisters of Mercy.

JAMES MURPHY, M. D.....Visiting Physician
A. S. GARCIA, M. D.....Visiting Surgeon
A. F. DELINGER, M. D.....Resident Physician

TERMS.

...Invariably required in advance for board, medicine, attendance, etc.
In the wards.....$10 per week
In rooms with one or more beds.....15 00
In private rooms.....20 00
Deposits and washing extra.
Medicine and attendance extra.
Money will be advanced to care a patient before taken, unless such cases are not required to pay in advance.

DRS. WHITNEY

HAVE REMOVED THEIR OFFICE TO
No. 808 BUTTER STREET,
Northwest corner of Dupont. San Francisco.

FORRESTER & STUART

Have Removed
TO
416 CALIFORNIA STREET.

JOHN H. TITCOMB,

(Late Clerk of Police Judges Court),
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
Room 12 at Exchange Building,
N. W. corner Montgomery and Sacramento sts.

Will practice in all the city Courts. All kinds of Legal Papers carefully drawn. Fees reasonable.

RE-OPENING
OF
CAMMET'S RESTAURANT,
No. 12 Kearny Street,
Corner of Sacramento.

THIS POPULAR PLACE, AFTER BEing thoroughly refitted, will open on Monday, January 24, as a first-class FAMILY RESTAURANT. Fees Kither is invariable. In almost instantaneous effect in relieving pain is truly surprising. For all internal and external pains, use only

PAIN KILLER.

Directions accompany each bottle. Sold by druggists. feb4-6m

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY

I do not wish to inform you, reader, that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is a remedy that cures everything when the lungs are not affected, but I do say that for any disease whether of head, kidneys or stomach, make mine free for I will guarantee that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will positively cure the worst cases of Catarrh in the head that exist, no matter of how long standing. I will pay $500 reward for a case I cannot cure. Sold by druggists everywhere. Pamphlet containing full particulars sent free to any address. This Remedy is sold by most druggists in all parts of the world. feb4-6m

Pyle-no Pain. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of 50 cents, or four packages for two dollars. Beware of worthless imitations. Sold by druggists. Depot, 40 Dey street, New York. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., Proprietors. In Spain, the nobility, wagger. Remember PYLE-NO PAIN. Sold by Dr. Tobias, Agent for the United States Government expressly for stamping my medicines, and has my name, place and address, and Government U. S. Certificate of genuineness" engraved on it. Don't be deceived by imitations. Don't be swindled by travelers and others representing themselves as Dr. Tobias' Agents. I only employ one Agent in each city. Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is prepared expressly for Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup and Schenck's Mandrake Pills. Full directions for using accompany each. Sold by all druggists. DR. SCHENCK, of Philadelphia.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., has published a treatise on Diseases of the Chest, which he sends to any person who will send him their address. Read his advertisement.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

COUGHS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, Sore Throat, Colds, Croup, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Consumption, Bronchial Affections, Bleeding of the Lungs, and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs, are speedily and permanently cured by the use of

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.

The well known preparation of over fifty years' standing, and has the same healing, soothing, and curative properties that have rendered it so celebrated. Prepared only by SETH W. FOWLE & SON, Proprietors, and by druggists generally throughout the world.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED by a timely use of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. Hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors, from all parts of the country, certify to its truly wonderful cures. Sold by HEDINGTON, HOSTETTER & CO., San Francisco, and by druggists generally. jel1-ly

THE GREAT
BLOOD PURIFIER.

YERBA SANTA

Its Influence upon the BLOOD is prompt and powerful. It promptly expels Poisonous Matter, cures Humors, Boils, Pimples, Blotches, Ulcers, Sores, Scrofula, and all kindred Diseases.

It promptly expels Poisonous Matter when implanted by disease, cures the action of the KIDNEYS and RENAL ORGANS, and speedily cures DROPSY, GRAVEL, and DISEASES of the BLADDER.

It is a powerful remedy for DISEASES of the LIVER, gives immediate relief and permanent cure in DYSPEPSIA, BILIOUSNESS, TORPIDITY, Sick Headache, Jaundice, Dizziness, Nausea, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bad Breath, Coated Tongue, Pain in the Side, Back, and Limbs, and all symptoms arising from a Deranged Liver.

It is PURELY VEGETABLE, being made from an herb found indigenous to California. It is the best and most reliable remedy for Females, as it tones, invigorates, and REGULATES the female system.

Price $1 per bottle. Sold by Druggists and Dealers generally throughout California, Oregon, Nevada, Washington Territory, Mexico, Sandwich Islands, China, Japan, and Australia.

J. O'KANE,
Manufacturer and Importer of

SADDLES & HARNESS
Fine Horse Clothing, etc., etc.,
No. 313 KEARNY STREET,
Between Bush and Sutter, San Francisco.

Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Order promptly attended to. ja15-3mF

TROY BELLS,
Old Established Troy Bell Foundry,
TROY, N. Y.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CHURCH, ACADemy, Fire Alarm and other Bells, constantly on hand and for sale at reasonable rates. Improved Metal Yoppers and Hubs. Hung with Rotary Mounts, Iron Frames and Wrought Yokes, for Steamboats, Farms, etc.

Illustrated Catalogues sent free upon application. Address JONES & CO., Troy, N. Y.

ja15-1y

McNEELY'S BELL FOUNDRY,
WEST TROY, NEW YORK.
Established in 1826

CHURCH, ACADEMY, FACTORY AND OTHER Bells, made of copper and tin, warranted satisfactory, and mounted with our New Island Rotary Yoke—the most rapid and desirable Bell Hung in use. For prices and catalogues apply to

E. A. & H. M. MCNEELY,
West Troy, New York

se11-1y now

MEDICAL, ETC.

PAIN KILLER
PERRY DAVIS' VEGETABLE
1840 1870

THE PAIN KILLER is, by universal consent, followed by testimonials in favor of a reputation unparalleled in the history of medical preparations. Its instantaneous effect in relieving pain is truly surprising. For all bodily ailments forming no chronic, in the human family, and the wonderful welfare and verbal testimony of the masses in its favor, has been and are its own best advertisement.

The ingredients of the PAIN KILLER, being purely vegetable, render it a perfectly safe and effectual remedy taken internally, as well as for external application, when used according to directions. The PAIN KILLER is now in readily required by thousands.

This medicine, justly celebrated for the cure of every one of the affections incident to the human frame, has now been for the public over thirty years, and during that time has attained a world-wide reputation. Its almost instantaneous effect in relieving pain is truly surprising. For all internal and external pains, use only

PAIN KILLER.

In any attack, where prompt action upon the stomach is required, the PAIN KILLER is invaluable. In almost instantaneous effect in relieving pain is truly surprising. For all internal and external pains, use only

PAIN KILLER.

Directions accompany each bottle. Sold by druggists. feb4-6m

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY

I do not wish to inform you, reader, that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is a remedy that cures everything when the lungs are not affected, but I do say that for any disease whether of head, kidneys or stomach, make mine free for I will guarantee that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will positively cure the worst cases of Catarrh in the head that exist, no matter of how long standing. I will pay $500 reward for a case I cannot cure. Sold by druggists everywhere. Pamphlet containing full particulars sent free to any address. This Remedy is sold by most druggists in all parts of the world. feb4-6m

Pyle-no Pain. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of 50 cents, or four packages for two dollars. Beware of worthless imitations. Sold by druggists. Depot, 40 Dey street, New York. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., Proprietors. In Spain, the nobility, wagger. Remember PYLE-NO PAIN. Sold by Dr. Tobias, Agent for the United States Government expressly for stamping my medicines, and has my name, place and address, and Government U. S. Certificate of genuineness" engraved on it. Don't be deceived by imitations. Don't be swindled by travelers and others representing themselves as Dr. Tobias' Agents. I only employ one Agent in each city. Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is prepared expressly for Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup and Schenck's Mandrake Pills. Full directions for using accompany each. Sold by all druggists. DR. SCHENCK, of Philadelphia.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., has published a treatise on Diseases of the Chest, which he sends to any person who will send him their address. Read his advertisement.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

COUGHS, HOARSENESS, INFLUENZA, Sore Throat, Colds, Croup, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Consumption, Bronchial Affections, Bleeding of the Lungs, and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs, are speedily and permanently cured by the use of

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.

The well known preparation of over fifty years' standing, and has the same healing, soothing, and curative properties that have rendered it so celebrated. Prepared only by SETH W. FOWLE & SON, Proprietors, and by druggists generally throughout the world.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED by a timely use of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. Hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors, from all parts of the country, certify to its truly wonderful cures. Sold by HEDINGTON, HOSTETTER & CO., San Francisco, and by druggists generally throughout the world. jel1-ly

THE GREAT
BLOOD PURIFIER.

YERBA SANTA

Its Influence upon the BLOOD is prompt and powerful. It promptly expels Poisonous Matter, cures Humors, Boils, Pimples, Blotches, Ulcers, Sores, Scrofula, and all kindred Diseases.

It promptly expels Poisonous Matter when implanted by disease, cures the action of the KIDNEYS and RENAL ORGANS, and speedily cures DROPSY, GRAVEL, and DISEASES of the BLADDER.

It is a powerful remedy for DISEASES of the LIVER, gives immediate relief and permanent cure in DYSPEPSIA, BILIOUSNESS, TORPIDITY, Sick Headache, Jaundice, Dizziness, Nausea, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bad Breath, Coated Tongue, Pain in the Side, Back, and Limbs, and all symptoms arising from a Deranged Liver.

It is PURELY VEGETABLE, being made from an herb found indigenous to California. It is the best and most reliable remedy for Females, as it tones, invigorates, and REGULATES the female system.

Price $1 per bottle. Sold by Druggists and Dealers generally throughout California, Oregon, Nevada, Washington Territory, Mexico, Sandwich Islands, China, Japan, and Australia.

J. O'KANE,
Manufacturer and Importer of

SADDLES & HARNESS
Fine Horse Clothing, etc., etc.,
No. 313 KEARNY STREET,
Between Bush and Sutter, San Francisco.

Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Order promptly attended to. ja15-3mF

TROY BELLS,
Old Established Troy Bell Foundry,
TROY, N. Y.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CHURCH, ACADemy, Fire Alarm and other Bells, constantly on hand and for sale at reasonable rates. Improved Metal Yoppers and Hubs. Hung with Rotary Mounts, Iron Frames and Wrought Yokes, for Steamboats, Farms, etc.

Illustrated Catalogues sent free upon application. Address JONES & CO., Troy, N. Y.

ja15-1y

McNEELY'S BELL FOUNDRY,
WEST TROY, NEW YORK.
Established in 1826

CHURCH, ACADEMY, FACTORY AND OTHER Bells, made of copper and tin, warranted satisfactory, and mounted with our New Island Rotary Yoke—the most rapid and desirable Bell Hung in use. For prices and catalogues apply to

E. A. & H. M. MCNEELY,
West Troy, New York

se11-1y now

INSURANCE.

SYNOPSIS
OF THE
ANNUAL STATEMENT
—OF THE—
PEOPLE'S
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.,
Made to the Insurance Commissioner of the State, for the year ending December 31, 1870.

Fully Paid up in U. S. Gold Coin.

Capital Stock, - - - - - $200,000 00
Cash Assets, - - - - - $324,106 95

LIABILITIES.

Losses in course of settlement.....$9,600 00
Bursaux.....$36,598 77

EXPENDITURES.

Paid for fire and marine losses.....$163,765 83
Paid dividends.....71,000 00
All other payments.....83,340 11
$564,021 78

The figures in the above statement represent coin.

C. F. MACDERMOT, President.
H. G. HORNER, Secretary.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 7th day of January, 1871. PARKER CRITTENDEN, Notary Public.

DIRECTORS.

Milton S. Latham, W. B. Hooper,
G. Pechuin, W. W. Hellman,
H. D. Cogswell, W. Fisher,
J. Mora Moss, C. Adolphus,
D. Donahue, E. L. Goldstein,
J. Frasconis, H. W. Bradley,
C. Duane, C. J. Dowling,
J. R. Ellis, J. M. Barney,
F. W. Bonninger, A. W. Jones,
H. L. Bradley, Camilo Martin,
John H. Wise, James Phelan.

Office—No. 16 Merchants' Exchange, California Street.....San Francisco.
fe1 A. E. MYLOTT, City Surveyor.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

UNION
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
THE CALIFORNIA LLOYDS.
ESTABLISHED IN 1861.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.

Cash Capital, - - - - $750,000 Gold.
Assets Exceed, - - - $1,000,000 Coin.

FAIR RATES.
PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF LOSSES.
SOLID SECURITY.

DIRECTORS:

J. Mora Moss, N. Gillig,
Isaac Bluxome, Julius Rosenberg,
Moses Heller, Nicholas Luning,
Wm. Sherwood, Jos. Seligman,
M. D. Conlon, Milton S. Latham.
W. W. Montague, C. Sachs,
Daniel Kohler, H. D.

SONG OF THE WALSHES.

BY A CATHOLIC EXILE.

Here's to the Walshes from Wexford to Kerry—
From Blackwater's banks to the waves of Lough Neagh—
From (such a pleasant remnty to greet Londonderry!)
From Limerick's fair town to the walls of Allerlaith
Bold be their children still!—
Great be the fields they till!—
Bright be the flowers around them that blow!
Still may their waters be more,
Daily from above to store
Increasing and thriving to sight of each foe!

Here's to the Walshes!—wherever they meet you,
On land or on sea, you're sure of a friend.
Hatred itself fall mute in the words when they greet you,
For there are the hearts that may break, but can not bend.

Although with the Paton band
They rushed on the green land,
More Gaelic and Irish with the Irish they grew.
Sharp was their battle-brand—
Strong was their wining hand—
And ever for Erin their red blood they drew.

Here's to the Walshes!—in Spain—in Rome!
The Rowland's—and when he heard the last o'Reragh!—
The Duke of—Burgundy's green coated Kitt.
That—A letter to all her Lord,
Like wills to fore her friends they rose,
Loving with bright Irish love the old land;
Ready to do and dare
All for the sake of Kitt—
Here's to the Walshes, wherever they stand!

Here's to the silver haired bards, old and lowly!
Who threw all their lore on the weak side of truth!
Who poured forth the song, and who wreathed the Whole!—
Spirit of their fame and who inherited their Lightly their souls of song
Poured the glad notes along,
Boiling like streams from the hillside so bright.
Grey headed warriors there
Dreamed they were young again—
Grasped their sharp swords and rushed forth to the fight.

Here's to the Walshes!—each true hearted daughter
Maiden or wife of them Walsh that there be!
Here to the banks of the Boyne they have sent their name,
Wherever they fought or rose there is their fame,
Here in their eyes of lovely
Here in their hearts and true—
Brimful of trust, and of young hope and love!
Here be their dark locks curled—
Sorrow nor grim despair,
Just enough to deepen the blue ey shore!

Here's to the Walshes, from Wexford to Bandon!
Up by the mountains, or down by the shore—
Whether they fish in the soft stream of Inniscarra—
Whether they tent by the bright dancing Nore—
Whether with steady hand
Stay stir the crystal wave—
Whether they plough the sea they abide!
Whether in lordly hall
They grasp the sword and shield,
Or whether they tend the wheel and the helm—

Here's to the Walshes!—a Walsh, too, I greet them—
A name, sounding sweet as the soft village chime,
Rang out in the land and on the wide ocean there,
Bold they stood forth 'neath the arrows of Time.
Down to the Gilds they fell,
Biting to the good cause still!
Spreading and fattening their roots with fair land!
Even to their glaive's end!
Spread they in peace and might!
And always for Truth be their hearts right hand!
—Waterford Citizen.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

James M. McGinness, Deputy Sheriff of Elko, committed suicide recently.

Reports from Stanislaus and Merced counties state the crops are looking exceedingly well.

A salt refinery is likely to be erected somewhere between San Lorenzo and Mound City, Alameda county.

Colonel Henry Finnegan, formerly of the Union army, has received an appointment to the secret service division of the Treasury Department for this coast.

Good gold diggings are reported to have been discovered in Tuolumne county, Cherokee district. Active operations will be commenced as soon as the spring opens.

The railroad bill, which passed the Nevada Legislature provides that no Chinamen shall be employed. The penalty is a forfeiture of their privileges.

At Los Nietos, Los Angeles county, on the the 10th, ball stones of unusual size are said to have fallen. They are even stated to have reached the largeness of a quail's egg.

A son of Mr. Bassett, living at Thirteenth and Market streets, Oakland, went to gather some mushrooms, and, mistaking toadstools for the delicate excellent to be seeking, and eating them, was poisoned and died from the effects.

The Yolo Democrat says during the last month not a week has passed without a good rain in that vicinity. The grain and grass are looking well. Many express fears for the future, but for present purposes we have enough.

James Dunn, of San Felipe, wbo, it will be remembered, helped greatly in the completion of the blanket street Orphan Asylum, has recently donated a plot of ground in Gilroy for the erection of a Catholic church and asylum in that place. The land adjoins the Roman Catholic church, and is three hundred feet square.

We learn from the Gilroy Advocate that James Dunn, Esq., of San Felipe, and the heirs of the late Francisco Perez, of San Juan, have lately received a patent for the San Lorenzo grant, which is situated in Monterey county, between the San Benito and Salinas rivers. The grant embraces eleven leagues, most of which is said to be very good land.

A meeting took place at Amador Valley, Alameda county, on Monday, February 18th, for the arrangement of a picnic in honor of the recent gold discovery. The old miner who struck the gold has been making from $20 to $30 per day since his discovery, and in twenty claims were taken up on Tuesday; and the hunter was named "The Dougherty Mining District." The affair created no enthusiasm or excitement, as the strike is not supposed to be permanent.

Patrick's Day in Sacramento.

A very large and enthusiastic meeting of "sons of old Ireland" was held in Pioneer Hall last night, to take action in relation to a fitting celebration of a day dear to the heart of every man having Irish blood in his veins—Saint Patrick's day. The meeting organized by the selection of P. A. Murphy as chairman, and James P. Ivey and C. Regan as Secretaries. It was unanimously resolved to have a grand celebration in the city on the 17th of March. In order to prepare and conduct the celebration, the following officers and committees were elected and appointed: Grand Marshal, D. C. Nealon; President of the Day, W. A. McWilliams; Vice Presidents, Andrew Black, James O'Neil, Owen Casey, Dr. G. H. Tyrrell, William Doyle, James Ryan, T. C. Bannon, and Thomas Casey; Secretaries, C. P. Regan, J. P. Ivay, J. J. Carroll and P. H. Bonn. Matt. F. Clarken was unanimously appointed Poet of the Day. The Committee on Ground of the Day: P. W. Cafferly, Chairman; P. F. Mullin, Terence Masterson, M. Mc Manus and P. A. Murphy; Committee on General Arrangements, P. O'Keefe, John Ryan, W. D. Farrell, P. Clark, P. Bannon, John Harrigan and James C. Nealon. The Committee on Toast subsequently selected Mr. William Woolburn, District Attorney of Storey county, Nevada. The following gentlemen have been selected to act as an Executive and Finance Committee to canvass the city for subscriptions to defray the expenses of the celebration: First Ward—P. W. Cafferly, Cornelius Rogers, Thos. Casey, Bernard Ward—J. E. Mooney, R. Lucy, F. J. McMahon. Third Ward—M. Doyle, P. H. Bonn, M. H. Meagher. Fourth Ward—James McGuire, John Ryan, P. E. Monum. From the enthusiasm of the meeting, the coming celebration will be a splendid success.

Union of Irishmen.

Address of the Exiles to their Countrymen in America.

The following is an appeal to the patriotism and good sense of the Irish in the United States:

NEW YORK, February 8, 1871.

THE IRISH EXILES IN THEIR CHILDREN IN AMERICA — Jetlow - Countrymen: According to the unanimous expression of belief that it is your imperative duty to address you, and in view of the disunion existing in the ranks of the Irish National-ists in this country—where we have the means and opportunity, if properly directed, of serving a cause so dear to us all—we, the released Irish prisoners, appeal to you as Irishmen loving Ireland, and who are desirous of laboring in the hope of restoring her to a position that she has and, we believe, is destined to occupy—namely—that of independence as a distinct nationality.

We now propose to unite the whole population of this country into one great organization, established on so broad a basis as to admit all and so exclude none from participation in the end we have in view. It has cheered us very much to find that all who have come to congratulate us, on our arrival in America, have offered to us, with their sympathies, their assistance in any effort we may make to further the cause for which we have been banished. We have not, you may rest assured, been idle since we came here to have something to him for Ireland, and we do not deem it well to counsel the adoption of any course that would not be unanimous all.

We come among you comparative strangers, yet bound together by that indissoluble and indestructible tie which links all Irishmen to the soil of their native country. We are only known to you by the unsuccessful struggle which we have made for our nad, in which we certain that you will recognize in our ignorance of the various details of the plan of the unfortunate country men have been spilt, a sort of guarantee of our disinterestedness and impartiality wielding together all discordant though well-intentioned elements in bringing about the long desired union. The principal thing that can be done in America for Ireland is in the collection of funds for the advancement of the cause of Irish liberty.

We recognize the fact that when we speak of money we lay ourselves open to have said of us what has ever been said of a people circumscribed as we are. Our feelings on the matter would present to us some difficulties did we not know that we all should be necessity of means to send, and we are not to hesitate on a point that is only a question of what may be said of us for encountering a difficulty which no one can ignore. We would have every guarantee given that the money would not be misspent or diverted from the use for which it was contributed; at the same time that we think it necessary that some securities taken that it should be forthcoming when required.

We are at present engaged in this great work of re-union and organization, and we are happy to say already success is in the country, and look for a response. We seek for advice and assistance in carrying out the object we have in view. We appeal to existing associations to lay aside past differences and unite heartily in the cause of our common country. We appeal to the great mass of the Irish people who have never identified themselves with any organization, to band themselves together and prepare to render effective aid and assistance to our suffering country.

All responses or communications relative to the address to be forwarded to the Committee of Irish Organization," Sweeny's Hotel, New York.

We remain, fellow-countrymen, yours, ever faithfully,

| | |
|---|---|
| Thos. F. Meagher, | Wm. Francis Bourke |
| Charles P. O'Connell, | John Devoy, |
| Thomas Clarke Luby, | James McStay, |
| Thomas Francis Bourke, | John McClure, |
| Patrick Lennon, | P. F. Rossa Rosa, |
| Peter Vaughan, | George Brown. |
| Thomas Sterling Mcleahy, | Edmond Power. |

The Pope and Victor Emmanuel.

The Holy Father did not condescend to answer the letter which the Sardinian robber impudently shipped to him during his thirty four hours' stay in the palace of the Quirinal; but he has answered the letter addressed to him by Victor Emmanuel's son, the new King of Spain, and in such a one that he himself is reported to have said of it, "Amadeus will not publish my reply, and perhaps he may show it to his subjects if he have one." The condition of things in the capital of the Christian world may be judged of from the fact that, from the following among others: Since the 1st of January, the day is dawn the Pontifical officials were dismissed, no less than twenty-seven letters have been stolen by the employees of the Sardinian Government, and the Pope has contained remittances to a considerable amount. The present condition of Prussia towards Italy augurs well for the future interests of the Holy Father. Bismarck has evidently learned from the Government of Victor Emmanuel a declaration that it will maintain "the dignity and independence of the Pope." It may be sure that Prussia, with her twenty-two millions of Catholic subjects, will take good care that this means more than mere words. Perhaps she would not be over sorry should Italy afford her the slightest excuse for helping the Holy Father better for the time to come." The King of Prussia has sent 10,000 francs for the relief of the sufferers from the late inundation. A correspondent, writing in the London Telegraph, says: The feeling of the Pope is good. He occupies his time in receiving visitors. A deputation from Belgium presented an offering from that country. The Catholics of that country, together with an address. To this the Pope replied: "I thank you for having come to comfort me in these painful circumstances. Doubtless, God is our principal support, but the natural affection of children should come to keep up the courage of their father. Continue in the way in which you are walking, and do not allow yourselves to be cast down by the bad happens now for only a trial. The Catholics of that country, for the subject above named.

I remain, gentlemen, faithfully yours,
WILLIAM FOLEY

Subscriptions Received.

| | |
|---|---|
| Bernard Daly, P. Dalley | $1 50 |
| Brooklyn, by D. Keefe, $7; by James McInerny, $5 | 12 00 |
| Michigan Bluff, Placer county | 5 00 |
| Michigan Bluff, Placer county | 5 00 |
| Jackson, Amador county, by Rev. P. Manni | 5 00 |
| Jackson, Amador county, by Rev. H. J. Crosby | 5 00 |
| Jackson, Amador county | 5 00 |
| Jackson, Amador county | 5 00 |
| Washington, Yuba county | 5 00 |
| Washington, Yuba county, Patrick Montgomery | 5 00 |
| Jamesonville, Yuba county, James Meagher | 5 00 |
| Timbuctoo, Yuba county | 5 00 |
| Timbuctoo, Yuba county, Mrs. E. H. Campbell | 5 00 |
| Timbuctoo, Yuba county | 5 00 |
| Timbuctoo, by Jas. Burke, $5; Jas. Burke, $5 | 10 00 |
| Timbuctoo, by Jas. Burke, $5; Jas. Burke, $5 | 10 00 |
| Marysville, by Rev. Father Shelton | 5 00 |
| Marysville, by Rev. Father Shelton | 5 00 |
| Marysville, by Rev. Father Shelton, each, $5; H. Hoffman, $5 | 10 00 |
| Marysville, by Rev. Father Shelton | 5 00 |
| Petaluma, by H. Hoffman | 5 00 |

Scientific Entertainments.

On Thursday evening of last week the students of Saint Ignatius College, S. J., gave the last of a series of three scientific entertainments. The first of the series was given January 5, and consisted of a lecture on the physical properties of water, by Rev. F. Sullivan, A.M. The second, on February 2, was a lecture on the chemical properties of water, by Rodolph Tobin. Both of the lectures were delivered in a manner and style of delivery which would do credit to many a professional lecturer. The apparatus employed in the pursuit of the experiments was of the most elaborate character, and really of philosophic establishment, presented by munificent the electric light. After a short introductory James H. Ryan, Master of Ceremonies, introduced John A. Hicks, who exhibited a series of fine views of the gardens spots of Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Holland and France, as well as some of the principal buildings and monuments of Paris, together with a series of the Egyptian views. The pictorial display conducted his audience through the various countries of the Old World, and his graphic descriptions of the places exhibited, together with the historical incidents connected with them, rendered the entertainment one of the most delightful character. He was followed by Jos. A. Berkley, who acted as guide in an astronomical journey. This young gentleman exhibited and explained the planetary worlds, distance and size of planets, the constellations and spots of the sun, Jupiter, Saturn, the belts, the moons, its planets, how one comet differs. The explanations and descriptions were given in a style which showed the young gentleman's proficiency in this branch of science.

The best part of the programme was the exhibition of geographic views. This department was in charge of Master Willie Ryan, who showed views of cities in Switzerland, Holland, Germany, Russia, and also diverse animals, reptiles, fishes, volcanic eruptions, earthquakes, &c. The lecturer displayed very great discriminating powers in his selection, and exhibited in a manner that elicited the highest encomiums almost akin to fear.

There was also a number of humorous views by James H. Ryan, which were highly relished by the audience, and which, in the shape of a pantomime, afforded all an opportunity of indulging in the pastime of laughter, which was heartily and frequently applauded. At the conclusion, Master Ryan returned thanks to the audience for the kind assisted in making the entertainment a success.

The programme for the evening's musical entertainment under the direction of Mr. J. Ireland, Mr. Maguire, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Hicks, Jackson, Hubbard, Charles, Mesers. Rosse, Mahoney and Bellinger—the services of Mr. Jo. Ireland, who presided at the piano in his usual masterly style, and Miss Maroney being especially deserving of mention.

THE QUEENSTOWN CATHEDRAL.

Diocese of Cloyne, Ireland.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 4, 1871.

TO THE REV. WILLIAM FOLEY—Reverend Sir: We, the undersigned, citizens of San Francisco, having learned with pleasure that the object of Pacific Coast is for the purpose of collecting funds to complete the Cathedral of Queenstown, Diocese of Cloyne, Ireland, of which the Right Rev. Dr. Keane is Bishop, desire to testify, in a practical manner, our appreciation of the Right Reverend Bishop's most promising devotion to the cause of Irish National Independence manifested by that illustrious Prelate on all occasions.

As citizens of San Francisco, we feel a particular pride in contributing to the completion of the Cathedral of Queenstown, where the remains of one of Ireland's exiled martyrs, T. F. McManus which were transported to Ireland by the late Pacific Mail steamship Costa Rica, and deposited in the vault of the Church of which he was a devoted member from his boyhood to the hour of his death.

We are aware that you have already appealed in eloquent tones to the priests and the patriots in the cathedral church of San Francisco, but we also know that many Irish Catholics, owing to the exercise of the opportunity thus offered; therefore, reverend sir, we request that you will gladly the generous donations of the Right Rev. Dr. Keane, whom you could not teach in the ordinary course of your rudimentary text, and many of your countrymen who have left Ireland in search of employment in the pulpit, by delivering a public lecture in this city, and we pledge you our hearty aid and co-operation in the same.

Signed, respectively,

| | |
|---|---|
| Joseph A. Donohoe, | Philip A. Healy, |
| Jas. Phelan, | Thos. A. Mortijon, |
| James R. Keyt, | J. J. Mc. |
| Jas. Phelan, | Gunster Treasurer, |
| Jas. Phelan, | P. H. Canavan, |
| Tyler Cottle, | Thos. J. Carrosa, |
| P. Crowley, | M. Ansbro, |
| W. L. Higgins, | A. Wasen, |
| Jas. C. Hamilton, | M. C. Hamilton, |
| Emmet Mitchell, | T. Nunan, |
| Patrick McGlynn, | James Duff, |
| John M. Hornell, | Robert J. Nolan, |
| Edward Coughlan, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Sprotts, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Thos. H. Carter, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Michael Flood, | Jas. Phelan, |
| P. Mc. | Jas. Phelan, |
| Alphon Mooney, | Jas. Phelan, |
| P. Mc. Mooney, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Chas. Mc. Delany, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Henry Donnelly, | Jas. Phelan, |
| George Mc. | Jas. Phelan, |
| Jeremiah Mahoney, | John Lovell, |
| Michael Cassidy, | J. D. Upshaw, |
| Michael Hayes, | Jas. Phelan, |
| C. Dunwoody, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Philip Scully, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Thos. McGarvey, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Jas. Phelan, | Jas. Phelan, |
| D. W. Burk, | Jas. Phelan, |
| John Hamill, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Matthew F. Sawey, | Jas. Phelan, |
| P. C. Dillon, | Jas. Phelan, |
| R. C. Hobbs, | Jas. Phelan, |
| H. E. Dodge, | Jas. Phelan, |
| George Bush, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Peter Lynch, | Jas. Phelan, |
| John O'Kane, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Daniel Sullivan, | Jas. Phelan, |
